IN THE MATTER

OF THE

Investigation of the Yosemite Valley Commissioners.

SENATE—TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

TESTIMONY.

SACRAMENTO, MONDAY, February 4, 1889.

In the matter of the investigation of the Yosemite Valley Commissioners. Taken before the Senate Committee on Forestry and the Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove.

Present: Meany, Chairman; Byrnes, Boggs, Hamill, and Roth.

JUDGE JAMES GRANT.

Sworn.

THE CHAIRMAN: Gentlemen, the witness is in the hands of the committee and everybody else. I do not want to be lawyer, judge, and everything else. Judge Grant will answer any question that is put to him.

MR. BYRNES: If there are any charges, we want them read, so as to know what we are going on.

MR. ROTH: Mr. Grant certainly knows the charges that have been made here.

THE CHAIRMAN: I do not know at whose instance Mr. Grant was summoned.

Question—At whose instance were you summoned? Answer—The names were given by the "Examiner."

MR. ROTH: Now, just ask him to go ahead and state all he knows about the transaction.

MR. HAMILL: Ask him if he has read the charges.

THE CHAIRMAN: There are no regular specific charges before the Senate.

THE WITNESS: I can tell you all that I know, whether you ask me the questions or not.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, you have read this publication about the Commissioners? A. I have, sir.

Q. Well, we would like for you to tell us in any manner why the Commissioners are here, what you know, if anything. A. I would say that a year ago last June some of the Commissioners went up to the Yosemite to examine the new house, and when they returned—Dr. May was Secretary of the Commission—they made it a subject of conversation at the table at my house, and asked me if I would not bid for the hotel. I laughed and said that I had two or three hotels already; that I had two in Davenport and one in California, and did not care anything about a hotel, and that it would cost from $12,000 to $15,000 to furnish that hotel. Then, he says, that is the reason we want you to bid for it. "Well," says I, "Dr. Griffith, I will furnish you a bidder that will keep a first rate hotel at a reasonable price." After this Mr. Cook's barkeeper was at my house, and in a similar conversation he observed that if any person got that hotel besides Mr. Cook that the stage company would boycott him.

THE CHAIRMAN: What is his name, Judge? A. His name was Baxter.

Q. Dave Baxter? A. Dave Baxter. He is not here. He is Mr. Cook's barkeeper. I did not like to have a man telling me that sort of thing or telling it before me. I bid $1,650 a year. Tyack bid $1,800 a year, or $2,100 a year, and the newspapers show that the Jew in San Francisco bid

$1,500 a year. In consequence of this conversation with Mr. Baxter, I added to my bid that the Yosemite Commissioners should require all persons, all stages, and all common carriers that carried passengers to the Yosemite to come and take passengers to and from this hotel whenever they desired it. My bid and Mr. Tyack's bid, which I guaranteed, were both of them rejected. The State lost $350 a year by my bid and $600 by Tyack's. Of course I lost any profit that I made by keeping the hotel, and knowing what kind of a man I was going to put in—a man that I knew would keep a first rate hotel. I said in this first conversation that I wanted a first class hotel at Yosemite, because it would benefit my own.

THE CHAIRMAN: Has any of the committee any questions to ask Judge Grant? I ask if any of the committee wants to ask him any questions—wants to ask Judge Grant any questions to brighten his memory?

MR. MILLS: Is that the only matter that Judge Grant is desirous of testifying to?

THE WITNESS. That is the only thing I know of my own personal knowledge, and I suppose that the committee can get information from others better than they can from me. I do not care about interjecting mere hearsay into a case. In justice to Mr. Mills, I will say that he was not present when those bids were rejected—so the newspapers say.

MR. MILLS: I was not present, but I reviewed the action of the Commissioners and I approved of it—I approved everything that the Commission had done. If I was absent, it was my own fault. I was not there when the hotel was let, and while I don't know what action I would have taken had I been there, it was still my right and duty to be there, and I take a full share of the responsibilities.

THE CHAIRMAN: You had the privilege of being there, and it was your own fault not to be there. I would like to ask Mr. Grant a question:

Q. What does Mr. Cook pay for the hotel? A. $1,200. You ought to know because the contract is in writing.

Q. What does he pay for the privilege of keeping the hotel? A. $1,200 for the hotel and $350, as I hear, for the privilege of keeping a bar and billiard saloon outside of that.

MR. MILLS: That is outside and not connected with the hotel? A. Yes, sir.

Q. His rent, then, is $1,550 instead of $1,200? A. No, sir; his rent to the State is but $1,200—the State gets the rent of the hotel and the Commissioners get the rent of the privileges.

MR. MILLS: The Commissioners get the entire rent—do you know of your own knowledge, Judge, that the Yosemite Valley Fund does not get the entire sum paid by Mr. Cook? Do you know absolutely that that is the case? A. I suppose, sir, that the State gets the rent of the hotel.

Q. Does not it get the rent from the barroom also? A. I suppose not.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, that is a new rule, if the Commissioners keep that themselves; they did not use to do that; when I was Commissioner, it was all turned over.

THE WITNESS: I saw a statement in the newspaper recently about the rejection of my bid.

THE CHAIRMAN: They are supposed to pay it to the State. If they do not, or do not use it for State purposes, they are simply guilty of a crime against the laws of the State; they are guilty of a crime if they appropriate any of this money to themselves. A. I don't pretend to know anything about what they do with the money; I suppose the State sees to that. I don't trouble myself to examine their accounts, although, being a corporation, they are entitled to be open to everybody.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, the rent of the privilege should go in the same fund that the rent of the building does. A. I suppose if I had rented the building, I would not get a right to keep a bar and a billiard saloon if I were disposed to.

MR. MILLS: What conditions were attached to your proposition? A. I will state it, sir.

Q. First repeat it to the Commission, so I can call their attention to its nature. A. That the Commissioners should require all stages, all conveyances, that carried passengers for hire to the Yosemite, to take passengers to and from this hotel whenever they wanted to go, and I put the reason upon paper: it was that Mr. Cook's barkeeper had made a threat that the stage company would not carry passengers.

MR. MILLS: We know that threat; I have heard of that before. I want to ask upon whose authority did Mr. Cook's barkeeper declare the policy of the stage company in the premises? A. I am a lawyer enough to know that he was authorized by Mr. Cook to do it.

Q. What had Mr. Cook to do with it? A. I understand he was one of the chief stockholders.

Q. Do you know that Mr. Cook is one of the stockholders in the stage company? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Then it is a supposition on your part that Mr. Cook is a stockholder in the stage company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is a supposition on your part that the barkeeper was authorized to make that statement—he did not tell you that Mr. Cook authorized him to do it? A. Your question implies a doubt whether Mr. Cook was a stockholder in the stage company. I will state that Mr. Cook and Mr. Washburn sold a majority of the stock of the stage company, and you can find it out by calling on the other stockholders.

Q. You found that out? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HAMILL: Why were your bids for the hotel rejected—have you any idea? A. I don't know, sir.

MR. MILLS: I will state to the gentlemen of the committee that the history of the case is this—

MR. WHITE [Interrupting]: Let me say right here that as far as I am concerned, I would rather hear the sworn testimony, and if there is anything to be elicited in the way of the examination of the witnesses, let it be done, but I would rather not have any statement while the witness is on the stand. I do not even know who called the witness, nor in whose interest the gentleman is examining him.

MR. MILLS: I simply intended to say that all the bids were rejected—according to the minutes of the Commission they were all rejected, and new bids required to be made owing to the conditions impossible to be fulfilled. That is simply offered to explain Judge Grant's testimony. As far as I am concerned, I wish every fact connected with this matter to come out, and I will insist in the cross-examination so that every fact shall come out in this matter.

MR. GOUCHER: Judge Grant has appeared here as a witness, and has stated certain matters, and when he had concluded Mr. Mills commenced to cross-examine him, Mr. Mills being one of the witnesses, and I think that he ought not to be interrupted until that cross-examination is completed.

MR. WHITE: But what I want to get at is this: This is in the nature—some of it—of a judicial investigation. I do not think, while the witness is on the stand, that it is proper for everybody to interrupt him with their statements, because there can be offered a full opportunity to make a statement hereafter.

THE CHAIRMAN: A great deal of this testimony is hearsay.

MR. WHITE: What I am getting at is, that the witness should be allowed to testify without interruption.

MR. MILLS: I can see the gentleman's point is well taken.

MR. WHITE: My proposition is, that if we are taking evidence, let us take it, and not interrupt it with statements.

MR. MILLS: I shall not be guilty of any departure of that sort as far as I am concerned.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, gentlemen, go on with the witness.

MR. MILLS: As a question of cross-examination, I understand that Mr. Grant's testimony amounts to this: That he bid on that hotel, and his bid was rejected. He stated that he attached to his bid a condition—I wish to call the attention of the committee to that.

MR. WHITE: Was the bid in writing?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

Q. Where is it? A. I don't know.

THE WITNESS: It is with them unless they destroyed it.

MR. MILLS: It is in the archives of the Commission. The Secretary of the Commission is not here, owing to a misunderstanding.

THE CHAIRMAN: Senator White, there is no difference in their statements about that. Mr. Mills explained that statement the same as the witness did.

MR. MILLS: I want to call up that testimony again.

THE CHAIRMAN: There was one little squabble here about one thing.

THE WITNESS: Mr. Mills said the condition was impossible for them to perform—I said the statute gives them the power to perform it, and that is the reason I put it in. The condition was that they should carry passengers to and from this place when they wanted to go there—it was perfectly in the power of the Commissioners to require them to do it.

MR. MILLS: Did the Commission reject your bid solely on the ground of that condition? A. That was the only reason assigned in the newspapers for it—I don't know; I was not present; they did not assign to me any reason why they rejected my bid.

Q. How many bids were there before the Commission? A. Four.

Q. They must have rejected three? A. Yes, sir; they rejected all of them.

Q. They rejected all of them? A. Yes, sir; and they started anew.

Q. They required a new proposition to be made? A. Yes, sir.

MR. WHITE: Did you bid again? A. No; but Mr. Tyack bid again. His bid was $600 a year more than what they let it at.

Q. More than that which they let it at? A. Yes, sir; he offered $1,800 a year, and they let it to Cook for $1,200.

Q. What was this contract? A. The letting of the hotel, the Stoneman House.

THE CHAIRMAN: This seems to be about all Judge Grant knows about the management of the valley—the letting of this hotel.

MR. MILLS: Did you write a letter to the Secretary of the Commission yourself, to withdraw your bid in favor of some one else? A. No, sir; but I wrote that I would prefer them taking the highest bid. I did not withdraw my bid, but I told them I would prefer they would take the highest bid. The letter will show for itself. I did not withdraw my bid.

Q. Did you ever see the specification that was put out by the Commission concerning the furnishing of the hotel? A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Were you present when the bids were opened? A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. You were not there to represent yourself as a bidder? A. My bid represented itself, sir.

Q. But the conditions of furnishing, and things of that sort? A. Oh, I agreed to furnish it just as they wanted it. I understood when I bid that they required the hotel to be furnished in a certain way, and I expected to furnish it just as they ordered it, or expected to have it done. I expected to be responsible for my bid.

Q. Please state the amount of your bid again; what was the amount of your bid? A. $1,650 a year—$1,600 or $1,650—I don't recollect—the bid is on file, and it can tell for itself.

MR. MILLS: That is all.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is all.

MR. WHITE: I want to ask the witness one question: Do I understand that the situation was this, that you first made a bid, and that bid, as well as all the other bids were rejected by the Board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Subsequently the Board readvertised? A. No, they did not; if they advertised, I would have been there.

Q. Well, you put in a second bid? A. No, sir, I did not. I did not have any notice. They took in the second bid the next day. If they had readvertised as they did at first I should have got notice.

Q. Well, did they advertise in the first instance? A. I bid under that advertisement.

Q. When was this transaction? A. Some time in August, the bidding took place.

Q. A year ago? A. Yes, sir; a year ago last August.

THE CHAIRMAN: A year ago last August.

MR. WHITE: Well, what was your understanding, that you were in the field, or when you wrote to the Commission to the effect that you would rather they would take the highest bid—was it your idea to convey to them your impression that you preferred to be dropped out—was that your idea? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what was your idea? A. It was that they should take the highest bid because the State would be the most benefited.

Q. Who offered more than you did? A. Mr. Tyack.

Q. Whose bid was accepted?

MR. MILLS: It was Mr. Cook's bid.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Tyack's bid was more than yours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure it was more than Cook's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course, the records will show what it is. Was there any condition in reference to bidding that you did not comply with? A. No, sir. I complied strictly with the conditions advertised.

MR. MILLS: How did you ascertain the amount that Mr. Tyack gave? A. I wrote it out for him.

Q. You and Mr. Tyack bid together? A. Yes, sir; we bid at the same time.

Q. And you wrote preferring Mr. Tyack's bid to be accepted to your own? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were apprised as to the time of the meeting when these bids were to be opened? A. I was, sir.

Q. And you were not present? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, just one more question—it is scarcely a question, in fact—was not your letter calculated to put the condition on inquiry as to whether you wanted the hotel or not; arguing that Tyack should have it instead of yourself? A. I think not, sir.

Q. Was not your letter calculated to mislead the members of the Commission? A. I think not, sir.

Q. If you wanted to take the hotel yourself, why didn't you underbid Mr. Tyack; is it usual or customary for bidders who are in earnest not to underbid somebody else? A. I suppose people who know me, know I am responsible for anything I say.

Q. I don't doubt your responsibility? A. And I thought the Commission might doubt the responsibility of Mr. Tyack.

MR. WHITE: Well, in regard to this matter, if there is anything in your letter calculated to make the Commission doubt your desire to accept it, still, as a matter of fact, you say that you had no notice that your bid was repudiated and not acted on, and had no notice that there was any reoffering of the contract? A. I had no notice, sir.

Q. And you didn't know anything about it until—— A. [Interrupting] Until after they accepted Mr. Cook's bid.

Q. Until they actually let it. How do you know Mr. Cook bid again? A. I suppose so, sir; I understood so.

Q. These are matters of record, any way? A. I understand that the Commissioners rejected all these bids, and said they would let the hotel at the lowest price that the State authorized it to be bid for; and let it to the person who paid the highest price for the privilege of keeping a bar-room and saloon. Mr. Goucher will say whether I am correct or not.

MR. GOUCHER: Well, it would not be proper for me to make a statement about it at this time, of course.

MR. MILLS: I will state to Senator White that the Commissioners will be able to defend this action on perfectly justifiable grounds, but we cannot make any statement in connection with the testimony of this witness. The testimony of this witness is all hearsay; he knows nothing of the considerations which influenced the actions of the Commission in the matter. The bids are not here; the conditions attached to the bids are not here, so this committee cannot know what the facts were and what the conditions were upon one question which has been raised. It would probably be fair to the Commission to ask Judge Grant another question, because I want to bring that very prominently before the minds of the committee. There is an office in the valley called the Guardian's Office, which is the headquarters. I hope the gentlemen of the committee will bear with me while I prepare the way for this question; they will see that it will be very important. When the Legislature made the proposition of a hotel, a great controversy arose as to where it should be located. The stage companies have never been obliged, that is, by law, or by rule, or by regulation, nor do the Commission claim the right to make the stage company deliver the passengers wherever there may be boarding houses. The valley is nine miles long. When they enter it they have discharged all their duty. Perhaps it could be made incumbent on them to deliver at headquarters. We have it in contemplation to require stage companies on both sides to deliver their passengers there, because the stage companies, with their influence over the passengers, can make or unmake a hotel. We have been trying to do the best we could for the public in the premises. Now, we have in contemplation the regulation that the stage companies should be obliged to carry their passengers to the Guardian's Office, or the central point, and then the hotel keepers should be responsible for their delivery, just as the hotel keepers would in cities where passengers are delivered by rail. That matter being in contemplation at that time, it was defeated by the members of the Commission.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did I understand you to say, Judge Grant, in the early part of the testimony, that you were bidding for Tyack? A. Bidding for whom—for somebody else? I intended to have somebody else have the hotel; I had the names in my mind. I intended to have the hotel kept in a first rate manner.

MR. MILLS: You did not intend to keep the hotel yourself? A. I intended to have the hotel kept in a first rate manner.

THE CHAIRMAN: You intended to be responsible in the matter, and that somebody else would keep it? A. I intended to have it kept. I had a hotel where I was, but I intended to have some person keep that hotel as I thought it ought to be kept and as I supposed the Commission would require it to be kept.

MR. MILLS: You did not bid for yourself, then, in this matter; you intended to have the proprietorship in this hotel, but to have somebody else run it?

MR. HAMILL: You expected to place a party in the hotel to act as an agent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did bid for the hotel? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: Were you going to pay him wages, or were you going to turn over your contract to him? A. I was going to hire him to keep the hotel; I had him in my mind's eye when I made the bid.

MR. MILLS: I wish to have Judge Grant make a statement as to how much the hotel was renting for.

THE CHAIRMAN: Judge Grant said Cook got the hotel for $1,200, and he paid $350 for the bar privileges.

MR. MILLS: And Mr. Grant's bid was $1,650?

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Grant, in giving his testimony, segregated the bid of the bar and the bid of the hotel, and stated his opinion that the Commissioners got the money for the bar, and the State got the money for the hotel. That was Brother Goucher's explanation to the "Examiner."

MR. WHITE: You don't know anything about that? A. No, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any other matters connected with the valley which you know of your own knowledge—for instance, the letting of the hotel—which would throw light to this committee? A. No, sir.

Q. Any irregularities? A. No, sir; not that I know of my own knowledge.

MR. MILLS: With your permission I will ask Judge Grant if he has ever visited the valley? A. Three times, sir.

Q. As a visitor you have examined the condition of the valley, have you not? A. I have, sir.

MR. MILLS: Well, this gentleman would be a very competent gentleman to make any complaint against the condition that he found in the valley, and I would be very much pleased, as one of the Commissioners, to have everybody that has fault to find with the condition of things, to find it here.

THE WITNESS: I would be very reluctant to do that.

MR. WHITE: What was the condition of affairs in the valley when you were there? Did you notice anything that struck you as being irregular or improper or questionable there as a matter of policy or any other way? A. I think the whole policy in relation to the valley is wrong.

Q. Did you see anything there that caused you to think so? A. I say I think everything there was in the hands of a ring.

Q. That is a statement upon which no one can predicate any judgment. From what did you arrive at that conclusion? Because you saw certain things there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, will you please tell us what those things were which produced that impression on your mind; mention the most prominent things? A. A man by the name of Leidig, that kept the hotel when I first went there—

Q. [Interrupting] When was that? A. That was in 1882 or 1883—the first time I ever went there after I came to California.

Q. Well, tell us about him? A. It was generally reported among the passengers that Leidig's was the best hotel in the valley. It was also stated, and Leidig told me that it was a fact, that the stage company boycotted him, and would not take passengers there.

Q. Is this stage company a corporation? A. The stage company is. I have seen their name, the Yosemite Stage and Wagon Road Company, on their wagons ever since I came to California.

Q. Had the Commissioners at that time anything to do with the stage company? A. One of the Commissioners was in the stage company.

Q. Which one of them? A. Mr. Goodwin, one of the agents of the railroad company in San Francisco.

Q. What was his name? A. I think his name is Goodwin.

Q. Was he a Commissioner at that time, or is he now? A. I believe he has been a Commissioner for some time, sir—I don't know—I have not investigated matters of that kind—it is not a matter that concerns me—I don't remember that he was a Commissioner.

MR. MILLS. He never was a Commissioner.

MR. WHITE: I understand not.

Q. When there you observed that the passengers were disposed to go to a hotel, and this man told you that his hotel was boycotted by the stage company. When did you see anything that suggested to you that the system was wrong? A. I cannot say that I did see anything in particular that suggested itself to me at that time.

Q. Well, did you afterwards? A. No, sir; I did not observe enough to see.

Q. Well, have you ever seen anything—any specific fact to indicate that the management was wrong? Has anything ever struck you as indicating any error in the management except the mere fact that this man told you that he was being boycotted? A. Oh, yes; I have heard of a great many things.

Q. Just tell me plainly what you know—I am upon a tour of investigation? A. Well, you are asking me what I know—I have been there since that wire fence has been put over the ground.

Q. You did not find any wire fence there for many years? A. A year ago last fall.

Q. If you have anything to throw any light on this matter, tell us? A. I don't like to be an informer; I am merely stating what the public know just as well as I do.

Q. I am one of the public, and I don't know anything about it, and I want to find out. You say you don't want to be an informer; you are here testifying, and as far as you know anything within the scope of your oath, you should tell what you know; it is not what your preference is; I understand you don't want to testify. Let us have what you know; there is no object for you to conceal it. Now, do you know anything about this matter, Judge, at all? A. From my own personal knowledge, I have already given you—what I heard is hearsay. When I was there I saw that a great deal of the ground was fenced up; I saw that very inferior horses were put there for the use of the passengers. The first time I went there they put my child on a balky horse, and I had to get off of my horse and give her mine, and I saw the other horses in the stable. When I went there a year ago last fall with my nephew—of course, it is a matter of indifference to me—I was put on a mule.

MR. MILLS: Do you regard the use of a mule on a trail as mismanagement? A. No; as I say, it was safer, I suppose—I suppose they are safer than horses.

MR. WHITE: Then you think that that was good management? A. Yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: When you were in the valley, did any of the hotel keepers tell you that they had pooled their issues and were dividing the profits of the season? A. Now, you have asked me something that I have forgotten. Mr. Leidig told me when I was there—the last time and stopped at his house—that he paid the stage company a dollar a day for every passenger that came to his house; and I had heard that Barnard did the same thing a year before.

Q. A dollar a day for every passenger that came to his house? A. Yes, sir. When I went to pay my bill it was $4. I said it is your duty to charge $3 a day; well, he says, I have to pay a dollar to the stage company for every passenger that comes here.

THE CHAIRMAN: I used to know something of that—is not that the driver's fee—do not the drivers get this money for spending money?

MR. WHITE: It seems to me if the drivers get it, I would come to the very broad conclusion that the stage company knew something about it.

THE CHAIRMAN: I know they used to do it, because the driver could take them anywhere—the boys got it for whisky money.

MR. MILLS: Did Mr. Leidig tell you it was for the stage company? A. Yes, sir; he did not say it was paid to the driver—he said it was paid to the stage company?

Q. I will ask you if they pooled and divided the hotel receipts of the season? A. No, sir; they never told me that at no time.

Q. You never heard that? A. No, sir.

Q. That was not part of the common report? A. No, sir. There was a man here the other day stated that they pooled the proceeds of the two stage companies, one on this side and the one on the other.

Q. Have you heard of them doing that every season—pooling their issues? A. I never heard of that before.

Q. You never heard of the hotels pooling their issues? A. I did not, sir. If I had I suppose I should have said that the Commissioners were not faithful to their trusts.

Q. Well, that is a question I would like to have you discuss before this committee. Do you think the Commissioners should regulate the charges of all these hotels? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if they were allowed to charge only so much as the Commissioners permitted them to charge, at the close of the season how would you, as a Commissioner, prevent them dividing their money as they saw fit? A. By the exercise of the arbitrary power that the Commissioners possess—they have just as much control over that valley as the State of California has over any of its lands.

MR. WHITE: I suppose what Mr. Mills is getting at is this: if you did regulate the hotels there— A. [Interrupting] And they turn in and divide the money afterwards.

Q. After the season is over we go around the corner and divide it; of course it would be a pretty hard thing to prevent that? A. Yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: As the pooling could not affect the public at all, how would the Commissioners prevent them doing that, if they did not do it by the consent of or with the connivance of the Commission? Now, in the first place, it is difficult to get anybody; Mr. Leidig was at the valley, and sold out, left us—he sold out his privilege; that is one of the difficulties the Commissioners have to encounter— A. [Interrupting] Leidig said he sold out because they wouldn't give him a lease for a longer time than a year, and gave the Stoneman House more. That is the reason of his selling out, that they boycotted him.

MR. MILLS: Mr. Leidig will be here.

THE CHAIRMAN: Is he here now?

MR. MILLS: He will be here on the eleventh.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, did Mr. Leidig ever tell you he didn't pay any rent for that house he lived in? A. He did not.

Q. You never heard it discussed whether he ever paid any rent or not? A. He never told me he did; neither did any one of the hotels ever tell me they paid any rent.

MR. MILLS: I have been a Commissioner for ten years, and I know as a matter of absolute fact that Mr. Leidig never paid a cent.

THE CHAIRMAN: I happen to know of my own knowledge, when I was Commissioner, he never paid a cent. I just want the facts brought out.

MR. WHITE: Well, I will not ask any further questions, because we will not get to the examination of any other witness at this rate. I would suggest, Mr. Mills, that the Secretary bring these records here, so we can settle as much as we can by reference to the records, and not take so much time.

MR. GOUCHER: These charges are newspaper charges, and the Commissioners wish to hear them. The witnesses will be called, and the records can then be produced—you can have the records at any time.

MR. WHITE: There is a certain amount of public charge that has been made about the matter. Of course, we are not really trying this case upon a technical complaint with a technical answer; nor upon issues arising upon an indictment or plea of not guilty. But, as far as I am concerned, I am simply anxious to investigate these things that have been alleged, and have the whole facts come out; and if there is any blame to be attached to any one, let it be shown. And if, on the other hand, if everything is all right, let the parties against whom these charges have been made and published be fully exonerated. So, I have gone over the whole question of the management, so far as the ideas have presented themselves to my mind. For instance, I have asked something about contracts, but, of course, the written documents covering these transactions would be the best evidence of what has been done, and must speak for themselves, and I want to see them.

MR. GOUCHER: I want to state that all the papers, including these contracts that have been testified to by Judge Grant, and also all other papers and books kept and held by the Yosemite Commissioners, are here now—were brought here at the instance of the Yosemite Board of Commissioners; and the only difficulty that we are laboring under is this: Mr. Truman, the Secretary, brought those papers here last week, but he could not be here to-night; but the papers are here. He telegraphed to me to-day, asking if the investigation would go on to-night, or whether it would go on the eleventh. The books and papers are here, but he is not here.

[The Chairman reads the telegram from Mr. Truman.]

MR. MILLS: Mr. Truman telegraphed me, asking if the examination would go on. I telegraphed back, "Yes." He then answered this—

THE CHAIRMAN: I would state this, gentlemen, that there is a great deal of this testimony coming in that is hearsay, and we have got to give the investigation a good, big, wide scope to get it all.

MR. MILLS: The Commission is willing that the proceedings should cover all these occurrences, even as to Mr. Cook's barkeeper speaking of the stage company; they are matters that are deemed to be of the highest importance in the tattle of the valley. We would like to have that sworn to in this way. Mr. Cook's barkeeper is a gentleman of such importance that I would like to see him here and give this testimony.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Well, gentlemen, have you any further questions to ask Judge Grant?

MR. MILLS: I have not.

THE CHAIRMAN: Have you any more, Senator White?

MR. WHITE: No, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: I guess, Judge, they have got through with you.

MR. ROTH: It seems to me the proper thing would be to do this way: We don't know what questions to ask these witnesses, and we do not really know what the charges or what the purposes of this Commission are. It seems to me the right way to get at this, so as not to ask the witnesses unnecessary questions, or to ask them intelligently, is to put these Commissioners on the stand and get an idea of the powers they have, and the reasons for the making of these charges; it would give us an idea of what we want to investigate.

MR. WHITE: That would be taking the wrong end of it it seems to me, to put the man that is charged on the stand to tell what he is accused of.

MR. ROTH: But there is nobody on the other side to ask questions.

MR. WHITE: I think we can finally find out what he does know; we may be indirect about it.

MR. MILLS: I suggest, Senator, that while it would be quite an unusual proceeding, at the same time it would have this value—gentlemen of this committee, inasmuch as most of you have never had the misfortune to be a member of the Yosemite Committee, except Senator Meany—he has had that misfortune, he served with me on that Board, and he became thinner and thinner every year; you don't know what these accusations mean—you would be better informed of the proceedings, and, as suggested by the Senator, you would be better qualified to understand the force and scope of the testimony. If something of a general nature was stated here, so that you would have a general idea of the law under which the Board acts, and the policy which has governed the Commission from its inception, and the changes of the policies, and the reason of the changes that have occurred from time to time, I think it would be an advantage; you would better understand the testimony that would be given here. There is, therefore, that value in the suggestion. The testimony of Judge Grant has a value in my mind which I do not know whether will be understood by the Commission or not. I can see shades of meaning in it that you could not possibly see, because I know to what it refers. I have been familiar with the administration of the valley since 1880.

MR. WHITE: I never in my life heard of an investigation being conducted in that way, and sooner or later we have got to find out what the purposes of the Commission are, from our own investigations; and, of course, in the examination of the witnesses the Commissioners themselves can state what they want; but to have the gentlemen themselves, who are the subject-matter of this investigation, get up and inform the committee what they are charged with, and their explanation on the subject, and then have the testimony afterwards, it seems to me is entirely unnecessary. Let us put the witnesses on the stand, and then they can be called upon to explain; and in cross-examination they can probably bring out such things as they want to. There will be no difficulty about examining the witnesses that are here.

MR. MILLS: I was afraid you would have no case unless we made it.

MR. WHITE: No man ought to be compelled to testify against himself; that is a deeply rooted principle.

MR. ROTH: I only made the suggestion to expedite matters.

MR. MILLS: In regard to Judge Grant, he is a thoroughly competent lawyer, and a man of great ability—there is no foolishness about him—he could tell all he knows without any questioning.

MR. GOUCHER: He was a lawyer before I was born.

MR. MILLS: We can put a witness on the stand.

MR. WHITE: Very well, do that. I do not care about the order of the witnesses.

MR. MILLS: Mr. Brightman is here.

MR. WHITE: Well, call him.

FREDERICK A. BRIGHTMAN.

Sworn.

Examined by MR. WHITE:

Question—Where do you live? Answer—I live in Mariposa.

Q. Are you familiar with the Yosemite Valley? A. Well, I have been in there for the last twenty years.

Q. You have been living there? A. I started in there with Mr. J. M. Hutchings, first.

Q. Well, did you ever have any interest in the saddle train—what you call the saddle train? A. I used to have an interest there.

Q. What was the nature of the saddle train—a pack train, or what? A. A saddle train—pack horses.

Q. When did you have such a train, or what do you know about it? Give us the history of the saddle train? A. Well, I went to the valley in 1870, I think it was. I went in there first with six horses. The next year John Rohrer and me went in with twelve, and we had those horses—horses that cost $125 apiece—we were supposed to have a good saddle train for the tourists, and we fed our horses hay and barley both.

MR. MILLS: I do not want to interrupt the witness, Mr. White, but I wish to inform you right now that the Commission in charge of the Yosemite Valley in 1870 was dismissed by statute—legislated out of office—and the present Commission in no sense are a party to anything that was done prior to 1880, that is, the present Commission. They have been in charge only since 1880—since the beginning of that year. The old Commission was legislated out of office, and the new legislated in.

MR. WHITE: Of course, if you were not the Commission, it does not involve you. It does not involve any gentleman who was not there.

THE CHAIRMAN: The new Commission is entirely differently constituted. The Commissioners were appointed by Governor Perkins, and it is useless to date the investigation back of that time.

MR. WHITE: We cannot tell what he was going to say—well, go on, proceed. A. Well, the most of that Board are new Commissioners.

Q. What do you call the old Board? A. Raymond, and Eames, and Mr. Madden, and Ashburner.

Q. How many of those are on the Board now? A. Only Madden, now, and Judge Eames—I am not certain, I have not kept any run.

MR. HAMILL: The record will show that.

MR. WHITE: But I want to see if the witness' memory is good or not. Now, when did you have this transaction with them of which you were about to speak? A. Well, I was there for five years that I had the saddle train.

Q. When did your relations with the saddle train cease; when did you give it up, or when were you compelled to give it up? A. I am not certain about the date. I was there when old man Lemmons died, and I then gave it up, because I could get no satisfaction out of the Commissioners.

Q. Well, was that in 1883? A. Before that, I think.

THE CHAIRMAN: Lemmons died before 1880? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, it was prior to 1880? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, is there anybody on the Board who was Commissioner at that time?

THE CHAIRMAN: There is one man—Tom Madden. A. Tom Madden.

THE CHAIRMAN: He was out four years, and then went back again.

MR. WHITE: He was the only one that was on the Board at that time.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. WHITE: Well, what was the matter of which you complained? A. I complained that I could not make any arrangements; I let horses there for two bits a day and fed them hay and barley.

Q. What was it you wanted the Commissioners to do that they didn't do? A. I was willing to let them at a dollar a day; that would have been satisfactory.

Q. Did they interrupt you from collecting a dollar a day? A. Well, one man told me that he wouldn't have anything to do with it whatever.

Q. Why didn't you collect a dollar a day if they didn't interfere with you? A. Because Washburn was in against me.

Q. Then you wanted to prevent competition; was that it? A. Well, when I went in there—

Q. [Interrupting] I want to get at what you wanted to do; you were there, and you let horses for two bits a day—that is a fact, is it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, you wanted them to give you a special privilege as against everybody else? A. Well, if they had a mind to—to fix it to suit themselves.

Q. You wanted an especial privilege so other people could not compete with you—is not that a fact? A. No, sir.

Q. What was it you wanted? A. I wanted them to set a price to rent horses, and if I could not stand it I would go off.

Q. You wanted them to set a price at which horses were to be let out? A. I suppose I could stand it as long as anybody else.

Q. This is a very plain, simple proposition: you were letting out horses for two bits a day, is not that so? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wanted the Commission to fix it so it would be a dollar a day? A. Well, that is what I am going to tell you. I said to Raymond—

Q. [Interrupting] I do not care one cent what you said to him or any one else; I want to know if that is what you were after, to have them fix it at a dollar a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then why didn't you say so? A. I told you before.

Q. Is that all there is in that? I have always been in favor of plenty of competition. Is that all there is in that charge; is that all you complain of? A. Well, since that time I have made two applications for a lease; one for a barn in the valley, and another to run carriages, and I never got any answer to either of them.

Q. When did you make the application? A. To the Board.

Q. When, I say? A. I cannot say certainly.

Q. Of course you cannot remember the exact day, but about when did you make these applications? A. Oh, one was about eight years ago, and one about four years ago.

Q. One eight and the other four? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they in writing? A. Yes, sir; I wrote to the Board.

Q. Whom did you address? A. To the Board.

Q. Well, did you address them directly to the Board of Yosemite Commissioners, or did you write it to some member of the Board, or to the Secretary, or how? A. I directed it to the Board of Commissioners, and never got any answer from them either.

Q. One was about four years and the other was about eight years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you write to them more than once after you failed to get your communication answered? Say eight years ago, did you write and inquire why they had not answered your letter? A. Only that one time. I put in my application, and it was not answered, and of course I did not say any more.

Q. Now, is there anything else? Is there any irregularity, or any improper management, or anything questionable about the conduct of the affairs of that valley that you know except what you have stated? A. Well, of course, I have heard a great deal of complaint. Of course, as Mr. Grant says, I have been well acquainted with Mrs. Leidig, and I have been there time and time again, and heard her complain about the Commission.

MR. WHITE: Are these two parties, Mr. and Mrs. Leidig, to be here as witnesses?

THE CHAIRMAN: They were here the other day.

MR. MILLS: Mr. Leidig was here, and returned to his family in the City of Los Angeles.

MR. WHITE: Was he subpoenaed?

MR. MILLS: He came here on the written invitation of the Chairman of the Commission, and he will be back here on the eleventh.

THE CHAIRMAN: He will be back?

MR. MILLS: He will be here on the eleventh.

MR. WHITE: Is there anything that you know of your own knowledge touching this matter—any cause of complaint, any questionable management of which you are aware? If there is, do not hesitate to state it. A. Well, there is one thing: Three years ago I telegraphed to Mr. Cook to have him to go to Mr. Dennison in regard to renting a house for me—to see if I could get it. He telegraphed back that I could not have it. Then I telegraphed again, to see if I could have a tent up in Mrs. Glen's yard, and I could not get that.

Q. Whom did you telegraph to? A. I telegraphed to Mr. Dennison.

Q. W. E. Dennison; are those the initials? A. That is the one; he was a Guardian of the valley.

MR. WHITE: When was that you telegraphed to him about that tent? A. That was three years ago.

Q. Did he answer your dispatch? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He telegraphed to you personally? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dennison did himself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And said you could not have it? A. And said I could not have it.

Q. Did he understand? Did you telegraph that you wanted merely to put a tent in somebody's yard? A. Well, I told Mr. Washburn to telegraph him.

Q. Is Mr. Washburn here? A. No, sir.

Q. Where is he? A. In San Francisco. No; he is in the valley now.

Q. What are his initials? A. E. P. Washburn, I believe.

Q. Well, now, is there anything else? A. No. That is my own business what I said; the balance is what I heard; it don't do any good to talk. I have heard complaints, and probably you have. I know there has been a great deal of complaint. People complain sometimes when they had not ought to; but I complain on my own account, because it has been the ruin of me for the last twenty years.

Q. What I am getting at is not an inquiry as to whether you have been hurt, or whether somebody else has been hurt, but an inquiry as to what you know. Of course, it is proper for you to state where it has hurt you, and it would be also proper, if you know anything where anybody else's interests have been interfered with, for you to state that, if you know. Do not confine yourself to mere cases where you have been injured yourself, but do not hesitate to state any case in your judgment, where there has been anything done that was improper; tell us what it is, so we can judge, ourselves, of it. It is designed to get all the facts which you know. A. I have no more to say.

MR. MILLS: I would like to ask Fred. what year was it you telegraphed in regard to this house? A. I think it was three years ago.

Q. Three years ago? A. When they fenced up the valley there, that was the time; I think it was three years ago.

Q. Three years ago? A. Yes, sir; as near as I can remember it.

Q. What did you want this house for? Did you want this house for residence purposes for your family? A. I was going to work for Washburn, and I wanted a place to live; and I took my family in there, and then I had to go back to Tamarack—no, I don't mean Tamarack, but Checkerville.

Q. That is a stage station? A. Yes, sir; that is a stage station.

Q. Did you have your family living in the valley at that time? A. No, sir, in Mariposa.

Q. Did you take your family out? A. I took them to Checkerville.

Q. You could not get the privilege of living in a house, or even in a tent at that time? A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. Have you the dispatch you received from Mr. Dennison? A. No, sir; I threw it away—I didn't want to see any more of it.

Q. Did you ever receive any letter from him on the subject? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any application to any member of the Commission in regard to this matter? A. No, sir; I did not make any application.

Q. Did you ever inform any member of the Commission in regard to this act? A. No, sir.

Q. And as far as you know, no member of the Commission ever heard of it until to-night? A. Priest was here, and he knows all about it.

THE CHAIRMAN: He wasn't on the Commission at that time—he went out before I did.

MR. MILLS: So far as I know, before to-night, no member of the Yosemite Commission ever heard anything about Dennison's refusal to permit you to live in a tent. I didn't know anything about it. You at least made no complaint to any member of the Commission? A. No, of course not.

Q. Was there a house in the valley you could have had? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What house was it? A. That was the old Cavagnavale house.

Q. Did you intend to take a tent in there, or did you intend they should supply one? A. If I could not get a house I intended to take a tent.

Q. You were one of the employés of Washburn? A. Yes, sir; and I had to ask the privilege—I did not ask it, but I believe that was the rule to ask it; but I looked at in this way: I worked in that valley with a four-horse team for over a month, and worked over a month to keep the roads in order, and I never received a cent for it.

Q. When had you done that? A. When I first had a saddle train.

Q. In 1870? A. Well, it was when I worked in the valley.

MR. WHITE: When were those fences put up? A. Well, they have been fencing for the last four or five years. That was to stop me from having a saddle train, I suppose—they were going to fence everywhere up, and I had no place to put my horses.

Q. Where were those fences? A. Well, Lemmons had the first fence.

MR. MILLS: How long ago is it since Lemmons had a fence? A. I don't know.

Q. Twenty-five years? A. Well, I think about in 1870 that he had the fence made.

Q. Nineteen years ago? A. He had a large orchard there—the saddle horses we run there they interfered with his trees, and a meeting was called and he complained to Washburn.

MR. WHITE: You said something about fencing. Since that fence was in the valley how much of the valley is fenced—you can state that now of your own knowledge? A. Well, since I went out of the saddle train business probably forty acres—we called it forty acres. Then there is the old Hutchings field across the valley—all that side was fenced up.

MR. MILLS: How much was fenced in on that side? A. Well, I don't know how much—you know.

Q. Yes, I know all about it. A. Yes, I know you do.

Q. How is it fenced in? A. With a fence.

Q. There is a good wagon road there, is there not? A. No, sir; that is sowed up—all of it—and the road goes away around it.

Q. How many acres does it embrace? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, approximately how many? A. Well, I don't know how much there is in the field, but that is all fenced in.

Q. Well, how many acres do you suppose there are in that field? A. Well, I should suppose likely there was one hundred acres in that field.

Q. One hundred acres—that is one hundred and forty—how many acres altogether are absolutely under fence in that valley? A. Fifty acres that Lemmon fenced up.

Q. Well, that is one hundred and fifty, then. A. One hundred and forty.

Q. You say one field contained one hundred acres, and another fifty acres; now, how much more is under fence in the valley? A. There was another field.

Q. Cannot you get at the general proposition? A. You know more about it than I do.

MR. WHITE: Let me make a suggestion to Mr. Brightman: When one of these parties is asking a question, do not tell them what they know—the question is addressed to you for the purpose of eliciting your knowledge, and is not for the purpose of stating what other people may know about it. A. Well, from my information, the valley is all fenced up, except what has got trees on it.

MR. MILLS: Is that from your observation? A. Well, it is so.

Q. Can you tell me, Mr. Brightman, how many acres are absolutely inclosed by a fence, in the valley? A. No, sir; I don't know anything about how many acres there are.

Q. Do you know how many acres there are in the grant? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Well, approximately, are there two hundred acres fenced in, in the valley? A. Yes, sir; more than that.

Q. Are there four hundred acres? A. Oh, I don't know.

Q. Well, are there five hundred acres? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't think there is, do you? You do not believe that there are five hundred acres that are under fence there? A. Well, Mr. Mills, I can't guess at anything like that. There is Bridal Veil Meadows fenced in; El Capitan fenced in; Hutchings' fenced in; and all the land between Hutchings' and Stiegman's fenced in.

Q. Well, about how many acres altogether? A. Well, I don't know.

Q. Well, there are thirty-three thousand acres in the valley—what proportion of that is fenced up? A. Well, the only way I can get at it, all the grass land is fenced up.

Q. How much is there of grass land? A. Well, I don't know.

MR. MILLS: I have no further questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: Just to make this matter plain on those questions; now, as a matter of fact, is not some of this fencing absolutely necessary, and has not the butcher of the valley to have some places for the cattle? A. They allowed him to have it.

Q. He has fenced in some? A. Yes, he has that that he fenced. He fenced with his own money, too.

Q. Do not Barnard and the other hotel keepers claim a place to pasture their cows to accommodate tourists? Is it not a necessity for the men that keep a hotel to have a place to keep cows? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: They don't run any milk wagon in there?

MR. MILLS: In addition to that I would like for you to elicit from this witness as to the right of campers in this matter. We have to have hay in the valley for the campers, or it would have to be hauled in there. We want the public to have it as cheap as possible; and I want to ask this, if he were a Commissioner, if it would not be necessary in his judgment? We wish to get his opinion as to the policy of the valley in that respect. Is it not necessary that some fencing should be had there to confine horses and cattle, so the horses of the campers that come in there can get hay, so the hay will be cheap for their horses when they get there? Are not some fences necessary for the proper administration of the valley, in your judgment? A. Well, you left a piece of ground for the campers, didn't you?

Q. Yes, and put a fence in for their benefit; we have a pasture for their benefit. A. Well, don't the saddle train eat it out?

Q. I don't know about that. A. They do.

Q. The only question is: are not fences necessary there; that is the only question; are they necessary, or are they useless? Is the existence of fences there a cause of impeachment of the management? A. Well, of course you might grant Mr. Barnard a field in preference to the one—

Q. [Interrupting] I don't care anything about Mr. Barnard.

MR. WHITE: The question is, whether you think there ought to be any fences there? That is tolerably plain English; the question is open and simple. A. Oh, they ought to have a place to keep their cows.

MR. MILLS: That is all.

THE CHAIRMAN: Have any of the Commission, or anybody else, any questions to ask of Mr. Brightman? Time is running along, and there are some other witnesses here.

MR. WHITE: I suggest we call another witness. Is there any other witness in the room?

THE CHAIRMAN: There are several, I believe.

DR. JOHN S. McLEAN.

Sworn. Testified as follows:

MR. MILLS: Mr. Chairman, we have a witness now whose familiarity with the administration of this valley dates back to a very early period, and who has knowledge of the administration of the valley from that time to the present. We also have, in the person of Dr. McLean, an intelligent witness. He understands the nature of this inquiry; he understands the general character and purport of the inquiry, and I am perfectly willing, for my part, to hear whatever he has to say throughout before asking him any questions; and I think he possesses sufficient intelligence to tell what he knows about the administration of the affairs without questioning.

MR. WHITE: I will suggest that any question which you desire to ask him you may do so. I understand he understands something about some intent to appoint Mr. Hutchings Commissioner.

MR. MILLS: The "Examiner" subpoenaed Doctor McLean for the purpose of proving their charges.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Chairman, this witness is here, and permit me to say that while I recognize the right of the Commissioners to interrogate the witnesses fully, and as he is here, and there has been some intimation that he knows something about some matters, I consider it our duty to question him, regardless of the fact whether the charges may have been made with that formality which would render them much more easy to investigate. The witness is on the stand, and he should not be excluded from testifying, simply because somebody——

THE CHAIRMAN [Interrupting]: We will save considerable time by finding out what he knows, and get at it in any way you please.

MR. WHITE: How long have you been familiar with the Yosemite Valley? A. Since 1867, when I went there with my wife and children.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Hutchings? A. Very well, indeed, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about an attempt to have him, appointed Commissioner in 1888? A. Well, without Mr. Hutchings' knowledge, and I will now suggest, knowing that Mr. Hutchings was as well posted, and probably better posted, in the Yosemite than any man living, and would make a very excellent Commissioner, I sat down and wrote—it must have been to Bartlett.

THE CHAIRMAN: Wasn't it to Perkins?

MR. WHITE: Well, when was it? A. Well, it was when the last Commissioners were appointed.

MR. MILLS: When the last vacancies were filled? A. Yes, sir. I sat down in my office in Alameda and wrote a letter—a proper letter—to the Governor of the State, stating that I had become aware of the fact that some vacancies had occurred in the Yosemite Commission; and that I had known Mr. Hutchings a great many years, and knew his familiarity with the valley and his fitness for that position, and I suggested that when the persons be appointed that Mr. Hutchings should be one. I wrote that, as I say, without Mr. Hutchings' knowledge and without any suggestions from anybody. I thought it was a proper thing for a citizen to do, who knew the valley and who was interested in its welfare. I never suspected I would be called upon here to give testimony in regard to such a matter as that.

Q. Well, was there any further endeavor made to procure the appointment for him? A. That was the extent of my endeavor; and I got a letter from Mr. Boruck—Mr. Boruck, I think, the Secretary of the Governor—saying that my letter had been received, and that proper attention would be given to it.

Q. Well, what further do you know about the matter of the appointment? A. I don't know anything further except that Mr. Hutchings was not appointed; that is all.

Q. And all you know about the matter was that you applied for an appointment, and forwarded a letter, which was received, and that was the end of it? A. It was not an application.

Q. I mean a suggestion? A. A suggestion. It was the business of the Governor to appoint whom he wanted for that place—whom he thought was proper; and when he thought that some one else was more proper than Mr. Hutchings, I did not find any fault with the Governor for it, nor with the Commissioners.

Q. You have been very familiar with that valley, and your familiarity has extended down to date? A. I go there every year.

Q. What do you think of the management of the valley? A. That is a pretty broad question.

Q. I know it is; but as Mr. Mills said, you are a person who can tell it. I am not trying to flatter you, but we desire to get at what you know about it. It seems to me you are very well qualified to state it? A. Well, I think, sir, in the main, since I have been in the valley, the administration of it has been good. I think the Commissioners, inasmuch as they are human, have made some mistakes, and I think if I had been a Commissioner I would have adopted a somewhat different course of proceedings in regard to some matters.

Q. What suggestions would you make in reference to the management? A. Well; I think a mistake has been made in fencing up so much of the valley.

Q. Give me a sort of idea; unfortunately I have never been in the valley, and I am rather ashamed to say it, and I don't know as much about it as I ought to? A. That is your misfortune. I do not mean any reflection upon the Commissioners, but Commissioner Mills made a remark awhile ago that there were thirty-three thousand acres of land in the valley.

MR. MILLS: In the grant. The grant is one thing, and the valley is another. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say right here that Mr. Brightman gave testimony of people who are, for the most part, entirely ignorant of the condition of things in the valley.

MR. WHITE: It is in the rim of the valley particularly? A. I suppose there are about six or seven hundred acres in the valley proper.

MR. MILLS: How many acres are there in the valley proper? A. I say I suppose, probably, taking the valley down where the Coulterville trail comes in, from that point around by Kenney, where the camping ground is—

Q. What do you call the floor of the valley? A. The floor of the valley I should suppose was about seven or eight hundred acres—I don't know—I may be mistaken.

Q. How many acres are there in the floor of the valley? A. Well, you can call this the floor of the valley where you speak of—

Q. Well, that is capable of being fenced up, or that is capable of being used for a pasture, there are nine thousand acres, are there not? A. No; you are mistaken altogether about there being nine thousand acres on the level of the valley at all.

Q. Well, how many acres are there on the level of the valley? A. Well, I think seven or eight hundred acres, as I said before.

Q. You are wrong.

MR. WHITE: There is the most radical difference between you.

THE WITNESS: I will give you a reasonable opinion for my judgment: Coming up the valley, the cañon of the river, the valley is not more than one tenth of a mile wide.

MR. MILLS: Coming up the cañon of the river where you enter the valley? A. Yes, sir. Where you enter the valley it is not more than one tenth of a mile wide, and it runs up thereafter the width of perhaps a half or three quarters of a mile—there are not a great many acres in that—then it opens out after you get up to the Bridal Veil, that is west of the Bridal Veil there is a little more, and between the Bridal Veil and the Iron Springs there is not.

MR. MILLS: Well, how wide is the valley at that point opposite the El Capitan? A. It is not a quarter of a mile wide.

Q. If the El Capitan should fall down would it reach on the other side of the valley? A. It would shut up the valley; yes, sir.

Q. But would it lodge on the other side. I think the El Capitan is thirty-three hundred feet, and twenty-six hundred feet is a half a mile—now, right opposite the place you spoke of—right opposite the great cliff of the El Capitan house? A. On the south side of the river it comes right down to the river; there is just room enough to build a road on the bank of the river.

Q. Will it take the bridge where the old flat stage goes across the hill-side—but I will withdraw these questions. The object of the questions was to show what proportion of the valley was under fence.

MR. GOUCHER: We will have to have the map here.

MR. WHITE: Well, how large a portion of the valley was fenced in? A. There is a good portion of the floor of the valley that is not fit for anything at all.

Q. How much of that portion of the valley that is susceptible of cultivation is fenced in? A. It is pretty nearly all fenced in. In my judgment, there is a departure from the idea of Congress, which gave that territory to this State in trust in order that it might be for the public use. Now, then, if you fence that up and keep the public out of that, it is certainly not for the public use. I do not say this in any spirit of blame for the Commissioners; I think it was a mistake of the Commissioners, as I said before when I commenced my remarks in regard to this matter: that if I had been a Commissioner, I would have acted within—I would have given the hotels as much land as they wanted when fenced for pasture and for the purposes of an orchard, or something of that kind; but the rest of the valley I would try to keep in as good a state of nature as possible, and leave it for the public in accordance with the design of Congress when they were making that great gift to this State.

MR. WHITE: Now, what are these other inclosed places, other than the place inclosed for the hotel—what are they utilized for? A. It is utilized for the raising of hay and grain, etc., which the farmers on the outside raise in great abundance.

Q. These parties who raise grain and hay are parties who raise it on their own ground, and sell it to tourists who come in there? A. The Commissioners rented this land to various parties: they rented a portion of this land to Mr. Harris, and Mr. Harris raised hay on that land, and sold it to the campers.

Q. Do you know anything about the prices they charge up there for their hay and grain? A. Well, I don't think their prices are unreasonable.

MR. MILLS: I would like to ask the witness some questions on that subject. If there were no hay raised in the valley, where would the people who go in the valley for their own convenience get feed for their horses?

A. They would get feed on this beautiful pasture that would be there.

Q. Is there pasture enough for those purposes? A. Yes, sir; and farmers could convey it there. There are three roads leading to the valley.

Q. What would it cost? A. I don't think it would cost any more than it costs now.

Q. What do they charge a pound for hauling? A. They haul hay in the valley there now and sell it in there for $40 a ton—2 cents a pound. I think those farmers up there in the mountains should have the privilege to market through that valley.

Q. How many acres are cultivated in hay in the valley? A. I could not say.

Q. Approximately how many? A. Well, I suppose, in the Harris field there must be—

Q. [Interrupting] Is there twenty acres? A. Twenty, or thirty, or forty acres, I am not certain about that.

Q. About twenty acres? A. Twenty, perhaps.

Q. How many are cultivated in grain in the valley? A. I don't know.

Q. Are there ten acres cultivated to grain to your knowledge? A. That I could not say positively: I suppose there is some grain raised there; but they have very nice pastures—you know yourself that the Bridal Veil pasture is a beautiful pasture.

Q. Yes, sir. A. The people who pay the taxes here and in the State, and want to go up to the Yosemite Valley with their own teams, it seems to me should have the privilege of staking their horses, under proper supervision of the Commissioners, and they ought to have some of that feed.

Q. I will now call your attention to the next question. Don't campers who take their horses have the privilege of pasture? A. Very poor pasture. They have to buy hay and grain.

Q. About how many acres are devoted to campers' horses? A. Well, the upper part of the valley.

Q. Is the public excluded from any part of the valley, really? A. It is not any way near as good pasture as in other portions of the valley. The Bridal Veil pasture and the El Capitan pasture are both of them better pastures than the one used by the campers, but that don't answer their purpose, because they all have to buy.

Q. Well, how much pasture do you give to the hotels for the purpose of keeping cows for the purpose of getting milk? A. Well, ten or fifteen acres to each hotel. I would give them all they needed.

Q. Then it is necessary that there should be horses for trail use, and other horses must be turned out at certain seasons of the year. Would you turn them loose? A. No, sir.

Q. Or put them under fence? A. I would put them in a stable, and I would require that the people who keep those saddle horses should get their hay and grain from outside of the valley. I would keep the valley a public park. I think the Commissioners have adopted a wrong policy. I don't think they have committed any crime, but they have erred in judgment, as far as my judgment is concerned.

Q. You were in favor of Mr. Hutchings as one of the Commissioners. You wanted him appointed? A. I wrote to the Governor, as I said, sir.

Q. Were you aware that Mr. Hutchings has been Guardian of the valley? A. Yes, sir; I helped to make him Guardian.

Q. Were you aware of the expense by Mr. Hutchings' responsibilities for the conditions which existed in the valley with reference to fences, etc.?

A. Mr. Hutchings and I have differed radically in regard to his proceedings in the valley many times, and I have opposed him before the old Commission, opposed him in many propositions, and defeated him in some, and helped defeat him in regard to his scheme to get one hundred and sixty acres of the public land in the Yosemite Valley. It would have made him rich if he had got it; but in justice to the people I thought he should not have it, and though I was friendly with Mr. Hutchings, I raised above my friendship in the matter. I have no such friendship as would keep me blind to a man's wrong acts.

Q. You have been very familiar with the valley, and have been sent for to testify here this evening. Do you mean to testify that the valley is in the hands of a ring? A. No, sir; I don't know anything of that sort.

Q. You saw no evidences of ring management? A. Well, I don't know what you mean by ring management.

Q. You must be a very innocent man if you don't know what a ring management is. A. I have never been the subject myself, that I am aware of, of any ring management.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Mills does not refer exactly to that. We are now investigating the present Commissioners. A. I have no personal knowledge of anything of that kind, sir.

Q. Of course we do not speak of any material ring, we speak of one of those occult propositions which is supposed to eventuate into a mental ring? A. I know nothing about it.

MR. MILLS: What criticism would you make aside from this fenced pasture? What criticism would you make in regard to the rights of the public, what has been disclosed to you by your means of observation—what criticism would you make? You may make it personal, if you please—what have I done? A. I think in the main, sir, you have been a very efficient Commissioner, but I think you have made mistakes as well as every one else who is human.

MR. MILLS: I am not so ready to admit that as you are to charge it.

THE CHAIRMAN: I do not think you ought to bring this in, as there are other witnesses here.

THE WITNESS: I am ready to answer any question.

MR. WHITE: I am not speaking of any turpitude; you have given the facts. Do you know anything else you can criticize? A. I have heard this, but I don't know them myself of my own knowledge; things which I would testify to about wrong management, etc., in connection with the Yosemite Valley, I have no personal knowledge in regard to such matters, I suppose it would be hearsay. It would not be proper under the circumstances.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understand you, doctor, to say that you came to the conclusion, and would answer here, that while you do not indorse all of their management, you think they acted conscientiously? A. I think the Commissioners have intended to discharge the affairs of the valley to the very best interests of the valley, and the people that visited it; but I think, as I said before, that they made some mistakes in their administration. The people of the State pay the taxes which support that valley, and which pay for the improvement of that valley, and the people of the State go there in their own teams mostly—those that go to the valley by public conveyance are mostly people from abroad—people of other States of this Union, and people from foreign countries. The Yosemite Valley is the most thoroughly advertised institution there is in the world, I suppose; and a great many intelligent people want to go through and see that valley, and they ought to go, and I cannot see how it is that Mr. White, the Lieutenant-Governor of the State, has not been there.

MR. WHITE: It is on account of my poverty. I have been scared to go from what I have been told.

MR. ROTH: I would like to ask one question: Suppose these fields were not fenced in for these saddle train purposes, wouldn't there be a higher charge for saddle horses; or, in other words, wouldn't the public have to pay more for saddle horses? A. I don't think that enters in the case at all, but I will tell you, the valley was given to the State of California in trust for a public park; now, I say, it ought to be maintained as a public park, and ought not to be maintained as a farm for money making in any sort, or anything of that kind. It ought to be for the benefit of the public at large, and the people of California in particular, and the people of all the other States that want to go through the valley, and people from other countries, if they want to go through it, they ought to be permitted to roam at large over that ground, and see the beauties and wonderful sceneries that there are there. I think it is the mistake of the Commissioners, although not a crime. I do not think there is any ring business or anything of that kind about it, but I think their judgment and mine differs as to that part of the administration of the valley. Now, I want to say just one word more: The people of the State of California pay the taxes; the people of the State of California pay the taxes which built the bridges and made the roads and so on, and they by all means ought to have the privilege that the laws of Congress and the laws of this State in making the grant gave, and the law of this State in accepting the grant, gave to the public, namely, that that ought to be a place for the free use of the public; that is what it was intended for, and I think the Commissioners have circumscribed the rights of the people to a certain extent; but in that I think they have erred in judgment, and that is all on that point.

MR. ROTH: You think, then, that the fences have destroyed the beauty of the valley? A. Oh, I don't know; I think that a country not fenced is more beautiful than one fenced; I think in the state of nature it is better.

Q. Does the presence of the fences reduce the grandeur of the scenery in any way? A. It does not reduce the grandeur of the cliff.

Q. Does the fences prevent free travel through the valley? A. Yes, sir; they prevent free travel. You cannot jump a fence.

Q. How many miles of turnpike road is there below? A. More than eighteen—eighteen or twenty.

Q. To what extent do those few fences prevent this world from enjoying the splendor of that scenery? A. It don't prevent them from enjoying the scenery.

Q. It does not prevent them from enjoying any of the scenery? A. No, sir.

Q. Or any scenic effect? A. No, sir; but it curtails the right of the people to that valley.

Q. How much of a right?

MR. ROTH: In other words, you think it would be better just to turn everything free like it is everywhere else in the mountains, so any one could go in there with the stock if he pleases? A. No, sir; I do not. I say under the proper administration of the Commissioners if you enter with a two-horse team, and want to camp and tether your horses, you ought to have the privilege, under the direction of these Commissioners and under the special supervision of the Commissioners, you ought to have the privilege of tethering your horses in that valley, say in the Bridal Veil, if you want to.

MR. MILLS: Well, wouldn't all of them that went in first have the best of it? A. Well, people ought to go first; that is all.

Q. The last one might find it very short? A. They ought to go first and get the best.

MR. WHITE: Well, that is all, doctor.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is all, doctor. We will excuse you now. We have no more questions to ask you.

GEORGE BARNES.

Sworn.

MR. WHITE: Where do you live? Answer—In Jacksonville, Tuolumne County.

Q. Have you ever lived at Yosemite? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When; during what period? A. Well, I was there working making the roads, and been there the last eight years, excepting one.

Q. What have you done in the valley? A. I am a working man in the valley.

Q. What is that? A. I am a working man.

Q. But what have you done; have you done work in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For whom? A. The Commissioners of the valley.

Q. For the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir, for the Guardian—Dennison—Mr. Dennison.

Q. Mr. Dennison? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you work for Mr. Dennison in the valley? A. I worked last season.

Q. Did you work for Mr. Dennison in the valley last summer? A. A year ago last summer.

Q. Doing what? A. Well, we were fixing trails and roads.

Q. Well, were you paid for your services? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you experience any difficulty in getting your payments? A. Well, no; I waited for it for some time—for two or three months for the pay, a little overtime, that they said they would pay us.

Q. Who said they would pay you? A. I forget his name—Goucher.

Q. Well, you were employed by Mr. Dennison? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And employed by the day? Were you employed by the day? A. No; I was employed right along for the season.

Q. Well, how—by the month—were you to be paid so much a month, or so much a year, or how? A. So much a month.

Q. How much a month? A. $65 a month.

Q. And how long did you work? A. Well, I worked for Mr. Dennison three seasons.

Q. Well that was how much each season—how many months each season? A. Well, I cannot recollect just now.

Q. Well, can't you tell about it? A. Well, I worked along there about April until near November.

Q. And you got $65 a month all that time? A. All excepting this last summer. This last summer I came out in July.

Q. Well, I say you got $65 a month, did you, during that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were paid your money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you complain about not getting it? A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything irregular or improper about the three months' delay? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you complained about this matter at all, or told anybody that you were mistreated? A. Well, I complained a little. I got about three months' board there, and I did not like for them to keep saying I was in debt for board, and I asked for it.

Q. The man you owed the board to wanted the money from you, and you wanted the money from them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Dennison had some difficulty in getting the money? A. I think he had difficulty in getting the money.

Q. You do not pretend to say he had the money and did not pay you, or misappropriated it? A. No, sir.

Q. There was nothing very extraordinary to your mind, then, about your not getting the money in three months, was there? A. No, sir.

Q. How much were you kept out of for three months? A. I don't know exactly how much. I may have been off a day or two.

Q. Well, was it not only one month's wages the payment of which was delayed? A. It was more than one month, it was three months. It was April, May, and June, and up to the fifteenth of July.

Q. You commenced working in April, when did you commence getting any money? A. I got a little money in June.

Q. How much? A. About $75.

Q. You commenced working in April? A. I commenced working in April.

Q. What time in April? A. I commenced working on the ninth of April.

Q. Then the ninth of June there was two months due you? A. Yes, sir. There was May and June.

Q. $130, and you got $75; there was due $130 in June? A. There was May and June and up to about the twentieth of July.

Q. And you got paid, didn't you, about $75? A. I forget what I did get in June.

Q. Well, of course I am trying to get your best guess at it. You did not work for $75 a month. Now, let us get down to this thing. How much did you work for a month—you recollect that? A. $65.

Q. And then you were paid more than a month's wages? A. No, sir.

Q. Then you could not have got $75, could you; that is a patent proposition? A. I forget what I did get; I don't know whether I got my old book here or not.

Q. Just tell us in plain English, and do not compel us to extract it from you. Just tell us how much you were delayed, as near as you can get at it, and what there was about it? A. I think their payment was $47 50, if I ain't mistaken that there month, working from the ninth to the last of the month.

Q. The last of what month? A. April the first I went to work.

Q. Well, when did you get that $47? A. After they went below.

Q. About what month was that? A. Well, I think it was about the last of June.

Q. Well, when did you get the balance of the money? A. Well, I got the balance of the money of a hired man. When I left there was $150 coming to me.

Q. There was $150 coming to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got $47 first? A. I got $47 first, and there was $155 coming to me, and I gave him $5.

Q. $150 and $47—that is all you got, was it? A. This here Mr. Dennison was there a year before, and he paid me.

Q. [Interrupting] That was the year before? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get all that money? A. I got all but $34.

Q. What was the reason you did not get that? A. I don't know.

Q. Who did you work for—Dennison? A. Dennison.

Q. Was the bill ever approved? A. I believe it was published—something published about it in the paper.

Q. Well, did he approve of it; state it was all right? A. I did not see Dennison.

Q. Didn't you see Dennison? A. Yes, I did see him; he said it was all right.

MR. GOUCHER: This witness was worked by Mr. Dennison the same as any other man at so much a month; and Mr. Dennison worked them over eight hours a day. When I went on the Commission I held they were entitled to work only eight hours, and that they were entitled to extra pay for the time they worked over eight hours. I believe I read it to the Commission, and the Commission allowed for the extra time, and asked the Guardian to prepare a tabulated statement, showing the number of hours extra work over eight hours a day that these several men had performed.

MR. WHITE: Was he paid that $34?

MR. GOUCHER: We ordered it paid; but I don't know the state of it now.

MR. MILLS: I think it was paid. Senator Goucher brought the matter before the Commission, and we allowed the men two hours a day extra time when they had been worked by the Guardian ten hours a day. Under the law eight hours a day was to be a day's work. Then he had to get up a tabulated statement, and some of the men had gone out, and the finances were disturbed by this new element coming in it.

MR. WHITE: The trouble is, I was examining him about 1888, and he got off the track. I will start with 1887 now.

Q. Did you have any complaint prior to 1887? Did you make any complaint about anything? A. Oh, yes; we sent out to Goucher last year—

Q. [Interrupting] Now, I want you to tell me about 1887. Did you have any objection to urge before 1887? Do you understand that? A. No.

Q. Why don't you answer a plain question? You know what 1887 means, don't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what before means when I say before 1887? Do you know what I mean? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you any objection, or, to use words that you will understand better, do you make a kick about anything before that time? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, then, the first matter that you complained about was in 1887; there were thirty-four days which they never paid you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you ever say to Mr. Dennison, "I want that money," or "Why don't you pay me?" A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you ask him something about it? Did you ever ask him for the money? A. I was going to ask him the next time he came up. He has been down below, and I did not see him until the other night.

Q. Did you ever write to him about it? A. No, sir.

Q. Suppose you go and see him to-morrow, or on the eleventh, and probably you will get your money. Did you ever say anything about the money? A. No, sir; that is all they pay the Commissioner.

Q. You don't know that they are going to pay you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have not asked them for the money? A. No; no further than last season.

Q. I am speaking about this $34. Did you ever ask either of the Commissioners or Dennison for the $34? A. Yes, sir. The crowd were all together, and sent Archie up to Mr. Goucher to bring him down.

Q. That was last season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since that have you got any of the $34? A. No, sir.

Q. You have not gotten that at all? A. No, sir.

Q. In 1887 they owed you $34 06. Is that the fact? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, we come to 1888. Do they owe you anything for 1888, independent of this $34? Is there anything for 1888? A. No, sir; they do not.

Q. Well, they owe you the $34 for 1887? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when did they settle with you for 1888? A. This Louis, one of the men, settled with me.

Q. When? A. This was in July, about the eighteenth.

Q. About when did you stop working? A. About the eighteenth or twentieth of July.

Q. And when you stopped working they paid you up in full? A. Well, one of the men did. It don't make any difference. It was the same kind of money. Yes, I was paid in full.

Q. Well, what is there about the way you was paid in 1888, that you objected to? What is there that you think is wrong about the way they paid you? I am trying to get all the facts from you. If there is any objection you have to make, tell us. A. I don't know of any, more than the man with whom I boarded; he might go around and tell everybody that I was in debt, so and so, for board. That is the reason I ask for it.

Q. It was a sort of reflection on your character as a man who paid his debts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did Mr. Dennison have any of this money to pay you, or do you know whether it was delayed? A. I have not seen Mr. Dennison since he gave me that until the other night, and then he was off in a hurry.

Q. Mr. Dennison was not in fault, and you had no one to communicate with about it? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever talk to Mr. Goucher about it at the meeting they had last June; it was just before you were paid, was it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they tell you when they spoke to you about it? Mr. Goucher said you ought to have had that some time ago; I believe he said he thought it was paid; I would not be sure; but he said you ought to have that some time ago; if you have not got this $34, you go over and see these parties and they will doubtless pay you. You had better see Mr. Dennison about it. Who wrote that out? A. Mr. Dennison.

Q. That is Mr. Dennison's handwriting? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GOUCHER: You were working there at the time the June meeting of the Commissioners was held in 1887, were you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not; you and the other workingmen here at that time after we had instructed the Guardian not to have you work more than eight hours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after we had also decided that we would pay you for the extra time over eight hours that you had worked before? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now that extra time you had worked before the June meeting—the time over eight hours—it amounted in your case to $34, did it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the part that remained unpaid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard him order it paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard that I brought that matter before the Board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the June meeting last year—the meeting last year that you referred to—you and a number of the other workingmen who had not been paid, called him from the hotel down to the Guardian's porch there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sent Archie, you say? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And told him you had not been paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not that all there is about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I told you I would see what was the trouble—that it had been ordered paid the previous year? A. Yes; you said you thought it had been paid; that it ought to have been paid before this time.

Q. And I told you I would see where the fault was. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the money for the over eight hours' work a day in the preceding year? A. Yes, sir.

MR. WHITE: Now, was that eight-hour allowance made in 1888?

MR. GOUCHER: Well, we met in June, 1888, and I had ascertained that the Guardian was working the men eight hours a day or more than eight hours. There was some difficulty in regard to the appropriations—in regard to money on hand. It was a thing that had not been expected and the money was not on hand to pay it at the time. That is the reason it was not paid at the time, but it was ordered paid last June.

MR. MILLS: When we met at the June meeting in 1888 we found that the Secretary who had served prior to that time, and who now resides in Los Angeles, had not kept the books for five or six months, and all these matters were to be straightened up and these bills to be paid. This money was money that came in in the year 1887 and therefore it complicated the finances of each year. You understand the finances of each year are paid out for the work of that year.

MR. ROBINSON: When you were paid how much money was owing by the Commission? When Louis settled with you, how much money was due you outside of this back pay? A. $155.

Q. Who was Guardian when you were paid that money? A. Mr. McCord.

Q. Mr. Dennison was not Guardian, nor didn't have anything to do with this payment? A. No, sir.

Q. What did Mr. McCord say when you asked him for your pay? A. Mr. McCord said: "I have not got it, but if you want to borrow some money to pay for your board, I will let you have it." I said to Mr. McCord, I do not do things that way, and I guess I will quit, just that way.

Q. Louis paid you how much money? A. $155. He paid me $150, and I gave him $5 for paying it.

MR. WHITE: You gave him $5 for paying it. You paid him a commission for collecting it from them? A. I don't know whether he collected it from Mr. McCord.

Q. Did he get the money which he paid you from Mr. McCord? A. I don't know.

Q. Did he say he did? A. I have not seen him.

Q. Well, you did see him when you got the money? A. Yes, sir; he paid me.

Q. You have no idea where he got it? A. I have no idea whether he was paid or not.

Q. When was that? A. That was about the last of July.

Q. Of what year? A. This year, 1888.

Q. 1888? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But do you know where he got that money that he gave you? A. Oh, he has worked there for several years, and he has always got some money.

Q. Who is that? A. This is an Italian by the name of Louis.

Q. Well, this you paid him was interest on the loan? A. Yes, sir; the $5 was interest.

Q. He did not borrow any money, as I understand it, from Louis. I will simply make this statement that this $5 he paid him was the commission—

Q. MR. MILLS [Interrupting]: All right; impeach him.

THE WITNESS: This is the money that was owing me from Mr. McCord for working.

MR. WHITE: You say this man Louis, or somebody, gave his money to you. It was his own money; is that so? A. He did not loan it; he gave it to me as my wages.

Q. Where did he get it? A. He has always got money—he has got money.

Q. Was it the money you earned, or the State money? A. I cannot state whether it was State money or not.

MR. BOGGS: It seems to me that it was this way: that some one bought his time, and he gave him $5 as a discount? A. That is it.

MR. WHITE: Well, if he bought his time, and gave him his money, he just simply discounted it. It amounts to the same proposition as if he had loaned him the money and took $5 as the interest; there is no difference.

Q. Was this man working for Mr. McCord? A. Yes, sir.

Q. This man who got the $5? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you go and get the money from the Commission instead of getting it from him, if you had earned it? A. Well, I wanted to go away, and I asked Mr. McCord, and he said he did not come up, and I wanted to go on the outside to attend to business—I had to go.

Q. Then you simply went to this man whom you knew had money of his own, and you gave him your claim against the Commission of $155, and he paid you $150 for that claim? A. Yes, sir; that is it.

MR. WHITE: That is all.

MR. MILLS: That is all.

MR. ROTH: I would like to ask these Commissioners a question: Was it understood when you hired the man, when he was to get his pay?

MR. MILLS: The Commissioners appointed an Executive Committee under the law. There is no member of the Executive Committee present. I have not been a member of the Executive Committee for a number of years. The Commissioners simply met in the valley once a year, but the Executive Committee transacted the details of the business. The appropriation is available at two different times of the year—the first of January and the first of July—and no money can be drawn except in pursuance of the appropriation. The result is that sometimes the fund is exhausted, and it must be paid out of the additional appropriation, or the appropriation which may be made available at the end of the semi-annual term. Now, here are the circumstances related here: if this matter had come before the Commission, we would have called upon the Secretary to explain why the men had not been paid; but it appears from Mr. McCord's statement to this gentleman, that no money for the purpose of paying it was available just at that time. I had myself offered to loan him money for necessities, but he sold his time to a fellow workman; and no doubt, shortly after, this claim was paid. But at times there was no money in the fund, because it cannot be drawn except at intervals, when there is no money in the treasury except at stated times.

CHARLES B. ATKINSON.

Sworn.

MR. WHITE: Have you ever worked in the Yosemite Valley? Answer—Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever worked for the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you done in that valley? A. Well, I have done almost every thing. I have worked there by the day under Mr. Clark, under Mr. Hutchings, under Mr. Dennison, and I was Mr. McCord's foreman while he had charge, until last September.

Q. While you were foreman, or at any time, state whether you saw anything that was the subject of criticism, or that might be made so? A. Well, the only thing, or the main thing in my opinion, is that the management of the valley is not half strict enough.

Q. Well, go on and state where you think it is defective? A. Well, I think they ought to make iron-bound rules that must be obeyed. I know the policy at present is not half, to quote from the Treasurer's own words, the former Treasurer, Dr. May, that the strong arm of authority should put away the policy of milder measures first tried, and which do not work in the Yosemite.

Q. Well, what is it that you have seen that leads you to the inference that there is something necessary for a more rigid character? A. Well, it is the peculiar place, and the peculiar people.

Q. Well, what is there? A. Well, I can't particularize.

Q. You cannot tell anything then? A. Well, no; I cannot come down to any particular thing. I know everything there. I have been connected with it for about ten years.

Q. What have you seen any of them do, which warrant some kind of iron-clad interposition? A. Well, I know the Guardian was not vested with full authority.

Q. What Guardian? A. Mr. Dennison particularly; to carry out even his own rulings everything had to be before the Board.

Q. Your idea was that he should have —

Q. [Interrupting] He should have some discretion? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what sort of matters? I suppose, of course, he had some kind of authority; if his house caught fire, he could put it out. But what was there particularly that you saw that you thought he ought to do that he could not do? Just tell me something. If there was so much of it you should recollect a portion? A. Well, we will take Mr. Harlow's case, an application, it was doubtless referred to the Executive Committee.

Q. Do you know about that? A. No, sir; I don't know about that, but I do know of a case where a man—a blacksmith, George W. Harlow—applied for permission to sleep in a shed belonging to the butcher. He wrote on to the Executive Committee for permission to have them grant Mr. Harlow permission to sleep in the shed, and the Commission granted Mr. Harlow permission to sleep in the shed, and he slept there.

Q. You think the Guardian ought to have had authority to grant this permission himself, because it might get to be daylight before he could get word back from the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I might agree with you about that, but I think it would be a good plan to carry his commission along with him if he goes up there. Now, what other particular matter did you observe besides that—anything about the management of the men? A. No, sir; Mr. Dennison was a perfect gentleman in every way, shape, and manner.

Q. Did you ever see anything about the way he conducted the work, or the payment of compensation, or anything of that sort that you could criticise? A. No, sir. In regard to compensation, the bills have to go to San Francisco to the Treasurer. He itemizes, I understand, and I think he puts them all in one bill, and sends them all here, and they are examined, and then the Controller issues his warrant, and they go to San Francisco, and he draws his money and deposits it in the bank, and we get certificates of deposit in the valley after awhile.

MR. MILLS: You understand that all the bills have to be passed on by the State Board of Commissioners?

MR. WHITE: Then, when the claim travels around a circle and makes a loop, and gets back there, it comes in the form of a warrant? A. No, sir; it comes in the form of a certificate, a check, or a certificate of deposit.

Q. You do not have to pay anything for getting that certificate of deposit; you cash it for its face? A. Well, you cash it if you find anybody that wants the money; and if you find anybody that wants it, they generally want something for cashing it.

Q. When you get the certificate back, you have to pay something? A. Yes, sir, or have to pay something on them when they are sent by express. As a usual thing, they are always glad to take them.

Q. They are glad to take them to send them on to pay for bills? A. Yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: The checks are always at a premium in the valley.

MR. WHITE: If they pay a discount, it was not the fault of the Commission, anyway.

MR. MILLS: Hotels frequently require people to pay in checks.

MR. WHITE: Is there anything else that strikes you as involving criticism? A. I don't know what I was called for, nor why I was called.

Q. You were called to tell if you know anything about this matter. If you have anything to say which would tend to show that the management is improper in any regard, state it? A. Well, there are, I think, at least ninety acres under cultivation there, I would state. I know Mr. William F. Coffman put in nine hundred pounds of grain there himself.

MR. BOGGS: Seeded to what? A. To hay.

MR. WHITE: Ninety acres was seeded? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many are inclosed? A. Well, I really could not say; really the best part of the valley is inclosed, and it is simply the best part of the valley because it is inclosed. The outside of the fence is all grown up with thickets and briars and pine brush.

MR. MILLS: That would have been the case with the other if it had not been inclosed? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: In your judgment, fencing it has been an advantage? A. To a certain extent; but if the fence was taken down, and the same care was put on the land that was put on what was fenced, the whole valley would be the same.

MR. WHITE: Well, briars don't get through the fence? A. No, sir; they don't permit them to grow. That is simply a question of cultivation, or keeping them down. The fence has no effect, but the mere circumstance that inside the fence has been cultivated, and naturally these things do not grow there.

MR. MILLS: Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have this gentleman's testimony in regard to this matter.

MR. WHITE: I am getting at it.

MR. MILLS: Well, it has been testified to here by Dr. McLean that there were too many fences, and the beauty of the valley was destroyed by the fences, and I want now to ascertain to what extent that valley grows up, wherever it is neglected, in briers and cottonwood, and if fences had not existed there, whether or not there would be a tangled wilderness.

MR. WHITE: Well, what I am getting at is the cultivation inside of the fence; if the growth was kept down outside of the fence by the same cause as inside of the fence, it would be the same thing? A. Yes, sir. The inclosure was rented to private individuals, and they had means to keep it down, and the Commissioners unfortunately have always been short of funds.

MR. MILLS: One of the charges against the Commissioners is that they have been cutting the brush and devastating the valley, and felled a large number of trees, and a great many things; and there seems to be a prevailing sentiment against cutting anything in the valley. I would like to have you ask him as to this devastation that has been talked of—the cutting of timber, etc.

MR. WHITE: Well, tell us all you know about cutting timber? A. Well, I know when I went in the valley there was a sawmill there that had been run—lumber had been cut.

Q. Who put up that sawmill? A. Mr. Hutchings.

Q. Mr. Hutchings cut the timber? A. I presume it was cut under his orders; but as long as I have been there the sawmill has never been run. What timber we have cut is for bridges mostly.

Q. They sawed the timber for the hotel, didn't they? A. No, sir. That was outside of the valley, on the top of the hill.

MR. MILLS: They sawed it on government section—they stole the timber?

MR. WHITE: It was not a railroad section?

MR. MILLS: No, sir; if it had been I would have taken care of it.

THE WITNESS: We had to get timbers out for bridges, and we used Douglas spruce, and it is hard to get, it is up in the rocks outside of everywhere; it does not grow in the meadow land. Then I know there has been a great deal of complaint in regard to getting certain oaks. I know that those oaks were dead and good for nothing, with the exception of about three trees which were cut out to clear the view. There were a number of trees cut out to clear this view, but of those there were only three oaks that were good trees.

Q. Were the oaks dead? A. The oaks were dead, and the top covered with mistletoe, and the limbs were blown off.

MR. MILLS: They were in a state of decay? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What about the site of the Stoneman House? A. There were a number of trees removed.

Q. For what reason? A. Well, they were removed to keep the litter away from the house and to save the house. There was danger of the trees falling, and it was to prevent them falling on to the house. There was some dead oaks there removed, and one or two trees cut by the house; there was some pines.

MR. WHITE: Well, is that all the devastation of timber, or the cutting down of timber, that has been done there? A. In some of those thickets, in a few places, we trimmed out the pine thickets; we pruned up the trees, and left them about fifteen or twenty feet apart as little growths; we cut out the underbrush.

MR. MILLS: Suppose all those fences were pulled up, and nature, as the man said about the blue gondolas, was trimmed to take its course, what would be the condition of affairs in the valley—would there be pasture which could be utilized by the public? A. No, sir; I don't think there would be.

Q. You think that with the exception of the places where the growth is kept down there is no pasture in the valley? A. Well, in some of those inclosures where the brush has not been cut down, it has overgrown so it is hardly fit for a pasture now.

Q. Well, is there a good pasture in the valley outside of these fences? A. No, sir; and there is not very good pasture there anyway, only when the water is up. As soon as the water goes down and the river is dry, the grass dries out.

Q. Well, can you raise hay anywhere in the valley except within these inclosures? A. Not without clearing it.

Q. How much land is there in the valley in your judgment? A. Well, it has all been surveyed and staked off, and mapped and platted.

MR. BOGGS: What length is there in it? A. About seven miles.

Q. And how wide? A. Well, it is longer than seven miles from end to end; and to take the main floor of the valley it is about seven miles—the meadow land.

Q. How many feet wide will it average? A. I could hardly tell. It might average a mile, I would think; but then those rocks fall from the walls in some places to the river, and almost fills up the entire bed of the valley; where the cañons come down, there is a large amount of sand.

MR. WHITE: How much of that land do you think could be cleared for pasture, or for any purpose?

MR. MILLS: Suppose you take the Cascade Road?

MR. WHITE: I have never been there, and that does not help me any.

MR. MILLS: Then take it up toward Register Rock? A. I should think you could get at least two thousand acres. It is a hard matter to judge of land in that shape.

MR. MILLS: It will average more than a mile in width, will it not? A. I don't think the land that you could pasture with.

Q. The pine land and all together averages more than a mile in width—now, you remember five thousand two hundred and eighty feet is a mile? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That Cathedral Rock which stands nearly opposite the old El Capitan—each of those are about three thousand feet high. If they should fall from the valley, there would be room for them to lie down, would there not? A. Yes, sir; I should think so.

Q. Well, there you get over a mile. A. And you travel a good quarter of a mile before you get to the base.

Q. The rocks go out into the valley occasionally, but I will take your statement of two thousand acres. How many acres are there fenced, do you say? A. Well, perhaps two hundred and fifty.

Q. Have you ever known of any cause of complaint on the part of tourists, with reference to charges in the valley, or of the manner in which they were treated in the valley? A. Well, I know that there have been complaints made, but I cannot recall any particular instance.

Q. Have any tourists ever complained to you there? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard them talk about it—persons visiting the valley? A. I know everybody in the valley, and everything that goes on, I know about it; it is just like a little country town.

Q. Did you ever see anything going on in that valley while you were there that was at all questionable? A. No, sir.

Q. And your opinion is that the management is first class? A. Yes, sir. I do not see really how it could be as well as it is, and to make it better in any way, shape, or manner there have got to be more stringent rules. In regard to those hay ranches and saddle trains, they employ a great many men; and there are three or four months that they have nothing to do, and you have got to have something to keep them busy.

Q. Are those guides in the habit of fleecing people at all? A. They have no chance, no opportunity whatever.

MR. MILLS: Who does fleece anybody down there? A. I don't know.

Q. Why do you say these guides do not have any chance? A. They do not handle any money whatever.

Q. Do you know whether they are not in the habit of collecting money from people? A. Well, the guides always do the very best they can for the party, to get their little "perq." as they call it.

Q. One man may have a more successful method for making his "perq." than another? A. It is their treatment of the visitor that gets them their perquisite.

Q. Do you think that the most susceptible foreigner would not be in danger of being overcharged? A. No, sir; they do not make the charges; the price is put upon the horses by the State.

Q. The price is put upon the horses by the State for the passengers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there was much extortion you would hear about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because these tourists would complain about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard complaint about it? A. I have not.

Q. And you have been there how long? A. Not continuously, but I have been there most of the time for ten years.

Q. And you would be most apt to have heard it? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: You spoke about timber being cut around the hotel. Do you recollect, or were you in the valley one season there when I was on the Commission, when there was a big cyclone came in there and took one particular place—leveled all the timber? A. Yes; and one of those trees the branches were nearly stripped; there was not a single limb on it, and Mr. Hutchings went nearly crazy because they cut it down.

Q. If the same thing had happened again, wouldn't it be dangerous for the Stoneman House, if those trees had not been cut down? A. Yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: Were you present when the Commissioners decided what trees to cut at the Stoneman House? A. I was in the valley at the time.

Q. Do you remember when they determined what trees to be felled there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that the Commissioners met around each tree, and that the Chairman of the Commission said the question is, Shall this tree be cut? and discussed the question, Is that tree dangerous to the hotel? and if they decided that it was dangerous to the hotel they blazed it, and you gentlemen cut it down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Great care was exercised in not cutting any more trees than were necessary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What trees were cut were cut because, in the judgment of the Commission, they might fall on the hotel and crush it? A. Yes, sir; with the exception of a few oaks which were dead.

Q. Were you employed in the valley when the road crossing the valley crossed by the Bridal Veil Fall and passed by seven or eight trees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were then in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that the road was subsequently moved higher up, close up against the Bridal Veil Fall? A. Yes, sir; I was employed there at the time.

Q. Who was Guardian when that road was put there? A. Mr. Hutchings.

Q. And it became necessary in order to afford a view of the Bridal Veil Fall to open a vista? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was such a vista opened by cutting trees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who cut those trees? A. By the order of Mr. Hutchings.

Q. Was not there altogether more trees cut by the order of Mr. Hutchings in changing that road than at any other place, and at all other times put together? Didn't it require more cutting away of timber to clear out that vista than all the other cutting away that was done? A. No, sir; I would not say that, because I don't think there was—because there was only one little jog, one little place on the twenty-six miles of road.

Q. One of the charges is that there was considerable timber cut. Where was this timber sawed for the hotel? A. It was cut on Government land.

Q. The timber for the hotel was then cut on Government land? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it done by the contractor or by order of the Commission? A. It was done by the contractor.

Q. Who used that sawmill? A. Mowley Abernethy.

Q. Was it off of the grant? A. Yes, sir; that was off of the grant.

THE CHAIRMAN: Up near Gentry's? A. Yes, sir; I think so; I am not positive.

MR. MILLS: They cut a road below to the hotel—the timber down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you cognizant of the fact that the Commissioners paid for the repairs of that road? A. The old flat road? That was used by the valley.

Q. They made that road good? A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Generally the Commissioners pay the amount of damages claimed to be done the road by hauling timber? A. They report on the road; they keep a man on the road all the time—steadily all that summer.

Q. Is there any complaint made by the tourists there concerning the charges—that is, the amount of charges—or is there general satisfaction? A. Well, some of them complain about certain charges, as, for instance, there is a round trip up by McCauley's—there is some complaint there.

MR. WHITE: Well, what is that charge?

MR. MILLS: What is the charge for a horse for the round trip? A. I think $5.

Q. How long does it take to make the round trip? A. Well, it takes all day.

MR. MILLS: It saves the tourist two trips; it is equivalent to a two-days trip?

THE WITNESS: It is harder on the horses. It is going a two-days trip in one.

MR. WHITE: How many miles is it? A. Six.

MR. MILLS: And any one mile equals six or seven.

Q. There is some question raised as to granting of exclusive privileges in the valley—they say that is wrong—what would be your judgment in regard to granting as many privileges as they might ask for—take the saddle train business? A. The saddle train business would not be run without a special privilege. In a short season everybody would have horses there, and they would be fighting each other, would cut the rates down to nothing, and then when a privilege went away all the horses would be out.

Q. Would not they sell out to each other? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any privileges granted to butchers in the valley—how many did the butchering? A. One.

Q. They blackmailed him for the privilege, did they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in the valley when the Commissioners adopted a policy growing out of just that condition of things, and upon the report of the saddle train privilege, that they had paid one man $800 a year—about $800 a year—not to go in there and rent horses—were you in there when the Commissioners took that up? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When Mr. Mathews, the Commissioner, charged them nothing for the privilege, and they were paying $800 a year to an outsider not to bring horses in there? A. Yes, sir.

MR. WHITE: How much does he pay to the State?

MR. MILLS: $600; they pay for the privilege $600. They blackmail each other and charge the public a blackmail price, and the committee concluded to give special privileges.

MR. WHITE: Were you in there at the time this general competitive system was going on? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time how did the charges correspond with the charges at the present time—the charges to tourists? A. Well, they never were more than they are at present.

Q. They are at the maximum now? A. Yes, sir; if I remember correctly, they were never more than that.

MR. MILLS: The question was fully reviewed by the Commission. Sometimes there are very few tourists come in and other times they come in great numbers at one time. I will ask the witness if the tourists reach the valley in regular parties? A. No, sir; certainly not. Sometimes there would be nobody at all. One month there will be nothing doing and the next there will be a rush the whole of the month.

Q. You must keep horses to the maximum number? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you must keep, for the whole month, enough of the maximum number on hand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have got the hotel at full expense when there may be no demand whatever? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So sometimes it is very full and other times there is nobody there at all? A. Yes, sir.

MR. FRASER: How much a month does it cost to keep a horse in the valley? A. If you turn the horses out it won't cost you a cent. I don't keep any horses there. Perhaps Hutchings' books will show.

MR. WHITE: Do you know? If you don't know, say so? A. I don't know.

MR. BOGGS: I would like to ask the witness this question: Do they produce enough on this land that they have inclosed to provide feed for the horses, or have they got to buy some? A. All the grain is hauled, and a great deal of hay.

MR. WHITE: That they use for these horses? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the valley does not produce enough even to support these horses? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you suppose it produces 50 per cent?

Q. Do you know what the price of hay is after they haul it in? A. I think hay is delivered at from $40 to $50 per ton.

Q. And the grain is what figure above the market price? A. Well, ground barley is just about 3 and 3/4 cents.

MR. MILLS: How long does the season last when they have the use of these horses—an average season? A. Well, the season does not really commence until along in May.

Q. And it closes out what time? A. Well, it closes before the fourth of July; early before the fourth of July.

MR. MILLS: I want to call Senator White's attention to this testimony. The witness says that the season commences about May, and closes along about the fourth of July. Now, I want to ask you, is it necessary to keep horses the year around to supply that period of time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the expense of the horses for the whole year must be charged to that season; from May to July? A. Yes, sir.

MR. WHITE: That would hardly be, because I suppose the horses are not prevented from going somewhere else and doing something else the last of the year?

THE WITNESS: What would they do; they are saddle horses.

Q. They are kept there all the time? A. Yes, sir. Along in the fall they send the work horses up in the Little Yosemite, out to pasture.

Q. And keep the others right in the valley? A. No, sir.

Q. Through the winter? A. Not through the winter; they send them out to the ranch.

MR. MILLS: But they have to keep them the whole year, and it is not a class of horses that can be used in any other work; they are a peculiar class of saddle horses, and not horses that can be used for saddle horses generally.

MR. BOGGS: I suppose they are used for three or four months in the valley, and fed there at a higher rate of expense, perhaps 200 per cent more, than in this valley.

MR. MILLS: Sometimes a large party will come in in September, and the privilege would be violated if they did not keep their horses there for any emergency.

MR. ROBINSON: Do you remember of meeting me in my studio in July? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember me asking you something about the State work and how many hours they work? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember your telling me the men were worked eight to ten hours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That most of them, when they went to that agent, had to agree to work ten hours or they would not take them at all? A. I told you that there was a tacit understanding that they would work ten hours, and they were paid by the hour.

Q. And do you remember also of telling me and furnishing me a list of the names of those who were about to be discharged on Saturday night? A. I remember of your telling me that you thought it was bad treatment.

Q. Do you remember telling me you thought it was a great shame that American men should be turned off to keep Italians on? A. Yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: They were then working by the hour? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And running work ten hours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But they were all paid for all the work they did? A. Yes, sir; they were originally paid there $2 50, and they worked ten hours a day. The old time hands that had been employed got $3 12½, and the new hands got $3.

Q. And you told Mr. Robinson that it was an outrage to employ Italians? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not an Italian a man that a white man is bound to respect?

MR. WHITE: I thought an Italian was a white man.

THE WITNESS: I did not say Italians, I said aliens.

MR. MILLS: Then a man has to be born in America to have a right to work in the valley? A. I thought the law was, there should be no aliens on public works.

Q. It was a shame for a man not to be born here? A. The men sent their money home to foreign countries, and men with families here should go hungry.

MR. ROBINSON: You also remember telling me that the men had to be driven? A. Well, it is out of my head now.

MR. WHITE: Let me ask a question: Did I understand you that the men had to work ten hours a day, or they would not employ them? A. Well, you could quit if you did not want to work.

Q. I understand that, of course, but you had to take that alternative, had you? A. Yes, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: Do you remember telling me that Mr. McCord required you to drive the men; that they were not working fast enough, and that you would resign rather than drive those men? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That they were mining men and not accustomed to that sort of thing, and you did not want to take the job and drive them? A. He and I got in a dispute. He said the men ought to work harder, and I ought to drive them, and I said I did not think the men needed driving, and he said very well, you won't do for my foreman.

MR. WHITE: You thought the men were working well? A. Yes, sir; doing very good work, one and two off together on the trail.

MR. MILLS: In his judgment they were not doing enough? A. In my opinion he was only talking.

MR. BOGGS: Did Mr. McCord tell you to drive the men, or hurry them up? A. He said, "drive them;" those were his very words.

Q. Did you take it in its offensive sense, or did you understand that he meant for you to hurry them up? A. Well, I took it in its offensive sense at the time—I was angry at the time—although I don't really suppose he meant it.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did he tell you to use a whip, or goad stick, or anything of that kind? A. No, sir. Mr. Chapman was in there at the time and he had charge of the work.

MR. MILLS: Did he require a guardian to get more work out of the men? A. Mr. Chapman was perfectly satisfied with the work the men were doing.

MR. WHITE: Were there any gentlemen from the Flowery Kingdom, otherwise called Mongolians, working there? A. Not except some few employed in some of the hotels.

Q. There are some few in the hotels? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many are working there in that occupation? A. Well, in the summer time, in the hotel season, I suppose there were half a dozen.

Q. They do the cooking, I suppose, and dish washing? A. The dish washing and laundry business, I guess, principally.

Q. The Commissioners don't hire them? A. No, sir; the Commissioners never hired a Chinaman.

The committee here adjourned until next Monday, February 11, 1889, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes P. M.

IN THE MATTER

OF THE

Investigation of the Yosemite Valley Commissioners.

ASSEMBLY—TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

TESTIMONY.

SACRAMENTO, TUESDAY EVENING, February 5, 1889.

The Assembly Committee on Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove of Big Trees met at half-past seven o'clock P. M., for the purpose of investigating certain charges preferred against the Commissioners to Manage Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove of Big Trees, by C. D. Robinson. The following proceedings were had:

The clerk read the following charges, preferred by Mr. Robinson:

1. Squandering and misapplying appropriations and public moneys.
2. Forcible breaking and entering of private property.
3. Wanton destruction of public and private property.
4. Cutting and destroying timber in the valley.
5. Burning shrubbery, clearing and plowing up meadows, and allowing persons to do the same for their private gain, thereby doing irreparable damage to the natural beauties of the valley.
6. Fencing and farming out public lands for the benefit of private individuals.
7. Refusing to investigate or consider charges of gross neglect, and incompetence, and destruction of property preferred against Guardian Dennison.
8. Connivance with persons endeavoring to secure all business privileges in Yosemite Valley, and to evict other residents, and debar the general public from just and legal use of the valley.
9. Neglect to prosecute persons for disfiguring and destroying natural features of the valley in open defiance of law.
10. Holding annual meeting with closed doors in defiance of law.
11. Allowing contractors for the Stoneman House to cut and mill timber within the limits of the grant.
12. Open defiance of laws prohibiting the granting of exclusive privileges.
13. Reduction of rentals, to the prejudice of the State's income.
14. Making illegal and arbitrary contracts with laborers, and withholding their wages.
15. Refusal to recognize their own contracts, and to pay balance due on the same.
16. Suppressing and withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the Board, and illegally leasing the same.
17. Cutting wood on the grant and selling to residents of the valley, thereby destroying the natural park timber in defiance of their own rules and regulations, and in violation of law.
18. Official sanction and approval of a return to the vicious toll system of former years, abolished with great difficulty and at considerable expense by the Legislature.
19. Eviction of law abiding and useful families, in aid of monopoly enterprises, thereby destroying the district school of Yosemite.
20. Gross neglect of public roads and trails within the grant.
21. Employment of State labor upon work for private parties.
22. General failure and incompetence of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley for the interest of the State of California, in accordance with conditions imposed by the United States, for the comfort and convenience of visitors from abroad, or for the welfare of residents of the valley.

C. D. ROBINSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this the fourth day of February, A. D. 1889.

DANIEL HANLON, Notary Public.

JAMES GRANT.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Mr. Grant, where do you reside, sir? Answer—I reside at Davenport, in the State of Iowa. I stay a large portion of my time at Granite Springs, Mariposa County, California.

Q. How long have you resided in that section of the country, or how long have you been stopping there? A. I have been stopping in California since 1882.

Q. I mean in that section of the country? A. In that vicinity, either at that place or at a mine seven miles from there.

Q. You have been summoned here for the purpose of testifying in regard to some charges that have been made here against the general management of the Yosemite Valley.

MR. TULLY: I don't know that there is anything in the nature of those charges, Mr. Chairman, that confines the witness to any particular time or any particular administration of affairs there.

Q. About what time did you first go where you reside now? A. In 1882.

Q. Mr. Grant, there are some charges here that have been preferred—specific charges made against the management of Yosemite Valley. I understand those charges embrace not only the present management, but all past managements. Any portions of those matters which you may be cognizant of or have had an opportunity to observe, in the management of that valley. The first charge is: "Squandering and misapplying appropriations and public moneys." Do you know anything about the management of the valley there; are you cognizant of any instance in which public moneys have been squandered or misappropriated? A. I know nothing in the world about the disposition of public money.

Q. The next question is, Mr. Grant: "Forcible breaking and entering of private property." Do you know anything about that? A. I know nothing at all about that; nothing whatever.

Q. The third charge is: "Wanton destruction of public and private property." A. I know nothing about that, sir. Perhaps I had better tell you what I do know.

Q. I will go over these, and afterwards we will probably strike something that you do know about. You know nothing about that charge A. No.

Q. The fourth charge is: "Cutting and destroying timber in the valley." That would include everything within the reservation there? A. I know nothing of it.

Q. Cutting down and destroying timber? A. I have not been there often enough or long enough to know about such matters.

Q. The fifth charge is: "Burning shrubbery, clearing and plowing up meadows, and allowing persons to do the same for their private gain, thereby doing irreparable damage to the natural beauties of the valley." A. My visits to Yosemite have never been greater than a part of three days, and I have never been there often enough or long enough to know anything about matters of that kind.

Q. In those visits that you have made there have you observed anything of the character indicated in that charge? A. I have not, sir. When I have gone to Yosemite Valley my mind, as an intelligent, thinking man, has been totally absorbed with the nobility and grandeur of the place, which I think is the greatest now known to human beings; and of course I have given my attention to the grandeur and beauties and splendor and magnificence of the valley, instead of to the management of it.

Q. Did you or did you not, in any of those visits, observe anything of that character—"destroying or burning shrubbery?" A. No.

Q. Did you see anything there tending to destroy or mar the natural aspect of the valley? A. Yes, sir; I have seen things that I thought marred the natural aspect of the valley very much: fences put up around it, and land inclosed and occupied, as I supposed and was told there, for private parties.

Q. Have you see that? A. I have seen that; yes, sir; and a man cannot go there without seeing it to some extent.

Q. That would go to some extent to that charge. If you have observed anything of that kind, state it, and to what extent, as far as your recollection serves? A. Why, when I have been there I have observed a large field running right close up to the Yosemite Falls; and when I have wanted to hire a horse, they told me they were driving them up from a pasture on the Yosemite Valley, which I did not see; I supposed it must have been inclosed. It has been two years since I was there. I do not remember at this moment any inclosure that I observed, except the one on the left hand side of the road going from Leidig's up to Barnard's.

Q. What was the character of that fence? A. It was a fence inclosing a piece of land that was cleared. There was no large amount of trees on it, if any.

Q. Was it plowed up on the inside? A. I did not observe that, sir.

Q. Was it a wire fence? A. It was a board fence. I am told there are wire fences there, but I have never seen them.

Q. The sixth charge is: "Fencing and farming out public lands for the benefit of private individuals." What do you know about that charge, Mr. Grant, of your own knowledge, or that you have reason to believe? A. I know nothing of my own knowledge; except what I heard one of the Commissioners state last night.

Q. State what your general impression is; state what you have learned from your intercourse with those people regarding the management of that concern with regard to this question? [The clerk read the sixth charge: "Fencing and farming out public lands for the benefit of private individuals."] A. That is the general rumor that I have heard from people who go there.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge? A. I do not. I suppose those fences—I don't know—those fences that I saw have been erected by the Commissioners. So far as I have any knowledge of their convenience, or the public convenience, the land might not have been leased to an individual.

Q. What impression have those rumors, taken in connection with what you have seen there, made upon your mind? A. They have made the impression on my mind that there has been gross mismanagement there.

Q. What do we understand you to mean by gross mismanagement? A. Allowing privileges to individuals there, in preference to allowing the public free use of the property. I have read the statute. I am a lawyer. I have read the statute donating the Yosemite Valley to the State, in trust. It is for the public use as a place of public resort and recreation.

Q. I was just going to ask you that question: Whether or not, from what you saw there, and from what you learned, whether you believe that those things have been done in violation of the law under which that property was donated to the State and under which it governs the management of it? A. It appears so to me.

Q. You have read the law? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from your understanding of the law and from what you have seen and heard there, and learned, you believe that it has been in gross violation of the laws governing that place? A. Yes, sir; I think the intent and spirit of the law, and the letter of it, have been violated, in the management of that property.

Q. The seventh charge is: "Refusing to investigate or consider charges of gross neglect and incompetence, and destruction of property, preferred against Guardian Dennison?" A. I know nothing of it, sir. I never heard of it.

Q. You know nothing of it at all? A. No.

Q. The eighth charge is: "Connivance with persons endeavoring to secure all business privileges in Yosemite Valley, and to evict other residents, and debar the general public from just and legal use of the valley." Now, Mr. Grant, state if you know anything about that? A. I heard one of the Commissioners, Mr. Mills, last night state that they had deliberately given the exclusive privilege to the saddle-train individual and rented it to him for the purpose of feeding his stock. I heard Mr. Mills say so. I had heard it as a rumor repeatedly, but I never knew the fact until I heard him as a Commissioner avow it and undertake to justify it. That is an open violation of the laws of the State.

Q. Which he admitted to you? A. Which he admitted to the committee of the Senate in his argument which he made before them, when I was a witness on the stand, last night.

Q. In any other particular besides this renting, what did you see about renting the saddle trains? A. The saddle-train was leased to one particular individual, for the exclusive use of it.

Q. In other words he had been granted an exclusive privilege? A. An exclusive privilege to furnish saddle horses to persons in the valley.

Q. To the exclusion of others? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other instance in which an exclusive privilege has been granted to individuals and denied to others? A. When I first went to the valley I saw a sign up, "One dollar toll for every person going into the valley." The last time I was there I saw that sign up. I asked Mr. Mills last night if that was true that people were charged toll for going into the Yosemite Valley; if any person was authorized to charge persons toll for going into the valley, and he said Washburn was.

MR. DIBBLE: Who is Washburn? A. He is the Superintendent, and I am told one of the largest stockholders in the Yosemite Stage and Wagon Road Company.

Q. He is the Superintendent of the stage company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is this toll charged and collected? A. In traveling in the valley, I understand; for the roads in the valley.

Q. Where is it collected; where is the toll-gate? A. There is no gate, sir.

Q. I mean where they collect the toll? A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Do you know whether they collect toll or not? A. I do not, sir.

Q. You only know what you saw; that you saw the sign? A. I don't know. I have seen it stated that Washburn did collect toll; read the newspaper correspondence.

Q. What we want is legal evidence. Do you know that any toll has been collected of your own knowledge? A. Of course I do not, sir.

Q. Then you don't know anything about it? A. No. The gentleman told me not to limit my answers to what I actually knew. I started to do that, but he told me not to.

MR. TULLY: I understand that in this investigation we are not bound to confine ourselves to legal rules. We are sitting here, as it were, as a grand jury.

MR. DIBBLE: A grand jury cannot take anything but legal evidence; and hearsay evidence is simply no evidence at all. It has no more weight than a breath of air.

MR. TULLY: Where was the notice, "One Dollar Toll?" A. It was on a board just as you go below Inspiration Point, or somewhere near there.

Q. That was within the grant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who caused it to be erected there? A. I do not, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Grant, have you ever heard from any reliable source, from persons whom you believe, as you would ordinarily believe a person, whom you would suppose to be truthful and honest men, state that they have paid toll? A. I read a statement in the newspaper about a man from Milwaukee complaining.

Q. In regard to any individual; whether the individual paid toll? A. He was the individual. He said so, and published it all over the world.

MR. DIBBLE: Did he tell you so? A. He did not; I never saw the man.

Q. All you know is that you saw it in the newspaper? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What you see in the newspaper is not always so? A. I am fully aware of that.

MR. TULLY: State whether you have conversed with any person—any reliable person—who has informed you that the person with whom you conversed had paid toll on that road? A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. The ninth charge is: "Neglect to prosecute persons for disfiguring and destroying natural features of the valley, in open defiance of law."

A. I know nothing of that charge, sir.

Q. Nothing at all? A. Nothing at all.

Q. The tenth charge is: "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in defiance of law." A. I know nothing of any such thing.

Q. The eleventh charge is: "Allowing contractors for the Stoneman House to cut and mill timber within the limits of the grant." A. I know nothing of what they have allowed the contractors to do.

Q. The twelfth charge is: "Open defiance of laws prohibiting the granting of exclusive privileges." A. I have already stated what I have heard Mr. Mills say about that.

MR. MILLS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire, as a representative of the Yosemite Commission here, the extent to which we, as Commissioners, might be allowed to protest against testimony of this character; whether we have a right to protest against testimony which is hearsay. For example: I am here to testify to anything I may know concerning this matter, and it certainly cannot be a dignified proceeding that Judge Grant should testify to what I know, or what I say. I am present by virtue of your subpoena to testify here before you.

THE CHAIRMAN: I think the answers should be confined to what the witnesses know.

THE WITNESS: I am lawyer enough to know that anything that any of those Commissioners say, anywhere in my presence, when I hear it, is evidence.

MR. MILLS: Permit me, also, Mr. Chairman, to state that it is not denied, and will not be denied—therefore the committee need not take testimony on that subject—that exclusive privileges have been granted. Therefore there is no use to try and prove that. The defense in this case will admit it. You can do as you choose, but you may save yourselves the trouble of taking testimony on the subject, because it will be admitted.

MR. TULLY: When a witness is on the stand, I submit we should proceed to examine him with regard to any facts within his knowledge.

MR. MILLS: We, as the accused, submit that we have rights, and that we certainly have the same right that anybody, or the attorney for anybody, in a Court of justice would have, to object to the character of the testimony; if it is irrelevant and incompetent, and is not keeping to the question of charges. I submit respectfully to you the question—the extent of our right in this matter. What right have we? Have we a right to protest against this character of testimony? That is a respectful question submitted to you. We are here under charges sworn to by a respectable citizen of this State. Now, have we a right, as accused before you, to object to the character of the testimony, just as an accused in a Court of justice would have? Do you intend to accord us that right, or deny it?

THE CHAIRMAN: I have already stated that the witnesses should confine their answers to such things as they know to be facts; that they know of their own knowledge and belief. So far as the protest is concerned, there is no objection to entering the protest.

MR. MILLS: I understand that we shall have the right to object to the testimony when it is irrelevant or incompetent.

MR. DIBBLE: The Commissioners will have the right to cross-examine the witnesses.

MR. MILLS: We shall claim that right.

MR. TULLY: I don't think that there is any objection to that, providing that other people have the same privilege.

MR. DIBBLE: No; the proviso does not follow. The members of this committee alone can question the witness, except the accused, if there be an accused person, should have the right to cross-examine the witness; but an outside person could not cross-examine the witness. A person not accused, and not a member of the committee, could not have a right to question the witnesses. Any question that anybody wants asked he can submit to any member of this committee and it will be asked, but we could not accord to outside persons the right to ask questions, unless those persons are accused.

MR. TULLY: I submit that any person who could throw any light on this investigation has a right to submit any question to the committee, in order that the question may be asked.

MR. DIBBLE: Of course, and we would ask it. It is only a question of the propriety of proceeding.

MR. TULLY: I understand, under the Chairman's ruling, that persons here who are in the interest of I may say the defendants in this investigation, would be entitled to a reasonable cross-examination.

Q. The thirteenth charge is: "Reduction of rentals, to the prejudice of the State's income." Do you anything about that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will please state to the committee just what you know. Confine yourself, as far as you can, to what you know of your own knowledge, but I apprehend that if you have any reasonable ground, predicated upon reliable information, that you may state to this committee the nature of such information as you have from that source? A. When the Stoneman House was about completed some members of the Commission passed my house, and among them the Secretary, Dr. Griffith. He was talking about the renting of the house, and invited me to bid for the hotel—the Stoneman House. Well, I was keeping a hotel because I owned it. My tenant was keeping it; I let it to him. I said I thought I had plenty of hotels. I had one in Mariposa County and two in Davenport, and that the furnishing of that hotel would cost from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars. He observed, "That is the very reason we want you to bid for it, because we know you can furnish it properly." I replied to him that I would furnish him a bidder who would furnish that hotel and keep it in first-rate condition as a responsible person kept a first-rate hotel. I stated that I was anxious, in the place where I lived, to have a first-rate hotel in the Yosemite Valley, because it would increase the travel by my house. When the Commissioners advertised for bids for the hotel—before they made this advertisement—Mr. Baxter, a barkeeper of Mr. Cook, was passing my house, and in the course of conversation he observed that if any other person—I had heard the same rumor talked about by people coming from the Yosemite—leased that hotel, except Cook, that the stage company would not take passengers there. When that advertisement was given I put in a bid for, I am quite sure, $1,650 a year; it might have been $1,600, but I think $1,650—it is in writing among the papers of the Commissioners—for the hotel, for the period of ten years, the time that they intended to lease it. Mr. Henry Tyack, at the same time, put in a bid for $1,800 a year—$1,500 for the two first, and $1,800 for the next six, and $2,100 for the next two. In consequence of what I had heard about the stage management, and in consequence of my being told that they boycotted Mr. Leidig, I put on my bid a condition that “this bid is upon the condition that the Commissioners will require all stages that carry passengers to Yosemite to take them to and from this house when they want to go there.” Mr. Tyack’s bid contained the same condition. I read in the newspapers that a gentleman in San Francisco bid $1,500 a year. Cook bid $1,200. I also read in the San Francisco papers, and I was afterwards informed by Tyack, that all these bids were rejected, and the Commissioners determined next day to rent the hotel for $1,200, and to receive bids for the privileges; and the person who bid the highest for the bar and billiard saloon was to have the hotel at $1,200. Of course I knew nothing of that letting, and I could not bid for it. Mr. Tyack told me that he bid $300 for those privileges. The other person in San Francisco said he bid $200 or $250.

Q. $200 or $250 a year? A. Yes, sir; these bids were by the year. Mr. Cook told me his bid was less than Tyack’s, which was $300. Mr. Tyack also told me that he was called into the Commissioners’ room after he had put in this second bid and asked to withdraw it, which he declined; that Mr. Cook was called in there, and the property was let to him for $1,200 for the hotel and $350 for this privilege. Mr. Tyack conveyed to my mind the idea that Cook’s bid had been allowed to be increased by the Commissioners after it was filed. I know nothing about that. Of course, the papers which belong to the Commissioners will show. I know that my bid was rejected and that the property was let for ten years for a less sum than I bid.

MR. DIBBLE: What was your bid? A. $1,650.

Q. They let it for how much? A. $1,200. They let the hotel proper for $1,200 and the privileges for $350. The reason assigned in the newspapers was, by Senator Goucher, a member of the Commission, that the reason they rented the hotel at $1,200 was that the State got the rent of the hotel, and the rent of the privileges went to the Commissioners. I wrote a communication to the Governor of the State complaining—I suppose I used the words “gross fraud,” that had been practiced on me in leasing that hotel—and asking him to remove every Commissioner that was concerned in it. I don’t know who they were, but I know some of them were not there and didn’t vote, and I know some of them voted to give the hotel to Cook. I received an answer from the Secretary, stating that the matter would be attended to, but it never was.

Q. The fourteenth charge is: “Making illegal and arbitrary contracts with laborers, and withholding their wages.” A. I know nothing whatever of that charge.

Q. The fifteenth charge is: “Refusal to recognize their own contracts and to pay balance due on the same.” A. I know nothing of that charge.

Q. The sixteenth charge is: "Suppressing and withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the Board, and illegally leasing the hotel." A. I have told you what I know about the leasing of the hotel. I have never thought it was illegal for them to lease it for any price they pleased over $1,200.

Q. The seventeenth charge is: "Cutting wood on the grant and selling it to residents of the valley, thereby destroying the natural park timber, in defiance of their own rules and regulations and in violation of law." A. I know nothing of it.

Q. The eighteenth charge is: "Official sanction and approval of a return to the vicious toll system of former years, abolished with great difficulty and at considerable expense by the Legislature." A. If that alludes to the granting of special privileges, I could only repeat what I said about what I heard Mr. Mills say last night. He said here to-night to the committee that there need not be any proof on it.

Q. You have already testified to what you know about the hotels and special privileges? A. Yes, sir.

MR. DIBBLE: He knows nothing, except what has been admitted by the Commissioners.

MR. TULLY: The nineteenth charge is: "Eviction of law-abiding and useful families, in aid of monopoly enterprises, thereby destroying the district school of Yosemite." A. I know nothing of that.

Q. The twentieth charge is: "Gross neglect of public roads and trails within the grant." A. I know nothing about it.

Q. The twenty-first charge is: "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." A. I know nothing about it.

Q. The twenty-second charge is: "General failure and incompetence of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley for the interest of the State of California, in accordance with the conditions imposed by the United States, for the comfort and convenience of visitors from abroad, or for the welfare of residents of the valley." A. That will involve an opinion instead of a knowledge of facts, which the committee already have from me. From the standpoint upon which I view such matters, I think the Yosemite Valley has not been properly managed.

Q. Some additional questions have been submitted to me. State the transaction in regard to your attempt to lease the new hotel? A. I have already stated that.

MR. DIBBLE: Is there anything else, Judge Grant, that you know, that bears upon this investigation, that you think you ought to tell? A. No, sir.

Q. You have told all that you know? A. I have told all that I know.

MR. DIBBLE: I move that the Commissioners be allowed to ask any questions that they choose. He says he don't know anything else.

MR. TULLY: Did you ever write to the Governor on the subject? A. I have answered that question. I did write to the Governor on the subject of the hotel.

MR. DIBBLE: Did you have any correspondence with the Governor of the State? A. I wrote a letter to the Governor of the State, and had an answer from his Secretary. He said it would be attended to. I told him I would attend as a witness wherever and whenever I was wanted. I have never heard from him since. My reply was: "I will attend at any time and place."

Q. You wrote to the Governor, and got an answer from him? A. From his Secretary.

MR. TULLY: Did you ever have any conversation with Dr. May on the road going east, in regard to the hotel matter, and what was it? What did May answer? A. I had forgotten it. I did have a conversation with him, and he agreed with me that I was treated improperly.

Q. You have no recollection now—your recollection is not sufficiently clear to state what that conversation was? A. I could not state it in precise words. I know that we were talking about the letting of the hotel, and he agreed with me that I was treated improperly in not having the lease of the hotel—letting it to a person for a lower bid than I made. He seemed to know who I was; to be acquainted with my history and character, and to know that I was perfectly capable of performing anything that I undertook.

Q. Your recollection of the conversation is that he acknowledged that you had been treated badly? A. Yes, sir.

MR. ROBINSON: Mr. Chairman, can I ask a question?

THE CHAIRMAN: State the question.

MR. ROBINSON: I would like to ask the counsel if I, as complaining witness, cannot ask questions myself, from my paper?

MR. DIBBLE: That is not permitted in any Court in the world. The object in having these additional members appointed on the committee was to meet that difficulty. Any question you want to ask will be asked, but it is not proper that outside persons should ask questions.

MR. TULLY: Do you ever hear complaints from tourists returning from the Yosemite or Big Trees, while at your hotel, or any subject connected with either place? Do you hear complaints often? A. Oh, yes, I frequently hear them.

Q. What is the nature of those complaints? A. Now that is a personal matter between me and my brother hotel keepers. People come to my house and praise my hotel and dispraise the others.

Q. It is a personal matter between you and the patrons of your hotels? I understand they are the parties we have reference to: persons passing back and forth? A. Yes, sir; persons passing back and forth to Yosemite.

Q. Tourists or visitors? A. Visitors. These complaints are such that I sent my adopted daughter to these hotels to see if they had any foundation, and I am very glad to say, and I take a great deal of pleasure in stating, that she said those hotels were very well kept under the circumstances; both the Stoneman House and the Wawona House; that the food was generally well cooked; it was abundant in quantity; it was generally neatly put upon the table, and that the only defect that she observed was, that in places where there was a crowd the service was not prompt enough. Of course I sent her there for the purpose of ascertaining, in order that, if there was any neglect on the part of these gentlemen, I might talk with them about it, for I was interested in their keeping good hotels; and we talked that matter over as friends. I know that Cook sent a message to me—the visitors at my house were always furnished with fresh fruits, strawberries, raspberries, peaches; everything that was fresh was gathered from my farm. He sent a begging message to me: "Send me strawberries at any price." I didn't have them to send him, but I immediately planted enough to supply him another year.

Q. Here is another question: Do you think anything of the nature of a ring or monopoly exists in the Yosemite? Do you think the valley is better served for it? Do you see anything in the rulings of the Board that you think in conflict with national or State law in Yosemite matters?

MR. DIBBLE: That question is entirely improper: all those questions are improper. What we want are facts; we don't want opinions. If this gentleman knows of any facts, let him state them.

MR. TULLY: I will ask the question in the proper way. Do you know of any additional fact, which you have not stated, which bears upon the question upon investigation, as to the propriety of the management of this Yosemite Valley by the Commissioners? If you know of such fact, state it? A. Of my personal knowledge, I do not.

MR. TULLY: That is all we can get from him; we don't want his opinion; he is not here to give opinions.

Cross-examination.

MR. MILLS: When your bid was sent in for the hotel, didn't you send in, at the same time, a bid in the name of another party? Answer—No.

Q. Didn't you write two bids? A. I wrote them—I wrote a bid for a gentleman and he copied it.

Q. Didn't you guarantee his bid? A. I did; and I told the Commissioners I would prefer they would give the house to him rather than to me. His bid was higher than mine.

Q. You wrote two bids; one for a friend and one for yourself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wrote your friend's bid higher than your own? A. Yes, sir; I wrote it at his instigation; he told me to bid.

Q. You wrote both bids? A. Yes, sir; and he copied the bids that I wrote for him.

Q. You wrote a letter to the Commissioners, telling them that you would prefer they would not consider your bid as good as the other bid? A. I told them I would prefer they would let him have the hotel instead of myself.

Q. Then, when the Stoneman House was let, was there anything attached to the requirements? Was Mr. Cook put under additional obligations concerning work to be done in the completion of waterworks, in the care of the grounds immediately around the hotel, and in the care of the hotel—additional to the conditions that were attached to the other bidders? A. I don't know that he was, sir; I know nothing about what conditions were annexed to him; I never saw your lease.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge how much Cook pays for the rent of the hotel? A. No; I don't know of my own knowledge.

Q. You don't know what the hotel was let for, do you? A. Of my own personal knowledge I do not.

Q. Of course that is the only evidence that amounts to anything; not what you heard? A. I differ with you about that.

MR. TULLY: An opinion, founded upon reliable information, is proper matter before this committee.

MR. MILLS: The best evidence will be the facts, and the witnesses are available to this committee.

THE WITNESS: If we were in a Court of law that is all right, but we are not.

MR. MILLS: We want the freest and fullest investigation.

MR. TULLY: We don't want the gentleman's individual opinion.

THE WITNESS: I am an older lawyer than my friend, and I think I understand the law of the legislative matters better than he does.

MR. MILLS: I wish to ask this gentleman if he knows the conditions under which the hotel was let. His testimony has been taken here in impeachment of the Commission and the manner of letting the hotel. Now I ask the witness, who is brought here, what he knows concerning the letting of the hotel. What is his answer? A. I never saw the lease.

I don't know what its conditions are. I know what the proposals were, and I bid in accordance with those proposals, and I didn't get the hotel, and my bid was higher than the man's who got it.

Q. Do you know that it was higher, taking all the conditions and requirements attached to the lease? Do you know that it was a higher bid, all things considered, than your bid? A. Yes, sir; I know from the newspapers that it was $1,200, and my bid exceeded that.

Q. Do you know that it was $1,200? A. Of my own personal knowledge, to see it and look at it, I do not; but you bring it here and let me look at it.

MR. MILLS: That is what we will do. We will present all that kind of thing here in documentary form. It is all published. A. As a lawyer, I know that publications that are made in the newspapers, right in the presence and hearing of these Commissioners, is proper evidence for me to testify to before this committee, in my opinion.

MR. MILLS: If things published in the newspapers in the presence of accused persons are conclusive evidence of guilt, the most of them would be in the penitentiary.

MR. TULLY: I don't understand this gentleman to say that it would be conclusive evidence, but it is sufficient data upon which to form an intelligent opinion, and we are entitled to that.

THE WITNESS: I stated last night, when he made this objection, that the record was available to the Commissioners, and that was the highest evidence.

MR. MILLS: Didn't you attach a condition to your bid which was not in the advertisements? A. I attached the condition which I have already stated, and for the reason that I have stated.

Q. That is, requiring the stages all to drive up. A. Yes, sir; about the stages boycotting the hotel.

Q. How long was this hotel to be let for? A. Ten years.

Q. You attached a condition that the stages should be absolutely obliged to deliver at the new hotel the passengers carried into the valley for ten years, if you took it, and that was the only condition upon which you would take it? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Of what practical use, or what profit would there be in leasing that hotel for the term of ten years, if you could not count with some certainty upon the patronage that would be brought to your place through the agency of the stages? A. If the Commissioners were to allow stages to have a monopoly of the right to keep passengers away from the hotel that they rented, it would be utterly valueless either to the public or the tenant.

MR. HOOK: Do the stages now all deliver passengers at the Stoneman House? A. I understand so, sir. It is the common statement of passengers by my house. You can ascertain by asking the Commissioner that question, and I reckon he will answer it correctly. I don't think he is a man who is going to deny the responsibility of what he does. Let me state now: this gentleman undertook to make a technical evasion of that condition. He said they were contemplating having the stages all go to their office, and let the hotel—

MR. MILLS [Interrupting]: I object to this witness arguing this question before this committee. This cannot be proper. We have a right to a perfectly fair hearing here, and this witness has no right to argue our side or take up our objection, and under oath make an argument. I was going to ask you, Mr. Grant, do we understand you, sir, that in the condition that you attached to your bid with reference to the passengers to be brought to that hotel, that you were to have exclusive control of them? A. No, sir; there was nothing of that kind in that condition; only that this hotel was to be put upon an equality with the others.

MR. TULLY: He answered that question, that he knows nothing more that bears upon this question.

JOHN T. MCLEAN.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Do you desire that we shall read the clause here that precedes the charges, or will you be satisfied to answer the specific charges? Answer—Perhaps you had better read the whole of it, that I may understand it.

[The clerk read the sworn charges preferred by Mr. Robinson.]

MR. TULLY: The first is: "Squandering and misapplying appropriations and public moneys." A. I don't know anything about anything of that sort.

Q. Second: "Forcible breaking and entering of private property." A. Nothing.

Q. Third: "Wanton destruction of public and private property." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Fourth: "Cutting and destroying timber in the valley." A. I know of some trees being cut out—cut down and got out of the way—in order that good views might be got of very important features of the valley; but I would not consider that as being hurtful at all. I know that from the Coulterville Road, which I built into the valley—the first road that went into the valley—the view of the Bridal Veil Fall was very much obstructed by trees; and, at my suggestion—and I am sure I wanted to preserve all the best features of the valley—the Commissioners had some trees cut out, so that, as people rode in on horseback, or rode in in carriages or in stages, they could get a very fine view of Bridal Veil Fall, which was on the other side of the valley, across the river. I thought that was the proper thing to have done, without any disposition to vandalism or anything of that sort.

Q. The fifth charge is: "Burning shrubbery, clearing and plowing up meadows, and allowing persons to do the same for their private gain, thereby doing irreparable damage to the natural beauties of the valley?" A. Well, I know something about some matters that might be germane to that question.

Q. Please state them? A. I have known the valley since 1867. I went to the valley in 1867, and have been there a great many times since; and when I went first to the valley of course there was much less of the floor of the valley fenced in than there is now. There was too much then, in my judgment, and of course there is too much now. Mr. Hutchings, who was then keeping the principal hotel in the valley, had a considerable amount of the valley fenced in, and I think to the prejudice of the rights of the public under the Act of Congress making the grant and the Act of the Legislature accepting the grant from the nation as a trust. This State accepted that grant as a trust, and one of the conditions of that trust was that the grant should be held for public use, and for resort and recreation—public use, resort, and recreation. Those are the three terms that are used in the Act of Congress indicating that condition; that the grant was to be inalienable, and to be held for public use, resort, and recreation. Well, now, you can't use a property, the public can't use it, if it is fenced in from the public; and the legitimate fencing, in my judgment, would be so much of the grant as was necessary, and only so much as was necessary for the proper enjoyment of a visit to that valley by the public; and they would have to have comfortable quarters in hotels, and the hotels would have to have land enough adjacent to them in order to properly carry on their hotel business and to accommodate the public. They would have to keep some cows, and have a garden, and they might have to have an orchard; whatever was necessary, perhaps. This would be my judgment in regard to it, gentlemen; whatever was necessary of the good land of that valley to enable the hotels to accommodate the public, that much ought to be allowed to be fenced in, and the balance of it ought to be open to the public, and ought to be cared for by the Commission.

Q. Those are the conclusions with regard to what you knew in connection with the law? A. This question is: "Do I know anything about the fencing in the valley, and its being let to private persons to the disadvantage of the public?" Well, I know that at that time there was a portion of the valley fenced in, but then Mr. Hutchings was contesting the right—his individual right—as a settler against the Commissioners who represented the Nation and State. The question was in the Courts, and so it might be proper for Mr. Hutchings, until such time as the Courts decided the matter, to maintain his individual right, and the Commissioners did not tear down his fences or otherwise interfere with him that I am aware of, but they went to the Courts, and the question was decided by the Supreme Court of this State, and the Supreme Court of the United States, that that land was inalienable, and that it was to be held for public use, resort, and recreation. Now, then, whatever land Mr. Hutchings held after that that was not necessary for him to entertain his guests properly in his hotel, or whatever land is held now, shut up and kept from the public that is not necessary for the hotels for the accommodation of the public who must go to a hotel—who do not go there to camp and live by themselves—why, that much, it seems to me, is in contravention of this provision, this condition upon which the grant was made by Congress and accepted by the State. There is considerable of that territory fenced in now, as I think, in contravention of the public right.

Q. What proportion of that which is fenced in—how does that compare with regard to the part that you think they would be justifiable in fencing in? A. Well, there are two hotels in the valley now, Mr. Tully; there are two hotels in the valley. Well, if twenty-five acres, at the outside, was given to each hotel, I should think that would be enough. That would be fifty acres of land.

Q. Fifty acres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would leave about how much that is fenced in? A. Of arable land?

Q. Yes? A. Well, now I am not well posted enough to know exactly what amount.

Q. About what proportion does it bear? Is it twice the amount, or half the amount? A. I should think that there must be several hundred acres of land inclosed in the valley.

Q. In excess of what they should have? A. No, the total inclosure.

Q. How much in excess of what you have stated you think they are entitled to fence? How much in excess of what you think they ought to be entitled to? A. Inasmuch as I don't know how much there is fenced in—

Q. Well, give an approximate estimate? A. I should think one quarter of the amount that is fenced in would be sufficient, in my judgment; but

I want you to understand this is only my own judgment. The Commissioners have their judgment in regard to this matter, and it is a difference of judgment as to the proper administration of that grant under that condition upon which we have accepted the grant, and put these gentlemen there to manage it.

Q. Well, do you consider that the fencing of that portion which is inclosed mars and interferes with the free access to all of the beauties of that valley, which tourists or persons going into the valley, visitors or tourists have, under the understanding that that belongs to the public at large? Is it in contravention of what you believe would be proper management, and not giving him that access which he ought to have to it under the rules governing it? A. Well, sir, any citizen of this State, or of the United States, or any other civilized country, or uncivilized country, has a right to go to the Yosemite Valley, and he has a right to see the wonderful scenery of that valley under any and all possible circumstances that he may want to see it, and in my judgment he cannot go amiss anywhere within the limits of that valley of seeing the most wonderful and stupendous scenery, rock and water scenery, that there is in the world.

Q. Any barriers that may be erected in that valley that prevents his ingress and egress to all the beauties of the natural surroundings there? You think, outside of those exceptions that you have made, that it is in derogation and in violation of the object for which the grant was donated to the people of this State? A. That is my personal opinion in regard to that matter.

Q. You so regard it? A. Yes, sir, I do; as an unwise act on the part of the Commissioners, in proscribing the right of any citizen of this country, or any other country—because that is for the use of the world.

Q. Do those barriers actually prevent tourists from having free access to all that a tourist would desire to see in that valley? A. I think they do; yes, sir; they do not have access to all that they ought be able to see.

Q. What they would naturally desire to see? They go there to see all of them? A. Yes, sir. Nobody ought to go to Yosemite with the idea of getting away in less than ten days, in my judgment, and if they do they have not a proper appreciation of that scenery, because it is a kind of scenery that grows on a person; and the longer you stay there the more you are in wonder at the grandeur and stupendous character of it.

Q. The sixth charge is: "Fencing and farming out public lands for the benefit of private individuals." A. Well, this very land that is fenced, the Commissioners get a revenue from, I dare say, properly. I have no thought that the Commissioners are in any way immoral in their administration.

Q. Just as to the fact, they do rent it out? A. They do rent it.

Q. For money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For a price? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: Ask the witness if he knows of any improper appropriation of the funds.

MR. TULLY: I was going to ask the question, if he did know, of his own knowledge, of any instance?

MR. MILLS: On behalf of the Commission, I want to ask if Mr. McLean's opinion was not taken as to the propriety of the fences; if it was not a matter of opinion that he gave?

MR. DIBBLE: Mr. Mills can ask the question at the proper time.

MR. MILLS: I would like to have it settled, Judge Dibble, so that we will not have any friction between ourselves here. I don't feel like standing here in an attitude of antagonism towards this investigation, and I would like to have it settled whether or not we, standing accused before you—because you have specific charges—whether we have a right to direct the testimony into such channels as we regard as competent testimony. If that is settled once, let us settle it and go on.

MR. DIBBLE: I think the Commissioners being accused, should have the opportunity to object to any improper questions, but as to directing the course of the inquiry—

MR. MILLS: That would not be directing it.

MR. TULLY: They can do that by cross-examination. When the examination is completed, the Commissioners may ask any questions by way of cross-examination, and bring the matter back to its proper position. I want to ask the witness if he knows of any misappropriation of the revenues received by those Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley? A. No, sir; I do not. I have been speaking previously in regard to this fencing business, as in my judgment, in violation of the condition upon which the grant was made to this State, and put into the hands of the Commissioners as the managers, to manage the property. This is simply a difference of judgment between me and the Commissioners, that is all. I don't charge them with any malfeasance or anything of that kind, I wish to be perfectly understood in regard to that matter.

Q. The seventh charge is: "Refusing to investigate or consider charges of gross neglect and incompetence and destruction of property preferred against Guardian Dennison." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The eighth charge is: "Connivance with persons endeavoring to secure all business privileges in Yosemite Valley, and to evict other residents and debar the general public from just and legal use of the valley?" A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The ninth charge is: "Neglect to prosecute persons for disfiguring and destroying natural features of the valley, in open defiance of law?" A. I can't say anything about that. I am speaking now of my own personal knowledge. I hear stories, but that is not evidence here, I should judge.

Q. The tenth charge is: "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in defiance of law?" A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The eleventh charge is: "Allowing contractors for the Stoneman House to cut and mill timber within the limits of the grant?" A. I think I know that that was not done. The mill which the contractors constructed, who reside here in this city, was located up to Jentry's, outside of the line of the Yosemite Grant, and the contractors bought, so one of them told me himself—that is how I happen to know it, if that is proper testimony—the principal contractor; I met him here to-day; he resides here; a responsible man—told me that they had bought either a section or a part of a section of good timber land outside of the grant, and that their mill was located there, and that there they cut their timber and lumber with which they constructed the new hotel.

Q. The twelfth charge is: "Open defiance of laws prohibiting the granting of exclusive privileges." A. I believe there is a law of the State now that no exclusive privileges shall be granted; and, as Judge Grant said, I have heard Mr. Mills acknowledge that the Commissioners do grant exclusive privileges, and Mr. Mills here this evening said that they acknowledged that fact.

MR. MILLS: We acknowledge that single privileges are given.

MR. TULLY: The thirteenth charge is: "Reduction of rentals, to the prejudice of the State's income." A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. The fourteenth charge is: "Making illegal and arbitrary contracts with laborers and withholding their wages." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The fifteenth charge is: "Refusal to recognize their own contracts and to pay balance due on the same." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The sixteenth charge is: "Suppressing and withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the Board, and illegally leasing the hotel." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The seventeenth charge is: "Cutting wood on the grant and selling it to residents of the valley, thereby destroying the natural park timber, in defiance of their own rules and regulations and in violation of law." A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. The eighteenth charge is: "Official sanction and approval of a return to the vicious toll system of former years, abolished with great difficulty and at considerable expense by the Legislature?" A. I think that is a misapprehension entirely. I am tolerably conversant with the toll business in the valley, and if that refers to what Judge Grant was speaking about—I built the first toll road into the valley—I opened the Yosemite Valley to public travel by building the first road that went in there, and so I am familiar with this matter about tolls; and I had the exclusive privilege from the Commissioners for ten years to collect toll on the road. I built within the grant, on the north side of the Merced River, and two or three years afterwards Washburn and his associates had a like privilege from the Commissioners, and built a road into the valley on the south side of the Merced, with a like privilege of collecting toll; but a condition was made that these tolls should be collected on the outside of the grant. Now, at the expiration of the ten years lease which the Coulterville Road Company, that I represented and was a large owner in, when that expired, when that ten years expired, the Commissioners renewed that lease; and shortly after the renewal of the lease the State, by legislative enactment, authorized the Commissioners to buy so much of the road that I built as lay within the limit of the Yosemite Grant. They bought it, and thereafter there were no tolls; I collected no tolls. But the Commissioners renewed Washburn's lease after his ten years expired, and Mr. Washburn, under that contract, has the right to collect tolls, but he must collect them outside of the grant, the same as I did. Both leases were of the same purport.

MR. DIBBLE: These tolls were not collected on the grant? A. These tolls, as I understand it, he is not allowed—that is my supposition; I know that was the condition of my lease, of the Counterville Road Company lease, and I was told by the Commissioners that they made the same condition with Washburn.

MR. MILLS: The leases will be in testimony.

MR. HOOK: If they collected on the outside of the grant, the Commissioners have nothing to do with them? A. The Commissioners allowed them to do it, and they built a road with their own money into that reservation. Otherwise passengers could have only got in there on horseback; and it was with a view to the best possible use of the valley; and the Commissioners could not get any money from the State to build this road, for the State to build it. The State has always been mean in regard to Yosemite Valley, in my judgment; never has properly appreciated the great value of that wonderful property which it owns there; has been niggardly and mean in its public actions towards the Yosemite Valley. Immediately that that grant was made to it it ought to have appropriated to it the necessary money to open roads from the public roads that then existed towards the grant, into the grant itself, and made it accessible without any tolls at all. That is what the State ought to have done, and would have done, if it had understood the nature of the property that Congress gave it.

MR. TULLY: Dr. McLean, you stated the Commissioners made these contracts on those roads by which these men were enabled to come into the grant, but the toll roads were put on the outside? A. The toll-gates.

Q. Toll was not collected on the grant, but was collected on the outside? A. Yes, sir; I put a toll-gate on the outside, and the Indians killed the toll-gatherer, and burned up my toll-house. This was in the cañon of the Merced River, in a lonesome place, and as good a man as ever breathed the breath of life had his life taken away from him by the Indians there, because the Commissioners compelled me to put the toll-gate outside of the grant, in order to collect toll; and then I asked the Commissioners after that for the privilege of collecting the toll within the grant, and I said, "There is no reason why you should not give it to me; I don't want to imperil any one's life." I would not stay there myself. I came very near being killed in that cañon myself, when I was building the road, by a Jayhawker.

Q. What I want to get at, doctor, is this—? A. One word more. I asked the Commissioners whether they would not, in view of the impossibility of my collecting toll outside of the grant, and near to the line of the grant in that cañon, whether they would not give me the privilege of collecting toll within the grant, and for the people that had built that road with my money; and they would not do it, because they said this public use and conduct of the grant prevented them from doing it—but they didn't keep that rule that time. These were the old Commissioners; it was not the present Board. The old Commissioners allowed a man to build a road right on the level of the valley. He collected toll on it, and they allowed these trails to be built, and toll collected on the trail within the grant, at the same time, and they would not allow me, without imperiling the lives of the toll collectors, to collect toll except on the outside of the grant, and it was a very great injustice I think to the Coulterville Road Company. But, then, that is not these Commissioners. It was their predecessors, previous to 1880.

Q. I want to ask you whether that privilege to collect tolls on the outside, whether it was a contract—that the Commissioners made the contract with these parties, and whether they received anything in consideration of giving that privilege, not to collect tolls, because that is whipping the devil around the stump—but to come into the valley? A. The consideration that we had was that we were to make that public improvement for the benefit of the Yosemite Valley, and build a road into the valley. That was the only consideration. The Commissioners and the public wanted roads into the Yosemite Valley, and I was fool enough to build one.

MR. HOOK: Did the State give you a franchise to build the road? A. The Governor and the Commissioners, who were managers of the Yosemite Valley, gave me the franchise to continue a road, which myself and other incorporators owned and had built from the Bower Cave in Mariposa County, towards the Yosemite Valley. We undertook for this privilege of building the road from the boundary of the grant to the level of the valley, to continue that road up to the boundary of the grant, and then to cross the grant, and to get into the level of the valley, so that a four-horse stage coach could go in with ease and comfort.

Q. It was the understanding, when you started in to build that road, that you should collect toll to repay you for the money expended? A. Certainly; that road cost $70,000, the whole of it. I certainly would not build a road for fun, and put that money in it.

MR. DIBBLE: Did you get your money back? A. Never.

Q. Did the Commissioners have any object in not allowing you to collect toll? A. Judge Dibble asked me a question, whether I got my money back. The State, through its Legislature, violated a contract which I had. The Legislature violated a contract which I had with the Governor and the Commissioners, and threw me out.

MR. DIBBLE: That was before I was elected? A. That was before you were elected. It was a granger Legislature.

MR. TULLY: You said that there was a ten-years' lease of the privilege of coming in over the road that you built? A. Yes, sir; and over the roads that Washburn built.

Q. Then the other parties had a lease to come in over the roads that they built? A. Washburn had a similar lease on the south side, and that was understood when I got my lease. I understood that the Commissioners were going to be ready at any time that there were applicants wanting to build a road on the south side—that that right would be let by them. I had my eyes open in regard to that matter, but I did not in regard to the Legislature allowing another road to come in on the same side of the valley that I was on; or else I would have seen them all in Tophet before I would have put a dollar in it.

Q. The nineteenth charge is: "Eviction of law-abiding and useful families in aid of monopoly enterprises, thereby destroying the district school of Yosemite?" A. I can't say anything about that.

Q. The twentieth charge is: "Gross neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. Well, I go to the valley every year once or twice. I have got a nice horse and conveyance, and I drive up there. I get on a steamboat at San Francisco and go to Stockton, and then I take a nice drive from Stockton into the Yosemite Valley and back again, as a matter of recreation for me. I am a professional man, practicing my profession, and I want a rest once in awhile, and I take that method of resting, and I drive over splendid roads in the Yosemite Valley.

Q. Here is a direct question. We must get down to the question. A. I drive over those roads, and they are good enough, I should think.

MR. TULLY: You think they have not neglected the roads? A. I am not aware of it if they have.

Q. The question is, do you know? A. I personally drive over them every year, and have for a good many years, ever since they built any roads there.

Q. Did you find them good enough? A. Yes, sir; they are good enough for me, and I want good roads. There may be something that I am not aware of, sir.

Q. The twenty-first charge is: "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." A. I know nothing about that.

Q. The twenty-second charge is: "General failure and incompetence of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley for the interest of the State of California, in accordance with the condition imposed by the United States, for the comfort and convenience of visitors from abroad, or for the welfare of residents of the valley." A. I think that is a pretty hard charge.

MR. DIBBLE: What do you know about it; what do you know about these Commissioners neglecting their duty? A. I have stated about what I know.

MR. TULLY: What do you know, if anything, about their neglecting their duties in the management of the valley? A. Nothing in addition to what I have stated. Perhaps I was misunderstood in that remark. I take it back, anyhow. It seems to me a pretty severe charge to make against the Commissioners. I believe they have been trying, in the main, to do what was right, and they don't get any pay for doing what they do, excepting that they get their expenses there, and if they err in judgment, as I think they have in regard to these other matters—

MR. TULLOCH [Interrupting]: You spoke of some trees having been cut away, originally and at first, by your suggestion. Were there many trees cut away? A. No, sir; not a great many. There may have been half a dozen or a dozen trees, in order to open a magnificent view to what many people consider the most beautiful fall in the valley, the Bridal Veil Fall, from the Coulterville road, so that people could see that fall under the very best possible conditions as they were riding on horseback into the valley, or in carriages, or going in stages.

Q. You spoke of them having been cut away at some one's suggestion. Whose suggestion was that? A. I think Mr. Raymond made the suggestion. He is now dead. He was a very efficient member of the Commission in times past.

Q. You don't think there were many of those cut away? A. Not more than was necessary, because I think Mr. Raymond's idea, and the ideas of the other Commissioners was, at that time, to preserve the valley, as far as possible, in its natural condition.

Q. You spoke of a large quantity of the valley having been placed under fence, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large a part of the valley do you think is under fence? A. Well, I should think there were two hundred acres or more under fence.

Q. What is the nature and character of that fence; is it a barbed wire fence, or a wooden fence; or what sort of a fence is it? A. Well, a part of it is, it is post, and part board, and part barbed wire, I think—a large part of the fence that the Commissioners have built.

Q. The Commissioners built it or had it done? A. The Commissioners have latterly built a considerable amount of fences there; that is, they fenced the roads.

Q. They did fence certain roads, did they? A. I think they fenced roads on Hutchings' side, on the north side of the valley, over towards the talus, towards the debris that has fallen down.

Q. What is the nature of the land inclosed; would it be good and sufficient land to raise grass and hay upon? A. Yes, sir; it is the best land there is the valley, that is inclosed.

Q. Is there any of that land under tillage? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much of that land is under tillage? A. Well, I should think somewhere from twenty to forty acres. I don't know positively, but somewhere from twenty to forty acres, up there at the old Harris place, which is now rented, I believe, to the wagon road company.

MR. MILLS: Coffman & Kenney? A. Coffman & Kenney; yes, sir.

MR. MILLS: There is more than that. There are ninety-eight acres; about ninety acres in hay, altogether, in the valley. A. Ninety acres, Mr. Mills says.

MR. TULLOCH: Does the fact of the land having been inclosed and its now being under tillage materially interfere with the convenience of parties going about from place to place and observing the grandeur of the scenery? A. That, in my judgment, is one of the most beautiful parts of the valley, right where this inclosure is made.

Q. And parties are inconvenienced thereby, are they, or are they not? A. You can't go in there, of course, unless your horse leaps the fence, or you climb over it yourself, at the risk of tearing your breeches.

Q. Neither can parties come into the valley and camp there, because of the fences and the land having been inclosed? A. No, sir; they cannot; and therein a public right is kept from the people, who really own that grant, and who pay the taxes that maintain it.

Q. Prior to this land having been fenced in and having been cultivated, was that not a camping ground, largely, for parties who used to go there for the purpose of recreation and looking at the scenery? A. I think it was, sir. When I first went to the valley I spent ten days there with a good wife that I have, and I never spent more delightful days in my life than I did in 1867, when I was camping there; and we could camp anywhere, almost, in the valley, except some reservations that Hutchings had improperly fenced in.

Q. Is there any hay raised on that land? A. Now there is; yes, sir.

Q. How much hay is raised there? A. Well, any spear of hay is too much, in my judgment.

Q. Well, how many tons would you think was raised there? A. I couldn't say about that. I think all the hay and all the grain that is used in the valley, that is needed in the valley, ought to be brought in from the farms on the outside of the grant.

Q. Do you think any considerable quantity of hay is either cut upon the grant or raised upon the grant; is there much hay, do you think, raised there? A. Why, certainly there is. If there is ninety acres, there is a very considerable amount of hay.

MR. HOOK: How much will that grow to the acre? A. I don't know. It is not first class hay; it is not such hay as will grow in the meadows outside.

Q. What is the quality of the hay? A. It is rather a coarse hay.

Q. Wheat, barley, or timothy? A. I think barley hay, they raised, principally.

Q. Will that run a ton and a half or two tons to the acre? A. I should think not.

MR. TULLY: There are some questions here that have been submitted by parties. So much as I have read has been gone over.

Q. Have they the right, under the terms of the grant, to give you the exclusive right to build a road? A. The Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley, under the Act of Congress making the grant, were, by one of the conditions, invested with the power and authority to manage those premises. The State accepted that grant formally by legislative enactment, and as I have already stated, the Act of Congress gave them full power and authority to manage that property, and administer it, and to do all that was necessary in order to properly administer the grant. Now, with that authority of both Congress and the nation, they had the right to do, in their judgment, anything that was necessary in order to make that grant accessible to the public, so that it would be for the public use, in the largest sense of that term; and they could not get any road built to the Yosemite Valley by anybody, myself or anybody else, unless we had the exclusive privilege to a right on one side of the valley; and the Commissioners gave our company that exclusive right, as they had the authority to do.

Q. I think that is unnecessary. The question whether they had the right to do it or not is a question for subsequent consideration. It is a legal conclusion. Did they or did they not grant you an exclusive privilege? A. They did grant me an exclusive privilege.

Q. Did they grant any other person a similar or exclusive privilege so far as you know? A. I don't know what they did by other people.

Q. I understood you testified something about a lease to the other company? A. That was in regard to toll; but I don't know whether they gave them the exclusive privilege or not, but they gave them the right to collect the same toll.

Q. But they did grant you an exclusive privilege? A. Yes, sir, as in my judgment they had the right to do.

MR. TULLY: Did the Legislature invade their rights and break down the rule of the Board and let other roads be built? A. They did, on that side of the valley, to my great misfortune and that of my associates. But those were previous Commissioners; that was not these Commissioners.

Q. The examination goes to the entire management of the valley. A. Some of those Commissioners are dead now.

Q. Have you ever been indemnified for loss, wholly or in part? A. The State some years ago, at the request of the Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley, the Legislature appropriated $25,000 for the purchase of roads and trails and their improvement, building bridges, and general improvement of the valley—the condition of the Act being that $10,000 of that money should go to the purchase of so much of the Coulterville road as lay between the lower iron bridge, which was the eastern limit of that road, and the Cascade Falls, which I had built, and which was the property of the Coulterville Company.

Q. The $10,000 was to go for your road? A. No; it was simply to buy the road, that was all. There was no indemnity or anything of that kind. It was simply to buy the road and to make that public property. It was a transfer of that property, that belonged to that company, to the State.

Q. Was that road within the grant? A. Certainly.

Q. And to buy it from whom? A. From the Coulterville Road Company, that built it by their privilege. That was a condition of the agreement that was made, that the State should have the privilege, at any time, to buy it at a price that should be agreed on. They asked me if I would take $10,000. I told them that was $2,000 less than the cost of that part of the road, but that I would take it.

Q. I understand it was a condition enabling them to buy their own road? A. No; it was not their own road. They didn't put a dollar into it.

Q. Then they had given somebody a right to build a road in there that they could subsequently sell to the State for $10,000? A. Yes, sir; myself and my associates.

Q. They had granted the privilege to you to build a road within the grant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They subsequently making arrangements whereby the State should pay you for the road that they had given you the privilege of building within the grant? A. Yes, sir; they did that at the time they gave me the privilege. That was a part of the agreement. I think that was all legitimate.

Q. Did you desire the Legislature to empower you to sue the State in 1886-87? A. I not only desired to do that, but both branches of the Legislature passed an Act allowing the Coulterville Road Company to sue the State, but the Governor unfortunately pocketed that bill and it did not amount to anything.

Q. Did you obtain the right? A. No; the Governor was in the way, unfortunately.

Q. What do you think of the condition of the valley? A. I would like to say that that Act was passed by the last Legislature with only four dissenting votes in the Senate, and only eight dissenting votes in the House.

Q. Are those fences, artistic or ornamental, fit for a great national park? A. I have been in the Central Park, in New York, and I have not seen any such fences there.

Q. Do you think those fences mar the beauty of the valley, and interfere with the privilege of the public in its general enjoyment? A. I most certainly do.

Q. Does this valley bed show any conditions of improvement and care, such as are bestowed on other great parks—Golden Gate Park, for instance? A. God made the Yosemite Park, and if they had let it be as God made it, I think it would be first rate; and man made Golden Gate Park; it is a beautiful place, to be sure, but it is not any such park as Yosemite.

Q. They didn't have the same material to make it from? A. It was not the same boss that made it, either.

Q. Do you think the Yosemite would be bettered by a more liberal policy in allowing competition under State police regulations? A. Well, I don't want to say anything about that; that would be only my own opinion.

MR. MILLS: Give your own opinion. There is nothing so valuable as an opinion.

MR. TULLY: The gentleman has answered the question.

THE WITNESS: I have been speaking all along about keeping the park open.

Q. Don't you think all parties—Commissioners, residents of the valley, and the public at large—would be better served, and all get along better, if the State made more laws governing the valley and the Board less? A. Well, no, I don't. I think the Legislature, unfortunately, knows very little about the Yosemite Valley. They ought to go there; then they would be posted about it, and better able to legislate.

Q. Don't you think the Board and the public would understand the situation better if they were both under the control of a code prepared to restrain them by the Legislature? A. That is a mere matter of opinion.

Q. State the transaction in reference to your letter to Governor Waterman in reference to Hutchings, and what reply was received? A. In regard to that question I would like to state that I don't know how that comes here, because I sat down quietly in my office, in April last, when I knew that the term of service of four of the Commissioners would expire soon, and wrote Governor Waterman a letter, and it was to suggest to him the appointment of J. M. Hutchings, who had been associated with the valley longer than any other living person that I knew, and who, I thought, had special fitness for the position of Commissioner; and I gave the Governor some reasons, in brief, why I thought it would be the proper thing to appoint Mr. Hutchings. I did this without Hutchings' knowledge; I had not consulted with him about it at all. I thought he would agree well with the Commissioners who were there, and that he would help them and they would help him, and that things would go along well, and the valley would be well administered if Hutchings was on that Commission. This is my idea; and I communicated that idea to the Governor, as any other citizen would have the right to do. I knew the valley well, and I knew the Governor did not know it much, and I guess he had not been there at that time.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke awhile ago about some hay having been raised in the valley. Was that timothy, or barley, or both? A. I don't know. I am not a farmer. It was hay.

Q. Do you know about how much it was sold for a ton? A. Well, I have heard Harris, who raised the hay, tell me how much he got for it. I think he got at the rate of $50 or $60 a ton; somewhere along there.

Cross-examination.

MR. MILLS: I would like to state to you, Mr. Chairman, under a question of personal privilege, that I was in the southern part of the State with a sick family, and was telegraphed to come here. I think it a very great injustice to me, in my present state of domestic affliction, that I should be required to remain here. I am here summoned as a witness before you to-night, and as a matter merely of personal right, I would like to have whatever testimony I am to give to you given here this evening. Out of consideration for you gentlemen I shall make this cross-examination exceeding brief, even at the risk of not doing justice to the Commissioners, who have asked me to appear for them.

Q. I want to ask you whether or not you know as a fact that right outside of the fences, right up to the edges of the fields, the valley is overgrown with underbrush? Do you know that as a fact? Simply say yes or no? A. There is underbrush growing there, but the Commissioners can get that out of the way.

Q. That is not an answer to my question. We will get right on if you will answer my questions, and I will not delay these gentlemen five minutes. Do you know as a fact that the valley does grow up in underbrush wherever it is not resisted? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know as a conclusion from that fact that if those fences were not there, there would be no meadows there? A. No, I don't know that.

Q. If the valley grows up in underbrush wherever it is not resisted, wouldn't the brush grow on those wet places that constitute the meadows? A. Yes, sir; the business would be to resist that.

Q. Left to itself, without trimming out the shrubbery, the valley would become a wilderness in a short time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your judgment the best policy of that valley is to trim out the underbrush? A. Oh, I would trim it out reasonably.

Q. Your idea would be to leave the fences down entirely, and resist the growth of the underbrush? A. Not entirely. I would give the hotels the necessary amount of inclosure.

Q. How much would be required for them? A. Twenty-five acres apiece for pasture for cows and calves, and for a garden for vegetables and small fruits.

Q. How many miles of good wagon road are there in that valley? A. Over twenty.

Q. How much over twenty? A. Twenty-two, I believe it is.

MR. MILLS: Thirty-six miles of wagon road in the valley.

Q. What is the extent of the floor of the valley? How many acres in the floor of the valley? A. The public roads extend beyond the floor of the valley; they go down into the cañon of the river.

Q. That is a part of the floor. Wherever it is accessible by wagon we call the floor of the valley? A. Down to the Cascades it is five hundred feet lower than the floor of the valley.

Q. Any part of the valley that is accessible by carriages we call the floor of the valley? A. There is twenty odd miles, the exact amount I do not know.

Q. How many acres are there in the valley altogether, including all that would be denominated the floor; pine lands and other lands? A. Soon after the valley was granted to the State, Mr. Mills, the State Legislature required the Commissioners, one of whom was Professor Whitney, the State Geologist, to make a survey of the grant, the outside limits of the grant.

MR. MILLS: To expedite your business and to prevent a long history concerning this matter, the object of this is to bring to your minds as investigators, the proportion of that which is fenced and that which is not; that is all the object we have, and if the doctor will give some idea of the proportions—suppose he says there are two thousand acres in the valley and two hundred acres under fence—

THE WITNESS [Interrupting]: In about ten or fifteen words I would have completed my answer.

Q. What is the whole area fenced? A. The Legislature required a survey to be made under the authority and direction of the State Geological Survey, and that survey was made, and the plot of it was given to the Commissioners, and you have it in your archives; that will show what it is.

Q. You can give us an approximation. Your testimony has had its influence upon the minds of the members of the committee as to the extent of this fencing? A. The statement is in your map.

Q. It is a proper defense on our part to show the proportion? A. The statement is made in that survey, of the contents in acres, of each plot of arable land on the floor of the valley. What it is, I don't know, but I have known at one time. You have that map in your archives.

Q. As to the extent of this obstruction, does the obstruction, that is, the fences, prevent any one from seeing the scenery of the valley? A. Oh you can, of course, see the cliffs outside of any fences there are in the valley.

Q. And on any road in the valley? Do not the roads absolutely permeate the entire floor of the valley, so that view points from the floor of the valley are obtained of every object of interest? Is that not true as a fact? A. It is a magnificent view of the valley and of the surrounding scenery you get from the drives.

Q. The fences, do not, as a fact, obstruct the views of the valley in any way? A. If I was a Commissioner, I would have bridle paths and foot paths all through.

Q. If you had the money? You said the State's policy has been very niggardly? A. It has been, and I would try to get the State to be more liberal in regard to these matters.

Q. You have been engaged in teaching the State to be liberal? A. I have, and I think I have helped give the State some good judgment, and some proper action in that direction. I did it at my own private cost.

Q. In regard to a question asked you by Mr. Tully as to a privilege which you acquired there under action of the Commissioners, an exclusive privilege; was that before that Commission was legislated out of existence, or under the administration of the existing Commission? A. No, sir; as I said before, it was under the old administration.

Q. How did the existing administration treat the claim which you presented to the State? A. Very handsomely.

Q. In what way? A. They helped me to get a bill through the Legislature.

Q. Who of them helped you to do that? A. You for one.

Q. I did? A. Why certainly.

Q. Did you bring the matter of your claim against the State before this present Commission? A. Well, this gentleman was not a member of the Commission.

Q. But he is the successor to somebody. The present Commission dates since 1880? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What action did the Commission take on that? A. They appointed a committee, consisting of Governor Perkins and an executive committee, which was composed of Mr. Raymond, Colonel Jackson, and M. C. Briggs—I presented a memorial—to take that memorial and look into it and make such recommendations in regard to it as they thought to be proper; and at a subsequent meeting they made a report. The executive committee and the Commissioners made a unanimous report, stating that the Coulterville road had suffered great damage by reason of the unwise action of the State, and that we ought to have reparation.

Q. Did you sell that claim to the Commission? A. That report was unanimously adopted by yourself and the other Commissioners, who were then members of the Commission.

MR. MILLS: I beg leave to state to you that Dr. McLean absolutely says that report was adopted by unanimous consent. A. The records will show that.

MR. MILLS: The records will not show that I voted for it? A. They will show that you presided at the meeting.

MR. MILLS: They won't be true records if that is the case. A. Your memory is at fault.

MR. MILLS: My memory is excellent. No man on earth has a better memory.

Q. Did you eventually sell your claim to the Commission? A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. For how much? A. $10,000.

Q. To the Commission? A. I sold it to the State.

Q. Did not you sell a claim against the State to the Commission for $3,000? A. No, sir; I sold the road to the Yosemite Valley.

Q. You sold the road to the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't there a condition attached to the sale, that you should not prefer any claim against the State for additional indemnity? A. No.

MR. MILLS: I will introduce the record on that subject.

Q. Did you subsequently return to the Commission and ask them to take back the payment that had been made on that? A. The facts are these in regard to that: That at a subsequent meeting still to the meeting when this report was adopted unanimously by the Commission—that was after a session of the Legislature, when the Governor had vetoed a bill—Governor Stoneman vetoed an appropriation bill of $25,000, for the buying of roads and trails, and the building of bridges, and so forth, and the general improvement of the valley. Governor Stoneman vetoed that bill. It was the first legislative session of his term. It was in contemplation on the part of the Commissioners to buy that part of the Coulterville road that was within the grant with a portion of that money, and that veto spoiled that expectation on the part of the Commissioners and the road company, and the Governor stated that the Yosemite Valley was there, and it would last, and it could wait for an appropriation; and stated further, as a reason for making that veto, that the funds of the Yosemite Valley were not guarded properly, and ought to go into the State Treasury, and that all money coming to the Commission and going out from the Commission ought to go through the State Treasury.

Q. My question is, did you not come to the Commission and ask them to take back the purchase of that road and take back the money they had paid you? Did you or did you not? A. I wanted the Commission then to buy that road and pay $10,000.

Q. Did you ask the Commission to take back the money that they had paid on the purchase of that road. They bought it of you for $3,000 and they paid you $250 on account, and didn't you come and ask them to take it back? A. The Commission rescinded their action.

Q. Didn't you ask them to take it back? A. Yes, sir; because I was crazy. I was badgered out of my good sense by the Commission in the way in which they acted towards me. Hutchings was present at that time and so were you, and they really badgered me.

Q. I opposed giving you $3,000. Did I not oppose giving you $3,000?

A. I don't know whether you did or not. Oh, yes, you did; because you said the Legislature was the proper party to undertake that business. I think you did; yes, sir.

Q. Did I not secure the veto of your bill allowing you to sue the State, and isn't it known to you that I did? A. No, sir; I don't know that at all. I know that you wrote to the Governor, but I don't know that it was your letter that did that; and I know besides that you said a good many things that were not facts—not intending to lie, or anything of that kind, but you were off from the facts very widely in your letter, and I have got a copy of it and I can prove it to you or anybody else.

MR. MILLS: I merely wanted to show that the Commission had resisted the claim which Judge Tully showed here had been created by that action.

MR. TULLY: Judge Tully I don't understand has shown anything. He has not been on the stand. I have shown nothing.

MR. MILLS: You called out in your testimony the fact that Judge Tully had shown, through the testimony of this witness, that a right had been given there which laid the foundation for a claim against the State for $10,000. My question to the doctor simply went to that question.

MR. TULLY: I plead guilty to having drawn that out, but you stated that I had shown that.

MR. MILLS: I was unfortunate in my language.

MR. TULLY: I don't want to be put in the category of being made a witness.

MR. MILLS: I did not intend to do that. There are a great many questions that I want to ask the witness, and I will give notice to you, on behalf of the Commission, that we will claim the right to call any of these witnesses when we put in the case of the Commission. I don't know that I shall represent the Commission, but I know that that will be the plan of the Commission. I wanted to ask one further question, with your indulgence.

Q. Are you familiar with the law of Congress making the grant to the State of California? A. Yes, sir; I am familiar with it.

Q. You have been asked a good many questions concerning that law and about the right of the Commission to grant exclusive privileges.

MR. TULLY: We have not asked in regard to that; he has given his conclusions and has been allowed to do so, but we have not asked them.

MR. MILLS: This question will bring a matter to the mind of the committee, and as I am very earnestly in favor of a very thorough inquiry, I wish to call the witness' attention to one matter.

Q. Could any subsequent law passed by the Legislature of the State of California nullify or change the conditions of the grant or the relations between the grantor and the grantee? A. It could not, unless Congress accepted that change. If the two parties should accept the change, then it could be.

MR. TULLOCH: You told Mr. Mills, in your testimony, did you not, that the building of fences did not obstruct the sight of the views. Now, what did you mean by that; did you mean that a man might be on the top of a fence and get as good a view of the country as he could if he were on the ground, or did you mean to say that it was not a matter of inconvenience? Did you not, in your testimony, say that you believed the fences were an inconvenience to parties who elected to move about in the premises? A. I think so.

Q. And then in your testimony to the gentleman awhile ago, you meant to say, did you not, that the fences did not prevent a person from seeing sights, but that it did impede the progress of parties—their locomotion? That was the meaning, was it not? A. I think the general public have got a right to go anywhere in the valley, and that that privilege is restricted by those fences.

MR. MILLS: You say, however, that it was necessary that some fences should be there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then to the extent that fences should be there, the public would have a right to go into those lots? A. The fences that are absolutely necessary for the proper enjoyment of the valley.

Q. Some fences are necessary? A. I think so.

Q. And there are about two hundred and fifty acres under fence? A. I don't know how much.

Q. Some fences are necessary? A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Does the existence of fences, taking into consideration the roads which ramify the whole floor of the valley, does the existence of fences, where they exist, destroy the scenery, the sublimity of the scenery, the views which the people go there to see? A. No, I don't think they do.

Q. Do they prevent any man from enjoying any part of the scenery which he might enjoy if the fences were not there—any part of the scenery? A. No; I don't think they do; but the disadvantage that comes to the public from the existence of those fences that are not necessary to the proper public use of the grant lies more in this direction: that the people of the State and of the United States who want to go there—for instance, if I wanted to drive a team into that valley, and was a taxpayer of the State and helped make the roads, through my taxes that I pay, and help build the trails, and so forth, and help the Commissioners with the funds that are necessary, if I wanted to drive with my team and camp anywhere on any of those delightful meadows, I am not allowed to do it, and I think that is a proscription.

Q. Would those delightful meadows exist if it were not for the fences? A. I think they would. They were there before the fences were built.

MR. TULLY: You have testified on cross-examination—at least you have said you admitted that those roads were so laid out that you would obtain nice views of the principal scenery in that valley. Do you consider that the pleasure of tourists in going there is not confined to a drive along those roads, and is not confined to a certain point; or is it not rather an enjoyment of the whole valley, to go off into the quiet nooks, and have free access to all its beauties, outside of the general scenery? A. That is what I think ought to be done.

MR. MILLS: Then as to the question of proportion; the restriction relates only to that portion which is fenced in. Are there not a vast number of quiet nooks in this valley which are not obstructed? A. Lots of them.

Q. Is there any objection to anybody going into one of those fields for a picnic? A. I don't know whether there is or not.

Q. Isn't there ground set apart for campers that is ample for their use? A. There is ground set apart, but I don't think it is ample for their use.

Q. That is merely a question of judgment? A. There was six hundred campers in the valley last year.

Q. Isn't the ground of the campers inclosed so that their horses may be turned loose? A. Yes, sir; but they don't get enough feed, and they have to buy hay and grain.

Q. If the ground under cultivation was treated as the ground the campers use, would the feed be any better there? A. There would be more of it, of course.

Q. Why? A. Because there is more territory.

Q. There is plenty of territory left which might yet be set aside? A. What is left is pine land, and coarse growth.

Q. Is it not true that the valley, left to itself, would grow up entirely in underbrush, more rapidly, and to trees? Is that not true? A. Mr. Mills, a good Commission would not allow it to grow up.

Q. The question is, would it do that thing? A. If it was left wild and in a state of nature it would grow up; yes, sir.

Q. Is there not a great lot of ferns and brakes that grow up in the valley? A. Certainly.

Q. Isn't there a part of the season when it is exceedingly dry in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would there not be danger in that narrow gorge, with walls three thousand feet high on each side, of the whole valley burning up in the dry season, should it take fire, if the valley was allowed to grow up in that way? A. I don't think the valley ought to be allowed to grow up in that way.

Q. You think it ought to be burned over every year? A. No.

Q. It ought to be trimmed out then? A. Trimmed out; yes, sir.

Q. The trees should be cut out? A. This undergrowth you speak of, unless it may be a clump here and there, to add to the beauty of the valley.

MR. TULLY: One question has been suggested to me. Do you know of any road through the center of the valley that has been fenced up at the instance of private parties or for the benefit of private parties? A. Do you mean a fence running across it?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir; I do not.

MR. TRUMAN: I would like to ask one question. If he says there is not ample room for camping purposes, and that what there is there is fenced, why should not there be more fencing instead of less fencing? A. I think under proper restrictions, that campers could be accommodated in the open valley, by proper restrictions and regulations of the Commission without any fences at all.

Q. In the construction of roads and trails and the building of bridges, isn't it necessary to do some fencing? A. I don't know of any necessity for fencing there.

Q. To protect the roads? They have been made very handsome this year. Three new bridges have been built and a great many new trails and roads built there this summer. Isn't it necessary in the preservation of those roads to here and there build some fences? A. I was in the valley last summer, but I didn't ride about the valley much at that time. I think these roads and bridges were built after I was in the valley this summer.

MR. TRUMAN: I don't think any have been built this year, but we have had requests from different parties to build fences, and we voted against it. A. I think that there were some bridges built this year.

Q. As a general thing don't you think it necessary to do fencing here and there? A. If I were a Commissioner I would try and get along without any fencing other than what was necessary for the hotel.

Q. Do you know who built the first fences there? A. Lemmon built the first fences; the first settler in the valley, James G. Lemmon.

Q. Who built the first wire fence, do you know? A. I don't know, unless it was Hutchings. He might have built a wire fence; I don't know. Hutchings built fences early.

Q. Did you say that the sawmill that was erected to saw lumber for the Stoneman House was in the valley or out of the valley? A. It was out of the valley; but Hutchings, very improperly, long before that, built a sawmill in the valley. That was when he was contesting the right of the Commissioners to the property, the territory upon which he built his mill.

Q. I was going to ask you if you ever saw a sawmill in the valley? A. Yes; Hutchings built one.

MR. MILLS: How late was there a sawmill built there by Hutchings' recommendation? A. Hutchings built it—

Q. Was there a sawmill built there lately by his recommendation? Within the past few years? A. Hutchings recommended the repairing of the old sawmill, and I bucked against that to the extent of my ability.

MR. HOOK: Dr. McLean, was the grass sufficient there before 1872 or 1870 for campers? A. There was lots of it; yes, sir.

Q. Was there in 1875? A. Why, certainly.

Q. Sufficient to maintain and feed horses in the valley; campers' horses? A. I should think that if it was all open to them, there would be; but it was shut up.

Q. Wasn't it a fact that in 1872 and in 1875 that campers had to purchase hay and barley? A. As far back as 1872? I don't know about that, because a great deal of fencing has been done since 1872, Mr. Hook.

MR. HOOK: This was 1872 and 1875 that I am asking about, particularly. I know that I had to buy it myself.

MR. TULLOCH: Were you there at any time before the fences were built, or when there was but a small quantity of fences? A. Hutchings had fenced in considerable territory.

Q. When you were there when there was but little fencing could you go round about and look at all the places that you elected to look at without the undergrowth stopping your progress? A. Except what Hutchings and Lemmon, who were old settlers, had fenced in as settlers.

Q. The undergrowth and jungle did not impede your progress in such a manner but what you could gain a good view of anything you elected to look at, did it? A. No; you could go about at that time.

Q. Now, you spoke awhile ago about lands and places being inclosed by fences, and campers putting their horses in there. Were they charged a rental for that purpose? A. No, sir; I think not.

MR. MILLS: The further back you go in the history the more open the valley was? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The growth has been due to preservation, largely. Go back to the time when Mr. Hutchings, the pioneer of this valley, visited it, and it was much more open than at any subsequent period? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that not due to the fact that the Indians burned the valley over every year? A. I have no personal knowledge.

Q. Was it a matter of tradition that that was the case? A. I suppose it was.

Q. The gentleman's question goes to the question whether this park existed at that time, and I want to direct your mind to the fact that the further back you go the more open it was? A. I wish to say in regard to this whole matter that it was a surprise to me that I was summoned to come here. I got a letter from Mr. Meany, Chairman of the Committee on Yosemite in the Senate, at my home, and in response to that—it was a polite request to come up here—I came. He referred to a resolution, and I looked at that resolution, and I saw that really I was not a proper person to testify, because I had made no charges against the Commissioners, and he wanted people who had made charges to come, and I am here to-night without my own agency whatever. I was hunted up and sub-pœnaed by the officers of the State to appear here to-night; so that I am here not of my own accord.

N. S. STOCKTON.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside? Answer—In Mariposa County, at Hornitos. Hornitos is my Post Office.

Q. You understand the nature of this investigation, Mr. Stockton? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Certain charges have been preferred against the management of that valley; not against any particular individual, but against the management? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those charges are specific and numbered. We will read you the first charge, and ask whether you know anything in regard to it or not? [The clerk read the first charge.] A. I know nothing about it.

[The clerk read the second charge.] A. I know nothing about it.

[The clerk read the third charge.] A. I know nothing about it.

[The clerk read the fourth charge.] A. I know nothing about it.

[The clerk read the fifth charge.] A. Well, I do know of portions of the valley having been plowed up.

Q. How much of the valley do you know of having been plowed up? A. Oh, I don't know. I would judge when I was in the valley last from thirty to fifty acres were in cultivation.

Q. By whom was it cultivated, do you know? A. By Mr. Harris.

Q. Do you know whether he cultivated it under a lease, or under what terms or conditions he cultivated it? A. Nothing, only from what he told me.

Q. What did he tell you about it? A. He told me that he had a lease of the property.

Q. Was that land inclosed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. With what kind of an inclosure; a board fence, wire fence, or brush fence? A. Board and wire fence combined; some boards and some wire.

Q. Was the land inclosed in this inclosure all cultivated, or was only a portion of it cultivated? A. Only a portion of it, I think, if I remember correctly. [The Clerk again read the fifth charge.]

Q. Do you know anything in regard to that charge, which charges that it has been done for private gain? Do you know whether it has been done to the injury of the revenues which would be legitimately derived from that on behalf of the State? What do you know about the rental being appropriated or applied to private use? A. No, sir; I know nothing at all about the appropriation of money derived from rental; I know nothing about it.

Q. If I understand it, private use would mean for it to be appropriated by the Commissioners or some person through them. What do you know about the burning of shrubbery? A. Nothing at all.

[The clerk read the sixth charge.]

MR. TULLY: I will state, Mr. Chairman, that when I have asked the question, before we pass to the next question, any question the members of the committee desire to ask in regard to that charge, they have the right to ask it.

MR. HOOK: How many acres do you think were inclosed there, Mr. Stockton? A. Well, I would estimate anywhere from two hundred to three hundred acres.

Q. How many acres do you think were in the bottom of the valley, or in the valley itself? A. Well, sir, I couldn't estimate that very correctly.

Q. What do you think? A. What character of land? Do you mean all the lands between the walls of the valley?

Q. Between wall and wall; yes, sir? A. I suppose there is some two thousand acres.

Q. There are only two hundred and fifty fenced in? A. I should judge there was about that when I was there last. I don't know what is in the valley now. It has been some little time since I was in there.

Q. If this was not fenced up, do you think the underbrush would grow up there, to the detriment of the valley? A. I don't know. I was there a good many years ago. I was there occasionally along for quite a number of years, and from the time I first went into the valley until the last time I went there it had not grown up very much.

Q. Wasn't it a fact that along in the seventies there were a great many clear spots in the valley; that it did not grow up in underbrush and shrubbery and ferns and brakes? A. Well, I think there were places they didn't grow up.

Q. Was there twenty or twenty-five acres in some spots? A. I think so. [The clerk read the seventh charge.] A. I know nothing about that.

[The clerk read the eighth charge.] A. I know nothing of it.

[The clerk read the ninth charge.] A. I have no knowledge about that.

[The clerk read the tenth charge.] A. I have no knowledge of that.

[The clerk read the eleventh charge.] A. No knowledge whatever of it.

[The clerk read the twelfth charge.] A. I know nothing of that only from rumor and newspaper accounts.

[The clerk read the thirteenth charge.] A. I know nothing about that.

[The clerk read the fourteenth charge.] A. I know nothing about that.

[The clerk read the fifteenth charge.] A. I have no knowledge of that.

[The clerk read the sixteenth charge.] A. I have no knowledge about that.

[The clerk read the seventeenth charge.] A. I have no knowledge of any such thing.

[The clerk read the eighteenth charge.] A. I don't know anything of it.

[The clerk read the nineteenth charge.] A. I have no knowledge about that.

[The clerk read the twentieth charge.] A. I don't know anything about it.

[The clerk read the twenty-first charge.] A. I have no knowledge of any such thing.

[The clerk read the twenty-second charge.] A. That occupies so many points that I don't think that I could answer that question. I have answered all the questions that I have any knowledge of in reference to the valley, and those questions that I have answered, almost all of them, cover this last question.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Stockton, under that question you would be allowed and expected to answer anything that you know, any substantial facts with regard to what might be considered general mismanagement of the valley; anything done in the valley that tends to destroy the beauties of its natural scenery, or to interfere with the ingress or egress of parties desiring to visit it, and the general enjoyment of the valley. It is broad enough to cover all that; any obstacles that may be thrown in the way of the free access to the beauties of the valley, and to examine its natural beauties in every shape? A. Then we have to assume considerable that has been published in the papers, and general report, and there has been special privileges granted; fences have been erected there that prevents people from occupying the whole valley.

Q. Of your own knowledge do you know whether it is a fact that those fences have been built, and that they do obstruct the ingress and egress and free access of those visiting that valley to parts of the valley from which they would desire to view the valley, and observe and examine its scenery and its natural features? A. These fences that are made in the valley certainly exclude parties from occupying that part of the valley, which otherwise they would be very glad to occupy; especially campers that go into the valley and would like to have the benefit of a portion of the best part of the valley for grass.

Q. For camping purposes and grazing, and taking care of their stock? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether, under the management of that valley, from the time it has been in the hands of the Commissioners, do you know whether the general management has been such as to exclude and interfere with the free enjoyment by tourists of that valley? A. Yes, sir; of this portion which is fenced.

Q. It is an obstacle to the free enjoyment by tourists of the beauties of that valley? A. Well, not particularly the beauties of that valley, but the enjoyment of that portion of the valley that they are excluded from by these fences.

Q. Some persons might desire to go off into these little byways and by-paths and corners, holes and corners, and consider that they were part of the beauties of the valley. Have they free access to those grounds, or do those fences that have been erected interfere with that free use which all visitors should have to visit any and all of its beauties, whatever they might consider beauties of the valley? A. They do.

MR. HOOK: Before those fences were erected, didn't those campers' horses run at large in the valley? A. They did when I went there.

Q. Wasn't it a fact that there were a great many horses stolen and driven out of there, and that was very inconvenient to the campers? A. I don't recollect anything about that.

Q. Do you recollect anything about some horses being driven out in 1875, and campers having a great deal of trouble getting them back? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Do you know whether the horses were not so vicious and wild there that it prevented people from traveling in the valley, along in the seventies; people turning wild horses out with long ropes on them, to the detriment and with a liability to injure persons and the property of the campers? A. No; I am not aware of that.

Q. Don't you know that in the seventies there were cattle driven in there, and that they fed on the bottom of the valley? A. You mean stock cattle?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir; not that I am aware of. I never knew of cattle being driven in there by drovers. I know that parties going into the valley and having business there took in some stock, but I never knew of stockmen driving cattle into the valley as grazing ground.

MR. TULLY: Do the inclosures in that valley interfere with the convenience of persons and visitors going in there with their teams and camping, and obstruct that free access to the valley with their teams that they ought, in your estimation, to have? That a tourist or a person going there for the purpose of enjoying the pleasures of that valley, are they obstructed by those fences to the extent that it interferes with the free enjoyment of those parties, with their teams and wagons, campers? A. Yes, sir; I think so.

MR. HOOK: What amount of space is allotted to campers in the valley; what is the number of acres? A. I am not aware that there is any portion of the valley that is allotted exclusively to campers.

MR. TULLOCH: How much do you think there is of meadow land in the valley? A. What do you mean; meadow land suitable for agricultural purposes?

Q. Yes; such as valley land, meadows, arable land? A. Perhaps two or three hundred acres.

Q. Is that inclosed with fences? A. A large portion of it.

Q. Is that inclosed down towards the Bridal Veil Fall? A. No, it was not when I was in the valley last.

Q. Is it inclosed up towards Mirror Lake? A. No, sir; that upper part of the valley was not inclosed—well, it is inclosed, too, because there are fences running from the bridge above the Barnard hotel across to the bluff there. There is a wagon road out, but that wagon road is not closed in any way. Well, with the exception of this wagon road out, it is inclosed.

Q. Is the same piece inclosed that Hutchings had inclosed in 1875, near the Yosemite Falls; the river road, right due west of the falls? A. I don't think it is; I forget whether it is or not, but I believe not.

MR. MILLS: I have no questions to ask this gentleman, except one. I think he stated in direct examination that there was no exclusive place for campers? A. That there was no ground set apart exclusively for campers.

Q. Did you state that? A. Not that I know of.

MR. HOOK: There is one other question that I would like to ask him: whether any stumps of trees that have been cut down are left still standing there; do the stumps still remain there? A. I don't know whether they are there or not. I really could not answer that question.

MR. TULLOCH: Is there any ground left for campers to camp on if they elected to? Is there any ground left that the campers might camp on if they wanted to—any ground that is not inclosed at present? A. There was when I was in the valley last.

Q. When were you there last? A. Something over two years ago since I was in the valley.

Q. Was it considerable land, or just small spots here and there—was it preferable places? A. Now, for what purpose—to obtain feed for your animals?

Q. Yes, such as a camping place that you yourself would prefer? A. When I was there last there was not any feed for my horses. I bought my feed.

Q. Then there were no camping places that you yourself would prefer, provided you were going there as a camping party? A. There was no place that my horses could get feed that I thought they could live on.

MR. HOOK: In 1872 and 1875 was there sufficient grass there to feed horses that traveled that long trip to Yosemite Valley, without buying hay and barley? A. Well, I couldn't answer that in those years. It is pretty difficult for me to remember dates.

Q. That was a time when there were a few fences there; very few fences in the valley? A. Well, I don't know whether there was sufficient feed there or not. In early days, when the whole valley was open, I was never there at any time that there was not plenty of feed.

Q. Is there strength enough in that feed to maintain horses after the long jaunt to the valley, and traveling up those trails? A. Well, I suppose horses can be maintained on such feed. We have to work our horses in the mountains in handling stock. I have been accustomed to driving stock into the mountains for a good many years, since 1864. We take our horses up in there and they have to subsist on the natural grasses.

Q. The question that I wanted to draw from you is this: a great many people who go up there camp and hire their teams in San Francisco, Oakland, Martinez, Stockton, and other points, and travel there with livery teams, and teams that have been used to being kept in a stable? A. Such horses would do very poorly on any natural grass at all—any natural grass in the State.

Q. What is the price of hay in the valley at present? A. I do not know the price now. When I was there last I believe I was offered timothy hay for $40 and barley hay for $50.

Q. What was the price of ground barley? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Do you know what the cost of freighting barley and hay into the valley is? A. No, sir; I do not.

MR. TULLOCH: You don't know what the price of hay or barley was in the last two years? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Don't know anything about it? A. No, sir; I would like to state to the committee and others that I was not aware that I was going to be brought before this committee. It was not a voluntary act on my part; it never entered my mind that I would be before this committee until I was summoned. I came here to answer a summons compelling me to be here.

W. H. MILLS.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside? Answer—San Francisco.

Q. Are you acquainted with Yosemite Valley and its conditions at present? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have known what its conditions have been for some years past? A. I have been familiar with the conditions of the valley since 1880.

Q. You understand, Mr. Mills, the nature of this examination; what the object of it is? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Specific charges here have been preferred and you are expected to answer them?

MR. HOOK: Are you one of the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; I am, sir.

[The clerk read the first charge.] A. It would be entirely unfair, I think, Mr. Chairman, for me to answer. Of course I say no to that proposition. I think the Commission has done the best they could, and I don't want to take any advantage of being a witness in this matter to put in testimony here that should not go in.

[The clerk read the second charge.] A. The Commissioners have no knowledge of any such thing, that I have ever heard. I will not pretend ignorance of the nature and origin of this charge, and if the Chairman of the committee will permit me, I will simply say what the origin of this charge is.

MR. TULLY: I don't know that that is material, except in so far as it is supposed to have had its origin in the mismanagement of the Commission.

A. That is the nature of the charge, that the Commission did permit the breaking of private property.

Q. And your answer would be directed to the refutation or the confirmation of that charge? A. I should explain this matter.

MR. HOOK: As we have allowed latitude with others, wouldn't it be well to allow Mr. Mills some latitude?

MR. TULLY: Mr. Mills is able to make his own statement. I don't desire to make him a witness against himself. A. I prefer to be a witness for everything there is in it. I am here to tell all I know concerning this matter. I have no concealment to make. I have no other defense to make before the Commission of my part in this matter than the question of my judgment. I have done the best I could as a Commissioner. This charge relates to some property which was under lease, I think, to Mr. Robinson, and I would thank Mr. Robinson to correct me in any statement that I may make concerning it. I think the charge was against the Guardian and not against the Commissioners. No charge against the Commissioners is lodged here accusing them of breaking in. He had a room, under lease, and there was some dispute between him and the Guardian—he had still a lease—as to whether tenure of the lease had expired, or something of that nature.

Q. Wasn't this Guardian appointed by the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir. But of course the Commission could know nothing unless it was reported to them. As a Commissioner I never heard of this, and in my judgment the matter would be better explained by Mr. Robinson, who is the complaining witness, and who will eventually be put on the stand.

[The clerk read the third charge.] A. I presume that this relates to the destruction of two old hotels in the valley. I will be fair to the parties who are making these charges. For a long time—in fact, let me say to you, gentlemen, that when I first went on the Commission I became thoroughly persuaded that it would be necessary, very soon, in order to accommodate the increasing travel, owing to the greater intimacy of travel between the different parts of the world and Yosemite, that it would be necessary to construct new hotels. I saw very plainly that the hotels had been constructed in primitive times and in a very primitive manner. Take, for instance, the hotel that was called Black's hotel. That was a cloth-lined affair, and very dangerous in many respects.

MR. HOOK: When was that hotel built? A. That was in the valley when I went in. My first visit to the valley as a Commissioner was in 1880. The hotel was a mere shell, a mere frame, and without modern conveniences of any kind. It was a rough, backwoods hotel. As the prospect or opportunity approached the Commission of constructing a decent hotel in the valley, the repairs were neglected on these hotels, because it was perfectly apparent to us that a good hotel would accommodate all the travel that would visit the valley. The accommodations of the valley are fully equal to the demands made on them, except in very exceptional instances where large tourist parties sometimes come in at the same time, but that would be rare, and there never has been a time, according to my inquiry—and I have made diligent inquiry about this—when the hotel accommodations of the valley have not been equal to the demand. Now when the new hotel, with very much enlarged accommodations, came in, of course the accommodations of these old hotels, which were sufficient at one time, would make a surplus of accommodations. To save the State's money and to prevent its being squandered upon buildings which were so old as to have outlived their usefulness, lived their life, and their durability had been thoroughly tested, and the snows of winter were liable to break them down, repairs were withheld on them; and Mr. Hutchings, who has had great knowledge of the valley, and for a long time was a Commissioner, recommended, in his report as Guardian for 1883 and 1884, the destruction of these buildings. His report will be introduced here as testimony, eventually. His judgment in that matter accorded entirely with mine. They were unsightly; they were scarcely fit for use.

The last year I was in the valley I was accompanied with my wife and a number of lady friends, and we stopped at one of these hotels. They were utterly unfit for use as hotels; and the contrast between their condition and that of the new hotel, after the new hotel was built, was so great that we found it impossible to lease them; nobody wanted to use those hotels. Therefore they were taken down in pursuance of a very deliberate, very calm judgment as to the very best use that could be made of the materials. The material in them was used again in the construction of other necessary buildings in the valley, and putting a very valuable improvement upon Barnard's Hotel, increasing the accommodations and the elegance of the accommodations, which leaves two very good hotels in the valley, which are fully equal to the demands that will be made upon them. Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to say here, that eventually, when railroad communication approaches the valley, and the facilities for travel become better and the cost much less—when I first went on the Commission, the cost of visiting the valley to an individual was very much over $100. If a gentleman took his wife and his son with him, it cost $400 to go to the valley. That was about as cheap as he could go. That was not very much less than the cost of a trip to New York, or Europe from New York; and the cost was an obstruction to the number of visitors; hence, very few have gone in. As railroad communication approaches the valley, as it will—I hope it will never enter the valley—the number of people going there will be much larger. Eventually, this park will attract the attention of the world, and the number of visitors will increase very greatly, and the revenues of the State of California, in consequence of tourist travel here, will be correspondingly increased, and it will be necessary to build another hotel sooner or later. These other hotels, not being at all of use, would be unsightly. They would be the refuge for campers, irresponsible parties, and tramps—things of that sort. They had become unsightly by their windows being broken, and they were removed, not only in accordance with the universal judgment of the Commission, but by the very strong recommendation of Mr. Hutchings, whose judgment has been deferred to generally, and particularly by myself. I have consulted Mr. Hutchings many times as to my duty, and have always found as much light and wisdom as I could find at any other place. That is a simple history of the destruction of those hotels. I beg leave to say that I was very strongly in favor of their destruction. I think I did right. I think the Commission would have done wrong not to have removed them. That is my judgment. If you had been Commissioners you might have had a different judgment. In my opinion you would have had very bad judgment if you did not act as we did.

[The clerk again read the third charge.] A. I presume Mr. Robinson intended to bring up the question of the destruction of those hotels under this charge.

MR. TULLY: Was the vote of the Commission unanimous in removing those buildings? A. I don't remember, but I think it was.

Q. At or about the time of this destruction of those hotels, did Mr. Leidig offer to rent one of those hotels, subsequently or at that time? A. No, sir; Mr. Leidig has sold out.

Q. Was any offer made to rent Leidig's hotel? A. There was none before the Commission. When we were in the valley, when this action was taken, Mr. Leidig had sold out to the other two hotel keepers, according to the information given to us as Commissioners, and received by us officially; they had simply purchased his departure and he was gone; he was not before us. Leidig had enjoyed the use of one of those hotels ever since I had been a Commissioner, and, according to my information, for a long time before without rent. The hotel did not bring any revenue to the State at all; we allowed Leidig the free use of that hotel. There was no application to lease those hotels before the Board.

Q. Didn't Snow make any application? A. I am not aware of Snow's having made any application. Upon this matter I will state that the applications themselves are filed always with the Commission. I have no recollection of any application being filed. If such an application was made by Mr. Snow, it would be on file, and the Secretary of the Commission, who is the custodian of the archives, would be the proper witness on that question, as to the actual fact. I don't remember that any application was made.

MR. HOOK: Were those hotels private property or the property of the Commission? A. They were the property of the State. The hotels were built a long time ago. Originally, you gentlemen must understand, that private rights grew up in the valley. Those private rights had to be extinguished by the slow process of compromise and purchase, and whenever any one had done anything, or had been permitted to do anything in the valley in the way of erecting structures, a claim against the State generally followed. Those claims were settled slowly and by degrees, and as judiciously as the Commission could; and, with the concurrence of the Legislature, many of them were settled. These hotels had been built and the claims concerning them had been settled, except an indefinite claim which the Leidig family had for the building of that hotel, but which, in the judgment of the Commission, was barred in law, by reason of the fact that they themselves had acknowledged the right of the State, and had occupied that hotel for nine years under a pretended or nominal lease, the idea being that they were to keep the hotel in fair order; keep it habitable, and that they were to expend what would be rent in the repairs. We allowed them to repair the hotel and call that lease money. That was the fact of the case, but they were the property of the State.

Q. What did the destruction of that property cost the State, to extinguish those rights and acquire the right to do it? A. That would be a question of detail. When $55,000 had been expended by the State of California upon the Yosemite Valley, but about $2,000 had been expended in any other way than on the extinguishment of private rights. These figures I take from a statement in the "Examiner," which was furnished to the "Examiner," I think, by Mr. Hutchings, who is familiar with the facts. I may be mistaken as to the source of their information; but the early history of the valley, the first item, the leading item, was an aggregate of $55,000; $2,000 of that was for the expense of Commission and preservation, and the other $53,000 had been used in extinguishing private rights. At the last session of the Legislature claims amounting to $63,000 were passed by the Legislature in the extinguishment of private rights. I take the liberty right here to say, because it is fair to all the parties that are interested in those things, and because my neglect now to testify on that matter might possibly be construed by somebody into timidity, I hold myself entirely responsible for the veto by the Governor of those bills.

Q. Could the Commissioners get sufficient rent for those hotels to keep them in repair? A. The Commissioners, under the new conditions, with the new hotel and its very much enlarged and elegant accommodations, could not have rented those hotels for anything like legitimate hotel purposes, as I will show in answer to a question later on.

Q. Were those hotels, as they stood at the time you tore them down, an eyesore to the valley? A. Indeed, they were. They were an offense to the eye; Black's hotel, particularly, was. We discussed the question in Commission, both as individuals and collectively, what use could be made of those hotels. We thought for awhile of preserving a little portion of the Black hotel, which was of two stories, and which was of later construction, and we thought it might be used for a storehouse in certain ways; but the tendency of patrons of hotels being towards the upper portion of the valley—you gentlemen understand that these hotels are strung along; first comes Leidig's, and then Black's, and then Barnard's, and then the new hotel; estimating roughly, it must be four miles about from Leidig's to the new hotel.

MR. HUTCHINGS: It is one fourth of a mile from Leidig's to Cook's; one half a mile from Cook's up to my old place, and a mile and a quarter up to the other.

MR. HOOK: Wasn't Black's the first hotel there? That used to be in 1875?

MR. HUTCHINGS: I kept hotel in 1864; long before Black.

Q. Wasn't Black's the first hotel on entering from the Coulterville road?

A. No; that is Leidig's. I am simply explaining to the committee the reasons which influenced the actions of the Commission, and it is for the committee to determine whether those reasons were good and sufficient. To the mind of the Commission they were. To my mind they were. I defend that action. I was very much in favor of it. It added to the general beauty and effectiveness of the valley. One objection I have had to hotels there is that they are dusty. Right up to the door of Black's hotel the foreground was six or seven inches deep in dust all the time; and around Barnard's hotel. I have expostulated with Barnard frequently for not keeping it sprinkled in front of his hotel and making it more pleasant to sit upon the porch. We were set down in dirt and dust.

MR. TULLY: You have stated that the object of getting rid of these hotels was that, in the opinion of the Commission, they were an eyesore, not only to the members of the Commission but to those who went in there. As an eyesore, what is the difference between those buildings that have been destroyed and the present fences, by which the access to the scenery around there has been obstructed? A. The fences are not sightly, but under the conditions which exist in the valley and the rights of the people and the interest of tourists, and the necessities of certain privileges being granted—like the saddle train privileges—a place to turn in horses and so on, the fences are indispensable; and while they are not sightly fences—they are not painted green—they are fairly constructed. They belong to the primitive stage of development in the bed of this valley, which will sooner or later pass away. Some improvement has been made all the time; the bridges are more substantial than they were years ago. Very much progress has been made. But you have a question relating to fences. I will give you my views on that subject. The fences may be an offense to an esthetic taste, but they are a necessity.

Q. Another question in regard to the eyesore; that is looking at it from an artistic standpoint? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know, sir, that these old and ancient vistas of former and prior exploration, that to many tourists coming from the old country or from the Eastern States, that they would be objects of curiosity, and that they would like to see those things? They would like to have pointed out the old Hutchings house, and so on? A. These are not picturesque, and they have no historical value. The Hutchings house and the Barnard hotel have been preserved. These other hotels were temporary structures for the temporary accommodation of visitors. They were not plastered; they were cloth-lined, and very rude.

Q. Is there such a place as Kenneyville there? A. There is a little village in the valley that is necessary—for example, the tourists and other people must have a store. There is a drug store—a little store, and a blacksmith's shop, which is a necessity. Now, this blacksmith's shop, and this little store and little curiosity shop, where things are manufactured from the natural woods of the valley, constitute a little group of dwellings, in the vicinity of the old Hutchings house or Barnard hotel, which Mr. Robinson, with the irony for which he is noted, calls Kenneyville.

MR. ROBINSON: Kenneyville is at least two miles further up the valley. A. I don't know of its existence, then.

MR. TULLY: You think those new structures that have been reared are an improvement upon the general appearance there? A. What structures do you refer to?

Q. The blacksmith's shop? A. Those were in existence in very early times. They were there when I went there. I would be very glad if there were no blacksmith's shop in the valley. I would be glad if people could go in on wings.

Q. What is the character of those buildings recently constructed there? A. The buildings that were recently constructed there consist of some barns and stabling for the horses, and I have not seen them at all, Judge. They were constructed since the meeting of the Board.

Q. You don't know whether they are sightly or unsightly? A. I don't know whether they are in Eastlake or Queen Anne style.

MR. HOOK: Isn't it absolutely necessary to have a blacksmith shop? A. Yes, sir; that is entirely indispensable. You couldn't get along without it. Stages cannot carry people in there and be out of repair and not be able to repair them.

Q. Don't tourists need them? A. Yes, sir; for the repair of their carriages. Tourists usually go in there with vehicles too light for the mountain roads, and they usually have to have more or less repairs, and have their horses shod, and the blacksmith shop is a necessary evil. It is simply a place of industry. I have known a great many blacksmiths whom I have thought as highly of, in an artistic sense, as I have of many artists whom I am acquainted with.

Q. A blacksmith shop is not quite so artistic? A. The difference between an artisan and an artist is that an artisan usually makes a living, and an artist don't.

[The clerk read the fourth charge.] A. This charge of cutting and destroying timber is one that will require a very careful investigation on your part. The question immediately arose in the minds of this new Commission as to what its policy should be. In 1880, at the first visit to the valley, the question of policy as to the removing of certain timber in the valley came up. A resolution declaring the question of policy was passed by the Board at that meeting, and that is on the minutes of that meeting. It was there declared, in a cautious way, that where the encroachments of the undergrowth prevented a proper view of the scenery, that vistas would be opened; in other words, the Commission committed itself to the doctrine of cutting out undergrowth, and occasionally trees. When a fall has sixteen hundred feet in a single plunge, it fills the atmosphere with a vast amount of spray, and it was necessary for tourists to go very near the fall, and they were unconsciously soaked wet before they knew that this spray was permeating the atmosphere in that way. I was strongly in favor of resisting the encroachments of the wilderness which naturally grows up in the valley more than it does in the Sierra Nevadas. I have under my eye constantly a large area of land. The floor of the valley is wet, and the seeds of the cottonwood are distributed through the valley; cottonwood trees grow up very rapidly. I have been astonished, in the successive years in which I have visited the valley, to see how rapidly the undergrowth will encroach, where it is not resisted. Left to itself, in my judgment the valley would soon be a very unsightly wilderness. You would get glimpses of the falls, but you would have to go so near that there would be great discomfort in viewing them, to get anything like their grandeur or sublimity. It was related to me, I think by Mr. Hutchings—I derived most of the traditions of the valley, some of the worst and some of the best, from Mr. Hutchings—and it was—

MR. HOOK: Are you going to give the worst or the best? A. I adopted the good ones and rejected the bad ones. There is only one man infallible in the world, and that is the Pope, and I deny his infallibility sometimes. But it was related to me that the Indians used to burn the valley for the purpose of making an open glade and pasture there, and it is my opinion that that was a very good practice. You have also here under examination the Big Tree Grove. There was granted by the United States a large area, covered with Sequoia gigantea, which grows in Mariposa County. Some four or five years ago, when I visited the valley, I became thoroughly persuaded that the fagots which had fallen at the foot of those trees was endangering that forest. In early times that was burned over in such a way that a little fire did no harm; but fagots had piled up at the roots of those trees to the depth of four or five feet, and if a fire comes in that forest it will burn those trees up. These trees are the remnants of a past geologic age. They belonged to a species which disappeared from the earth hundreds and thousands of years ago. It will be necessary to remove those fagots and the fallen limbs and the bark from around those trees. None of that has ever been burned, and the result is an accumulation of undergrowth, which in the dry season is dry—and you have a dry season, the same as you have in the Sacramento Valley. Those meadows become brown, just about the time they do in the San Joaquin Valley, and those ferns and brakes. Mr. Robinson shakes his head. There may be a few weeks difference, and it is only a question of a few weeks; those falls dry up entirely, and the only living water in the valley is Glacier Springs; and in some such dry season as that the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees will be burned. This has been the subject of serious consideration by the Commission, as to how to prevent that. There is the removal of this stuff from around the foot of the trees, which would be a very expensive thing, and in my opinion the State will have to stand the expense to properly administer that great trust.

Q. Can't they be raked away from the trunks of trees and then burned up? A. Yes, sir; it can be, and is being done. The Commissioners have authorized that to be done repeatedly, and progress is made all the time in that direction; the removing of that stuff away from the roots of the trees, but leaving the Yosemite Valley to itself; with the grass growing up among this underbrush, and the configuration of the valley is very favorable to a conflagration. That would be admitted by any of you gentlemen, if you visited it. If a fire was built in the valley, by reason of the nearness of the walls, their precipitous character, and the great depth of the valley, there is a constant tendency to produce a great draft; and if a great fire should occur in that valley, it would make it a blackened ruin in a short time. This is a question which appears, in my mind, to be a reasonable apprehension, and therefore, from the very start, I was in favor of resisting that encroachment of undergrowth.

MR. TULLOCH: In former times was it not customary, from what you have heard, for the Indians to burn the forests off the valley now and then, annually? A. Yes, sir; the Indians do that all over California. I was recently in a portion of the coast country and saw a great fire in the mountains. I inquired of a gentleman in the valley—I was interested in property, as an agent, in the valley, and was afraid it was going to run down to the valley. I was told that it was a universal custom of a remnant of a tribe of Indians to burn it and not allow it to grow up with chemese and chaparral.

Q. How is it that these tribes of which you speak, having very ancient origin, were not affected thereby and burned out thereby, and that they are not burned out now? A. The difference would be in the accumulation of fagots, which would make a fire to burn them out. They burn it every year, and the accumulation of fagots is not sufficient to make a fire menacing the life of a tree. These trees are all blackened. You can see the evidence of past burning through this forest. Many of them are blackened and burned at the roots. The one that you see the picture of, where the stage goes through, was burned nearly through on both sides, and they simply morticed it at the heart of that tree. But there is evidence of former fires also in the valley. You will see, every now and then, a fallen tree or the trunk of a tree that shows that fires have run through this valley in former times. That was when the Indians were Commissioners. I have always respected the ability of the Indians to manage that valley.

Q. The Commissioners deemed it necessary to extinguish the private rights of parties, and therefore you say that some you compromised with, and others you purchased. Why did you compromise with some, and purchase the rights of others? A. That would be a tedious answer, involving a large examination of the records. In some instances the contracts under which the improvements had been made, were so clearly and forcibly drawn as to convince the parties that they had no right of action against the State. In other instances obscurity in the nature of the contracts—one of those contracts that has been the subject of a great deal of legislative action, was the contract referred to by Dr. McLean. That was drawn in such a way as to leave it a very open question.

Q. If they had no rights in the premises, how did the Commissioners compromise? A. We secured a relinquishment of the rights in many instances in unimportant cases—to the butcher shops—some interest in an old fence, or an old building. Some of these things were secured. In some cases we compromised, where a claim was presented for a considerable sum, instead of resisting; we offered a sum and it was accepted. We believe equities existed. I could cite many of those cases.

MR. HOOK: You said just now that you believed in the Indian management of the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think the untutored mind has a greater capacity for managing the valley than the cultivated mind? A. The whole of the scenic grandeur of California was better when we first discovered the country than it is now. You take the forests of California; they were vastly more beautiful than now; and whenever you go into what is called the primeval forest, you will find it much more beautiful. The utilitarian spirit of the age is destroying much of the scenic grandeur of this country. The forests of the Sierra Nevadas, in what is called the Fredonia Pass, are vastly more beautiful than they are where civilization has had a chance to make inroads upon them. The result is, that where the Indians desire to make pasture, they burn it out. You see, as you pass through the Blancos of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, on the western slope, you will see marks of these fires upon the trees, and you will see a magnificent open appearance, that was due entirely to running fires through these forests every year and burning up a moss that will accumulate and finally get as soft as a carpet. You go through the grove of big trees, and as you walk through, you find that moss; and the shatterings have fallen on the moss, and the moss protruded itself through again, until it is like a soft spring mattress, and it seems to be a part of the ground itself; and so it is through the mountains of California; and with the early conditions in which these valleys were at first—you take the Sacramento Valley; it was an oak park. I remember it when I first came to California.

MR. HOOK: Mr. Mills didn't answer my question.

Q. I wanted to get the question answered in your own way, whether the untutored mind has a greater capacity for managing the valley than the cultivated mind? A. I find that the highest wisdom among men has been by accident. Nearly all the great discoveries have been made by accident; and if the Indians accidentally struck a method of taking care of the bed of Yosemite Valley, through the necessity of getting some pasture land for the game upon which they fed, I think that was a very good method of management. I am in favor of keeping the valley as much in appearance as possible of a park.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Hook, the Indians were working under an authority of law higher than the present Commission.

THE WITNESS: The Indians had the good fortune not to be subject to a California Legislature.

[The clerk read the fifth charge.] A. That subject has been gone over, and I deny that anybody, for private gain, has been allowed to do anything of the kind. I know of no such case, and don't believe it exists.

Q. The question is suggested if Coffman & Kenney have not been allowed to do that thing? A. Not to my knowledge. Coffman & Kenney hold a lease of certain property, and if they have plowed any land outside of their lease, of course they must be responsible to the Commission for doing that. That is a question of fact that I could not testify to, as to whether they have plowed any land not leased to them; but if Coffman & Kenney have a lease, the State gets the benefit of that lease, and private individuals do not; and if they have plowed their land in pursuance of a right given to them by the Commission, and in pursuance of the policy of the Commission, that certain of those lands shall be cultivated for the benefit of the gentlemen stationed there, to keep down the price of hay, to give the camper a chance to buy something in the valley—freight is very high in the valley, and one of the effects is to put an indigenous competition, as it were, against the hay hauled in the valley. You put that valley completely at the mercy of teaming over toll roads, upon which high toll is charged, and you will find a different condition of things. The effect of cultivation is clearly in the interests of people visiting the valley, because it does act as a check upon the price of articles that are offered for sale.

Q. I understand your answer then to be that if Messrs. Coffman & Kenney had plowed up that land for private uses, they have the privilege and exercise that under a lease, for which they pay the State? A. Yes, sir; if they have plowed outside of the land leased to them, they are responsible to the Commission, and the Commission has not been apprised of any such misdoings on their part.

Q. Is it a fact that the State has leased to them? A. Yes, sir; we have leased ground to them. These meadows that you have heard spoken of are always under lease, and the money goes to the State, and is taken out of the State Treasury after it is put in, by authority of the State Board of Examiners. We can pay no bill that has not been passed upon by the State Board of Examiners; the Governor and his coadjutors on that Board.

MR. HOOK: Before this was fenced up, were there not a great many saddle trains and people that hauled stuff into the valley that were very jealous of that feed, and drove campers' teams out of the valley, and run them out? A. Before that was fenced up we had to have horses for the saddle train. We had to have some horses for conveyances; cows had to be there. Nobody could get any milk unless there were cows. Now, take those fences down, and turn your stock out, and you would very soon have your roads injured and made unsightly, if you have a great lot of stock roaming at will in the valley; and, of course, I have testified here that my judgment is that the fences are necessary. It is also indispensable to the pleasure of pleasure seekers to be protected against stock roaming at large. There are more than sixty acres devoted to campers' horses, under a good fence, so as to add as much as possible to their convenience. Upon that one question, right now, I want to make a statement. I have been associated with a number of gentlemen. I am the oldest Commissioner in office except Mr. Madden, my term of office having extended from 1880 until the present time. Commissioners have come and gone; new ones are coming in all the time. I have noticed always a disposition on the part of members of the Commission to favor the people who drive their teams in, in every way possible; and that disposition was so manifest that nobody in the world could have mistaken it, about giving campers every opportunity. We have conceived it to be our duty to make the valley as accessible to people as possible; and one element of accessibility is that of cost. We have, therefore, in every conceivable way, encouraged campers to go into the valley. We have protected them against extortion; we have regulated the price of goods to be sold to them, and in every way we have sought to protect the campers. That has been the universal spirit manifested by my colleagues on the Commission. As to myself—

Q. What was the price of hay and grain in the valley last season? A. The price of hay varies in the valley with the different seasons. If you had to haul hay a long distance, the cost of transportation would be very high. All those mountain roads are toll roads by virtue of the authority of the counties in which they are located, and the Commission has no control over them at all. Now, if hay has to be hauled a great distance, the cost of transportation and the cost of toll would be very high. Therefore, in some seasons the cost of hay would be greater than in others; and when you ask the question what the price of hay has been—

Q. I mean last spring? A. I remember to have made some inquiry as to the price as to which they were selling hay, as I did always, the price of every article. When I would go into the valley I would make diligent inquiry as to what everybody was charging for the accommodations afforded to tourists and to campers, and so on; and my recollection is, that for a part of the year they were selling hay at $3 a hundred; that would be $60 a ton; and I objected very strongly to that rate, as a rate that ought to be lowered by competition; and I think for a part of last season hay was sold in the valley for $60 a ton. I have known it to be sold as low as $30 or $35. If the hay fails in the valleys in that vicinity, in those mountains, and must be moved to the valley, it would cost $100 a ton to take it in. I remember once asking the price of express matter, matter sent into the valley—such as eggs, butter, and produce—and I think it amounted to 12½ cents a pound for transportation alone.

MR. TULLY: Is it or is it not true that hay has been brought from the outside and sold there at a less price than Kenney & Co. sold it? A. Kenney & Co. have not had the opportunity to sell hay until last year. They had what we call the Royal Arch farm last year, and raised hay and sold it. They used the most of their hay themselves. Kenney & Coffman have from eighty to one hundred horses in the valley, and they have to haul hay in themselves. They have the hay that was grown on what we call the Harris place by common consent, and which, in the official parlance of the Commissioners, is called the Royal Arch meadow, they having that, and they being the principal importers of hay into the valley themselves, because the stage company don't sell any, and haul hay in there for their own horses, so far as my information goes. They got the hay up to about $3 per hundred. Now, you gentlemen of the committee will understand how difficult it is to regulate the price of barley and hay, because the markets of the world have some influence upon that question; then there is the cost of transportation and the failure of crops of the mountain valleys, so that there has been some irregularity in the price of that article. Sometimes it was reasonable and sometimes it appeared to me to be a little high; but it was a matter that was a matter of Commission regulation, to the extent of our ability to regulate it.

Q. My question was whether or not hay has not been brought into the valley and offered for less than they charge? A. If hay was freighted into the valley and offered for less, of course it was sold, and was sold for less to those who purchased it. Nobody is prevented from hauling a load of hay or barley into that valley. There is no such thing there as a hay privilege granted to any one.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know as a fact that it was brought in and sold? A. I do not know. I am not familiar with the detail of it. I would say to you that the members of the Commission who are not members of the executive committee have very little to do with the detail management. It passes under review once a year. I was a member of the executive committee two years—from 1880 to 1882.

Q. How many of those Commissioners are there? A. Nine, including the Governor. The law of the State of California makes the Governor the only Commissioner. You will observe that by its terms the law says the valley shall be managed and controlled by the Governor, assisted by eight Commissioners. We Commissioners, therefore, sustain the relation to the Chief Executive of advisory, the law says; but primarily that the management of the valley is lodged in the Governor of the State by the terms of the law itself.

Q. How much does it cost to get hay in there from the surrounding ranches, the immediate ranches, right next to the valley? How much a pound, do you suppose? A. Well, I should think that hay could be hauled in there when it was cheap, not having to pay toll—for instance, the owners of the toll road might deliver hay in there and make a profit at $35, or $40, or $50. I think a reasonable profit could be made at that rate.

MR. HOOK: They have privilege of taking it in there? A. Yes, sir; anybody can haul hay into the valley. There is no exclusive privilege on that.

Q. You spoke about supplies and eggs? A. I say the freight on supplies runs to about 12½ cents a pound. That would be $12 50 a hundred or $250 a ton.

MR. ROBINSON: I would like to ask the Chairman if I can have the privilege to give Mr. Mills some information about the hay question.

THE WITNESS: As I have already stated to the Chairman, I am not familiar, and as Mr. Robinson is going to testify before the committee, I should think the committee could wait for Mr. Robinson's testimony.

MR. TULLY: I apprehend that Mr. Robinson will have an opportunity to testify in this matter in regard to what Mr. Mills has said, or anything else.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke awhile ago of the power being vested in the Governor, and that the power you gentlemen had was secondary in the matter. Do you not all have equal power, practically, in the conduct of commission matters? A. They are carried by vote, but you will understand that primarily the control and management of the valley, by the terms of the law itself, is with the Governor.

Q. He has the high power? A. The Governor, assisted by a Commission.

Q. I believe I have the law; it says: "The premises to be managed by the Governor of the State with eight other Commissioners to be appointed by the Executive, and who shall receive no compensation for their services." It does not state in that that there is a division of authority in the matter, or that they are not at all equal. A. The implication, however, is that the premises are to be managed by the Governor of the State, and he appoints; the appointing power is in him, without reference to the Senate. The result is, that the Governor's policy will prevail, since he will appoint Commissioners who will agree with him. He is separated out from the other Commissioners, and it is stated plainly that the premises shall be managed by the Governor and eight other Commissioners.

MR. TULLY: The word "others" means that the Governor is one of the nine Commissioners? A. Certainly; that is a question of law that only came in incidentally.

Q. The eight with the Governor constitute the nine Commissioners? A. There are nine.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you mean that the powers are not co-equal? A. The exercise of power practically is co-equal. We have always exercised the right of objecting.

Q. A moment ago you said it was the duty of Commissioners to find out the value of articles brought into the valley, what they cost, and what it cost to bring them in, and what they were sold for; you deem it your duty to do so. How is it you don't know the price of hay raised around the valley and what is brought in there? A. Because the work of the Commission is done largely by committees and I have not been on the committee whose duty it was to examine into that specific thing. I know as fact that we inquire into the prices at which articles are sold and furnished to people in the valley, because we regulate the prices of everything. Therefore, we do inquire into it; and I don't remember what the price of hay was, but my impression is that my inquiry elicited the fact that they were selling hay at $3 a hundred, which would be $60 a ton. I remember saying it was too high. I thought it was too high for that season.

Q. You spoke of some eighty or one hundred head of horses being kept by Coffman & Kenney. What is the purpose of those animals? A. To carry people up the trails. It is the saddle train.

Q. What do they charge per day per animal? A. $3; they are allowed to charge $3.

Q. If they are used a day or part of a day? A. For a trip; if it constitutes a trip to some part of the valley, they are allowed to charge $3.

Q. If they are gone two hours can they charge that? A. They could take less if they choose to do so, but the maximum that they are allowed to take is $3 for the use of a horse for a day.

Q. Tourists have the privilege of keeping those horses two hours or a whole day? A. Yes, sir; if a tourist took him and went anywhere at all he would deprive the saddle man of the use of him for somebody else that day.

Q. Wouldn't he have the privilege of taking his lunch and taking a horse and camping out? A. Yes, sir; they generally do just that thing, take the horses and camp out.

MR. TULLY: Where do they keep their horses? A. They keep their horses in a pasture rented by them; that is, they have to turn the horses out. They are frequently not in use. The tourists arrive in the valley with great irregularity. There are times, for a long time, when there is no use for more than ten or twelve horses; then there will be a sudden demand made, and these people who hold this privilege are bound to the Commissioners to keep enough for the customary demand. The result is that a very large proportion of the time only a portion of the horses are in use, and of course it would be exceedingly expensive.

Q. Is it not true that during these times of scarcity of visitors and tourists, and the demands for horses, is it not true that they turn their horses out in the commons and don't restrict them to their own inclosures? A. Not to my knowledge. They are restricted by the rules of the valley, and the Guardian is the executive arm of the Board, and he should enforce the rules. If such irregularities as those have occurred, and complaint had been made to the Commissioners, and they had known of their own knowledge that irregularities had occurred, and had failed to remedy them, then, of course, they would be to blame.

Q. Do you know of any instance in which the Commissioners have granted the privilege to any parties to turn their horses out in the commons? A. I have an indistinct recollection that permission was granted to a confined region, a confined limit, in a certain portion of the valley where there was perhaps a little pasture left, or something of that kind; for a limited time; that some right of that kind was extended, in a certain portion of the valley.

Q. Is that a portion of the valley that is visited by tourists? A. The valley itself is open to tourists to go where they please.

Q. Those horses were running (at such times as they were running loose) outside of the restriction; they were running on the ground of tourists? A. In some portions of the valley there was a privilege granted for a certain time, but not for a continuous season. It was a question of administration, which, temporary in its character, seemed to be necessary at the time, and the Commissioners acted upon their best judgment in granting that permission.

Q. It was suggested to me that I ask the question. It is in the nature of making a witness a witness against himself. If those parties did not exceed and go beyond the privilege which you say you granted to them? A. If they did go beyond the privilege granted to them, it was the duty of the Guardian to prevent it, and if he could not, to notify the Commissioners for them to prevent it.

Q. Did the Commissioners have any notification of that kind? A. No, sir; I would think that my knowledge of what is going on in the Commission, my opportunities of knowing are a little better, owing to the personal intimacy between myself and Mr. Truman, who is a member of the Commission and of the executive committee.

THE CHAIRMAN: There is a portion of the valley set apart for campers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are Coffman & Kenney allowed to turn their stock on that? A. No. [The clerk read the sixth charge.] A. I deny that any such thing exists in the valley. I deny it. If there is any evidence of it I should be pleased to hear it; but that will answer, so far as I am concerned.

MR. TULLY: Your answer to that is an unqualified denial? A. A denial. I deny that there is anything done for private individuals in the valley.

MR. HOOK: In any particular? A. In any particular. There has been nothing done in the interest of any individual since I have been on that Board, and I stand here to challenge any charge of that kind—that there has been any favoritism. No man living will charge me, at least, with having shown any favoritism toward any man or any set of men or any corporation that has to do with that valley.

Q. That is rather a broad assertion. He may charge you? A. No, he won't. I deny that there will be anybody come to me and say to me that I have been guilty of that.

MR. ROBINSON: The charge is not made against you, but against the Commission as a body.

THE WITNESS: Mr. Robinson would not make that charge against me. I have been with the other Commissioners all the time. I know what they have done.

[The clerk read the seventh charge.] A. The reading of these charges was the first knowledge I have ever had as a Commissioner that any charges were—

MR. ROBINSON: It does not state that.

A. None ever came to my knowledge, as a Commissioner, of any kind against Mr. Dennison. I have heard rumors against Mr. Dennison. You can hear more rumors—those people are very much dissatisfied with each other; the privilege holders are exceedingly jealous of each other, and I never went into the valley in the world that I was not assailed with a large number of complaints. If the testimony of the people who reside in the valley were taken concerning each other, and it was all true—

MR. CRAWFORD: The Commissioners could receive no salary? A. No; they get a partial reimbursement.

Q. Does Mr. Truman receive any salary? A. Mr. Truman receives money for certain expenses of the office.

Q. He receives no salary outside of that? A. No.

Q. He receives no compensation as Commissioner? A. He receives no compensation as Commissioner.

MR. TULLOCH: Merely for his services? A. The nature of the allowance to the Secretary is an allowance for office rent, for postage, for the revolving fund, for expressage, and for incidental expenses of his office, and he is allowed to bring that within a certain amount. He is allowed a flat amount, and he must take care of it with that amount.

Q. What is the amount? A. One hundred and twenty-five dollars a month. The office of Secretary is indispensable to the proper conduct of this business.

MR. HOOK: Does it take up a good deal of his time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think the compensation is sufficient? A. No, sir; I do not. I think, gentlemen of the committee, upon that one question—you will pardon me now for making that remark. My experience upon this Commission proves to me that the public service would be very greatly benefited by compensation to the Secretary and bookkeeper, who would keep these accounts properly. The State will lose money always by bad accounting; and whenever we have had difficulty, whenever we have been embarrassed in the administration of affairs, it has always been traceable to the incompetency of the Secretary; to his neglect of duty. There is an amount of duty devolving upon him in the conduct of this matter that no man living can afford to discharge free. So my judgment is that the whole management would be much more efficient if a Secretary were employed and given due compensation. I am employing myself a large number of men, and have been an employer of men since I was twenty years of age, and I therefore state from a very broad experience as an employer, that a compensation which will make a man discharge his duty faithfully, would be directly in the public interest. It would be economical to the State. We ought to have a very efficient Secretary, and he ought to be paid an adequate salary. The public service demands that.

MR. TULLY: Do the Commissioners have the right of appointing, outside of their own body, a Secretary, and if so, would it not be the better policy to appoint, outside of their own body, a competent expert or a gentleman who would be able to manage those books and do all the clerical part of the business relating to the management of the valley, either for the present salary or an increased salary? A. I would be in favor of that myself. I have always been an advocate for having a Secretary, and having him paid, earnestly desiring to discharge my duty as a Commissioner; and as there is no compensation to the Commissioners, I have always been in favor of having the Secretary's books well kept, and the accounting well done, and the rents collected properly. We lose money by not having the rents properly accounted for, and I have been in favor of employing somebody on the outside, but it has been with very great difficulty that we could get money enough to do these things, and this has gradually grown from $20 a month. I think that when Mr. Hutchings was Guardian Colonel Weller undertook to act for the Commission for $20, just his room rent; Dr. Briggs I think acted as Secretary of the Commission for a long time for $25, and we found that in both cases the books were not properly kept.

MR. TULLY: Under the resolution under which we are appointed, we are not only authorized to inquire into the management, but from the data we gather here to suggest some other plan. A. I am glad of that.

MR. HOOK: If the Secretary was remunerated sufficiently for the amount of work that he does, wouldn't the administration be more honestly carried on in this particular? All communications would have to be directed to the Secretary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose the Secretary would deceive the Commission and take a profit? A. The system would not admit of that. The system that we have inaugurated wouldn't at all admit of that. There are checks and balances. There are eleven checks upon every dollar that is paid out. There are eleven ways of tracing up expenditures for every dollar that is paid out.

MR. TRUMAN: It is an utter impossibility for a dollar to go wrong.

MR. TULLY: Without the connivance of the Commission.

MR. MILLS: Without we get our dividend.

[The clerk read the eighth charge.] A. I don't understand the nature of this charge. They are rather obscure in their statements. Mr. Robinson paints a beautiful picture, but his use of English, I must confess is sometimes very obscure. If you will read that again I will try to bring my intellect to bear upon it.

[The clerk again read the eighth charge.] A. That assumes that somebody has been trying to get all the privileges in the valley. I have never heard of such a case. That word "other" could prove an alibi in any Court of grammar in the world.

MR. TULLY: Strike out the word "other" and see how it would read.

THE WITNESS: Read it without the extraordinary word there.

[The clerk read the portion of the charge referred to, as follows: "And to eject residents, and debar the general public from just and legal use of the valley."] A. That is an assemblage of words that actually constitutes a sentence.

Q. Answer that question. A. I can't exactly comprehend what is meant by the Commissioner's connivance; conniving at somebody's trying to get all the privileges of the valley. Since no such encroachment has been made, to my knowledge, I will say no. I will answer this question by a general denial. No. That will satisfy me completely.

[The clerk read the ninth charge.] A. I am going to plead guilty to one part of that, and throw myself on the mercy of this legislative committee. I am Chairman of the committee which ought to have this matter in charge. One year when I was in the valley, two years ago, I think it was—and I think perhaps this has reference to that circumstance of two years ago. This is the only one that I have ever known of, and I didn't prosecute the fellow, and I am going to tell you why. There was a gentleman not unknown to many of you, by the name of C. C. O'Donnell, went into the valley with a paintpot and wrote the name of C. C. O'Donnell from Cloud's Rest down, by Bridal Veil Fall, to the Cascades; and yet there is a law in the State against murdering C. C. O'Donnell. I was the Chairman, who ought to have prosecuted him. My reason for not doing it was that Dr. O'Donnell's object in painting the rocks was to acquire notoriety. His object would have been more completely accomplished by the prosecution, and as Chairman of the committee I decided not to prosecute him. That was my reason for not prosecuting Dr. O'Donnell. We however sent another painter around with a paint brush and some lye, and we washed Dr. O'Donnell off of the sublime scenery.

Q. Was washing it out an improvement on the "C. C. O'Donnell?" A. It improved the rocks, because the association of Dr. O'Donnell with the scenery there was very offensive to anything like esthetic tastes. That is only my opinion. Dr. O'Donnell is a very eminent gentleman and has my regard.

MR. ROBINSON: Don't you think it blackened the character of the rock? A. I don't know whether the obliteration of the name or the black paint that was over it was the darkest. That is all the instance I know of, and I plead guilty to the neglect of not prosecuting Dr. O'Donnell.

[The clerk read the tenth charge.] A. This is a charge to which I enter a general denial. I asked Mr. Robinson to-night the deep and esoteric meaning of that question, and he said that at one time we held a meeting in the chapel in the valley, and that we excluded the public; that the doors were locked.

Q. Was that a private meeting? A. It was a meeting relating to privileges. Now and then there are questions that arise concerning the granting of privileges, and they are questions of a very delicate nature; and in order to reduce the harsh feeling which exists in the valley by the privilege holders to its minimum—statements are sometimes made that would result in neighborhood feuds, and quarrels, and disagreeable troubles; and I think that once, in the old chapel—the chapel that was built by the American Sunday School Union—we did hold a private meeting, but whether the law forbade that—a recent meeting of the Legislature forbade executive sessions of public Boards—but whether this occurred before or after the passage of that law I could not tell you. Mr. Hutchings was the man who locked the door.

Mr. HUTCHINGS: It was in 1885. A. Then it was before the passage of the law. I remember distinctly this; that as soon as the attention of the Commission was called to the fact that a law existed prohibiting executive sessions of public Boards, that no executive session was held. As soon as my attention was called to it I opposed granting any such privilege.

[The clerk read the eleventh charge.] A. We did not allow it, that is all. I want to say, on behalf of Carle, Croly & Abernethy, who are reputable gentlemen and friends, that before the Senate Committee, last night, I facetiously remarked that they stole the timber. That grew out of the fact that I have charge of a vast timber region upon which depredations are committed; it was said in pleasantry. I don't mean to say that they stole the timber. I don't know how they obtained the title. I know that most of the titles to timber lands are fraudulent; but they didn't cut any timber inside of the grant.

[The clerk read the twelfth charge.] A. Upon the question of exclusive privileges I wish to say that the privileges, while not exclusive, are single. This grew up in this way: Suppose the law said that no exclusive privilege should be granted. The inference of the law would be that more than one should be granted. The Commission proceeded upon the theory of granting three or four persons a privilege. Those persons used the privilege granted to them for the purpose of blackmailing those who were in earnest. A man would apply to us for privileges, intending only to make the men who intended to use the privilege in good faith pay them. The first meeting I attended in the valley, a gentleman came before the Commission, representing the saddle-train privilege. He said: "Gentlemen of the Commission, we don't pay the State anything for this property, but we pay to an individual $800 a year not to run a train in here in competition with us." Now, here was an instance where an individual was getting $800 a year out of the exercise of a privilege in that valley, and the State getting nothing. I made the motion myself, and shall respect myself for it always, whatever the law may be, that protected those people against that species of outrage. I am willing to stand on that record, whatever the law on the subject may be.

Q. I understand from your answer, Mr. Mills, that there are privileges granted? A. There are privileges; for instance—

Q. Not an exclusive privilege in the sense of being confined to one individual? A. For instance, a man wants to run a butcher shop; he comes and says he wants to run it. We tell him, "You must sell meat at the price we fix. We regulate the prices of commodities. Now, do you want to exercise this privilege?" and he says, "Yes, I do." Then we grant him the privilege, and he pays the State of California so much money for it. Now, another man comes and says, "I want a privilege to butcher in the valley." And we vote "No" on that proposition.

Mr. Hook: You allow quite a number to bid for this privilege? A. We will take the most that we can get for it, because we regulate the price; but as it was before—the first instance that I remember concerning the butchers' privilege was—I saw by the books that three men were entitled to butcher in the valley; that the price of meat was extortionate, and I inquired why; why didn't competition do something with this? And the butcher came before us and testified that he had to pay the other men to get out of the valley; and whenever more than one privilege is granted it is used in that way. Carriage privileges are granted. I have known three or four men to hold carriage privileges in there, and never run a carriage; and I found that they were sharing the profits. Before we regulated the price everything was costly, and it was a wise and salutary measure to grant but one privilege, and when that privilege was granted regulate the price. It was good administration to do that, law or no law. That is my position. If we violated the law, the law was more honored in the breach than in the observance.

Q. You granted single privileges? A. We granted single privileges. After we found a man who would do the right thing, and would pay the most for the privilege, we declined to grant other privileges. We didn't say to him it was exclusive, but as we had a right to vote yes or no, we had a right to vote no.

Q. It operated as an exclusive privilege? A. Yes, sir; it operated as an exclusive privilege. I admit that.

Q. And it was in violation of law? A. If the law is read together you will discover that it is within the province of the Commission to manage that valley for the best interests of the country, and since all law must be read together—

MR. TULLY: Those are conclusions of law. We are simply here to investigate the facts.

MR. TULLOCH: The application of these single privileges was, in their nature analogous to exclusive privileges? A. They were analogous to exclusion.

Q. Were they not identical? A. They operated to be—an instrument is known by its effect. If an instrument has the effect of a mortgage, it is a mortgage, and will be so construed. To be candid with you, the actual effect of this policy results in exclusion.

[The clerk read the thirteenth charge.] A. I know of one instance. The gentleman who signs this charge was paying $20 a month for a privilege there, and it was reduced to $1.

MR. ROBINSON: I beg your pardon; that is not the charge meant. A. Of course it was not. You would not introduce the fact that we reduced your rent from $20 to $1.

MR. ROBINSON: You had better explain why. A. I voted for it.

MR. ROBINSON: What was the reason you voted for it? A. Because I thought you were paying too much.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any other case? A. Well, I know of cases where rents have been reduced, and other cases where they have been raised. It was only a rent of $20, and we let you have it for $1.

MR. ROBINSON: I would like to ask the committee if they will allow me the privilege of questioning Mr. Mills in regard to that matter, providing Mr. Mills will submit to it?

THE WITNESS: I will submit to any examination here. I am under oath and before these gentlemen, and I do not trifle with my oath.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the Board rented to Coffman & Kenney their farm that they occupy now for $500? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the house burned down on that farm about a year ago? A. I believe it did.

Q. Didn't they ask, in the last June meeting, to have their rent reduced from $500 to $250 on account of the loss they had sustained? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't it granted to them for 1888? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't they immediately put in another application, and was it granted, to reduce their rent for 1889 to $250? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't that granted? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: Why was that granted? On account of losing the house? A. On account of the reduction of the value. Now, this is a notable case. It is one that has been criticised very greatly, and if I was so disposed now,

I could separate myself out from the other members of the Commission, because I opposed this matter very bitterly; most bitterly.

MR. ROBINSON: Allow me to state that I have no personal charge against you. A. And I used almost uncomplimentary language concerning it. I thought it was wrong; in other words, my judgment as to the value of the privilege, after the houses were burned, differed from the majority of my associates. They had a right to their judgment, and they exercised their judgment. I believed that privilege was still worth $500, and I so contended before the Board; but the judgment of the Board was that it was not worth $500, but it was worth $250, and I do not for a moment, and did not then impeach the good intention of the members of the Board. As a question of policy I differed with the majority. They have differed with me many times.

MR. TULLY: Upon what facts did they predicate their opinion that the value had been reduced, if you know? A. There was a sense in which they were merging the Coffman & Kenney privileges—for there are more than one granted—to the saddle train, and the aggregate amount paid by Coffman & Kenney was quite large; and after the loss of that house, and upon information given to the Commission that there was very little profit in the farm—that is, the Royal Arch farm, that we had so much trouble about—the judgment of the Commission seemed to be that it was not equitable to charge them $500 a year; that $250 was enough, and I think when the privilege was renewed for the next year—that is, if they leased the farm for the next year—it was $300 a year, but I don't remember distinctly. I opposed both motions, upon my judgment that the privileges were worth more.

MR. ROBINSON: Couldn't you get more? A. I think we could.

MR. HOOK: What did they use the house for? A. They had their farmer reside there—the man who cultivated their land; and they had stables where the horses were kept. At the time Harris occupied it, he raised potatoes, and had chickens and eggs and things of that sort, and sold them to the campers. When Coffman & Kenney got the privilege they could not do that; they couldn't make the money out of it that Harris had made out of it, and as Harris had gone from the valley, the privilege had really been reduced by reason of the different use to which the land had been put. My opposition to that grew out of a question of judgment.

Q. Did he have to pay for any other rent? Did he have to get any other dwellings? A. We have rebuilt. We took some of that old material from the hotels, and rebuilt some of the dwellings and the barn.

Q. Then the only change was that he was burned out? A. Yes, sir. And we charged rent for the new buildings. What rent, Major, is charged?

MR. TRUMAN: They have not put in an application yet. They have taken possession, but have not put in an application for this year.

MR. MILLS: The executive committee informed me, when they informed me that the buildings had been built, that they were going to raise the rent.

MR. ROBINSON: What is the size of the buildings? A. I don't know. I have not been in the valley since they were built. They will charge an adequate rent for the barns and houses.

[The clerk read the fourteenth charge.] A. Well, there was never anything of that kind done. If this Commission has a clear record on any subject in the world, it has been the liberal and generous manner in which they have treated the laborers. The champion of the labor element on that Commission has been Senator Goucher; he has been faithful, and frequently I have voted for measures suggested by Mr. Goucher, simply because I felt perfectly sure that his interest in the subject would be a very safe guide for me, and I have not given the subject the attention I would have done, if it had not been for the continued activity of Senator Goucher in the matter.

MR. HOOK: Does the Commission work under the eight-hour law? A. Yes, sir; the Commission requires ten hours work, but pays for overwork. That comes from the fact that accommodations for the working men are not numerous. If it takes a larger number of men to do that work at eight hours, accommodation must be found for them. So the Commission requires that ten hours' work must be done, but the person doing it shall receive extra compensation.

Q. Do they get it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are the wages paid to the laboring men? A. $65 a month.

Q. And board? A. No; they board themselves. They pay as high wages as are paid anywhere in the country.

Q. And overtime so much an hour? A. Yes, sir; they work by the hour. If a man works seven hours, he gets seven hours pay; if ten hours, he gets ten hours pay.

Q. The reason they work them ten hours is on account of board?

MR. TULLY: It is on account of the scarcity of help, I understand. A. We can't get men to go in there. The season is very short in the valley, and a man must go in there—he must pay his way to go in and to get out. Now, the season opens in May, or very late in April—some years not until May—and the season will close early in the fall. The result is, that it is a short season. It is not a desirable place. We have difficulty in getting enough men to do the work. We require of those who do go that they shall work ten hours a day. The accommodations for a few men are more accessible than for many. It is much more desirable that we should have as few tenements as possible. We are trying to reduce the number of tenements in the valley to its minimum, and every exertion is made in that direction, so that there won't be a number of buildings.

Q. I understand that there are some Chinamen employed. Have the Commission anything to do with that? A. No. Senator Goucher would take care of that. No Commissioner would dare, in his presence, to suggest the idea of employing a Chinaman. There are Chinamen used for laundry purposes.

[The clerk read the fifteenth charge.] A. I have no idea what the charge means at all.

[The clerk read the sixteenth charge.] A. I don't know that there was any illegality, any irregularity, or any bad management of any kind connected with the leasing of that hotel; and I say to you here, that its construction was more safely guarded than the action of any Commission that has ever existed in California. We took the precaution to prevent any private right opening out of the building of that hotel; and before we opened a bid we made a man make an assignment of all claim of indemnity against the State if he lost money in the building of the hotel. The result was, we built the hotel within the appropriation, and it was the first work ever done in the State within the actual appropriation. The hotel was accepted by—the acceptance was largely under the direct management of the Governor of the State. He visited the valley.

MR. TRUMAN: I think so. I was not on the Commission. General Stoneman—

THE WITNESS: No, it was Governor Bartlett. There has never been any report made to the Commission which would indicate to me what this charge means.

MR. ROBINSON: Will you allow me to explain? A. I would be pleased to.

MR. ROBINSON: Most of the residents in the valley, at the time that the Governor was in the valley and accepted that hotel, went up to view the hotel at the same time that the Governor and Mr. Griffith, and Mr. Madden, and Mr. Chapman were there.

THE WITNESS: Governor Waterman?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir. I was commissioned by the "Examiner" to take a report in regard to the acceptance of that hotel. J. M. Griffith saw me in the hotel taking notes; he whispered in the Governor's ear, and immediately the Governor came and says: "Gentlemen, this is not a public affair, but a private affair, and I request you all to leave the house." And we were all put outside of the house, and nobody ever knew the conditions under which that hotel was accepted by the Governor of the State.

THE WITNESS: I answer so far as my knowledge is concerned. I was not a party to any such transaction. I know nothing about that. All I know is, that all the actions of the committee were reported to the Board and acted upon in regular session.

[The clerk read the seventeenth charge.] A. I know nothing of that charge at all. I don't know what it refers to, and don't believe it occurred. That is simply a question of belief. If it did, I never heard anything of it. No such complaint ever came to the Commission, and we never had cognizance of any such complaint. It is an inconsiderate matter anyhow, probably, but I deny any knowledge of it, and also am disposed to say, in defense of the Commission, that it will not be sustained.

[The clerk read the eighteenth charge.] A. This refers to the renewal of the lease, does it not, to the stage company? The stage companies who built the stage roads into the valley claimed indemnity from the State for the construction of these roads, in pursuance of the policy which is universal on the part of all the people to acquire private right in the valley. The Legislature passed a bill allowing one of the companies $3,000 and the other $6,000; that is my recollection of the amount. The Controller refused to draw his warrant in favor of the company which was allowed $3,000. In the meantime, however, the Governor of the State of California vetoed the bill allowing the other company $6,000. That was the Yosemite Turnpike Company. He asked my advice on the subject and I advised him to veto the bill. I am making no concealment of anything.

MR. GOUCHER: He didn't veto it, but let it die. A. He put it in his pocket. He asked my advice, and I asked him to do that thing. When the matter came before the Board at the last session, a motion was made to grant the stage companies a renewal of their privilege. That had been done before—a renewal of the lease, with the right to charge toll—not with any expectation that they would charge toll, but with the purpose, evidently, of putting them in such relation that they would have a standing before somebody for indemnity for loss incurred in the construction of those roads. In the case that Dr. McLean cited here to-night, his lease was renewed for the reason that there was some equity in his case, and that the State ought to recognize that equity; and the lease was renewed and the privilege of exercising the right to collect toll. I don't think the doctor ever collected a dollar toll under the privilege, but the privilege was given him to collect toll for the use of that end of the road.

Q. Do you know of any instance in which toll was collected within the limits of the grant? A. An instance was reported at the last session of the Board, where an individual running a stage line over this road—that is, carrying passengers for hire—was charged toll on the road. The Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company were repairing the road at their own expense, and were carrying passengers in over the roads, but not charging anybody toll on that part of the road where it invades the grant. A man carried passengers for hire, when the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company didn't think it fair that they should keep up a road for somebody else's use as a common carrier, and they made a charge, which we made them pay back. The Commissioners made them pay, and they paid the money to the Secretary, and the Secretary forwarded it to the gentleman who made the complaint.

Q. Is it a fact now that any person can go into the Yosemite Valley without paying toll? A. Yes, sir; no toll is charged. The right to collect it—the renewal of the lease—was made in order to give those gentlemen a hearing. That was the object. I say now that I opposed that measure personally, but I stand my share of the responsibility; but when Dr. McLean was testifying to-night I heard for the first time an argument which almost convinced me that perhaps he and some others had some equity. It was a better argument than the gentleman made at the last session. I opposed this very strongly, and declared that I didn't want it to pass.

Q. Did the Commissioners grant to this individual who collected the toll, or to any other parties, permission to collect toll within the limits of the grant, at any time? A. The Commission, since 1880, has addressed itself diligently to the question of extinguishing all the toll. In 1880, all the trails were toll trails; you couldn't cross a log scarcely, without having to pay somebody some toll. The trails are all now free. The only privilege existing to collect tolls in the valley relates to this renewal of the stage company's lease, and they are exercising a right which has been conferred upon them, but they are to have something to give them a standing and a hearing in the Court that they claim to have a right to be heard in—before the people of the State of California.

Q. Have any people collected toll within the grant since the rights were extinguished? A. No; not since the trails were declared free or purchased. Some declared free without purchase.

[The clerk read the nineteenth charge.] A. This is another very occult question. I don't know of any monopoly privileges of any kind. I know that there is a great deal of jealousy between stage companies. I know that privilege holders who were successful in their bids think well of the Commission, and those who were unsuccessful think very ill of the Commission. I know that there has been some charge that some stage company holds special privileges there, but I have never been able to discover any favoritism of any kind. If favoritism existed in that valley, the only way in the world to make it effective would be to instruct the Guardian to see to it that certain people had favors which were withheld from others. Now the Commission has had Mr. Hutchings and Mark L. McCord and E. L. Dennison as Guardians of the valley. They can all be brought before this committee and testify as to whether they have received instruction to show any favor to anybody, and that will settle this question absolutely.

MR. RUNDALL: You know of no case where a family has been evicted? A. I know of no case of eviction in the valley, in the sense that anybody has been evicted. The policy of the Commission is not to allow people to reside in the valley who have no visible means of support. It is undesirable to grow up a community of residents there unless those residents are related in some manner to the administration of the valley or indispensable to the privileges held there. If any evictions have occurred, I know nothing of them at all myself. The other members of the Commission may be better acquainted with the facts.

[The clerk read the twentieth charge.] A. This is not true. This charge could not be sustained by an actual examination of the case. There are thirty-six miles of magnificent road in the valley; every part of the valley is accessible except that which is under fence, and nobody is jealous of the privilege of getting on that particular spot, because there are myriads of others equal in beauty and value to that. The roads are in splendid condition. The trails are in good condition; just as good condition as they have ever been in; and as proof of that I assert to you to-night that there has never been an accident upon the trails in Yosemite that constituted really a serious accident. I was pleased in reading Mr. Hutchings' report of 1883 and 1884, to learn that notwithstanding the length of time those trails have been in use, their precipitous character, their tortuous course, that no accident has occurred on them. The trails are in good condition, so far as I know.

[The clerk read the twenty-first charge.] A. If anything of that kind has occurred it was very bad.

MR. TULLY: Have you any knowledge? A. No; I have no knowledge of it. It would not be allowed a moment by the Commission. What advantage would it be to the Commission to allow some fellow in there to employ State labor on his private grounds?

MR. ROBINSON: Was there State labor employed around Cook's hotel this summer? A. I don't know.

Q. All the time? A. I don't know anything about it.

MR. ROBINSON: I know. A. You are competent to testify to that; and the Commission should have been apprised right at once, because they would have put a stop to it at once.

[The clerk read the twenty-second charge.] A. In answer to this question, gentlemen of the committee, I beg leave to say, I have been associated with many public men in various public works in life. I have been a member of Boards of Commissions managing private asylums and institutions. I believe I have never seen a body of men who appeared to me to be so really anxious to discharge their duties faithfully and conscientiously as my associates on this Board. As to myself, I have just this to say, that I have done the best I knew. There is nothing in the Constitution of the State, of which I am a citizen, which forbids me from having bad judgment. I may not have had the best judgment, but it was the only one I had. I have exercised it for the best interests of the State, as I understood it. I am not in the slightest degree solicitous as to what shall be done with this investigation or what conclusions the committee shall reach.

MR. TULLOCH: Do not the duties of the Commission include clerical work and secretarial work? A. Yes, sir; that is, it must be done for them. In the administration of the valley a great deal of clerical work is necessary.

Q. Are not those two departments part and parcel of the duties of the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; I should construe it to be the case.

Q. Well, that being the case, and they being entitled to no compensation, how do you account for the fact that Mr. May, some time ago, received $2,000 as a salary for clerical or secretarial work? A. I am not aware that Dr. May was paid $2,000 for clerical work.

Q. He received that. A. When did he receive it?

Q. I am not aware; I don't know it as a fact. Did he not? A. I don't know; I am not cognizant of it if he did. Did Dr. May receive $2,000 for clerical work?

MR. TRUMAN: It could not be possible.

MR. ROBINSON: It is in the statutes of 1886-87; it refers to the amount of money paid out in the interest of Yosemite Valley. I find $2,000 appro-apropriated for salary of Secretary and Treasurer of the Yosemite Board of Commissioners. A. By the Legislature?

Q. Yes, sir. A. What years?

Q. Eighteen hundred and eighty-six and eighty-seven.

MR. TRUMAN: Dr. May was Secretary part of the time, and Mr. Griffith was Secretary about a year.

THE WITNESS: If the State made such appropriation the effect would be to put the Secretary upon the civil list of officers of the State and entitle him to a salary, if the appropriation had been made. It is a matter I shall be pleased to inquire into. I don't remember that the Commission made such appropriation.

MR. TULLOCH: Have any of the Commissioners received any money as a salary for secretarial work? A. No; the allowance that was made was for the general expenses of the Secretary's office. A general allowance has been made, and the party discharging that duty disbursed that amount.

Q. What was the amount? A. $125, Major Truman informs me.

MR. ROBINSON: Does the United States make that law? A. The Attorney-General.

Q. Does the United States law make that provision?

MR. TRUMAN: So far as the regulations are concerned, we are acting under the State law.

[Here further hearing was continued until to-morrow, Wednesday evening, February sixth.]

WEDNESDAY EVENING, February 6, 1889.

Present: Hon. Wm. M. Rundell, Chairman; E. C. Tully, L. R. Tulloch, John Gardner, Henry Hook, and Henry C. Dibble.

B. C. TRUMAN.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside, Mr. Truman? Answer—San Francisco.

Q. You are a member of this Yosemite Commission? A. Yes, sir; I am a Commissioner and a member of the executive committee.

Q. Are you acquainted with the nature of these charges about which you are summoned here to testify? A. Well, I have heard them read several times.

Q. It is not necessary to read the preamble; we will simply commence with the charges? A. To facilitate, I have been studying them up—reading them to-day, and put down my answers.

[The clerk read the first charge.] A. This is not true, so far as I can go back with my connection with the Commission. Nothing, however, could make me believe that the Commission would be guilty of such gross perfidy and outrageous conduct. I will say right here that I was appointed and went up to the annual meeting in June. I have only been on the Commission a few months, and as I understand, although the present Commission is on the defense—

Q. You are being investigated? A. It is being investigated for all preceding Commissions. There has nobody been on the Commission more than four or five years, but we are answering for the whole twenty years. But I thought I would say, as I was a pretty new member, that I had only been on the Commission six months, but I have been in the Yosemite Valley many times.

Q. Since you have been connected with this Commission has anything come within your knowledge tending to substantiate that charge? A. Nothing at all; no, sir, nothing whatever.

Q. To your knowledge or observation? A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you right here—you stated, however, in your first answer what time you referred to? A. Yes, sir; I thought I would say that, so as not to say it over again. You will consider, where I say anything since my connection, that it is only six months, or several months.

[The clerk read the second charge.] A. No such thing has occurred since my connection with the Commission.

Q. You may please state whether anything has come within your knowledge, or under your observation, bearing upon that charge, although it may have antedated your connection with the Commission? A. No. The only reason I didn't volunteer to say that was because maybe you would prefer not to have my belief or opinion.

Q. I am not asking for your opinion, but anything that came within your knowledge, upon which you can predicate anything like reliable data, upon which you might predicate an opinion, because you are entitled to an opinion from what you see? A. I think I fully understand you.

[The clerk read the third charge.] A. This charge is false.

[The clerk read the fourth charge.] A. There has been judicious cutting of trees, but no destruction of timber as implied.

Q. What do you refer to as judicious destruction? A. I don't say judicious destruction; I say judicious cutting.

Q. What are we to understand by judicious cutting of trees? A. I understand that judicious cutting is cutting—the only trees I have had anything to do with cutting was permission to cut some trees near the new stable that was being built, so that they would not fall, or would not in any way be blown down on the stables. I understand that there have been trees cut in order to afford vistas, and underbrush has been cut, and while I don't want to bring it up this evening, as it will come in some other time, they have been governed a good deal by William Ham. Hall's report, who was sent into the valley two years ago, and instructed the Commissioners or suggested that they cut timber here and there; and he went over the whole thing, poetically and otherwise, and said that it should be the duty of the Commissioners to use the axe freely; but they have not done that; they have not used it freely. Now, to go ahead a little further in answer to what you said, they have cut down trees around near the road. They showed me some trees, and they cut down some trees and made a road to a bridge, in order that people may walk to Mirror Lake instead of paying a dollar to ride there, and such things as that.

MR. TULLOCH: What would you judge would be the number of trees altogether that have been cut in the valley, as far as you have any knowledge? A. Well, I think very few; but I will say that the Guardian knows exactly. He will be before both committees, and you will remember, but I will mention it to you myself, that I would not know that; but I think very few, because they have been very careful. The Commission is rather cranky upon the cutting of trees, and they know that people generally don't believe in cutting trees. That is one of the things that people feel uneasy about, is the cutting of trees in the valley; although, if I was going to be a Commissioner much longer, there are a good many more trees that I would cut. But then, you don't care for that. You don't ask that.

MR. TULLY: You say Mr. Hall, the State Engineer, suggested cutting trees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider Mr. Hall good authority on questions of that kind? A. He is the State Engineer, that is all that I know. He published a book. He has been the State Engineer many years.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Olmstead? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think Mr. Hall is better authority than Mr. Olmstead? A. No; I think Mr. Olmstead is one of the best in the country; but Mr. Olmstead told me in San Francisco, himself—I will volunteer the statement—that he had read the article in the "Examiner," and he was afraid they had been cutting too many trees there; but he said that it, like all other parks, ought to be thinned out and not have too many trees. He remarked that to me, I think in the presence of Mr. Burke.

MR. TULLOCH: Why, in that matter, did the Commissioners take the report of a man of science, and not follow out their own artistic designs in the matter? Why did they take the suggestion of Mr. Hall in the matter, who is evidently a man of science, in contravention to their own ideas of art? A. I suppose they wanted to be fortified. I think an aggregation of wisdom is better than a little wisdom. That is what I understand. I don't say that they have wholly gone under his instructions. I don't know that they were exactly instructions. I think I make no mistake though, in citing a man who makes that his study for years, and is State Engineer, and sent to the Yosemite to look after those things and report fully on them. That is the reason I quoted him.

Q. Why ought the suggestions of Mr. Hall to be taken in preference to those of a landscape gardener from London, or from anywhere else? A. I would be governed a good deal by my own opinion, associated with his. I might prefer Mr. Hall's opinion more than I would that of the landscape man from London, or vice versa. I would exercise my own judgment a good deal and my brother Commissioners. I have not assisted in cutting down any trees yet. I think there are too many trees in the valley, though. I will say that.

Q. Do you think that geometry and higher mathematics have anything to do with the beauty and grandeur and romance of Yosemite Valley? A. Well, I suppose there are some members of the Commission selected maybe because they have a general idea of those things. I am not high up in geometry or mathematics. I have stood pretty well in a literary and in an executive way in many things, but I don't think that I could answer that question to your satisfaction. I don't want to blunder.

MR. TULLY: You don't want to appear as a pupil of Euclid in mathematics? A. No, sir; I do not. I want to be frank and true and not sarcastic, but I am not lofty enough in geometry or mathematics to answer the question. I have got a pretty good idea, pretty good taste; have been in every portion of the world; in Switzerland—

Q. Do you think an engineer more capable to judge of the beauty of that place, or that his judgment should be superior to that of an artist, or a landscape gardener for instance? A. A man who was a general landscape gardener I would think knew more than a man who was only an engineer and surveyor. I have never met Ham. Hall, but I have read his report, and it is simply beautiful, and very argumentative. It is a splendid report. I don't know how much he knows, though, or how little. I would take them all in, though, Mr. Tulloch, if I had an opportunity.

[The clerk read the fifth charge.] A. Burning shrubbery, clearing and plowing and other work of a light character has been carried on more or less for the purposes of preservation and improvement, but not to impair the beauties of the valley; I do not believe such things have been done for the private gain of any one.

Q. Do you know whether they have been done or not? A. I don't know about the burning. I do know about the clearing and cutting, for I have seen that for myself. We did not burn. On account of the terrible condition of the grove we spent, I think, $300 or $400 in getting up some of this moss and underbrush that Mr. Mills spoke of, around some of the most beautiful trees there; but we put out fires there. There were a good many fires there last year, and we put them out. I have never seen anything that looked like that.

Q. You don't think the valley would have been likely to have been burned up at any time, providing a fire should have started? You don't think the valley was in a condition to be burned up very rapidly if a fire should have started, do you? A. Unless it was very dry and there was a very great wind. I should think that valley stood in as good a site not to be burned as any place.

Q. The ground as a general thing is rather damp, is it not? A. Well, generally, when I have been there; I have been there in April, or May, or June; but this year I was there in August, and it was getting pretty dry then; but it looked pretty green in the valley. It was dry generally.

[The clerk read the sixth charge.] A. I do not know of any such thing, and do not believe it at all.

MR. TULLY: The first proposition is, if you know of any fencing, and the next is, if you know of farming out? It is a double question. A. It says: "Fencing and farming for the use of private individuals." I don't know of any such thing.

MR. TULLOCH: For the use of anybody, whether private individuals or public? Do you know of any fencing of public lands or farming out of them? A. Yes; I know that there is farming and fencing carried on, according to our books; it is under lease, all of it; not for private individuals.

Q. Who are the parties leasing? A. I think Coffman & Kenney. I am not quite familiar enough to call the rest. They were answered fully last night those questions. Not but what I would answer them if I could. I don't know. The books show, though.

Q. You have got the books here? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Are not those parties to whom you have referred private individuals? A. Well, I want to answer that satisfactorily. I don't know. These people pay the Commissioners rent. I don't know what you call them. If they are private, everything is private. I mean to say they are under our control. I should judge by the question that it was framed —

Q. I understand they are the lessors of the Commission? A. Yes, sir; they pay $1,200, one of them. Now, as I understand that question, it implied that there was somebody behind that was getting this thing done privately; maybe not.

Q. Whether they are private and independent of any relation to the State? A. There is no such thing; no such thing.

Q. There is no person, within your knowledge, for whom that land has been fenced or who are farming it in their own interest without returning a rent to the State for it? A. No, sir; there is no such thing. I am positive of that.

Q. I apprehend as a matter of fact that there could not be any leasing of those premises unless to private individuals or to the members of the Commission themselves? A. Why, of course.

THE CHAIRMAN: This land is leased to Coffman & Kenney? A. They have a portion of the land for $1,200. Another man has something for $100.

Q. Don't you consider those private individuals, Major? A. Well, I tried to explain that the best that I could. I am trying to be awfully frank and honest about it. They are all private, then. Everything is private—the blacksmith, and the grocer, and everybody.

MR. ROBINSON: That is what is intended? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Are they exclusive privileges? A. That question will be answered pretty quick. I will answer it now if you want me to. I should answer it as Mr. Mills did last night.

Q. Who are Coffman & Kenney, and what do they do there? What is their business there? A. They own the saddle-train, and they rent a farm.

Q. Of the Commissioners? A. Of the Commissioners; yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Do you know how many fields and how much land is under rent to those parties? A. I do not; no, I don't know positively.

Q. Can you approximate from your observation? A. No, I cannot; but the Guardian, when you get him, he will know everything to the square foot, you know, and every piece of rail; and I thought, if I could get off to-night, that I would have him come up to-morrow night, if you want him to; but he will be here in a week.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know about how much land those parties farm; how much they have under cultivation? A. No, I do not; that would hardly come under my observation so quick as it would to an executive man.

Q. Don't you know whether there was a considerable quantity or not? A. Yes, sir; I have ridden all over it. I should say they had maybe thirty or forty acres. Now, I might have too much or too little. It was a big fine field of grain there when I was there in August, cocked up; it was in cocks then.

Q. Outside of and independently of this land which they have under cultivation, is the quantity of land which has been fenced considerable? A. I understand that there were about sixty acres of land separately fenced for camping purposes alone, and that there was a good deal of other land fenced.

Q. Outside of and independent of that which was fenced for the campers, how much land do you presume was fenced by these parties who had the privilege so to do; for instance, take Coffman & Kenney and other parties? A. That I don't know. I don't know as they have any or whether they have it all fenced. That you will get from the Guardian; but I know, from my going twenty or thirty miles in the valley, that there is nothing fenced that any of you would take exception to if you were in the valley; any gentleman—not a human being.

MR. TULLY: You assume that? A. Well, yes, I assume it, of course. I feel pretty sure; I know that there has been some fence built on account of the beautiful roads that have been laid out, and to keep cattle and horses and things out of the roads and off the bridges, and all that.

Q. Do you know if there are any walks laid off and prepared for pedestrians, or those who desire to stroll around on foot? A. I don't think there are any except the main roads—the bridal paths; no. I looked back on my minutes and saw that they were ordered, but the money ran out that year; half the money for that year; half of the appropriation; and then this year the judgment of the Board and executive committee was to do something else. I don't know as it was ever strictly ordered by the Board; but the roads are in beautiful order this year.

Q. Are there no trails there? A. Yes, sir, hundreds of paths and trails.

Q. That is what he means?

MR. ROBINSON: No; that is not what is meant.

MR. TULLY: For foot passengers, how is it? A. Yes, sir; lots of places.

Q. I mean for pedestrians; people wanting to stroll around through the valley. I have no reference to bridle paths up the hills? A. There are lots of paths through the valley, but no walks laid out; no particular walks or anything like that.

Q. I mean paths prepared or opened with a view to giving pedestrians access to the different portions of the valley? A. They are natural. They have been worn and made by the pedestrians themselves. No money has been spent that way on them.

Q. You spoke, Mr. Truman, about a portion of the money that had been considered necessary to divert for some other purpose? A. Yes, sir; I think there has been for three or four years talk in the Board about making an order—everything goes at last to the executive committee; and if they deem it judicious to build a splendid walk—they used to be a board walk—I recollect that was eight or ten years ago—a board walk went up from Leidig's to Barnard's. This road had all been carried away by the water, and I think it is the intention of the Commission some day to make a stone walk, macadamized walk there; but they thought they had better open more new roads up around Mirror Lake and up in through there, and build a bridge, and so forth.

MR. TULLOCH: Hasn't most of the appropriation money been spent in the neighborhood of the new hotels? A. I should think in that neighborhood and between the two hotels. The people now live around the two hotels. They have moved from the old place that I used to be familiar with, Black's, and down in through there, and the buildings are between the two hotels, most of them. The stables are up beyond the Stoneman House, even; one of the new stables. They have been ordered for years by every Board, but somehow or other they didn't build them, but they have been ordered unanimously every year, and we built them this year.

MR. TULLY: Is it or is it not true, Mr. Truman, that the greater portion, the most at least of the money that has been expended there has been expended in and around and about the new hotel, and above, in the direction of Mirror Lake, or in the direction of the farm? A. I think that it has; yes, sir; I think it has. The great multitude of people go to the Stoneman House. It is the beautiful house of the valley. In other words, twenty-four hundred people went there this summer. as against eight hundred at Barnard's, and about twelve hundred campers. That gives you an idea about the number of people and how they go. They all went to the Stoneman House that could. Board is the same at both hotels, except I think probably you could make terms for the week maybe a little cheaper at Barnard's. I only guess at that, I don't know it.

MR. TULLOCH: Were there twelve hundred campers, do you think? A. The Guardian reported to me in the neighborhood of eleven or twelve hundred campers; twenty-three hundred at the Stoneman House. That was up to a certain time. I met Mr. Mills in Los Angeles, and he said that even in October there were some sixty, I think. I think sixty-six people went in in October.

Q. How large a space, or about how large a quantity of land do you think they set apart for the campers to camp upon, and for their privileges?

A. I think sixty acres, but the Guardian will know to a foot; but ample, so he said.

Q. Was that a sufficient quantity for all those campers, do you think? A. I think so; I don't know that, though; I wouldn't know. I would take the judgment of any man that was in the valley on that, and especially the Guardian, he being the official man. There is a good deal of the valley—they didn't answer that question last night. There is seven thousand acres in the floor of the valley.

Q. Including the talus? A. Including the talus.

MR. ROBINSON: A little over three thousand acres of meadow? A. Three thousand acres of meadow land, that would come under that head, and a good deal of it would produce a good deal, because grasses grow there; flowers and aromatic shrubs, and bushes, and trees. I don't know much about the soil. There are some pretty peach and apple trees there, and they raise berries, and such things as that, and lots of wild strawberries, and raspberries, and thimbleberries.

THE CHAIRMAN: Not cultivated? A. No, sir; wild. I picked thimbleberries and blackberries, there last August; lots of them.

[The clerk read the seventh charge.] A. This charge antedates my appointment as Commissioner.

MR. TULLY: You know nothing of it of your own knowledge? A. No.

[The clerk read the eighth charge.] A. I am positive that no such thing has taken place. I believe the Commission incapable of such violation of their duties.

MR. TULLOCH: You simply believe; you don't know it to be a fact? A. No.

MR. TULLY: That is, you speak with reference to the time since you have been connected with the Board? A. Yes, sir; I am positive that no such thing has taken place, meaning, as I said before, while I have been there. I believe, however, the Commissioners incapable of such violation of their duties.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any such violation of laws? A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Which took place prior to your connection? A. No; I never heard anything in my life of any character, from any human being.

[The clerk read the ninth charge.] A. No artificial disfigurement or defacement has occurred since my connection with the Commission.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any that occurred before you were associated with it? A. Only what Mr. Mills stated last night.

Q. That was in regard to C. C. O'Donnell? A. Yes, sir; that is the only one.

MR. TULLOCH: How do you regard that question; what is your conception of the term in relation to the word "disfigurement?" For instance, would fences running across the valley in different places disfigure the land, or the premises, or the scenery in any way, according to your idea? A. Well, not according to my taste. I have not observed any such thing as that, that pained me or repelled me, or that I noticed whatever. I expect, maybe now, if you sent me up there to look after the fences, I might see something that I disagreed with; maybe not; but it has not occurred; and not to attempt to be florid, everything is so grand and beautiful, and so attractive around there, that undoubtedly most people forget those little things. I mean, at least, the superficial visitor. The superficial observer, in looking at El Capitan or the Falls, would forget whether this fence was a whitewashed one or runs zig-zag, or was a wire fence, or anything else.

MR. ROBINSON: If he should run into a wire fence, wouldn't he remember it? A. I don't think you can run into it, with the great number of roads you have there now.

MR. TULLY: I will ask you whether you have observed any barbed wire fences or any other fences there? A. Yes, sir; and I have seen——

Q. From your observation of those fences and the character of those fences and their conditions, have you observed anything there that in your estimation marred the beauty of the valley, or operated as an obstacle to the free ingress and egress to such portions of the valley as a tourist or a person going there to visit it for pleasure would like to have access to? A. No, sir; because the roads run in almost every direction; but still a person, if they wanted to take a short cut, maybe, here and there, they would meet with a fence here and there in some places, as you would any place in the world, visiting any park, or any other public place. I didn't notice, I cannot call to my mind any fences, although I do remember seeing—that is, wooden fences—and not much of them, but I saw a barbed wire fence. I happened to come up against it once or twice myself.

Q. Have you ever visited Golden Gate Park? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find any fences, or barbed wire, or plank fences there? A. No; but there are a multiplicity of signs which tell you to keep off of the grass, and there are no signs in the valley which tell you to keep off of the grass. I don't say that to be funny, only to answer.

Q. These fences that were constructed, were they laid out and constructed at the discretion of parties leasing the premises, or were they under the direction of the Commissioners? A. I have not the slightest knowledge of that; I don't know anything about that.

Q. Had they the right and privilege to place the fences wherever they elected? A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. You don't know whether they took the land up to suit themselves or not, and run their lines? A. They couldn't do that. We looked back on the old minutes and books—you have no idea how much red tape there is there. I guess they have to ask permission to do the least thing.

Q. They did it, then, with the thorough authority of the Commissioners? A. Undoubtedly. That I don't know. You will get that all from the Guardian.

[The clerk read the tenth charge.] A. Not since I have been a Commissioner.

MR. TULLY: Well, do you know, have you reason to believe that such things were done before you were a Commissioner? A. Only what I heard last night Mr. Mills admit, in the chapel there, that night, that one time; that is all I ever heard. I know everything is open; our books and our papers, everything to everybody that comes along, official or otherwise; I understand that to be the law, too.

[The clerk read the eleventh charge.] A. That is positively untrue.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of your own knowledge that that is not true: you state from your own knowledge? A. Yes, sir; although I was not there, I am positive about that, because I have heard all the Commissioners say so. It is from hearsay.

MR. TULLOCH: You heard what they said? You don't know of your own knowledge? A. I will take the chances on the other seven Commissioners. I will take the chances and say that it is absolutely untrue.

THE CHAIRMAN: There is no sawmill in the valley? A. No; never has been since I have known it. I have heard the old story about Hutchings having one, but I don't know anything about that.

[The clerk read the twelfth charge.] A. Single privileges have been granted, because it has been deemed prudent to do so by the Commissioners, and decorum and honesty have been promoted thereby, and much dissension and possible blackmail avoided.

MR. TULLY: Would that not come under the head of being a special privilege, an exclusive privilege? A. I don't know. I hardly think so. I make a distinction between an exclusive privilege and a single privilege, and in making the distinction—

Q. The operation of these single privileges that you designate, is it or is it not true that the granting of those single privileges operates to a certain extent as an exclusive privilege; that is, that they result in the exclusion of others to an enjoyment of the same privileges? A. I should think so for that year. After the applications are put in it is an exclusive privilege for that one year; but we only give them for that one year, in order to keep a check and make them come to us every year with their applications; and then, as was pretty fully explained by Mr. Mills, not to fall back on him so often, but as was explained by him last night better than I could do it, the applications we will take from a hundred men, but at last we give it to one; for instance, one butcher, partly so that there won't be a lot of residents in the valley; lots of first class reasons that he presented.

Q. Is it or is it not true that the granting of that single privilege, as you designate it, operates to keep out—its effect is to keep out competition as between butchers? A. No, I don't think so, because they all put in applications, and then we single out the best one; but we don't give it to two.

Q. After you have made that selection? A. That lasts for the year.

Q. To the exclusion of any other who would like to enjoy the same privilege? A. Yes, sir. You know it would take an eternal lot of book-keeping and three or four men working all the time. We do this once a year, and they pay in advance, and the money is sent right to the Treasury here.

MR. TULLOCH: Mr. Tully's idea was this: Doesn't this very process of granting to but one an exclusive privilege have the purpose of raising the prices and creating a monopoly in that party? A. No, because we make the prices; we tell them what they shall charge for things.

Q. You have that power? A. Yes, sir; we have tremendous power in all such things as that.

Q. You spoke awhile ago about that system promoting honesty; that one of the reasons you did that was for the purpose of promoting honesty and a high system of commercial dealings? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what sense does it promote honesty? A. It keeps one man from going in with another and making straw bids, as we used to call it in Washington in mail contracts. Now, Mr. Grant—that was in cross-examination that was brought out; he didn't state it until he was cross-examined. He really put in two bids, and the Commissioners saw it. He put in two bids, and when he saw that his two bids were the highest, he let one of them go and claimed the other. That is a straw bid; what we call straw bids.

Q. Are not the prices charged for the various articles, merchandise or whatever they may have, by these parties who have been granted exclusive privileges or single privileges, are they not greater, even as given by the Commissioners, than they would be if other parties were in there, and there was a competition? A. There is nothing done there where there is room for much more than one thing, to commence with. There are very few things that could live there two apiece; that is, two blacksmiths, maybe, couldn't live there—two of this, and two of that; but, as a general thing, to answer the question now, as well and promptly as I can, I took particular pains this summer to visit Niagara Falls and the Yellowstone. I stayed a long time; and the Yosemite Valley charges less for everything than they do at the Yellowstone, although the Yellowstone is only thirteen miles away from the railroad; board, and fruits, candy, and everything else.

Q. Do you recollect the prices at which Kenney & Coffinan sell hay?

A. No, I do not. Well, I could show by our books, because we buy hay from them sometimes, I think. I don't know that we do, but we buy hay there for our mules and horses. I don't know that. That the Guardian knows to a fraction—all those things. No, I don't know anything about that. I never went anywhere with a camping party. I have always been in the stage.

MR. TULLY: The question was whether the Commission fixed the prices which Kenney & Co. should put upon their hay?

MR. GOUCHER: May I be permitted to ask a question?

THE CHAIRMAN: Certainly.

MR. GOUCHER: Mr. Truman, is there any privilege granted to anybody to sell hay in the valley? A. I don't think there is.

Q. So far as the selling of hay is concerned? A. I think anybody can sell hay. I think Mr. Mills said last night that anybody could bring in hay. I think occasionally that a man comes in with a load of hay or barley. There is nobody with a privilege of that kind, and we will say now—that is, I am looking at it from the standpoint of maintaining business—if Coffinan & Kenney did raise a lot of hay, and they had any to sell, and were charging too high, a man could go in there with a load of hay, and if he sold cheaper, it would bring them down.

MR. TULLY: Nothing in your rules and regulations prohibiting others from having free access to the market of the valley with their hay? A. Nothing at all. In fact, I think the Guardian is watching that all the time. He reports to us, and if we see anything, we fight them.

Q. In other words, the way for sending hay there is open to competition from the outside? A. Yes, sir, if there is any selling, I would use that term that you do, but a stronger one. Anybody can sell hay there if they want to. Mr. Hill says people can bring in meat and chickens and eggs, but they can't have a store there unless we say so. I think I have seen people come in there with chickens, myself.

Q. And peddle them around? A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Do the Commissioners grant the privilege to those who keep the stores there? A. Every year, yes, sir; twenty-two of them in all; twenty-two now for 1889 that have put in applications. We work on them now in a few weeks.

Q. You do that as you would do with the others. You select from those who make applications; you select one or more, such as you wish to grant that privilege to, but after it is granted it becomes an exclusive privilege so far as the other applicants are concerned? A. Yes, sir; it has to be. That party gets it for the year. You couldn't do otherwise. It would be an impossibility.

Q. I am not asking what could be done, but what is done?

MR. TULLOCH: Of course, you know the prices charged. You said awhile ago, did you not, that the Commissioners determined the prices of things? A. Yes, sir; a great many things. The Guardian is instructed to see that the prices charged are fair—about what they would charge elsewhere or charge under other circumstances, and he reports to us if the charges are in excess. If there was we would stop it; horseshoeing and such things.

Q. What was the price of hay there last summer? A. I don't know. I really don't know. I answered that once or twice. I don't know.

Q. I should think that the Commissioners having charge of those things would know? A. We don't know all the details; you could not. There is not a human being that would know everything about that.

MR. HOOK: Does the Commission have charge of the prices of hay? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GOUCHER: If you are correct in regard to the statement you made awhile ago, that the Commission don't control the question as to who shall sell hay in the valley, and don't attempt to control that, and don't grant any privilege, has it been considered incumbent upon them to investigate that question as to what any parties sold hay for? A. Well, it has not since I have been a Commissioner, because there has not been any complaint. We do not know anything unless we get a complaint; but there are six or seven kinds of notices upon all the verandas and prominent trees and dry-goods boxes all over the valley, informing people what the prices and rates are, and that they shall complain to the Guardian, and then he complains to us. We have only had one complaint out of three thousand visitors this year.

Q. Isn't it true that Coffman & Kenney have attached to their lease a clause requiring them to furnish, upon demand, to campers hay and grain? Isn't that one of the conditions of their lease? A. I think that is so.

Q. So that while they have not the privilege alone in selling it, they are compelled, under the conditions of the lease, to sell when hay is sought from them? A. I think that is so; but upon another occasion I have got all those letters and permits and everything up here, locked up in the committee room.

MR. TULLOCH: By that we are to understand that they are compelled to offer hay if parties require it; is there anything said about the price they are to charge for that hay? A. I don't know that there is.

Q. Is it discretionary with those parties what they charge for hay? A. I think it is understood that they should charge the prevailing price of other valleys around there, like Wawona and other places.

Q. Are there ranches immediately or close around there, outside of the grant? A. I think they charge more at Wawona than they do at Yosemite. I have heard people say so; I don't know though.

Q. Are there other ranches you know of around there outside of the grant? A. No. There are—I think there is a field or two some place between there and Wawona; some little places; but I think there is no place where there is much raised, except at Wawona and Grant's place, half way between Wawona and the railroad.

Q. Do you know where Myers' place at Big Meadows is? A. No, sir.

Q. In relation to exclusive privileges, if there was not sufficient business for two parties to live there and get along nicely, what then was the reason of giving it to one, Mr. Truman? A. Well, I don't know as I could answer that strictly to your satisfaction or my own. It is desired to keep up a store of most every kind for the use of the campers and people who go there, to buy things. Now, for instance, there is a man who has got a lot of woods and barks and so forth, he pays $60 a year. He don't make any great amount of money out of it, and I was reading on the minutes that some years before another man made an application, and they gave it to this one man—he offered the most money—and not two. I think that there is a necessity for one butcher shop; I don't think there is for two. But I don't think my opinion in that respect would amount to anything; I don't know anything about that.

Q. Has Mr. Cook a store there? A. I think he has; I don't know. Yes, he has a bar and a store.

Q. How many stores are there in the valley? A. Two, I believe.

Q. Do you think there is any necessity for two? A. Well, I don't know but what one could support a great many more people than go there; but there are two ends to the valley, and so far as canned goods and all those things that every camping party wants—fruits and canned tongues, and all those things, why they can get if they are up around the Stoneman House, or down around the Barnard House.

Q. Cook also owns the hotel, does he not? A. He leases; yes, sir.

Q. And has a store as well? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the extent of Cook's privileges; or has he not some more privileges in the valley? A. He has an orchard. I don't know the extent of the acreage which the garden has. He has an orchard and a place to raise vegetables; but he has to promise to carry it on nicely, a nice kind of horticulture. It is a cast-iron permit, and he pays $300 for that, I believe; $250 or $300 or $350; I think $300, though.

THE CHAIRMAN: Major, I understood you to say that any one has the privilege of taking a load of produce of any kind—hay, grain, wood, or anything into the valley to sell? A. Well, I drew that from what Mr. Mills said. I don't know that positively, but I am constrained to believe that such is the fact. I think it is rather natural that it should be, looking at it from a common sense standpoint. I think a man can take a load of hay or chickens or such things, but he can't keep store there. The Commissioners buy hay in the valley; they buy either in or out of the valley; and grain.

MR. TULLOCH: Is that for the purpose of supplying the demands of the place? A. Two mules they have and one horse, I believe.

Q. Is that for the purpose or object of keeping up the price of hay and getting a monopoly thereby, or for the purpose of supplying the demand of the valley? A. What is that?

Q. What is the effect or what the purpose of that; is that for the purpose of having a monopoly of the business? A. I think there is a man comes in with a load of hay. I don't know who he sells to; don't know anything about that. I said, which maybe you didn't understand, that we, the Commissioners, had to buy some hay and grain. No monopolists, no other parties.

THE CHAIRMAN: Supposing you or I went into the valley with a load of hay, who would we find there to sell it to? A. I don't know whether you could sell it; I don't know anything about that. You could take it in and get a royal good price for it, or might have no sale. I don't know anything about that, really. If there is anything in that valley; if there is anything to be ascertained; something you want to reach; you have got a sure thing from the Guardian. He knows everything about that. I simply don't know.

MR. TULLOCH: Is it not a dangerous policy to intrust too much to the Guardian, since the Guardian may have a commercial view of the things. He may have an eye to making something he has no right to make, and by the Commissioners being too magnanimous, he may have a tendency to be exorbitant in his demands? A. Well, I couldn't speculate on that; I couldn't answer; I wouldn't know how to answer you. It is like all other business. You have got to trust this man here, as long as he proves true, and this man there. We have got to have one man in the valley. There must be some man, and always has, for twenty years; that is, with the Guardian. There have been several Guardians expelled—that is, they have been voted out and others voted in. When charges are made against the Guardian, the executive committee takes them into consideration immediately and writes him a letter. I have, probably, forty letters in my letter book, which I have brought up, which I have written to the Guardian in the last three or four months, all of which contain instructions; what to do and what not to do, and how to deport himself. In fact, I have been pretty hard on him, I thought, when I came to look over the letters. So we keep him pretty well in view. He has to be honest. So far as we can say, he has to be honest with the moneys he collects, because it is checked off in so many ways.

MR. HOOK: Anybody has a right to appeal to the Commissioners, and make a charge, have they not? A. Yes, sir; the books are all open; his books and everybody's.

Q. Every written charge sent to the Commission is investigated by the Commissioners, is it not? A. Immediately, by the executive committee, which is made up of San Franciscans for the purpose of generally being on hand. There has not been five days since last June that some of us were not in that office, although we all have business, and are all men who ought to be elsewhere a good deal of the time, we determined this year to spend a very great deal of time there; our office is hardly ever without somebody in it, generally two of us.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is, your office in San Francisco? A. In San Francisco; and the best proof of that is that letters from the Controller, from the Governor, and the Treasurer, you will see are all answered the same day. I have brought up the books, which I think probably some evening will take an hour or two to examine, to lay on the table. You can go through and see how everything will connect, and tally, and check.

MR. TULLOCH: You say the place of business is in San Francisco? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Doesn't the law state that the principal place of business shall be in the valley? A. Well, no; I couldn't give it to you, but you can see it right in the law, and we are all right on that. Now, you can read it if you will. You can get it and read it. It distinctly says we shall have an office in San Francisco. The principal place of business, it starts off by saying, shall be the Yosemite, where we shall meet once a year. That is arbitrary. Then it says we shall have an executive committee composed of three members, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, and their principal place of business shall be in San Francisco or Sacramento. We could come here and have a place of business if we wanted. Those little books that I sent up here the other day will show you.

Q. I believe here are the by-laws. Article first says: "The principal place of business of the Board shall be in the Yosemite Valley, but the executive committee shall have an office in the City of San Francisco." Do you refer to the place of business in San Francisco as the place of business of the executive committee of the Board? A. Yes, sir; the executive committee. We cannot call any meeting of the Board there except one immediately before this Legislature. You will see further down we don't have any meetings of the Board there. You probably know that we couldn't get a Board together; couldn't do any business; the business is done by the executive committee. Everything is left to it. Three men do all the work except the two days in the valley in June. They have been doing it for twenty years. It is all right, there.

Q. Why shouldn't the executive committee of the Board of Commissioners be composed of eight rather than three practical executive men? A. Well, privately I have often said that, and I have told that to Mr. Madden a long time; but of course I could chat with you about that a long time, if it would be of any good to you. Of course it don't enter into this thing at all, but I think three would be a great deal preferable to eight. That is my private opinion, the same that there is at Yellowstone, but it would take about four years to reach that; four or six years. So I suppose nobody wants to attempt it.

[The clerk read the thirteenth charge.] A. Mr. Robinson, who seems to be the author of these charges, was unanimously permitted, in June last, to have his annual rent reduced from $20 to $1. Messrs. Coffman & Kenney also had their rent reduced from $500 a year to $300, for 1888 and 1889, five Commissioners voting in the affirmative and five voting against. These are all the reductions made for 1888 and 1889.

Q. What were the reasons for making those reductions, if you know? A. Well, now as far as I am concerned, I was a new Commissioner in the valley, and when I went up I met Tom Hill, who is an old friend of mine, and he came to me with some other gentlemen; there was Mr. Cunningham came to me—I know that it is done in all business—Cunningham came to me and asked me if I would vote for him to be custodian of the grove, which I didn't do. Some gentlemen came to me—amongst others Tom Hill came to me—and told me that there was an artist in the valley named Robinson who had had some trouble or inconvenience, and he had been charged $20, and a great many people had thought that maybe he was treated fairer than Robinson, and he asked me if I would vote for a reduction of Robinson's rent from $20 to $1; and I talked with the committee about it, and found that they were all in favor of it. Although I had never met Mr. Robinson, and knew nothing of him, never heard of him before, I voted with the majority, and we reduced his rent. On the other hand—Messrs. Coffman & Kenney—I did what I am frank to say now I would not do again; but I thought maybe they ought not to have had the reduction, and I voted against it; but I was only one of three; but if I had to do it over again I would vote for the reduction, because that while I believe we ought to have a check, and a pecuniary check, over those men and women up there, that the less rent you can impose upon them the fairer and better it would be, because I don't think they make much money, and they only have two or three months to make it in. I don't know anything about the stage company. They may make more or less money than I know anything about; but I think all those people in the valley, while they should pay something—not artists—I believe that all the artists and people who sell photographs should be taxed $1. I don't know what that contract is. Maybe it is like a deed. I would do it for nothing, because they all advertise the valley. Every man who paints a picture or sells a photograph or prints a paper about the valley does it good. I think if some of those people make money, like the grocers and the blacksmith—now, the blacksmith, while he is a hard working man and is entitled to $5 a day, or about $300 in the course of a year—he makes a good deal of money. I understand he has a number of thousands of dollars saved; I hope he has; although I never met him and don't care much for him, on general principles, because my father once put me in a blacksmith shop and I run away because the work was too hard.

Q. Did you go West? A. I went East; I went from Providence, Rhode Island, up to New Hampshire; but he makes money, and pays $60 a year, and the Guardian told me, when he was in San Francisco, that he made so much money that it would be a good thing to make him pay $100. We thought it all over, and thought that, as he was a blacksmith, $60 was enough. Now, Coffman & Kenney—I was up there one day in August, and there was only two of their horses went on to the mountain, and they had seventy in the valley. I don't know but what they make more money than I think, but I imagine they don't make more than the law allows. If they do, it is hard work, and hard business. I went up there with the idea to get all the money you could from these people, but I have changed my mind.

MR. TULLY: You think the better policy is— A. To let them have it for nothing, and have a check, but not tax them too hard. Those are the only reductions—those two.

Q. You don't want to divide the profits of their labor between themselves and the State, and take the lion's share of it? A. No, sir; because it is fair to presume that after about $100,000 that the State has spent in getting the valley, and in building the bridges, and that there never need be but one more bridge built—it is fair to presume that the State will give at least from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, although I don't think—after this year I think we could get along with $5,000 to $10,000, and keep the trails in order, and do fine work. But there has got to be one more bridge, and the grove has got to be attended to or it will burn down some day. It is in a shocking state; but the valley is growing better and more beautiful all the time, and any of you gentlemen that have seen it once and go into it now, you will be surprised at its beauty.

Q. When you speak of the grove, you mean the Big Tree Grove? A. Yes, sir. That needs a great deal of work and money to preserve it.

Q. What is the reason that it has been left in that condition? A. The money has generally been spent in the valley; it is supposed the old trees have stayed there so long they would keep on staying, but, undoubtedly, the Indians used to burn it out, as you can see. We had some avenues made to four beautiful trees in the grove that stand like sentinels. It was like digging through a snow drift; it cost about $300 in cutting down saplings and young trees, but it was a great improvement. But there were some little houses built there that were necessary in the grove, that never had been built, but which had been ordered two or three years. Those are the only reductions.

MR. HOOK: Is the object of letting privileges there simply to keep all these different lines of articles for sale there in the valley? A. Sir?

Q. Is the object of having special privileges, or granting it to one, so as to keep somebody in the valley to sell different articles? A. No; but they go there; they have found their way there, and this man is willing, maybe, to put some flowers in a case, and another man will carve some wood, and another man sees an opportunity for selling candy and photographs. We don't send anybody there.

Q. Isn't the object of the Commission to keep somebody there to supply the campers as they come in? A. Yes, sir; that would be the object. If anybody would come there, they would do something in that way.

Q. Is that the object, or is it not? A. It is our hope, yes, sir; our desire, yes, sir; to have somebody in the valley.

Q. To provide provisions and everything that is necessary? A. Yes, sir; somebody is always there. Then, I reiterate, we go over this every year. These people make applications. There are only two things that have a ten years lease, because that would make them hold the stick a little over us. We make them come to the Commission every year with their applications. Twenty men can put in an application for a grocery store. If the lowest of the twenty put in $10 and the highest $100, we would take the $100 man. We would look into the propriety of it and see if he was all right. Maybe if he got drunk or anything like that, or he was not a very good character, we would take the $50 man. We have to discriminate; we have to have discrimination about those things, and we have it.

According to the by-laws we have a good deal of power. We do it as wisely as we can.

Q. Then you select the men the same as you would in your own business? A. Yes, sir; the same exactly.

MR. TULLOCH: Well, in selecting men in your own business you simply act in your own personal capacity and here you act as Commissioners? As Commissioners you are acting for the State in the interest of a public trust. If you would do as you would in our own case, is it not evident that you would act in your own individual capacity and represent your own business? A. Well, I can answer that question by saying that I think that as agents in doing business for a State, or a corporation, or a government, the better way to do it—I think the more commendable way to do it—you are thought better of if you claim that you do the work or the business, or transact what is demanded of you about the same that you would do for yourself; in other words, you show that you are willing to do for others as you would for yourself, who is always a peculiarly interested party. I didn't quite catch on to your entire question. I believe it is generally understood the world over—it is a sort of boast—I have heard it said a thousand times—"I would do that for him just as I would do it for myself." The boast that you are doing as well as you would for yourself.

Q. Under the head of charges for the artists, and so forth, why is it that Mr. Robinson, up to June, had to pay $20 a year, I believe it was, for the privilege, and Mr. Hill had to pay but $1? Is that true or untrue? A. Yes, sir; I don't know anything about it. Would you like to have me state what I heard?

Q. What you know? A. I don't know anything about it, but what I have heard is peculiarly romantic, if you want that.

MR. TULLOCH: Yes, sir. Is that within the province of the inquiry, or not?

THE CHAIRMAN: I think it is not necessary to go into that.

[The clerk read the fifteenth charge.] A. Since I have been Commissioner no such thing has taken place. The wages of the laborers have not been withheld, and they have been paid up in full to January, except that there are a number of old back-pay accounts that grew out of the eight-hour-a-day law, and are not yet adjusted.

MR. TULLY: You speak of the eight-hour law; that was explained the other evening, but we would like to have your version of it also? A. The only thing I know about it is that in the June meeting there was a few of those men who had worked ten hours instead of eight, and in adjusting this, according to the law, they were entitled to a certain additional amount of money that they had never got. Now, the vouchers have not yet been made out for them. We had sixty odd working at one time in two months, this year. Three new bridges building, and an addition to Barnard's, and beautiful roads made; and they have all been paid up in full. The moment we got their accounts we sent them to the Controller or Board of Examiners; and when we got them back, the same day the drafts went up in the valley. I have done that, and I know as a positive fact that they have been paid. We do not owe a single dollar to-day, except a few of these back-pay accounts that we have not paid yet.

Q. I understand you that the rule is there that laborers are usually supposed to be employed for eight hours a day, and if they work overtime, they are allowed the same rates for the hours that they work over that they would for the eight hours, per hour? A. Yes, sir; and they know it like a book.

Q. These back and unpaid claims you speak of are claims for overwork, that is, hours in excess of the eight hours a day, for which claims have been made that have not yet been adjusted? A. Yes, sir; not for current labor. They performed this work some time before they knew the State law, and they found it out, and they made a claim, and the Commission said they were entitled to it from that date. It is not the current work of last year, but it is something away back; we keep up the payment.

Q. The matter, I understand, comes in this shape— A. Mr. Goucher can state that exactly.

Q. I think I will get that straight. I understand these claims originated in this way: That at the time they were performing that labor, it was not understood that they would get any extra pay, even though they worked beyond eight hours? A. That is it.

Q. But since this law has gone into operation prescribing eight hours as a lawful day's work for government business, that they have put in a claim for the extra hour's work for that work had some former period, and that is the nature of the claims that are now before the Commission? A. These pay accounts the Board unanimously resolved to pay, but the papers have not been made out; I think partly because maybe we were a little slow, and partly because it was something that we were not looking ahead that we had got to pay, and we were waiting for further appropriations.

Q. I desire to have this thing made perfectly plain, because Mr. Mills in his testimony yesterday evening, stated that it was the rule there that they ordinarily understood a day's work to be eight hours? A. That is right along now, all the time.

Q. But they would pay extra beyond the eight hours; they would pay in the same rate at which they paid for the eight hours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the inference from his answer to those questions was that that was the custom of the Commission, and it left the impression upon my mind that these claims had originated in transactions that they had had where the understanding was that they were to work eight hours, and if they worked over that they would get their money, and not that it is a subsequent idea to put in a claim for what they had not claimed before? A. Since then they worked ten and may be eleven hours in some days, and it is to put on the days, and they get their pay right along.

Q. I am speaking with reference to these back claims? A. That is still back.

Q. These unliquidated claims?

MR. GOUCHER: Whenever I am before this committee for the purpose of giving evidence, I can give a better explanation of that matter than any of the other Commissioners, I think. At the time this Commission first took notice of the fact that the men were being worked more than eight hours a day, Mr. Truman was not a member of the Commission. However, it came up in another form when he was a member of the Commission last June.

MR. TULLY: I presume you will be a witness. I simply wanted to make plain the apparent discrepancy between Mr. Truman's statement and the impression that was left on my mind, at least, on yesterday evening.

THE WITNESS: You have it, as I understand it.

MR. TULLOCH: Is it true or untrue that parties did in several cases contract themselves out to the Commissioners to work ten hours a day? A. I don't know anything about that. That you might remember and ask the Guardian. It will suggest itself to you when those charges come up. That I don't know anything about. He is the executive man there. That detail of work I would not know anything about.

[The clerk read the sixteenth charge.] A. The Stoneman House was accepted before I became a member of the Board.

MR. TULLY: Do you know anything yourself about it? A. No; nothing whatever.

Q. Tending to throw any light upon these charges? A. Not at all, and have no information, either.

[The clerk read the seventeenth charge.] A. No trees are cut down in the valley for purposes of fuel. But there are more or less trees that are cut down at times and corded and sold at a good price, and the money paid over to the Secretary by the Guardian. There are also trees cut to make or preserve vistas, and the wood is cut into fuel and sold.

Q. That is your answer to that matter? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Is there a considerable quantity of wood cut, old and young trees, of any kind? A. I don't think there is. All these people—these grocers, and other stores—there is only one or two—I guess there are no nights in the valley that they don't have fires. I have never been in the valley that they didn't have fire; there may be some, but for culinary purposes. There are some fires there all the time, but there are plenty, big and small—there are no fine trees cut down for that.

Q. Does it bring in considerable revenue? A. Well, it is a pretty fair price. The Guardian reports it so many cords to such a man; a cord and a half to this man.

Q. Have you any idea how much money the Secretary receives? A. For that alone?

Q. Yes, for wood cut? A. No; but I think that—the reason that I didn't bring my books, that we could go over all these things in a bunch, it is a tremendous pile, and you would have to get up and get around the table.

Q. Do you know how much the wood was sold for per cord? A. I do not. I check it off and add it up, to see if the totals of everything come out right. I think $3 50.

Q. A cord? A. I think so.

MR. ATKINSON: $2 50, Mr. Truman. A. $2 50; all right.

MR. COOK: Have they cut it?

MR. ATKINSON: Latterly the workmen have been cutting it.

MR. HOOK: Do they sell it in the tree for $2 50 a cord? A. At the stump.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know these things yourself to be true, or do you simply go according to the judgment of the gentleman who has just given his knowledge of the matter; you don't know these things yourself, do you; you don't know anything about the price per cord? A. No; I could go in a committee room in a quarter of an hour and get the paper and commence and work through eight years, but that don't enter into my testimony at all. I wouldn't have thought of putting that down—what was got a cord.

Q. You spoke about the preservation of these vistas. Who suggested the preservation of these vistas by cutting away the trees, and how came they to be cut away in order to preserve those vistas? A. Well, I suppose most any Commissioner; maybe the Guardian sometimes; maybe some Commissioner.

Q. Well, in case the Guardian suggested it, doesn't it appear to be an adverse policy to go according to the suggestion of the Guardian in this matter? A. He would not have the authority to make a vista; he would not be permitted to. That would be done by the Board upon the spot.

Q. Then the Board are responsible for the cutting away of the trees and the selling of the wood. A. Yes, sir; wholly.

MR. HOOK: Are there many of those old stumps of trees left there so as to disfigure it? A. The last time I was up there, in August, there was quite a number left around the Stoneman House; and without exactly considering that I had the authority, I suggested to Mr. Cook that it would be nice to have those stumps removed, and he said he was going to do it. I think he was going to do that himself. I don't know whether he has or not.

MR. TULLOCH: Are there not a lot of stumps in the pasture near the old Hutchings cabin? A. I think there are some left there—yes, sir. I think the grass has grown up around them pretty well.

Q. The cutting of these trees for the preservation of vistas, and so forth, and these old trees, and these young trees, does that go along a little every year? A. Oh, yes; there are leaning trees, and trees will get old. You can see the decay in the branches above, and there are lots of reasons that we can see there that we could not present here, maybe, to your full satisfaction.

MR. HOOK: Do you ever allow a tree that is a beauty and an ornament to the valley to be cut? A. I don't think that there has ever been such a thing. I don't know wholly. I guess most everybody testifies that there has never been any such thing done.

MR. TULLOCH: Wasn't there a whole grove of trees cut out of the State pasture some time ago? A. I don't know.

Q. These trees are cut every year. It is not possible the trees get old, and decay every year, is it? A. Well, I don't know.

[The clerk read the eighteenth charge.] A. This charge is positively untrue. No human being has to pay a cent toll over any road or trail within the grant, and the tolls, if there are any outside of the grant, are created by County Supervisors. The leases made out to the two stage companies in June last by the Secretary, forbid tolls within the grant, make the same revert to the State at the expiration of the lease in 1898, and are the most iron-clad leases ever made by the Yosemite Commissioners. I have the leases with me for inspection.

MR. TULLY: Those leases refer to what portion? A. The two stage companies' leases expired this year, for ten years. We made them out again.

Q. Leases for what? A. For running stages into the valley.

Q. Over those roads? A. Yes, sir; they couldn't run into the valley if we didn't say so, and we give them a lease to run into the valley; we give them that permission for ten years; outside we have nothing to do.

Q. What did they pay? A. They don't pay anything, of course. We make the charges. We were four or five days having that thing under consideration. Of course the stage companies fought it, I might say, and we at last carried it. There can't anybody charge any tolls.

Q. They can't legally do it? A. They can't, anyway. There has not any such thing been done. No human being can get up here and say so. I am positive of it. Now, the thing they fought was that it should revert to the State, and we have made those roads revert to the State after ten years.

Q. I believe that charge states a reverting or returning to the old obnoxious system of toll roads? A. There is not any. I try to make this brief, and not diagnose the term old, vicious, and obnoxious. I know that there is no obnoxious or vicious system now. I don't know whether there used to be or not. I heard Mr. Mills say there were tolls formerly. I think I did pay tolls when I went into the valley years ago, for going on trails; but I went in the valley on stage, and the toll was got out of me on my stage fare; but when I got in the valley I paid toll. There is nothing of the kind.

Q. Your answer is an unqualified denial of that charge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That tolls have been collected within the reservation or grant? A. That is, there are tolls to be collected. Nothing on trails, roads of any kind, from any human being. That is a positive fact.

MR. HOOK: Would you, as Secretary of the Commission, know whether any tolls are collected or not, if they were collected? A. Yes, sir; I would. I would come very near knowing.

MR. TULLOCH: At the June meeting of the Commission were not the Washburn Brothers allowed the right to collect $1 toll from every passenger within the grant? A. No.

Q. You spoke about the leases being iron-clad. In what respect were they iron-clad? A. Well, we made them much stronger than they ever were before. I have brought the other leases, too; I have brought everything, so you can look at it. You can take the Washburn lease and the other lease and compare them and see how we have drawn them this year. I couldn't remember the terms or phraseology, but I used that term, and of course you will see that it is so when you look at the leases. It will take an hour or two to look over the books.

MR. TULLY: I understand that what you mean by iron-clad, is that they are drawn with a special view to protecting the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the interest of the State and people at large? A. They were there with their agents and lawyer, and hung to us three days to have things in or eliminated that we didn't want to, and we stuck by it.

MR. HOOK: Can you suspend the contract, or suspend those leases, if they violate their contract? A. Yes, sir. We work that thing; we can suspend them to-morrow. We have the power to suspend anything that is going on there in that valley.

MR. TULLY: That would be one of the features of the iron-clad portion of it? A. Yes, sir; it is in the laws, in the by-laws.

Q. That they specially provide, not only for protecting the valley and the people, but for ousting anybody or any party; keeping the matter absolutely within the control of the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: In relation to the trails which McCauley had. Wasn't that kept formerly, under McCauley, better than it is now under the supervision of the Commissioners? A. I don't think they were. I went over it years ago when we were up. I think they are in better condition now, and we have got a great many miles of trails, ten times as much as McCauley had, and we have got to keep them clear in winter. We have to have little gullies. We have a man watching them to keep the snow from destroying them. They cost a good deal of money. We keep them in good repair. I have never heard of a human being having been hurt. I have seen hundreds of people go up. The trails are in splendid order this summer.

Q. Has any improvement been made on Eagle Point in the last two years? A. That trail I have never been over. I have been over all the rest, but didn't go over that trail this year.

Q. Isn't that one of the most largely traveled trails in the valley? A. No, sir.

Q. One of the most important ones? A. No, sir. One of the most important, because there are only three or four or five in all: I consider the Eagle Point trail the third trail in the valley. Now, I will tell you: in going to the valley there are some persons who go and only stay one night or day; but generally people stay three days. They go up to Vernal and Nevada Falls, and Mirror Lake. That is a thing that everybody sees who stops a day. If they stop another day they go to Glacier Point. Now, there are probably two people go to Vernal and Nevada Falls to one on Glacier Point, and probably twenty to Glacier Point to one on Eagle Point; more than that. Everybody goes to those places. Eagle Point is an awfully long, difficult ride, and when you get up to Glacier Point it is the grandest sight in the world; and you see the valley and more waterfall than you can from any other point. You are pretty well tired when you get down. Eagle Point is twice as long and twice as hard. It is one of the important points, you might say.

MR. ROBINSON: I would like to ask you if you have not heard that Eagle Point is one of the finest view points in the Yosemite, along the trail? A. I think it is one of the finest.

Q. What is the reason people don't go there oftener? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you any idea? A. I don't know.

Q. Do you consider it was a wise expenditure of money on the part of the Commission to build a trail from the head of Yosemite Fall over to what is called Yosemite Point, within the last two years? A. Well, I don't know as I know about that. I had nothing to do with that. I suppose it was built in the wisdom of the other members of the Commission. I couldn't say. Now, I have not been over that road. If I had anything to do about it I should be pleased to answer; I would give my own opinion very quickly; I don't know anything about that. I have been over Eagle Point; I think it is grand, but not compared to Glacier Point by any means.

Q. If there are twenty people or thereabouts travel to Glacier Point where there is one over the Eagle Point, approximately, wasn't it an unwise expenditure of money to build that trail from the head of Yosemite Fall, inasmuch as you would have to go over the entire Eagle Point trail—to go to the head of the falls you have to travel four miles and a half over that trail? Wasn't it an unwise expenditure of money to build another mile and a half or two miles of trail still further along, to a point inferior in height and beauty? And if there are no people going over the trail, don't you think it was? A. I consider myself too fair a man to pass judgment upon the other members of the Commission that built this trail, which I know nothing about.

THE CHAIRMAN: I want to ask you one question. Why is it that the Commissioners grant a ten years' lease to the stage company, while they only grant a one year's lease to other people doing business in the valley? A. Because they have spent a great many thousands and tens of thousands of dollars on the road; because it is done everywhere in the world, and there was no hesitation. We didn't enter into any discussion at all. We would not have dreamed to ask those men, with their fifty or sixty or seventy miles that they keep up all the year and spend thousands of dollars on, to take a one year's lease. I suppose that is it. I never had anything to do with granting leases before in my life. It is a little out of my line, but I would naturally see that point. That is the answer I would naturally give. As to the matter of dealing with men who have put big money into a thing, they would naturally demand a lease. Now we would give—there are one or two people in the valley that get a two or three or five years' lease. Coffman & Kenney got a five years' lease, because they have got a hundred horses. While we say, if we give them a one year's lease, "If you behave yourself, we will keep giving it to you;" but the other side always wants a little longer tenure, you know. That is it. In reversing it, I would say to myself that I would demand the same. It is the same thing in a water or gas works, or a dam, or anything. A man will rent you a house for a year, but he won't put up a gas works and lease it for a year.

MR. HOOK: Do you compel the stage company to go into Yosemite once a day, or so many times a week? A. No; we don't compel them. That is governed by the traffic—the passengers. They sometimes run three or four stages a day; sometimes they fill up three stages and run in a stage with two. I recollect Mr. Goucher and I had a stage by ourselves last year; not because we were Commissioners, we were crowded in. There were three stages, each had sixteen passengers. There was three times sixteen, and two; I think because possibly we were a light load they put us in, and we arrived there about half an hour ahead.

Q. If a visitor, a man, wanted to visit the valley, a man, woman, or child, is the stage company compelled to take them in, and not have them lay over at any place? A. I don't think they would, but they never hold a passenger back. They run in with buggies and stages. I will say that for the company, although I am not intimate with them, and don't care a snap about them. They never leave anybody over. Those are times when they lose money. They would rather see sixteen or thirty-two, or three times sixteen come; but they run four or five stages. Then again, I was there in August, and many a day the stage, even in August, came in with one passenger, or none.

Q. If a person that wanted to enter the valley stopped at some of these towns on the way, and the stage company didn't go in, could he make charges against the stage company? Can they be answerable for it? Suppose a man comes to a certain town out of the valley, and the stage company refuses to bring him in, could he make charges against the stage company? A. Yes, sir; they would want to bring him in.

Q. Could he do that? A. Mr. Hill says they agree to carry them in. But I don't think you mean a passenger that they had anything to do with. You mean a fellow that turns up in the middle of the road.

Q. A person that comes along on his own hook? A. They will do it; yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Are the leases so drawn that these stage men obligate themselves to bring in all passengers? A. I don't think there is anything in the lease about that, but as a matter of business they will take up the man.

Q. It is to their interest to bring those men in and they will do it? A. Yes, sir; I have never heard of a stage that would not.

Q. You don't know that there is anything in those leases absolutely requiring it, and that a failure to do so would vitiate their contracts and give them an action against the company for not doing it? A. To give an opinion. If that man was sixteen miles out of the grant and they wanted to be hoggish, I don't know that we could compel them to pick up that man, I don't know that we could, but it has never come up such a question. I think they would do it, though. They want the coin, all the same. If the stage was full, they would put a man in—work him in, if they could.

MR. TULLOCH: In relation to granting leases to different parties and to corporations: for instance, in the case of Coffman & Kenney—of course, they are not legitimately a corporation, but they are on that basis, I presume—why is it they are granted a lease, for instance; one reason, I presume, is that they do so much for the public weal and welfare, and especially in the valley; and artists, for instance, are not allowed like privileges, in view of the fact that they render a great service to the valley? A. Well, because the saddle company take in about one hundred horses; we will say fifty; I think the maximum is eighty; along there somewhere; they take in hay and grain; they take in a hundred saddles, and the artists can go in with a satchel. That is plain; that is awfully easy to see. And the artists are the kind of people, that it is understood privately with the Commission, that we like to hold pretty well in check, too.

Q. Do they caricature the methods of the Commissioners, or why do you elect to keep them in check? A. Well, I don't like to enter into the ethnological and physiological reasons, but the artists are a pretty tough set of customers the world over.

Q. The Commissioners are down on them as a rule, are they? A. No; I won't say that. I think they are a pretty hard crowd to get along with; but I will except present company when I say that, of course, because I don't want to be killed in the State Capitol.

Q. Why is it, then, that these parties are granted leases; for instance, Coffman & Kenney, with a hundred horses, on account of the large business they do, and these artists, on account of taking pictures of the valley, and rendering for all time the beauty and grandeur and romance of the valley a part of the art estates of the world, why is it that they should not be treated likewise? It seems to me that that is worth more than all monetary considerations. Why is it that these artists, in consideration of the great value that they do to the valley and the great work that they do for art, why is it that they are not permanently entitled to leases over parties who merely have pack trains or horses or animals, who do get leases from the Commissioners? A. Well, I think I have partly answered that; but to go on, it is because we want to keep most parties in check and have them apply to us every year. The only artist, I believe, that ever had a lease there was Mr. Hill, and he came last year and surrendered it, so as to be on the same footing with all other people in the valley. Now, that is as far as the artists. Now, to answer that more promptly I will say that it is done because, in the wisdom of these eight men, they deemed it judicious to do so. Now, I can't answer it in any further detail than that.

Q. You spoke awhile ago about giving the iron-clad leases to the stage companies as corporations, and giving them for ten years, and to Coffman & Kenney, or other parties, from one to three or five years; and you did say that the reason for giving it for ten years in one case, and for two or three years in another, was from the fact that these parties had invested a larger amount of money, did you not? A. Yes, sir; we have given the lease to the stage companies and to Cook, of Cook's hotel, and Barnard, of Barnard's hotel, for ten years, because they have spent a large amount of money in furniture and in horses and carriages and in roads. I believe Coffman & Kenney also have it for ten or else for five. Somehow or other I think theirs is five, I am quite sure; but all others are only one. But they all ask generally on their application—a man with a forty-dollar application, if it is a blacksmith, he asks generally for ten years, but we don't give it to him but for one.

Q. In relation to these corporations, is it not a fact that the amount of money that they make for the time for which the lease is extended—ten years—is unquestionably greater than the profits which the other parties make for the time the lease is given to them? A. I don't know; to give you my word and honor I don't know.

MR. HOOK: Could you get the stage companies or Coffman & Kenney to take these places without a ten years or five years' lease? A. Well, I doubt whether we could without a great wrangle.

MR. TULLOCH: Could you get any other parties to take it? A. I don't know.

MR. TULLOCH: You might not be able to get those parties, but possibly other parties might.

[The clerk read the twentieth charge.] A. This is also absolutely false, and can be proven to be simply and unequivocally untrue. The roads and trails were in excellent condition during the past year, and new roads and new bridges were built, so that there are beautiful drives all over and around the valley; and a majority of visitors now go to Mirror Lake on foot, and a great many to and from Vernal Falls. That is a mighty unjust charge, and is absolutely false.

MR. ROBINSON: The Eagle Point trail stands in justification of it. A. It is the only place I did not visit in the valley.

MR. ROBINSON: It is hardly just for you to say a charge of that kind is false. A. I quote Governor Waterman's daughter and Miss Kewen, and a good many others. I name those, but there were some twenty or thirty people who went over the trail, and they all spoke highly of it and said they had a good time; and they came back on time, and everything was in excellent order. Now, the other one, I went over every foot of it, even the long trail from Snow's to Glacier Point.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Truman answers categorically, that they are absolutely false, and I don't know that we can get around that.

[The clerk read the twenty-first charge.] A. I have never heard of such a thing, and I believe the charge to be flippant, mendacious, and false.

Q. Do you believe it to be untrue, or do you know it to be untrue? A. I believe that.

Q. You don't know it to be untrue? A. No.

Q. You don't know of any instance of that kind ever having occurred? A. No; I don't know.

Q. Either during your own administration or in former administrations? A. No, sir; and from the character of the men, the Commissioners, I don't believe it.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understand you to say you don't know that it has not been done? A. I could say that; yes. I don't know for certain. I would say that in law; but I don't know it. I don't take that ground in the way of defense. I want to say all that I possibly can, and be catechised, and state everything frankly; of course, I don't really know anything about it.

[The clerk read the twenty-second charge.] A. I wish to say to the honorable committee that this charge is so absolutely untrue, harsh, unjust, and contemptible that I disdain to answer it, but will leave it to the wisdom of the committee, after the taking of all the testimony, and their weighing well and fairly the character, intelligence and character, and good intentions of the gentlemen who compose the Board, and the general animus of their accusers. There is one thing absolutely certain, you will find the Commission a body of honest men, and strictly dead on the square; and if, on the other hand, you prove us to be incapable, incompetent, or feeble-minded, you can report us as a set of d——d fools. Speaking for myself alone, this is my first arraignment upon the charge of imbecility and dishonesty; but as the record of my public life has been hitherto free from censure, and as I have occupied some very prominent positions in the gift of the general Government, I will respectfully throw myself upon the unbiased judgment of the investigating committee, and graciously take my chances with my accusers.

MR. TULLY: I understand, Major, this question, of course, it was putting you on the stand and making you, to some extent, a witness against yourself, but perhaps if you had availed yourself, which you did not, of the privilege of declining to answer, of course I should have felt myself bound, at least, to excuse you from answering those questions, but as you did not raise the question yourself, I am satisfied that you are answering it. It was not my business to raise it. A. If you will permit me, I have understood all along that this is not exactly a Court; it is a committee of gentlemen to look into the conduct of other gentlemen.

Q. It is something like a grand jury. A. And as you said last night, kindly, and I saw all through the evening, that there was a good deal permitted that would not have been permitted in Court. I think that all feel kindly towards each other. I believe that men coming to investigate us feel that we have done the best we can, and they hope to find out that we are pretty fair men. Now, as we have been somewhat deviating, and as I have been catechised—and perfectly willing, rather like it—by that gentleman, I suppose you have no objection—I know he will not—to my asking him a question, have you?

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Robinson will be a witness upon the stand. I think as Mr. Robinson is coming on the stand, we had better wait until he testifies. When Mr. Robinson goes on the stand you will have an opportunity.

[Adjourned to the call of the Chair.]

THURSDAY EVENING, February 7, 1889.

CHARLES ATKINSON.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Where do you reside, Mr. Atkinson? Answer—I reside in Tuolumne County.

Q. Is that your place of business? A. At present; yes, sir.

Q. You have been in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir; I have been in the Yosemite Valley—well, until last October, constantly for two years and a half, I think it was, and before that for about eight years I was there, well, pretty near all the time. One or two seasons I didn't go in, but I was always with people who had been there, and well conversant with everything that was going on.

Q. And when did your first connection with the valley commence? A. In 1878.

Q. In whose employ have you been there? A. I went in there in the employ of J. M. Hutchings.

Q. And since that? A. Well, I have been in everybody's employ there more or less; in the State's employ most of the time; for the Commissioners most of the time; in fact, nearly all the time.

Q. You are familiar with the charges preferred here against the Commissioners? A. I have heard them read here; yes, sir.

[The clerk read the first charge.] A. I don't know of any moneys that have been squandered or misapplied, except perhaps as an error of judgment. It would simply be a question of judgment as to the application.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know anything about the money, anyway? Do you know how it has been appropriated in any manner, whether it has been squandered or not? A. I should say that there had been no money squandered.

Q. Do you know whether there has been any money appropriated? Do you know of your own knowledge that there has been any appropriated here or there? I mean to say, applied? A. I know that there has been money spent. I know that there has been money spent in the valley, because I have had considerable of it myself.

MR. CRAWFORD: Whether it was spent judiciously or not you don't know? A. I should say it was. Certainly.

MR. TULLOCH: What are your opportunities for knowing whether it was judiciously spent or otherwise? A. I should say that in my judgment it was spent judiciously. That is where I would say the question of judgment came in.

THE CHAIRMAN: What branch of business there in the Yosemite Valley have you been most familiar with? A. Well, what work, do you mean, carried on?

Q. Yes. A. Everything connected with the work?

Q. Yes. A. The last year I was foreman under McCord—from the first of September, 1887, until 1888.

Q. Had you anything to do with disbursing the moneys? A. Not a cent; I never paid out a cent. There was never a cent paid out there except what would come up from below.

Q. And your answer is a general denial of the charge? A. Yes, sir.

[The clerk read the second charge.] A. Well, I don't know of any forcible breaking or entering. I know that there has been a number of buildings destroyed there, and one was Mr. Robinson's studio. I know that his goods and chattels were removed from it and stored, and the building moved. The first building that I remember was a house built by Mr. Howard, up at Mirror Lake. He had a toll road to Mirror Lake, and had a house there, and when they purchased the road—they purchased the road and paid him for it—and afterwards the house was torn down; and at the next meeting of the Commissioners he put in a claim for damages for the house and they paid him for the house.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you now speak of Mr. Robinson? A. That is what I say. There were a number of houses torn down. Mr. Robinson had a studio there.

Q. You mentioned some house that had been paid for. Was that Robinson's or Howard's? A. That was Howard's.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Wasn't it burned down? A. It was torn down, and the old material was burned. It was an old shebang; it was not a house; it was simply an old shebang.

MR. TULLOCH: What is the difference between shebang and a house? A. Well, it is in the application of the word, as I understand it; a little old shanty, put up of shakes, as this was.

Q. There is no difference between a shebang and a house. It is merely a local term applying to certain parties who reside in certain parts of Tuolumne? A. No; I would not call this place a shebang.

MR. CRAWFORD: Who burned that house, or tore it down? A. It was torn down, by the order of the Commissioners, by Mr. Galen Clarke.

Q. Do you know that to be a fact? A. I didn't see it torn down, but I know it was done.

Q. Was that private property? A. No; I don't think it was. They bought the road, and, I suppose—and I always did suppose—that their supposition was that they bought the house, also, in buying this road.

Q. The Commissioners, you mean? A. Yes, sir; but Mr. Howard didn't seem to think so, and when he put in his claim for damages, they paid it immediately.

Q. What was it about the artist's house? A. There has been a number of others. If you will please bear in mind that all houses that are built in the valley, all structures are built with the express stipulation that they shall belong to the Commissioners the moment that they are erected; and there was a house built by some Mexicans—the Flores family; they used it for a laundry; they left the valley, and I don't know whether they—the State didn't take possession of it. Fagenstien got it for the sale of pictures. He had a woman there selling views for him, and I think the Commissioners considered her a disreputable character; in fact, she has turned out to be so since—Miss Mattie Atkins. She was living with a man on the river; she got tired of him and married another man, and this man that she had been living with went to the house, and he was shot and killed.

THE CHAIRMAN: This is not relevant.

THE WITNESS: I want to show her character. This man was shot and killed. Afterwards she separated from her husband. He went to the door and called on her, and cut her throat, and then went out and blew his own brains out. I think the Commissioners considered her a disreputable character, and, to get rid of her, notified Fagenstien that he could sell no more views from the house; and he moved his things out, and they tore the house down.

MR. CRAWFORD: As a matter of fact, that house belonged to the Commissioners? A. I don't know about this Howard house. That was erected before I went to the valley, in 1878.

Q. That was on the ground? A. Yes, sir. Then there was another little house—

THE CHAIRMAN: You say Mr. Fagenstein—did he ever receive any pay from the Commissioners for that house? A. I don't know that he received any pay. I don't know that he paid anything for it.

MR. ROBINSON: He paid $100. A. I don't know anything about that.

MR. GOUCHER: Mr. Chairman, I don't believe that those interjected remarks ought to be taken as evidence. Mr. Robinson will be on the stand. I merely make the objection now.

THE CHAIRMAN: Wait until we get through with the witness.

THE WITNESS: There was another little shanty built of shakes, over under the Yosemite Falls. There had been two parties living in it, John D. Lambert, and an old Frenchman named Manis. That is what I should call another shebang. It was a house of one room, built of shakes, and that was torn down. Well, I think in the letters to the Commissioners that was denominated as a squaw house; and that was their reason for tearing that down. There was another place—well, it was not a house; I don't know whether it was private property; there was a place built under a flat rock, with walls up; it was called the Robbers' Roost. That was destroyed and demolished and the walls torn down. That was another place of popular resort. I have heard that action complained of, it being an object of interest to tourists. Then there was a house built by George Anderson. That was certainly built after the rule came into effect that any property built upon the ground should belong to the Commissioners. He started to build a new trail to Snow's. He built him a house, by permission of the Commissioners, at the foot of the trail, in which to keep his men. The trail was never brought to completion. Anderson died, and the house was demolished.

MR. TULLOCH: Who demolished the house? A. It was demolished by the order of the Board; by the order of the Guardian; I can't say by the order of the Board. I suppose it was.

THE CHAIRMAN: What was that house torn down for? Why did they tear it down? A. To get it out of the way. It was right at the foot of the trail.

Q. It was disfiguring and marring the valley? A. Yes, sir; and, however, if it had not been torn down, there was a big tree fell right square across the chimney now; a big pine has blown down and lays right square across the chimney.

Q. Did he have any indemnity for that? Was he ever paid? A. He was paid.

Q. He was paid at the time? A. Yes, sir; I think he was paid at the time.

Q. You said that house was built before the present— A. I am quite certain it was. I know he started to build a house in another place. They gave him permission to build a house for another place, and he had the foundation for the floor laid, and they stopped him.

Q. Go on. A. Then let me see if there were any other houses. There was an old house at the Folsom Bridge, close by the rancheria. That was also torn down. That is all, except these hotels, of course. That is all the houses, I think, that have been torn down that I can remember of, except the Cook hotel and the Leidig hotel. The Cook hotel was an old shingle structure, made out of shakes on the outside. Of course, the floors were all sawed. It was about to fall down.

MR. CRAWFORD: That is all the private property you know of being destroyed? A. I don't call that private property. Then, Mr. Robinson had a studio there. The leases, or permits rather—I think they give no leases as a general thing—go from year to year.

MR. TULLOCH: You think so. Do you know so as a fact? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of your own knowledge? A. Yes, sir; I know of my own knowledge, with the exception of leases. Barnard holds a lease, and Cook holds a lease, and I think Coffman & Kenney. I don't know whether theirs is a lease or a permit. I know that they did have a blank form in the form of a lease. Then they made it out in the form of a permit.

Q. Has McCauley got a lease? A. I think McCauley has a lease; yes, sir. Yes, sir; he has a lease. I think he has, under certain conditions. They are all under conditions, in fact. Yes, sir; I think McCauley has a lease. I don't know but Snow, too, holds a lease. Snow built his property. He has never been paid for it.

Q. Why was he not paid for it? A. I don't think that he has ever applied for it. I don't know but what the houses were built with the stipulation that they should belong to the State.

MR. CRAWFORD: Do you know? A. I don't know but what his house was built at that time.

THE CHAIRMAN: Is Snow occupying the premises now? A. Yes, sir; he is.

MR. ROBINSON: I call the attention of Mr. Goucher to the fact that Mr. Hutchings interjects remarks.

MR. GOUCHER: It is unnecessary for me to call the attention of the committee to the fact that that is entirely irregular, and is no part of the evidence.

MR. ROBINSON: I saw no attempt made to stop it last night, or a night or two ago, when Mr. Truman interjected and helped out Mr. Mills in several cases.

MR. GOUCHER: That is the fault of the committee and not mine. If they transgressed any rules they ought to have been stopped.

MR. HUTCHINGS: May I be permitted a moment?

THE CHAIRMAN: Not now, please, Mr. Hutchings.

THE WITNESS: One word in regard to demolishing these structures. I know it has all been done in the interest of morality.

MR. TULLOCH: Have you a committee on public morals? A. The Guardian is supposed to be a committee on public morals, of one.

Q. Is there any necessity for a committee on public morals? A. I know that there are a great many little half-breeds running around there.

THE CHAIRMAN: Have any parties whose property has been destroyed by orders of the Commissioners received any compensation from the Commissioners? A. W. J. Howard has, positively.

MR. CRAWFORD: He is the only one you know? A. That is all I know. I don't think that anybody else has ever put in a claim, that I have ever heard of.

Q. You don't know of any other kind of property being taken for private uses except those buildings? A. None whatever.

MR. TULLOCH: Why were certain hotels which were not tenanted pulled down in the interest of morality? A. When I come to the hotels—well, if you had seen the condition of Cook's hotel when it was torn down—if you had helped to tear it down—you would certainly have said it was torn down in the interest of morality. Leidig's was occupied—that is, he had his two boys there until that was torn down. Cook's hotel was about to fall down.

Q. Was Leidig's hotel in such a condition that it necessitated tearing down? A. No, sir; not in my opinion.

Q. What has been done with the ruins and remains? A. It has been used, the most of it, in the repairs on Barnard's hotel.

Q. Then there was no necessity for tearing it down, was there? A. No absolute necessity. No, sir; no; there was no absolute necessity.

Q. If the material was of such a strong character that it was used in the construction of other hotels or other buildings, or could be used subsequently for anything, as you have just testified, then there could certainly have been no necessity for tearing it down, in the interest of decay, or anything of that kind? A. Not in the interest of decay or morality, certainly not; but there might have been other necessities. Perhaps when you go further into the examination you will find out, Mr. Tulloch.

MR. GOUCHER: These cabins which you have spoken of—the Anderson cabin, the Howard house, and the others mentioned—were they the property of the people who occupied them prior to the time they were torn down, or did they belong to the State? A. I think they belonged to the State.

Q. You were a foreman, I believe, in Yosemite, at the time the Anderson cabin was constructed, were you not? A. No, I was not. I was employed there when it was constructed; I was employed there that summer.

Q. Did you know at that time that that was built with the permission of the Commission, and for temporary purposes? A. Yes, sir; that is what I always considered.

Q. How in regard to the Howard house? Were you there when that was built? A. No, I was not. That was built long before my time.

Q. Do you know under what conditions it was built? A. I do not, sir.

Q. Were you there when Mr. Howard vacated those premises? A. I think I was; yes, sir, I think I was there.

Q. Do you know whether he vacated them with his own consent by an agreement with the Commission? A. I do not.

Q. What year was it when the Howard house was torn down? A. I think it must have been 1879 or 1880.

Q. 1879 or 1880? A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Speaking of the Leidig house, I think you stated that when it was torn down two of Leidig's boys occupied the place? A. They didn't occupy the main hotel. They had the keys of the house. The house was locked up. They lived in a little house at the back of the main hotel.

Q. Do you know whether Leidig's family was residing in the valley? A. Leidig's family was not in the valley; they had moved out.

Q. Do you know under what circumstances they had moved out? A. They had sold out their good-will and their furniture.

Q. And the family had removed from the valley? A. And the family had moved; and there was a condition, I believe, in the sale, that they were not to resume business in the valley for ten years.

Q. Do you know whether the Yosemite Commission were parties to any such agreement, or whether that was an agreement between Leidig and other people in the valley, outside of the knowledge and connivance of the Commission? A. I don't think there was any connivance of the Commission in regard to it, but I don't think that any bargain could be consummated without their consent. I think that parties would ask consent of the Commission. I don't know that they did.

Q. That is a matter of opinion? A. Yes, sir; just a mere matter of opinion. I don't know that it would be necessary in that case.

Q. The question is, do you know whether Leidig made the agreement whereby he sold out and left, with the parties that he sold to, or whether he made the arrangement through the Commission? A. He made the agreement himself, certainly, with the parties that he sold to, and through them. I don't know that the Commission had anything to do with it.

Q. What were these boys that you say still remained there, doing? A. They remained there solely to hold possession of the property.

Q. For no other purpose? A. No.

Q. Did they follow any business? A. Well, they fished; that is the only thing that I know; I think Charlie Leidig fished there.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know of any cause for Leidig's selling out and removing? A. Well, he had a large family of children. I never heard him say, but I have heard others say, that he told them that it was for educational advantages, and for social purposes; that he wanted to get where there was somebody. And more than that, there has always been war there; and he thought that now the Stoneman House was built, that all the travel would go there, and that there was really no use for the three hotels; the travel would be split up so that he wouldn't get anything.

Q. Do you know any reason why the travel all went to the other houses, if Leidig kept an open hotel? A. I suppose that the Stoneman House had perhaps advertised a little better.

Q. Did the stage that carried these passengers to the Stoneman House pass anywhere near Leidig's hotel? A. Passed right in front of the door.

MR. TULLOCH: Was this house of Leidig's pulled down without any protest, or anything of the character? A. No.

Q. No protest of any kind? A. There was a protest; it was not pulled down without a protest; there was a protest.

Q. Who entered the protest? A. Charles Leidig.

Q. It was pulled down against their protest? A. Yes, sir; they forbade it.

Q. How did the Guardian get into the house? A. The Guardian took a crowbar and broke in the door, or started to break in the door, and the boy says, "Here, don't stave things to pieces." I believe he had opened one door with the crowbar.

Q. The Guardian did? A. Yes, sir; and then the boy says, "There is no use breaking all the doors open, here are the keys."

Q. Which one of the boys said that? A. Charlie Leidig.

Q. Then the work of destruction went on, did it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How came Mr. Leidig to move out of the valley, did you say? A. He sold his good-will and furniture.

Q. His good-will? A. Yes, sir; that is, it was in the agreement, I heard him say, that they were not to do business there again for ten years.

Q. Heard who say? A. Leidig.

Q. Why should he not do business in that time? A. Because the parties who bought of him didn't want him to come in there and enter into competition with them again.

Q. Who bought him out? A. J. J. Cook and John K. Barnard.

Q. Did they have any relations with the present Commissioners? A. No; except that they leased property from the present Commissioners.

Q. There was a close relationship between Cook and the Commissioners, was there not? A. There was a close relationship.

Q. A commercial relationship? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between Cook and the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not true as a fact that he was frozen out of the valley and compelled to leave? A. No; he could have been there to-day if he had wanted to.

Q. Did you not say, a moment ago, that he was, in a degree almost, compelled to, or at least there was not much travel to his house? It went to the Stoneman House instead of his house? A. The Stoneman House never was opened while Leidig was there. It was not opened while Leidig was there.

Q. Not being constructed, either? A. It was being constructed.

Q. How soon after Leidig's departure was the Stoneman House opened? The Stoneman House was opened when Leidig left? A. Yes, sir, the Stoneman House was open; but, if you will permit me to say, the bargain was consummated before the Stoneman House was opened. Leidig didn't open his house for tourists, I am quite certain.

Q. The bargain was made? A. Yes, sir; the bargain was made in San Francisco during the winter.

Q. You said, awhile ago, that the Guardian entered the house under protest and broke the doors down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you speak about a bargain being made, do you not, that he was to leave the valley on certain conditions? A. He was not to do business in the valley. I didn't say he was to leave the valley. That is, he was not to do a hotel business. Leidig one summer closed his hotel; they paid him so much not to keep open.

Q. Who paid him so much? A. I don't know; I think it was Cook and Barnard.

Q. Do you know anybody paid him any money? A. Yes, sir; I know they paid him so much to keep his hotel closed, and he kept it closed, and worked for the State there.

Q. Were you present and saw the money paid? A. No.

Q. Did you have actual knowledge of the fact? A. I have, from hearsay.

Q. You have no knowledge of it? A. No actual knowledge; no, sir.

Q. Did you not say he was paid some money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know it? A. I heard Leidig say so.

Q. You didn't know it as a fact? A. No.

Q. Then you don't know anything about it? A. I believe that I testified to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. I thought it was your own knowledge? A. To the best of my knowledge.

Q. What eventually became of Leidig? A. He is in Los Angeles now.

I saw him here the other day. I don't know that he is in Los Angeles; he simply told me so.

MR. GOUCHER: Mr. Atkinson, I believe there is only one question, and perhaps you have answered that. Did Leidig sell out and close up his house there before the Stoneman House was opened? A. I think he did. I am quite positive he did.

Q. Do you remember when the Stoneman House was first opened to the public? A. The Stoneman House was opened in the spring of 1888.

Q. That was last spring? A. That was last spring.

Q. When it was opened, do you know whether Leidig's family were in the Yosemite, or whether he was in the Yosemite? A. Mr. Leidig's family was there, certainly.

Q. Did he open his house at all during that season? A. No.

Q. When the Stoneman House was first opened? A. No, sir; he took no tourists whatever.

Q. You stated to Mr. Tulloch that there were some commercial relations existing between the Yosemite Commissioners and Mr. Cook? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean by that? A. I mean that he leased property from them, simply and solely.

MR. TULLOCH: Was there much travel in there before the Stoneman House was completed—was there much travel in the valley before the Stoneman House was completed? A. You mean heretofore?

Q. Yes; before it was done? A. In all the years gone by?

Q. Well, that season—the year before it was completed? A. Yes; there was very good travel that summer.

Q. All that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And up to the time of the completion of the hotel? A. Yes, sir; I think there was.

Q. It continued up to that time? A. That was a very good year. It was the year the Grand Army of the Republic held their reunion here, and that fall there was very good travel. It brought it out a very good year.

Q. You say this hotel of Leidig's was pulled down a little while before the Stoneman House was completed? A. I didn't say nothing of the kind.

Q. Didn't you testify that just now? A. I did not.

Q. What did you say? A. I testified that Leidig's hotel was simply pulled down.

Q. Before the Stoneman House was completed? A. I said nothing about before the Stoneman House was completed. It was not pulled down until after the Stoneman House was completed and was running, because I testified that Leidig was living with his family in the house after the Stoneman House was running.

Q. The Stoneman House was erected and going ahead before this was pulled down? A. Yes, sir.

[The clerk read the third charge.] A. I know of no wanton destruction of public or private property. I know of no wanton destruction.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know of any destruction? Leave out the word "wanton." A. I know of destruction; I know of the destruction of these houses that I have spoken of as being torn down.

Q. You did know of their being destroyed? A. Yes, sir; I testified to that in that first question.

MR. CRAWFORD: You don't know of any destruction of timber? A. That would be another question.

THE CHAIRMAN: Your answer is, you know of no wanton destruction of property? A. I know of no wanton destruction of public or private property.

[The clerk read the fourth charge.] A. I know that there has been timber cut there. The question comes in there, what constitutes timber? There were trees cut there from two inches high, I suppose, to three hundred feet. Now, I want to know where the question of timber comes in.

THE CHAIRMAN: I should fancy the proper definition of that word would be anything that could be used in building houses?

MR. GARDNER: Anything that was fit for milling? Wouldn't that be called timber? A. I hardly think that, because there is a good many oaks that are not fit for milling. At the same time, they would be timber; a good many cottonwoods there, that is timber.

THE CHAIRMAN: Fit only for firewood? A. What I mean to say is, that there has been trees cut there from two inches high, all the way up; but what I want to know is about this wanton destruction of timber. You may go on and question me.

THE CHAIRMAN: Tell the committee what you know about the destruction of timber? A. Please read that question again?

[The clerk again read the fourth charge.] A. All timber that has been cut there has been cut for a special purpose. In regard to cutting timber for firewood, there has been no trees cut for firewood that were not dead or dying. I have cut a great deal there myself, and I know that I have been terribly provoked when I would find a tree that, in my judgment, ought to come down, and get the Guardian up to look at it, and he will shake his head and say, "No; I guess we will have to let that fellow stand." And I would have to go and hunt another one.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you continue this process year after year? A. The second season I went into the valley there was nothing for me to do; and another man and myself went and got a crosscut saw and a beetle and some wedges, and went around sawing up some old trunks of trees that had been cut down, and the limbs cut off and used for firewood. They had been cut down, I should judge, ten or fifteen years before, and nobody had tackled them; it was too much.

Q. How long did you work at that? How much wood did you cut? A. Cut about thirty cords out of those old trunks.

Q. What became of the wood? A. Well, we sold the most of it to John K. Barnard.

Q. Who sold the wood? A. I sold it, myself.

Q. Who gave you authority? A. The Guardian of the valley. These trees that I speak of now had been cut down, and the limbs chopped off and chopped into firewood, and the trunks left.

Q. You spoke awhile ago about decaying trees having to be cut down now and then. How often did you have to do it? A. There are trees falling down all the time and blowing down.

Q. If they fall down, they don't need to be cut down? A. If a tree blows down, you have to cut the roots out.

Q. You spoke about cutting trees down? A. Yes, sir. You asked how often. There has been year in and year out that I have not cut a tree; that is, there has been two and three years at a time, because I was doing something else.

Q. There were no trees cut down except those which were cut down which were decayed? A. No, sir; I don't say that. In one place, there were some trees cut to open a view through from John K. Barnard's to Yosemite Fall, and then there were a few trees cut to open a view to Cook's hotel. Then, about the Stoneman House there were a number of trees cut down that endangered the house, and some trees cut down to give a foundation for the house; the house was built where the trees stood.

Q. How wide was that swath of trees or line of trees that was cut down—grove of trees—about Barnard's hotel, and how long? A. Well, from Barnard's hotel it was probably, before a tree was cut down—no, by the way, I did cut some trees down several years before; some cottonwoods right on the edge of the river. Well, it was, perhaps, there forty to sixty feet.

Q. Speaking of this grove of trees, this line, this swath of trees that was cut— A. [Interrupting.] There was no line or swath of trees cut until after you cross Yosemite Creek, and get into the rocks that have come down. Then there was a swath of trees and brush cut from fifty to sixty feet wide.

Q. How long? A. Well, four hundred feet.

Q. How large were the trees? A. Well, as I say, from two inches to three feet in diameter, or from half an inch—I wouldn't hardly cut a tree half an inch, because it would not be high enough.

Q. That swath was how wide? A. From forty to fifty feet. I don't know this from my own knowledge, Mr. Tulloch, because I never measured it. That is my mere estimate.

Q. What becomes of all that wood? A. That wood lies there yet, the most of it; in this swath it all lies there yet, but a very little. I went in there in the employ of the State to cut some, and we couldn't find anything that would pay for cutting—oak, hardwood. It is in this swath. There is no swath until you cross Yosemite Creek.

Q. How many trees were cut, do you think, and how much wood would it make if it was corded up? A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Did you cut some of the trees? A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. How came you to know it was four hundred feet long and forty feet wide? A. I have been there several times.

Q. You have no knowledge how much wood it would make? A. No, sir; it would not make—well—

Q. How came you to know they were three feet in diameter and three hundred feet high? A. I tell you I don't know of my own knowledge; it was my judgment; I saw the trees there. I won't say there was not some that was more than three feet.

Q. And yet you have no idea how much wood it would make? A. No; I could go there and look the trees over and tell you exactly.

Q. You don't know whether it would make one cord or six hundred? A. Yes; I do know it would make one cord, and I know it would not make six hundred.

Q. Can't you tell, approximately, about how much it would make? A. No; I could not.

Q. You have no judgment in the matter? A. No; I could not begin to approximate it without going and looking at every tree; and nobody else could.

Q. Do you or do you not know of a grove of cottonwood trees cut down on the pasture near Barnard's place, in the State pasture? A. No, sir; I know of no grove of cottonwoods cut down; I know we thinned out a grove of cottonwoods.

Q. What is the distinction between thinning out and cutting down? A. Where you cut out, I consider you cut every tree; where you thin it out, you cut out for the—

Q. It is a mere technical distinction? A. No.

Q. What kind of a distinction is it? A. I simply say you can go and cut down a field of grain, and you can go and cut it out. Trees that came down were certainly cut down, but there were more left than there was cut down.

Q. There was some taken out? A. Yes, sir; there was some taken out, and those that were taken down were pruned out.

MR. CRAWFORD: What was the object of thinning that grove out? A. For the purpose of general view, and because it was the State pasture, and it was coming up full. It was thinned out, and the young cottonwoods and willows were grubbed out of it. I will say in that respect, that in 1862, I was not there, but I have heard, the whole valley was flooded, and that the seeds of all kinds of trees and plants were spread all over the whole floor of the meadow, from wall to wall, and they have been coming up ever since; and when I first went in there ten years ago, trees that were little pines not more than four feet high and two or three inches through, are now trees that are ten inches through at the butt.

Q. When was that? A. I think that was the flood of 1862. I have been told by parties there that the flood of 1862 flooded the valley and spread these seeds all over the meadow.

Q. And they are now how large, do you say? A. I say there are trees that are ten inches through there now.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Atkinson, will you give the committee the name of the Guardian of the valley who authorized you to cut wood and sell it to J. K. Barnard? A. Mr. J. M. Hutchings.

MR. ROBINSON: Don't you know of a grove of timber over in the State pasture? A. Across the river?

Q. Yes? A. Those were pines, if you please.

Q. Don't you know of a grove of cottonwood trees that the stumps stand there yet, some of them three feet through, that were entirely cut out? A. No. Since you have mentioned it, I remember—if that is a grove—there was a little slough hole stood around there.

Q. How big a spot was it? A. Well, I suppose that cut up into stove wood, those trees made, as we measure by the tier, four feet high and eight feet long, maybe about twenty tiers of stove wood, eighteen inches long. I will say that they were old cottonwoods; they leaned in every direction, and they were a perfect eyesore to everybody and everything in the valley, and they stood right out in the middle of the pasture.

Q. In your opinion? A. In my opinion; yes, sir.

Q. That was not the question I asked you. How much space of ground did that grove of cottonwoods occupy? About how much space of ground did it occupy? A. That occupied—well, they stood around the edge of a sort of slough hole. The slough hole might have been sixty feet long, and perhaps twenty feet across it.

Q. How many acres would that inclose? A. I don't think it would inclose but a very small part of an acre.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you use cottonwoods for wood to burn? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they use pine for burning purposes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do they use oak? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When this grove was cut down some time ago, sixty feet long and four hundred feet long, why didn't they sell it? A. It is right in the rocks, where you can't get it out. It is where the water comes down from the Yosemite Fall, and it would cost more to build a road—

Q. How did they get in? A. They walked in.

Q. Couldn't they get out? A. The wood is only worth $2 50 a cord, and it would hardly pay them to cut it down.

Q. You consider the scenic grandeur would compensate them for cutting it down and cutting it out? A. I am sorry to say that I don't think my judgment is very good; it does not compare with some people who pretend to be judges of scenic grandeur. There is a very fine view from Barnard's back porch of the lower fall when it is high: a very fine view.

Q. How much more view did you obtain by cutting those trees? A. You obtained a view of the whole lower Fall, or nearly the whole of it. The Fall goes over and strikes on a bench of rocks and then separates in every direction.

Q. How much additional view, augmented view, as it were, would you have; one third, or one tenth, or one hundredth part, or what, if any? A. There was certainly some.

Q. Are you certain there was some? A. I am certain there was some. I never estimated. You get a view of the Fall where the Fall strikes the rocks; where the bottom of the Fall strikes the rocks—you get a whole view of it—you couldn't see that before.

Q. When these trees fell there, did they fall one after another in numerical order, or fall all over one another in a heap, in those places? A. As a general thing, a man that is chopping the tree falls them the way they will go the easiest. I would remark that it is an out of the way place; nobody would ever go there. It is a terrible thicket in through there where these trees were cut down, and when the water is up you can't get there.

Q. Is the view any better in looking back from the Falls in the valley, when you get to the Fall, by reason of cutting away of the trees? A. Well, the people don't go up there to look back at the valley. It is to let people at the hotel see the Falls, without going up there.

Q. When you are at the Falls and look down, do you think things would look pretty well down there? A. I don't know that you can get up to the Falls to look through. Even if you were at the Falls, I don't know that you would notice or would see the trees.

Q. Do you know anything about that? A. No; I certainly don't know whether you could see through them. I am rather inclined to think you could not.

Q. Wasn't there some timber cut down to get a view from Cook's old hotel? A. I mentioned it; yes, sir.

Q. For the same purpose? A. For the same purpose.

Q. What year was that? A. That was in 1887, I think it was. There were not near as many trees cut out then.

Q. When did Cook move away from that hotel? A. He moved away in the fall of 1887. At the time he moved out the Stoneman House was not completed, and Cook had no lease of it.

Q. What was the idea of getting a view from the hotel which was so soon to be abandoned? A. I tell you that Cook didn't know he was going to get the Stoneman House. He had no lease of the Stoneman House. It was not completed. Cook might have kept the hotel there as long as that house could have been propped up.

Q. In what year was the application made for the Stoneman House? A. I don't know anything about any application for the Stoneman House. I was not interested, and made no application. I hardly see how an application for the Stoneman House could come in under the question of the destruction of the house.

Q. Don't you know Cook made an application for the Stoneman House in 1887? A. I don't know. He might have made an application before they contemplated building it.

MR. ROBINSON: What time in the year were those trees cut to give the view from Cook's hotel. What month in 1887? A. Well, now, I can't tell you without thinking where I was myself, and I have got nothing to show.

Q. Were they cut at the same time the trees were cut to give the view from Barnard's porch? A. Yes, sir; they were cut at the same time.

Q. Do you know what time those trees were cut? A. That is what I was trying to think.

Q. Wasn't it in June? A. I was going to say it was in the early part of the season.

Q. Didn't you read in the newspapers that Mr. Cook got the lease of this Stoneman House at the August meeting, 1887? A. I did not. I know Cook told me that he had no lease of the hotel in the spring of 1888.

Q. I want to correct myself. I don't mean the lease. Don't you know that his application was granted for the Stoneman House? Didn't you read that? That his application for the Stoneman House was preferred over the others, at the August meeting, 1887? A. I have read a great many things in the newspapers about Yosemite that I know are not so. I will tell you one thing, however: that I received a letter from the Guardian during the winter of 1887, telling me not to allow Mr. Cook to occupy the Stoneman House, or his men to occupy the Stoneman House, as he had no right to do so; that the Stoneman House was not even accepted. That was away late in the winter of 1887.

MR. TULLOCH: Were you in the valley year after year, all the time? A. No.

Q. What year was this swath of trees cut down? A. This was in 1887.

Q. Where were you at that time? A. I was in the valley. I can't tell you where I was from day to day. I was right there. I didn't work at cutting the trees down. I was trying to think.

Q. Do you know who did? A. If it is any satisfaction I can tell you some of the men's names.

MR. GOUCHER: When was this grove of cottonwoods cut that Mr. Robinson asked you about? A. That was cut in 1887. It was cut in 1887.

Q. Do you know why it was cut? A. It was cut to—well, to beautify the valley. That is what it was cut for.

Q. The other trees that you speak of as having been cut for the purpose of opening a view from Barnard's hotel; when were they cut? A. They were cut in 1887; I am quite sure they were cut in 1887. Mr. Robinson has kept on this swath of trees particularly. There were some other trees cut between the swath and the hotel.

Q. Was that for the purpose of opening this view? A. It was for the purpose of opening this view; yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of the trees? Were they sound trees or not? A. Well, those trees that they cut over through the swath, were all sound trees. They were all sound trees.

Q. Do you know about how many were cut? A. I couldn't tell you, Mr. Goucher. I couldn't tell you how many trees were cut through there.

Q. Were you left to your discretion in selecting the trees that would be cut, as foreman? A. I was not foreman at that time.

Q. Did you control the work or participate in the work? A. No, sir; I didn't have any control of the work until in September, 1887.

Q. Do you know who designated the trees to be cut? A. They were cut under the direction of Mr. Dennison. I don't know that he designated the trees. It was such an immaterial affair, going into a thicket and cutting a swath through it, that he just told them to cut. I know they would go back and look and see if they could see the Falls, and then cut such and such trees.

Q. If I understand you, that opened a view to what are called the Lower Yosemite Falls? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From Barnard's hotel? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: You don't know of any wood having been cut and sold there to parties in the valley? A. Yes, sir; I have cut it myself.

Q. Other than what you first stated? A. Yes, sir; if you hadn't branched off, I would have told you.

Q. How much? A. Well, I suppose the Commissioners have—the State had on hand, when I left, in the neighborhood of eighty cords of two-foot wood. They cut it into two-foot wood, but the most of it was cut out of trees that had been blown down years before, as we all call it, in the cyclone that happened up close to the Stoneman House.

Q. What kind of trees were those? A. Pine trees; all pine.

Q. I should think that they would work the others up in the swath as well as those over there? A. I have told you before that it would cost four times as much to get those trees out where that swath is as the trees would come to; moreover, they have wood enough, that was actually in the way up about that Stoneman House, to last for years, comparatively.

Q. How many cords would that make? A. That about the Stoneman House?

Q. Yes, sir? A. Cook cut up a great deal of it.

Q. How many cords? A. I don't know. Cook cut up enough to last him all last summer.

Q. Did he sell it to campers in the valley? A. No; he burned it himself.

Q. Sold it to nobody? A. No. Then there is another grove that I have seen a picture of the stumps in the paper; I don't know why that is not brought in. That was a grove of thick pines. I heard it mentioned in regard to the stumps, and I will say that the stumps were left two feet or two feet and a half high. They were left for a special purpose. There are young pines that I know of that have been cut down six years, and the stumps are in the ground to-day comparatively as solid as they were the day they were cut down. These stumps were left as an experiment, to see if they wouldn't rot quicker. These trees up about the Stoneman House lay on the ground for seven years—pine trees—and were then worked into firewood.

Q. Do you think the fact of these stumps remaining up there, as many feet high as you have said, have tended to beautify the valley? A. They have not been remaining six years. I said I knew stumps close to the ground that were solid to-day.

Q. They are there still? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then they have been there six years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They left these things to see if they would decay? A. I hardly understand you, and I think you hardly understand me. I say there have been trees cut in the grove, and they were cut close to the ground so that no stump should be left. The idea was at some time to plow this ground, and the experiment was tried to cut the stumps high, to see if they wouldn't rot quicker, and to save grubbing the trees out.

Q. What was their idea in plowing up the ground? A. The ground is fern land. It is a nice meadow, but it never has been plowed and never has been cultivated. It is a perfect mass of brakes.

Q. Did they have an idea of making a ranch out of it? A. I don't know that they had any idea.

Q. You said that they had an idea— A. They had an idea of plowing the ground. I know they have a lot of timothy in the tool-house. I don't know but what they intended to sow it.

Q. Then they contemplated making a ranch? A. I don't know that they did.

Q. What did they want to plow it for? A. To make a fine meadow.

Q. Can you make a meadow by plowing? A. By plowing and seeding.

Q. Does that beautify the place? A. Yes, sir; it does, in my opinion, very much so. I think a fine grassy meadow is much preferable to a thicket of pines.

Q. You said awhile ago they left those there as an experiment, did you not—those stumps? A. They left those as an experiment.

Q. Did you not also say they had an idea of plowing up the ground at some time? A. Yes, sir. It was simply to see if the stumps wouldn't rot. It was simply an experiment, because there is so much there that needs to come out, and that must come out; that if they could be cut down, and the stumps would rot in a year or two, it would save thousands of dollars, save grubbing.

MR. CRAWFORD: Why must they come out? A. Well, in my opinion, they must come out.

Q. Why? A. Because the valley is growing to be a perfect wilderness of brush and young pines. The only clear places in the valley are those that have been fenced and used as pastures. As I told you, the whole valley was covered in this flood of 1862 with the seeds of pines and cottonwoods.

Q. Are these pines you speak of young pines? A. Yes, sir; young pines. They are nothing more than about six or eight inches through at the butt. There was a great many more six inches than eight. They were all cut up into cordwood.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you measure those trees? A. I did not.

Q. How do you know they were six or eight inches? A. I cut a good many myself. They might have been five and three quarters inches or six and one quarter inches. When you speak of a tree six inches at the butt it is just an approximate.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Atkinson, did Mr. Cook ever pay anything to the Commissioners for the wood he cut about the hotel and burned in the hotel, used in the hotel? A. I don't think he did. That is all they ever pay for wood, is what it costs to cut it.

Q. The Commissioners gave you permission to cut it? A. The Commissioners gave me permission to cut the trees, Mr. Rundell. If Mr. Cook didn't cut the trees and use them himself, the Commissioners would have to cut them up and haul them away, and they would have more wood than they had use for.

MR. GOUCHER: What were the trees that were cut around the Stoneman House cut for? A. Some trees were cut to give a chance to build a house, the foundation; other trees were cut to keep them from falling on the house; they endangered the house. Pine trees always make a tremendous litter of pine needles and cones around a house. Other trees were cut because they were scrubby, good for nothing things. I cut them myself, and I cut them because I thought I could get some trees that I could get something out of. I know of two or three trees that were as rotten as they could be.

Q. Were those rotten trees that you speak of of such a character that they were liable to fall in a storm? A. Yes, sir; they were liable to fall; and they were dead trees; they were eyesores.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you cut them because they were an eyesore, or because they were likely to fall down? A. I cut them for the wood I could get out of them.

Q. Then the eyesore had nothing to do with it? A. Not with me. I cut them by the order of the Guardian. The Guardian blazed every tree for me.

MR. GOUCHER: Don't you know it was at the order of the Commission? A. I will tell what I know—yes, I know that it was at the order of the Commission, because I had asked for trees and couldn't get them.

Q. Don't you know the Commission selected the trees that were to be cut? A. I know that the Commission went to the Stoneman House; I was not there; my partner who was with me was there, when you and Dr. May and somebody were there and blazed the trees.

Q. Now, had there ever been any visitation of a cyclone, or anything of that kind, that tore down trees, in that immediate vicinity? A. There had been in my recollection. Clarke came along while I was cutting wood one day and told me there had been another one once before that, and took me and pointed out to me dead trees.

Q. As to this one you know about? I don't care for the hearsay part of it. When did that cyclone occur? A. That occurred in 1879 or 1880.

Q. How far was that from the site of the Stoneman House? A. Well, the nearest tree was perhaps—the nearest pine tree that was down was perhaps forty yards. Most of the trees, however, were broken off about thirty feet from the ground.

Q. That is, those that were torn off by the cyclone? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you think, after a cyclone passed through a place and left trees standing there, do you think there was any danger of their falling down on the passers by—the balance of them that was left? A. It was not on the passers by; on the house.

Q. It makes no difference in the danger of falling down. Now, take decayed trees? A. If no cyclone came along in that place—

Q. Did you not testify awhile ago that one reason why a large quantity of trees were cut down was because they were decayed, and likely to fall? A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you not tell me you didn't know whether it was because they were an eyesore, or because they were rotten, that some of these trees were cut down? A. No, I don't think I told you that.

Q. Did you not tell me you heard other parties say that they were eyesores, but you didn't know anything about it? A. I don't think I told you anything of that kind. I have got my own estimation of what is an eyesore, and what is not; that is, as the term is used. I know that if I had my way, there would be lots more out of there.

MR. GOUCHER: The Stoneman House was built in the midst of a dense grove of large trees? A. Yes, sir; one side of it was a grove of very large trees.

Q. This swath of trees torn down by a cyclone was not a part of that? It was not immediately on the ground of the Stoneman House? A. No; right close to it. And, by the way, there was another, just such another tornado as that up at Glacier Point, here only two years ago. It piled trees, one after another, and made it perfectly impassable. That is two that I know of in that vicinity.

Q. Then isn't it true that the trees that were torn down by the cyclone were not torn down at a place where they would preserve the safety of the Stoneman House? A. No. The trees that were torn down would not preserve it, because they were away from the Stoneman House.

Q. Where the house was built, trees that were cut there were cut because of their liability to fall? A. Exactly. They might fall.

Q. In some cases, and in the other cases, because they were rotten? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And disfigured the house and the ground? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Why wasn't the grove of trees cut behind Barnard's house; the one that grows up to the house? Why did they not cut the groves of trees behind the Barnard house for fear they would fall? A. The grove of cottonwoods?

Q. Yes. A. Behind the old Hutchings house?

MR. ROBINSON: Yes, sir. A. I really don't know. I have told Barnard a dozen times he ought to have those trees cut. I have sat there in the winter time and there is one tree behind that house that I have seen lean away from that house to the river. I would not live in that house for anything. I know Barnard's family lived there one winter, and they moved over to the other house. It is really dangerous.

Q. Whose attention did you call to that? A. I called John K. Barnard's. I called the attention of the man who lived there that winter.

Q. Did the Commissioners have knowledge of that? A. I don't know.

Q. Did the Guardian have knowledge of that? A. I don't know. He knows the trees are there.

Q. Did he have knowledge of that? A. I don't know that he had a knowledge of it. Allow me to say, that after those winds, I have seen the branches piled up that would come down off of those trees on the house, and pile up a foot deep, pine branches and cedar branches, in front of the house.

Q. Have you seen those things actually occur? A. Actually; yes, sir.

Q. Right at the time? A. No; I didn't see them at the time. I know that there was a strong wind in the night.

Q. What is the diameter of those trees? A. Oh, they are from two feet and a half to three feet, I think, some of them.

Q. Are not some larger than others; are some of the diameters not greater? A. There is a cedar tree that grows up to the house, that the diameter is certainly greater than that.

Q. Have you any idea of their age? A. Well, that is a question for scientists to decide.

Q. I ask you if you had an idea of their age? A. No, not in the least; they were there when I came there.

[The clerk read the fifth charge.] A. Well, in regard to burning shrubbery, there is no shrubbery in Yosemite Valley, as I understand shrubbery; nothing that is preserved and kept. If a dense thicket of pines is shrubbery, then there is lots of shrubbery there; lots of it; if patches of willow is shrubbery, there is lots of shrubbery there. Instead of burning shrubbery, we have exercised the utmost care to prevent fires. Several fires have got out, and we have mustered all hands and fought them to our fullest ability. I know that there has been brush that has been cut. I know that where we have grubbed up about the Stoneman House, I know that the stuff has been burned there. I know that when the Stoneman House—before they started to lay the foundation, they put a fire into a little clump of trees there and burned that out; little, small pines. What was the last part of that charge?

THE CHAIRMAN: "And allowing persons to do the same for their private gain." A. That was in regard to plowing meadows, but they would not burn shrubbery for their private gain.

MR. TULLOCH: Do they plow meadows for their private gain? A. I really don't suppose they plowed them for fun.

Q. That is not the question. Did they plow them for private gain? A. They plowed them to raise hay on.

Q. What did they intend to do with the hay? A. They intended to feed it to their stock.

Q. And to feed it to other parties' stock? A. If they could sell it; yes, sir; doubtless.

Q. Don't you think they did sell it? A. Of my own personal knowledge I don't know if there ever was a pound sold.

Q. You don't know whether they plowed land up for their personal gain or not? A. I don't know it. I know the land has been plowed. I know the Commissioners—

Q. Didn't you just say they plowed it up for personal gain? A. You asked me if I didn't know.

Q. I asked you if you didn't know? A. Of course I don't know. They plowed it, and they seeded it, and whether it was for fun, or whether it was for private gain, I don't know anything about it.

Q. Did you not tell Mr. Rundell now, when he asked you about fires or doing something for private gain, did you not say that that related to plowing up the lands for private gain? A. I was answering in regard to burning shrubbery. Then says I: "What is the latter part of that?" and he says: "For their private gain." I says: "That relates to plowing lands." That is the last part of that clause.

Q. That is an intimation that they plowed the lands for private gain? A. Not at all. I have heard this question read here half a dozen times last night, and I simply mentioned that the private gain clause came in on the plowing of the land.

Q. Did they plow the land for private gain? A. Of my own knowledge I don't know anything about it. I know simply that the land was plowed. If you won't be quite so technical, perhaps I can answer a little more intelligently.

THE CHAIRMAN: I will read you the question in full again.

[The Chairman read the fifth charge.] A. Well, is that allowing them to burn shrubbery for their private gain? Does that come in there? Is it altogether, or is it plowing land for private gain?

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, what do you know of plowing up meadows, or allowing persons to do so, for their private gain? A. I know that the meadows have been plowed there, and in my opinion it has been of great benefit to the valley; just as much as it is, or more so, for private gain.

Q. And also for their own private gain; for their own private purposes? A. Well, that is technicalities, I should call it.

THE CHAIRMAN: I see nothing technical about it. A. I will tell you, Mr. Rundell. Mr. Harris has worked a ranch there; the land has been plowed; gardens have been planted there; fruit trees have been planted; hay has been raised there.

MR. TULLOCH: Did that help the general public or private parties? A. Both.

Q. Didn't it help the private parties more than it did the public? A. I will tell you; I have known Coffman & Kenney to have their stable there with not a spear of hay in it, in the height of the season.

Q. Did this thing inure to private profits? A. I don't know anything of my own personal knowledge in regard to that private gain part.

THE CHAIRMAN: Who did gain by it? A. Everybody gained by it; there was hay raised there to sell to campers; there was hay raised to feed stock that was in there.

Q. Who did this plowing? A. J. J. Cook has plowed, and Leidig has plowed, and Harris has plowed. Coffman & Kenney have plowed, the Guardian—the State force—has plowed.

Q. All those parties had stock of their own to feed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did Coffman & Kenney plow? A. They have got about ninety acres seeded this fall; they had, when I came out; I don't think they plowed any more.

Q. Well, they sell hay and barley? A. They sell, and they feed.

Q. And the natural inference is that it is done for private gain, isn't it? A. I tell you here is the private gain: this property that they plow is property that they lease from the Commissioners for that purpose.

MR. TULLOCH: The benefits then accrue to the parties who have leased the ground? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are private parties—that is not the public—it is not you and I and Tom, Dick, and Harry, is it?

MR. GARDNER: Does the State benefit by it? A. Yes, sir; the land is leased; there is rental paid for it.

THE CHAIRMAN: The last part of that question is: "Thereby doing irreparable damage to the natural beauties of the valley." A. No; there is no irreparable damage done to the beauties of the valley, nor no damage done that is not irreparable, either. There is no damage done, either irreparable or not. In 1880 (in regard to this cutting) I was living there, and on Sunday I was in my little camp out there, and Mr. Griffith, from San Francisco, a steamboat man, came there to the cabin and wanted a drink of water, and I gave it to him, and got talking with him; and he said, "How is it they don't cut some of these trees out of this place?" I says, "That is the very thing they don't try to do." He says, "Mr. Perkins is my partner, and when I go down, I am going to see him, and see if I can't get some of these trees cut out. A man has got to go a way out of the middle of a cow pasture to see anything."

MR. TULLOCH: Could you get there now if you wanted to? A. Where?

Q. Where these cow pastures were? A. Yes, sir; there is a trail through there, and turnstiles.

Q. Wouldn't you have to cross fences? A. No; cross no fences; there are turnstiles.

Q. Could you get there with a horse? A. No; you couldn't get there without opening gates.

Q. If there were no fences, could there be gates? Do you tell me that there are no fences? A. I didn't say that there were no fences. I said they could go there without getting over fences, through the turnstiles.

Q. They would have to go through fences? A. Through these turnstiles that are put there for the express purpose.

Q. There are fences? A. There are certainly fences. Everybody knows that that has been in the valley.

Q. What is your idea of damage; irreparable damage or damage of any kind? A. Irreparable damage means, to me, damage that cannot be repaired.

Q. In relation to the valley? A. In relation to the valley—irreparable damage in relation to the valley—I should say that if Agassiz Column was toppled over, which is a rock which stands by itself, I would say that is an irreparable damage.

Q. If eighty or ninety cords of wood are cut in the valley, and taken out and sold, would that be an irreparable damage? A. No; but a positive benefit—a public benefit.

Q. And if that money went into the pockets of the parties who leased the land, that would be a public benefit, would it? A. Without regard to money at all.

Q. You said these places were covered over and some pastures in there. Don't you think the destruction of these lilies and these nice beautiful romantic spots, and all this sort of thing, and picturesque scenery, don't you think the destruction of those was irreparable damage? A. I don't know. Well, there are some lilies growing there; this Mariposa lily grows there all the time.

Q. Don't you think those things were damages; the destruction of them? A. There are thousands of them in every direction, Mr. Tulloch. I suppose that one, possibly, out of one hundred thousand that would grow in the valley, has been plowed up. You go anywhere else and you will find them. Of course there is a good many flowers that did grow there that don't grow now; that have been eaten up by the stock.

Q. And a good many plowed up? A. A portion that have grown on the land, that would have been left, has been plowed up. Allow me to say that these parcels of land that have been plowed are out of the way of where a foot passenger would want to go; and wherever a foot passenger wants to go there has been an opportunity for him to go through a turnstile.

Q. There has been a fence put up? A. The turnstiles are in the fences.

Q. You can't go there with a horse unless you jump the fence, or went through the gate? A. No.

Q. Then there has been an irreparable damage, has there not? A. No; decidedly not.

Q. You don't regard those things as damages? A. I don't regard it as a damage because you can't go in a certain place with a horse; no.

Q. The plowing up of the valley, the destruction of the flowers and the beautiful places? A. They have destroyed no beautiful places. I fail to see how plowing up a piece of land will destroy a beautiful place. All the quiet nooks and corners, which I suppose you bear in mind, are on the sides of the valley.

Q. They are hanging on the sides of the cliffs, I presume? A. All right; I can find some quiet nooks hanging on the sides of the cliffs.

[The clerk read the sixth charge.] A. Well, land has been fenced there; land has been farmed there ever since—I don't know how long. It is nothing that these Commissioners have inaugurated.

MR. TULLOCH: Have these Commissioners indorsed it? Have the present Commissioners indorsed it? A. I don't know. It has been done. I don't know whether they have indorsed it.

Q. Was it done under the present regime of the Commissioners? A. It has, some of it; a very small portion of it.

Q. Have those dimensions not been enlarged and increased? A. Not very greatly.

Q. Have they been at all? A. Yes, sir; I think they have. I may say that they have been.

Q. How many acres would you think had been added to the inclosures? A. I don't know. There has been a field of, I should say, about twenty-five acres fenced at the new hotel.

THE CHAIRMAN: Who fenced that? A. That was fenced—

MR. TULLOCH: Doesn't one of those fences run right up to the road, sir, one side of one of the fences? A. One side of one of the fences starts from the bridge and runs up—built right on the edge of the wall. That would be positively a benefit. It is built on the edge of the wall and goes up for, well, one hundred and fifty yards along this wall, and then turns off around and comes out around the Stoneman House, and then comes back to the road again and goes along two hundred—

Q. Does it run along the side of the road? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far? A. Two hundred and fifty to three hundred yards, I should say.

Q. How near to the roadbed? A. Well, I don't know how near to the roadbed; it is just outside, possibly six or seven or eight feet.

Q. You spoke of these additions that have been made; you said twenty-five acres had been made in one place; you didn't get through. Were there any other additions? A. There was a piece fenced in down by the Guardian's office, possibly four or six acres.

Q. Any other additions? A. Between Yosemite Creek and Stony Point, there is a fence running down the road.

Q. We are speaking of enlargements; additions to the original inclosures or ranches? A. That is not much of an inclosure, because the fence is all—

Q. How much of an inclosure, sir? A. I couldn't tell what it is; it is all grown up.

Q. How long is that fence? A. Well, that fence is half a mile, I guess. I don't know that it is as long as that.

Q. Has that fence been run there latterly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the present regime? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large an area does that inclose? A. Well, it is simply a fence from a creek. It is a very irregular piece of land. The creek runs and turns and crooks. I couldn't begin to tell you. It is a thicket, most of it.

Q. How large a piece of land do you think it incloses? A. I wouldn't begin to estimate it.

Q. Is it one acre or a hundred? A. Well, it is more than one acre; I don't know as it is one hundred.

Q. Seventy? A. Well, I couldn't tell you that.

Q. Sixty-five? A. Well, I can't tell you at this time. If I would go there, perhaps, and walk it over, and stake it off—

Q. How is it you know considerable about the cutting of trees, and that sort of thing, and about the diameter and conditions under which they were cut, and yet you don't know anything about the land inclosed? A. Well, I do know about the land inclosed. Here is a piece of land, Mr. Tulloch, of all kinds of shapes and dimensions; here it is perhaps ten feet wide, and in another place it is one hundred and fifty.

Q. Do you think there are fifty acres in it? A. Well, possibly there may be fifty acres in it.

Q. Wouldn't there be sixty acres? There are twenty-five in there, and fifty in another; that is seventy-five; and five in another; that is eighty. They have been inclosed under the present regime, have they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you testify awhile ago that very little increase had been made under the present regime? A. I did not.

Q. I understood you did. I asked you if there had been any additions made, and you said but very little. A. I think that eighty acres is very little. I will admit that eighty acres has been inclosed. It is a very small proportion in regard to the amount of land in the valley.

Q. There was nothing said about it comparatively. You spoke about it absolutely. A. A little here and a little there. It don't amount to anything.

THE CHAIRMAN: All that fencing has been done by private individuals?

A. Oh, no; this fence that he speaks of, this long fence, was run by Coffman & Kenney.

Q. I say, by private individuals? A. That fence, this new fence that is there, was made by the State.

Q. Coffman & Kenney had a lease from the State? A. I presume so. I run the fence; the most of it. Coffman paid me for it.

MR. TULLOCH: You had a wire fence up there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that picturesque? A. I don't know that it is absolutely picturesque, but it obstructs the view much less than any other fence you could put up.

Q. Is it not a barbed wire fence in more senses than one? A. Most fences put up there are two wires and two pine poles; two straight poles with the bark off.

Q. There is a barbed wire fence? A. All right, it is a barbed wire fence, two wires and two poles.

Q. Do you think it is pleasant for a young lady or an old lady or any other kind of a lady to come along and have her dress torn off? A. If the young lady or old lady climbs the fence she may get her dress torn off.

Q. You think that is improving the park? A. I think it is the least conspicuous of any fence.

Q. We are not speaking about it comparatively, but absolutely. Is it an improvement? A. I would prefer that there were no fences, but if there has got to be a fence, that that fence is the least conspicuous of any fence you can put up.

Q. In an artistic point of view, how is it that way? Does it add to the romance of the place? Would people come from the Eastern States to get a look at it? A. They would not, and they won't see the fence if they are standing by a cliff five thousand feet high and looking up five thousand feet.

Q. Is it right for the Commissioners to make a trap for me to go across and get torn to pieces? A. You have no business to get caught.

Q. Some geologists who may be there for the purpose of examining the nature of the trees, the sequoia, and all that sort of thing? A. There is no charge for a geologist to examine the floor of the valley and those meadows.

MR. GOUCHER: Who did the fencing near the Guardian's office; you spoke of four or five acres being inclosed there? A. The old fence inclosed most of it, except one stretch along the road.

Q. How long has that old fence been there? A. The old fence was there when I came there. From information, most of that fence was put there by A. G. Black and Marcus Hedges.

Q. How long ago? A. Well, that is more than I know. It was there when I came there.

Q. When did you first go to the valley? A. In 1878.

Q. Was it an old fence at that time? A. It was an old fence at that time.

Q. Do you remember whether Lemmon's orchard near the present Stone-man House was inclosed the first time you went to the valley? A. That was inclosed at the time I went there.

Q. About how many acres? A. About six acres.

Q. Do you know where Hutchings' house is? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any territory about that house inclosed at the time you went to the valley? A. Yes, sir; that was all fenced up around there.

Q. Do you know where the Harris farm, the Royal Arch farm, is? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now leased by Coffman & Kenney? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that or any part of it inclosed at the time you first went to the valley? A. Yes, sir; that was all inclosed. There were more fields at the lower end of the valley inclosed when I went there.

Q. Are those fields in existence now, at the lower end of the valley, that were inclosed when you went there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The new fencing that has been done near the Stoneman House, who did that? A. The State men did it. I presume it was done by the State.

Q. By order of the Commissioners? A. By order of the Commissioners.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know it or presume it? A. I know it was done by order of the Commissioners.

Q. Then you don't presume it? A. No; I know, because Chapman was there, and ordered the fences put up.

MR. GOUCHER: Do you know what that inclosure is used for? A. Yes; it is used for cows.

Q. Cows belonging to whom? A. Cook.

Q. Used in connection with the hotel? A. Yes, sir; used in connection with the hotel.

Q. The way you answered Mr. Tulloch, I understood you to say that there were about four acres of new ground had been inclosed near the Guardian's office? A. Well, that land was not inclosed. There was a fence on two sides of it, and on at least half of the other side; that is, a lot abutted on it—this Elizabeth Glynn lot—and there was a little gap there of forty or fifty yards, across which the fence was put.

Q. That is, in other words, it required, in order to make the inclosure complete, the construction of a fence of about forty yards, across an opening? A. Yes, sir, and the river was on the other side.

Q. The rest of the fence was all old, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir. Allow me to say these fences have been constructed with the utmost care. Every post is in line; the top of every post is just so, every pole; and every wire is stretched as straight and level as it can be.

Q. That is something I don't care about? A. The fences are made as artistic as possible.

Q. What I wish to ascertain further is this, for what purpose was that fence run, or that inclosure completed? A. That fence—the State stable is in that inclosure.

Q. Explain to the committee what you mean by the State stable? A. The State has two mules and a saddle horse for the Guardian. The State stable is in that inclosure, and the State teams, and the wagons, and the carts, and everything has been kept in there.

Q. What was the other fence run for that you spoke of? A. I think that piece was leased to Coffman & Kenney for their saddle horses. It was for them to pasture their stock, to keep them from running at large in the valley. They had inadequate pasturage.

Q. That is, if I understand you, this fence that Coffman & Kenney run was for the purpose of preventing their horses from running at large? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that constructed? A. That was in the spring of 1886, I think.

MR. GOUCHER: There is one question here which is not touching the question under discussion, but I want to ask it now because I will be compelled to ask it later or at some time. At whose instance did you come here as a witness? A. Well, I received a notice from Mr. Meany requesting me to appear before the Senate Committee.

Q. Had you ever been notified in regard to the matter prior to the time you received that summons? A. Mr. Robinson told me in the valley, when I quit or was discharged from the State, that I had better write out a statement and send it to the "Examiner." I told him that I had no grievances which I wished to air, and he said the "Examiner" aired nobody's grievances, but if I ever expected to have anything more to do with Yosemite, or with Yosemite affairs, I had better write to the "Examiner," and that I would, in all probability, be summoned before a committee of investigation at the Legislature next winter.

Q. When did he say that? A. He told me that in the valley.

Q. When? A. Well, that was in the month of September.

Q. Did you give him a statement? A. I gave him no statement. In talking with him, he asked me why I quit, and so on and so forth, and I naturally told him.

Q. But did you make any statement further than that; any written statement? A. No; no written statement.

Q. Did you ever have any further communication with him in regard to the matter before you were summoned? A. None whatever.

Q. Do you know whether your statements, as made to Mr. Robinson, ever appeared in the "Examiner?" A. I know that some of them did; yes, sir.

Q. As you stated them to him? A. Well, I think so. I think they were about as I stated them to him.

Q. Do you remember when they appeared? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. What month? A. I do not, sir. I couldn't tell you. I remember getting the paper and reading it over to see them. Somebody told me that they were in the paper, and I borrowed the paper to read it.

Q. Well, after that did you have any further communication with anybody in reference to these matters, up to the time when you received this notification from Mr. Meany? A. No written communication.

Q. Any other kind of a communication? A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Written or verbal? A. No, sir; I had no communication with anybody.

MR. TULLOCH: How many cows and cattle were confined in those pastures of which you spoke awhile ago? A. I think Cook had thirteen or fourteen.

Q. Were those ranches and pastures for the purpose of keeping their stock and horses and so forth from running out upon the commons? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very well. Why, then, that being the case, didn't Coffman & Kenney, when the Commissioners insisted, keep their stock in? A. I don't know. I know that the Commissioners have insisted that Coffman & Kenney should keep their stock up. I know that there has been a great deal of trouble about it. I know that the horses broke out of the pasture, and I know Clarke upon one occasion—I think that Coffman & Kenney were authorized to run their horses at the lower end of the valley, under the charge of a herder, until there was enough feed in this pasture for their horses. They complained that their horses were actually starving, and that they would have to take them up and feed them; that there was no pasturage for them; and they were allowed to turn their horses out under the care of a herder, on the north side of the valley, at the lower edge—below the iron bridge, I think; it is a matter of record, I know.

Q. Didn't they run them up into the campers ground, above Barnard's bridge, this summer? A. I don't think I ever saw a loose horse of Coffman & Kenney in the campers pasture.

Q. Would you have seen them if they had been there? A. If I had been there and the horses had been there.

Q. You would naturally have seen them in your daily work and routine; you would have observation; you would have known it? A. I would not, unless my work took me there.

Q. You would naturally have known it? A. No; I would not have known it. There might have been a horse or a dozen horses there, and I wouldn't know anything about it, unless I was there.

Q. You don't know whether they were there or not? A. No; I know that there were some horses up about the Stoneman House; I know that they were a great trouble to Cook. Every morning there would be three horses there, and Cook would send down to Coffman & Kenney, and they would send up and drive them back, and the next morning those horses would be there again. They were a great annoyance to him. They would break out of corrals, and jump out of fields, and they are bound to get away if they can.

Q. No such thing as keeping them in, I presume? A. Of course, you can tie them.

Q. All that adds to the beauty of the place? A. All right; if you think so.

[The clerk read the seventh charge.] A. I never heard of it until I heard the charge read here. I never knew of the charge. I have heard complaints. I know that Mr. Dennison made a great many enemies there simply because he enforced the rules of Commissioners there.

THE CHAIRMAN: You know nothing of this charge whatever? A. I know nothing of the charge whatever; never heard of the charge.

[The clerk read the eighth charge.] A. I never heard of anybody being evicted from the valley. I know that there are rules and regulations that forbid the residence of improper or immoral persons. I don't know that anybody was ever forbidden to live there. What was that about connivance, if you please?

[The clerk again read the eighth charge.]

THE CHAIRMAN: Answer that question. A. I know nothing about any connivance with anybody.

[The clerk read the following portion of the eighth charge: "And to evict other residents, and debar the general public from just and legal use of the valley."] A. The general public is not debarred.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know of anybody ever being turned out of the valley? A. Yes, sir; I know of one man.

Q. Who was that man? A. That man's name was John—what was his name, Mr. Hutchings—that teamster, if you remember?

MR. HUTCHINGS: John Blackburn? A. That is the man.

THE CHAIRMAN: What did they turn him out for? A. He was turned out because he was a thief.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know he was a thief? A. Yes, sir; I know he was a thief.

Q. Of your own knowledge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ever steal anything? A. Yes, sir; he stole from Mr. Hutchings.

MR. GOUCHER: This is a new man to me; who was this Blackburn? A. John Blackburn was a teamster who came in there when Mr. Briggs was Secretary.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Sent by him. A. Sent by Mr. Briggs; he sent in two men. One was discharged by Hutchings for abusing the animals and the other man took the team.

MR. GOUCHER: Mr. Briggs was a preacher, was he not? A. I think he was.

Q. When did that occur? A. That occurred in 1881 or 1882—1881.

Q. How was he removed? A. When Mr. Hutchings' wife, I think, was buried. This man's father was an undertaker, and he took sort of charge of the ceremonies; and when the funeral left the house he stayed at the house and he went through everything; that was just the amount of it, and he stole from everybody, as the supposition was. They didn't know how to get at him, and when we were finally on the team to go out, all hands, the Deputy Sheriff came with a search warrant to examine his effects. His effects were searched and certain things were found, and he was ordered to leave the valley; I guess given an hour's notice to leave the valley immediately, and I know he struck out on foot right away.

MR. GOUCHER: You will pardon me for asking this question; it don't throw any light on the issues, but I did it because the name is new to me, and I don't know anything about the man. A. That is the only man that I know was ever turned out of Yosemite Valley.

[The clerk read the ninth charge.]

MR. McLEAN: I think it ought to be said right here that Mr. Briggs didn't know the character of the man, or he would not have sent him there. Mr. Briggs is an old acquaintance of mine, and he couldn't have known the character of that man.

MR. GOUCHER: I made a jocular remark. I presume it will be so understood.

THE CHAIRMAN: The committee understood it that way. There is no intention to disparage the character of anybody.

[The clerk again read the ninth charge.] A. Well, I know of this C. O'Donnell incident, and I heard it mentioned before that it was black paint that was used to paint out his name. It was paint as near the color of the rock as we could possibly get; and I heard, at the time, they refused to prosecute him for the simple reason that he simply did it for notoriety, and said that he wanted them to prosecute him.

THE CHAIRMAN: You know of no other case? A. No other case where there has been any disfigurement that I can remember of. I don't think there has been any. I never saw any. I know that names are cut, but nothing so prominent as "C. C. O'Donnell."

MR. GOUCHER: You know that no names of persons as prominent as Dr. O'Donnell were written? A. No names written as prominently, perhaps, or in any such prominent position. I don't know that there is anybody that is as prominent, perhaps.

THE CHAIRMAN: Would the cutting of those names have a tendency to destroy the natural beauties of the valley? A. No; they were mostly painted on rocks—at Register Rock—it is a great place for painting names. There are a great many names registered on a big rock on the trail, and on the bridges you will see names penciled.

MR. TULLOCH: The valley is not at all disfigured in any other manner, is it? A. Yes, sir; it is disfigured by this underbrush and young pines.

Q. Do you call that a disfigurement? A. I certainly do; yes, sir.

Q. I thought from the testimony that was given the other night that the underbrush and pines—the pines were thinned out from year to year, as the occasion might require, and the underbrush was collected and burned, or placed away? A. That is what should be done.

Q. Is that not a fact, sir? A. That it has been done?

Q. That it has been done by the Commissioners? A. Only in a very small proportion of the valley: a very small proportion.

Q. Why wasn't it done? A. Because, in the first place, we never have had means to do it; never had money to do it; and we have always had so much other work to do—making roads and building bridges.

[The clerk read the tenth charge.] A. I don't know anything about that: nothing whatever.

[The clerk read the eleventh charge.] A. Well, now, the grant extends a mile, all around, back from the valley wall, and the contractor's mill is just outside the extreme limit of the grant; just outside the extreme limit; that is, a little back from the edge. That is, I say it is; I don't know that it is, but I know that the stake has been pointed out to me—"That is the corner of the grant right there," and that the mill is still higher up the hill. Now, I had the impression—I have ridden along there several times since the mill has been there, and I thought then, as I looked from the road up, that there were about three trees fallen that would come on to the grant, I supposed. I don't know where the line runs, and have not the slightest idea where the line runs; but my impression was that they were a little nearer—the line might have angled down the hill. It was my impression that three trees were in the grant. They located two quarter sections, I think. I saw the notices published in the paper; and they cut the timber and hauled the lumber to the Stoneman House.

MR. CRAWFORD: You don't know but what there may have been more than three trees? A. I don't know but what there may have been more than that. I don't know that there was that. I know that they located timber. It is a large pine forest, and it is away up on top of the hill. It is not in the valley.

MR. TULLOCH: Who located the timber? A. I can't tell you whether it was Mr. Carle, Mr. Croly, or Mr. Abernethy. I know that I saw the notices in the "Mariposa Gazette."

Q. Where do they reside at? A. At Sacramento.

THE CHAIRMAN: Were those gentlemen the contractors that built the hotel? A. Yes, sir; I saw the timber notices in the paper.

MR. TULLOCH: How many trees did they cut? A. I could not tell you; I have no idea.

Q. How many do you think? A. I can't think about it, because I don't know anything about it; have not the least thing to form an opinion from.

Q. You knew the forest was located? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew where it was? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew about where the line run? A. No, I don't know about the line.

Q. You knew about these three trees? A. I knew about those, because I could see them by passing the road.

Q. You could see the forest, also? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know whether they cut the trees or not? A. I do know they cut the trees.

Q. How many do you think? A. I have not the slightest idea, because there is an immense forest up there, and it is hills and gulches. You can see where they have hauled them, and I saw them hauling the trees down off of the hill.

Q. How long did they continue in that operation—a month? A. Yes, sir: they were four months, perhaps.

Q. They were hauling trees down during that time? A. I don't know.

Q. What did you see them hauling down? A. I saw them hauling a sawlog on the truck with an ox team.

Q. You saw them hauling timber down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They did that three or four months? A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't you say they did? A. I say that the mill was running.

Q. Very well. The mill ran on trees, didn't it? A. I expect it did.

Q. And they got it in that place? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that forest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Running three or four months, in that length of time, with wagons coming down, how many trees do you suppose that would amount to? A. I don't know anything about it. But allow me to say, about running three or four months, that they had shingle machines, planing machines, and molding machines.

Q. It all had to come out of the trees? A. Yes, sir; and they had to saw the lumber and plane it.

Q. It all came out of that forest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is above the valley? A. Yes, sir; there is a tremendous forest there yet.

Q. It makes no difference about that; there is not so much as there was? A. No; I couldn't say anything about the trees.

Q. It was enough to keep the mill running for four months at least? A. I will tell you pretty near how many thousand feet of lumber. I can't either. I thought I remembered how many thousand feet there was in the hotel.

MR. GARDNER: That was not on the grant, was it? A. No.

MR. TULLOCH: Did the contractors do it on their own authorization, or were they authorized so to do by the Commissioners? Did they do it on their own responsibility? A. Do what?

Q. The parties who hauled the lumber down. The parties who hauled their timber down; were they authorized to do it by the Commissioners? A. The Commissioners had nothing to do with it. The Commissioners had nothing to do with building the mill or the sawing of the lumber or anything else.

THE CHAIRMAN: You think they only cut three trees within the limits of the grant? A. I don't know that they cut that. I don't know that there was a tree cut.

MR. TULLOCH: Did they blow down? A. I don't know that they blew down. I don't know who cut them down; I don't know that the sawmill men cut them down; I don't know that. I know that the trees were cut down.

Q. You knew that they were cut down? A. I knew that they were cut down. I don't know that the sawmill men cut them.

MR. GARDNER: You thought it might be on the grant? A. I thought possibly these three trees were on the grant. It is nine miles at least from the Stoneman House to where these trees are.

Q. Carle, Croly & Abernethy got these two quarter sections under the timber Act? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were cutting their own timber? A. Cutting their own timber, certainly.

[The clerk read the twelfth charge.] A. Well, I know that there are no exclusive privileges in the valley; no one is debarred from anything. I know that there is nothing—nobody is debarred from anything, as I understand an exclusive privilege. You can come in there with a horse and ride wherever you want to. You can come in with your carriage and ride wherever you want, although, at the same time, there are carriages there for hire; there is a general livery business. I don't suppose you could come in there and be allowed to start a livery business or hire a carriage out or run it. And then in regard to the stores: you can get anything; anybody can come in there and peddle anything, sell anything that they want to, beef—there is a butcher shop there—a butcher has a privilege of keeping a butcher shop.

I know that a great proportion of Cook's beef comes in from the outside. I know that Barnard this fall has butchered a good many of his own cattle. I know that there has been beef in there peddled from the outside. I have seen McCauley, who has a little ranch outside, come in and peddle beef. I don't know of any exclusive privileges, as I understand exclusive privileges. I certainly don't know of any exclusive privileges.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Commissioners allow one party to rent out carriages? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if I went there with my carriage, they would not let me hire it out? A. I don't think that the laws of the State would allow you to hire it out, would they? They would not allow you to do it.

MR. TULLOCH: Would the exclusive privilege men allow you? A. I don't know how they would stop you.

Q. That is not the question. Would they have a desire to? A. If it injured their business, they certainly would desire to stop you.

MR. GOUCHER: You say you think these exclusive privilege men, so called, would have a desire that you should not hire out a carriage if you went in there? A. Yes, sir; I think so. They pay so much a year for doing a livery business, and I think they would be opposed to anybody's coming there.

Q. They would be opposed to them, to anybody coming in there, who didn't pay the State for the privilege, and competing with them who are paying? A. Why, certainly, they would; yes, sir.

Q. That is a matter of inference on your part, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever known of a case of that kind to arise there during your experience, where outside parties, who were not paying for the privilege, came in and undertook to offer, for hire, wagons or horses? If you know of any such case, just state when it occurred? A. I really don't know of any unauthorized party endeavoring to hire out carriages. I don't know that anybody ever did, that I know of.

Q. You simply believe, then, as a business principle, that these men who are paying for the privilege of hiring carriages and horses would object to any one going in there and competing with them? A. Without paying? Yes, sir; I do.

THE CHAIRMAN: They will be sustained by the Commissioners in that? A. They would be sustained by the Commissioners.

MR. GOUCHER: How do you know they would? A. Well, I know they would kick up a row pretty quick.

[The clerk read the thirteenth charge.] A. That reduction of rentals relates—that charge relates to the reduction of Coffman & Kenney, on that ranch. Well, that ranch is certainly not worth as much to them as it was to Harris; certainly not worth as much to them, and for this simple reason: Harris was an Israelite. He had a large family. He dealt in everything. His family baked bread and sold to the campers. He sold them milk, and eggs, and vegetables. If a camper came in there and wanted to sell his outfit, he would give them six bits, and if the next camper came in there, he would sell it for $6 50. He made a living in every way. He would go down to San Francisco in the winter and buy up a lot of old stage horses, and one thing and another that was no account, and turn them out to pasture and fatten them up, and the first camper that had a sick horse, he would want to strike a trade with him. I have known him to have a horse that he offered to sell for $30 in the fall, and the next spring he would sell it for $150, and that is why I say the land is not worth as much to Coffman & Kenney as it was to Harris.

MR. CRAWFORD: Wasn't the place burned down also—some buildings?

A. There was a house there that was burned down. There was a house and granary burned down; yes, sir. Mr. Harris had men employed cutting wood wherever he could get wood to cut. For a long time he had the only team in there to do a jobbing business; to haul wood. I know we cut wood for $2 50 a cord, and he charged $2 50 a cord for hauling it.

THE CHAIRMAN: Tell the committee, if you please, how this reduction of rentals came about. Did Harris leave the valley, or give up this place voluntarily? A. Well, I don't know. Everybody's opinion is—most of the residents—and it is my opinion, that he left the valley for the valley's good.

Q. That is not material. We want to get at the facts of the case. The rent was reduced. That is an established fact. Why was it reduced? A. Well, now, Coffman & Kenney applied, and I suppose they gave the Commission sufficient reasons, that they reduced it.

Q. Was Harris willing to continue his lease at the same rental that he was paying the Commissioners? A. I don't know. And furthermore, I have always understood that Harris was allowed to keep his place, although other parties at other times had offered more rent than he was paying. I know for a fact, and I think it will be offered in evidence here—I know that witnesses are coming who offered more than Harris was paying at the time.

Q. That is not material at this time. Mr. Harris will be before the committee before the examination is closed.

MR. TULLOCH: How do you know that it will be offered in evidence? A. I know that the parties are summoned as witnesses.

[The clerk read the fourteenth charge.] A. Well, as regards illegal and arbitrary contracts, when I went to work for Mr. Dennison, I went to work there—I knew what I was doing. There were no illegal and no arbitrary contracts, because if a person didn't go to work they were not forced to go to work. I know we worked ten hours, and I went to Mr. Goucher individually and asked him if there was not a law in regard to working ten hours, and he said certainly there was, and he seemed surprised to know that we were working ten hours, and he said he would attend to it immediately, which he did.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know of any place where the wages of the workmen were withheld by the Commissioners? A. No; I know that at times they have been slow in paying. I know that they have been slow in paying at times; when they would have no money in the treasury they couldn't pay. I know that I have waited seven months at one time; but, however, it was only for one month that I waited seven months.

MR. TULLOCH: How did you wait seven months? A. It was seven months from the time I earned the money until I got it.

MR. GARDNER: One month's pay? A. There was one month's pay. At that time, most of that time, I was not employed by the Commissioners. But this illegal and arbitrary contracts, I am quite sure, refers to some overtime. When Mr. Goucher introduced this bill, the resolution was also adopted to pay the men for overtime—that is, where they had worked ten hours, to pay them for a day and a quarter, from the first day of January to that year, I think it was; and for some reason the overtime has not been paid; I don't know why.

MR. GOUCHER: Let me ask you a question, please. The Commission did order it paid? A. They certainly did order it paid at the next meeting; at the next June meeting I know that you made a special inquiry to find out if the overtime had been paid, and when informed that it was not, you said you would inquire into it and see that it was paid.

Q. Don't you remember there was an order made at that second meeting last June, again, that it be paid? A. Yes, sir; there was an order made at the second meeting that it should be paid.

[The clerk read the fifteenth charge.] A. I have not the slightest idea what that refers to.

THE CHAIRMAN: You don't know anything about that? A. No, sir; I do not. Their contracts certainly have all been recognized.

[The clerk read the sixteenth charge.] A. I don't know anything about that.

THE CHAIRMAN: You have no knowledge of that? A. None whatever. I don't know anything about that business.

Q. Were you in the valley at the time the Stoneman House was leased? A. Yes, sir; I suppose I was. I don't know when it was leased, nor where it was leased, nor anything about it.

[The clerk read the seventeenth charge.] A. Now, there has been no wood cut in defiance of their own rules and regulations, because their rules and regulations say, I am quite sure, that no timber shall be cut without permission from the Guardian, and there has been no trees cut, I am sure, that he has not come there first, and said: "Cut this tree and cut that tree." They certainly have got to have wood; they certainly have got to have wood to burn, and as I explained further along early in the testimony, there has no trees whatever been cut for wood, and especially for wood, that it was not, in my opinion, a benefit to the valley, and an absolute benefit. They always pick out dead trees. I know Mr. Dennison has told me time and time again: "The Commissioners tell me not to have a tree cut so long as there is one green leaf on it." He has told me that time and time again, and if I would bring him to a tree, if it had just one live branch on it, he wouldn't let me cut it.

MR. TULLOCH: I thought you testified awhile ago that trees that were dead or about decayed you had to cut them down for fear they would come down on you? A. Those trees were about the Stoneman House, if you will please remember, that we cut down, by order of the Commission, to beautify the grounds and to preserve the house.

THE CHAIRMAN: "Thereby destroying the natural park timber." A. I have answered that, I think, fully.

[The clerk read the eighteenth charge.] A. I never knew of toll being collected, except in a piece that I saw in the paper where a gentleman going out on the Mariposa road accused Washburn of collecting toll from him.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is the only instance? A. That is the only instance. And I would say that the toll roads have built the grades from the valley out. The hills are about four miles long in each instance, within the limits of the grant. They are built at great expense up the sides of the bluff, to get on top of the mountain; they are inside the limits of the grant. And the Legislature two years ago, I think it was, passed a bill indemnifying those parties for those roads. One, I think, was vetoed, and the Controller refused to pay the other; and to give these gentlemen who had built the roads something that they might at some time possibly get paid for their trouble, a new lease was given them, but in regard to the terms of the lease, I don't know. This is a mere matter of hearsay.

Q. Do you know that they collected tolls on that road? A. I certainly never heard—I know that they don't on one road; I know that they never have, and I never heard of but one instance, and I don't know that that was done, only what I read in the paper; there was something in the meeting in regard to Washburn returning $5 to some man who had gone out there with a private team.

Q. What did the Commissioners give him that lease for? A. That lease was to give them something, I think, that they could sell; that they could be indemnified for. The roads were built, and in ten years were to lapse to the State. I don't know anything with regard to it. I have only a very indefinite idea of the whole transaction. It is something entirely outside of my province. You will hear about that, because the road-men, I think, are summoned. It is no use questioning me on it.

Q. You know of no case of toll having been received? A. No, sir; I never heard a complaint.

[The clerk read the nineteenth charge.] A. Well, that must relate to the Leidig family, and they were certainly not evicted. They went out of there of their own accord. They certainly were not evicted; neither forced out or turned out, in any way, manner, or shape.

MR. TULLOCH: Does that apply to the Harris family? A. I don't think that the Harris family were evicted or turned out. I have heard Mr. Harris say—he told me in the valley and he told me here—that he would not go back to the Yosemite Valley for the whole valley; his family, you couldn't get them back; he never was so glad to get out of a place in his life.

THE CHAIRMAN: Why? A. Because he is so much better off than he was. Harris told me that in the valley, and told me that here in Sacramento a week ago.

Q. Then you know of no occasion of turning anybody out of the valley? A. No; nobody was ever turned out of the valley.

Q. What about the district school of Yosemite—after Harris and Leidig left with their families, was the school closed? A. Oh, no; the school has been running—the school run all last summer; they both left in the spring; the school run all last summer. The school certainly was not destroyed.

MR. CRAWFORD: As a matter of fact, the school was not destroyed? A. The school was certainly not destroyed. The school has been going with Kenney's children, and with Barnard's children; but, then, I don't know how many children it takes to get school money, and I don't know but there may not be children enough to run the school to get the next appointment.

Q. How many children are there in attendance? A. Kenney, I think, has six children; there are three or four that attend school, and Barnard has two that attend school.

Q. That makes about six? A. I think there is six. Let us see if there are any other children. There are no children old enough, I believe, but those.

Q. Do you think those six attended school regularly? A. Yes, sir—they attend school regularly, pretty near every day.

Q. Those are all the children there are in the valley? A. There are some younger.

Q. Too young to go to school? A. Yes, sir; too young to go to school.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know whether that school is kept publicly or privately? A. It is a public school.

Q. Has been all summer? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GOUCHER: You have omitted to state in regard to McCauley's children, have you not? A. I thought of those afterwards. He has three children. I presume they are old enough to go to school.

Q. Isn't there one of Barnard's that is within the age so as to draw school money—the youngest child? A. Well, he goes to school. There is the girl and the boy. They both go to school.

MR. CRAWFORD: That would make about ten children of school age in the valley? A. Nine. I don't know whether Kenney has got three children or four children who go to school. He certainly sent three to my positive knowledge, and Barnard two.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understand you to say you know positively that the school is kept up with public money? A. The school was kept up until the term closed; I am positive of that.

Q. When did the term close? A. Well, I don't know whether it was in August—it was in July or August.

Q. And hasn't it been opened since? A. I don't know; it had not been opened when I left there.

MR. GOUCHER: Aren't you mistaken about the time when the school closed there; didn't it continue until October? A. No.

Q. Do you remember who the teacher was? A. Miss Kerrins.

Q. Miss Mamie Kerrins was teacher? A. Yes, sir; I don't know when the school did close, really. I remember in regard to the exhibition, and so forth, but it was my impression it was in August.

THE CHAIRMAN: You couldn't say positively? A. I couldn't say positively. I know it was in session in June. I know that it was in session in July. I am quite certain it was in session on the Fourth of July.

[The clerk read the twentieth charge.] A. The roads and trails never were in better condition than they have been in the past summer—never. The guides are all my personal friends, and all the drivers of carriages; and I have asked them time and time again if the trails or the roads were out of repair in the least to let me know, and they have done it; and they have been kept in perfect repair. I have heard arguments between McCauley and the guides in regard to the trails, and I never heard a guide say that the trail was not in better repair last summer than when McCauley kept it. In regard to the Eagle Point trail—that trail is very little traveled; and the Yosemite Point trail—there is a difference between the Yosemite Point trail and the Eagle Point trail. They both go nearly to the Yosemite Point, and then the Eagle Point branches off. That is on top of the mountain, and there never has been any care bestowed on it since it was built, and it doesn't require any care. The Yosemite Point trail—men go on it whenever there is the slightest thing reported out of the way on the trail, the men are sent right up to repair it.

Q. When were you on this Eagle Point trail? A. I was on this Eagle Point trail in October; I think it was in October.

Q. The whole length of it? A. The whole length of the Yosemite Point trail.

Q. You found it in good condition? A. I found it in first class condition.

MR. ROBINSON: What do you call Eagle Point trail? A. I call the Eagle Point trail from the head of Yosemite Falls to Eagle Point.

Q. What do you call the Yosemite Point trail? A. The Yosemite Point trail is from the foot of the trail to Yosemite Point.

Q. From the foot of what trail does it begin? A. I believe I am a little mistaken; I believe I saw this road, the Eagle Point trail.

Q. Hasn't that trail always been known as the Eagle Peak trail, from the foot to the summit of Eagle Point? A. It was always known as Conway's trail.

Q. But since Conway has ceased to have proprietorship, hasn't it been generally designated as the Eagle Peak trail? A. We never speak of it as the Eagle Peak trail. I never put it down in my books as the Eagle Peak trail.

Q. The Yosemite Point trail begins at the head of the Falls and goes over to Yosemite Point? A. No; I didn't say that; I say the Eagle Peak trail begins at the top of the Falls—

Q. That is not the question I asked you? A. You said I said, and I said, no, I didn't say.

Q. That is not what I am asking you at all. The Yosemite Point trail proper begins at the head of the Falls and goes over to Yosemite Point? A. That is what you say.

Q. Isn't that what they designate the Yosemite Point trail—the new trail? A. No. I always call the trail, and always have on my time book and the record that we keep of the men's work, where they are at work—that they are employed on the Yosemite Point trail.

Q. That is supposed to begin at the valley level, and go to the top? A. You can begin anywhere you want to.

Q. Isn't it a positive fact that nobody has gone to that trail this year? A. I have told you that is not called the Eagle Peak trail.

Q. And you say that trail is in perfect repair—the Eagle Peak trail? A. The name has nothing to do with the condition of the trail.

Q. You say the Eagle Peak trail is in good repair? A. I say the trail from the valley to Yosemite Point is in good repair.

Q. You call those logs at every turn good repair; a step that drops from ten to twelve inches? A. Those logs were left in—they are not logs, begging your pardon. They are in there for the preservation of the trail.

Q. Who put them in there? A. Well, I think—I don't know who put them there.

Q. By whose order were they put there? A. I think by Mr. Dennison's.

Q. Were they put there before Mr. Dennison ordered them? A. I don't think so.

Q. Are they in any other trails? A. Yes, sir; in every single one of the other trails.

Q. It makes a series of steps as low as ten or twelve inches, sort of zig-zag? A. Nothing of the kind. I have seen the Snow trail and the Glacier Point trail utterly obliterated by summer rains, because there was not those large rails to turn the waters off at the corners, at the zigzags.

Q. Didn't you use to ditch them? A. That is what those poles are there for. In constantly traveling up the trails, no matter how large a ditch you dig, the first herd of horses that goes down levels that ditch unless there is a pole to hold the dirt, and they are put in zigzag so that the water will go off clear, and not wash down the whole length; and allow me to go on and further say that those poles are an absolute necessity, because in a great many places, not in one place or two places, but in a great many places on those trails the dirt of which the trails are composed has got to be packed in on our backs in barley sacks a great distance, and a heavy shower will sometimes cause a week's work there for four or five men packing in dirt, where a pole would turn it off, and one man could go alone and scratch the dirt in, and that would be all that is necessary, and those poles are not an obstruction.

Q. Isn't it a fact, that as you travel over those trails, going down, that a horse has got to step from six inches to ten inches and a foot, and bear his whole weight on his fore feet to get down those places, and are they not growing deeper all the time? Isn't it like stepping down out of a chair? Isn't it dangerous for people riding those horses? A. No; I don't think that there is any danger on the trails, because there has never been an accident, to my knowledge, on any of those trails. Allow me to say, Mr. Rundell, that the men go constantly over these trails, and keep throwing in dirt, and working the dirt back to what Mr. Robinson calls these steps.

THE CHAIRMAN: You consider them all in good condition? A. All in excellent condition, sir.

[The clerk read the twenty-first charge.] A. Well, I never had any intimation: never heard anything of the kind but once in the valley, never; and that was last Fourth of July, about seven o'clock. Just at the break of day, John K. Barnard came to my room and woke me up, and wanted me to go with his man and cut some little cedars, to decorate the house. I told him I didn't want to go. There were thousands of cedars. He says, "You better get up; you know where they are; you will probably pick them out better, and there can be no talk about it." And he urged me, and finally I said I would go; and went with him, and helped him haul in a load or two in a cart, of young cedars and pines, to put up in front of his house. We cut them in the densest thickets, where you could cut out a hundred and wouldn't know it; and they were put in front of the house. Cook did the same at his hotel. I helped Barnard to get them up, because it was along toward seven o'clock; he wanted to get it done: and I helped him put his flags up. Next day I went to work. Cook had his house decorated in the same way. He looked at it, and said, "You have done that pretty well." I said, "Yes, but the State helped to decorate Barnard's." I did it simply and solely as an accommodation for Barnard, and was not paid for it. That was on the Fourth of July.

Q. You got no pay for it? A. Barnard paid me for it—paid me individually. I didn't want to take anything, but he forced it on to me. I told him I didn't want it, it was merely an accommodation, and he said, "Why, take it." That is the only thing I ever heard in regard to work for private parties. But he refers particularly to work done about the Stoneman House; the cutting down of these trees. What is it, Mr. Robinson?

MR. ROBINSON: Putting in the dirt and all that stuff around the Stoneman House; putting gravel around the Stoneman House this summer. A. The State teams hauled in the gravel.

THE CHAIRMAN: For the Stoneman House? A. In front of the house. I know they improved the ground, you may say, to a certain extent. They built an ice house; they built a chicken house: they built a wood-house for him. They fitted up a building for a store, where his store and saloon is, and billiard room. Allow me to say this, that where the Stoneman House was built, when the ground is dry, it is like ashes, you will go to your ankles every step; and the State teams hauled in gravel. I don't see why that should be work for private parties any more than hauling it off the road. It is where the stages come in front of the door. The stage drives in there in front of the door, and the State teams hauled in gravel on top of this loose sandy soil.

Q. Do you know whether Cook's lease of the hotel called for those improvements? A. I am quite sure that it does not, because Cook told me that he would not accept the lease of the house unless they made his improvements for him; and one of the Commissioners, I think it was the Governor, spoke up and said: "What constitutes a hotel? Is it the bare house, or is it the necessary buildings to surround it?" and I think that they consented to make improvements.

MR. TULLOCH: Who asked that question?

MR. GOUCHER: The Governor, he said.

MR. TULLOCH: Did he ask it of you? A. No. I mentioned that Cook told me this. This was simply a conversation between myself and Mr. Cook.

[The clerk read the twenty-second charge.] A. I think that is an assertion more than a question. I don't know. I have seen no incompetency or anything of the kind, I declare.

THE CHAIRMAN: You know nothing about the charge? A. No, sir; nothing whatever.

Q. You know of nothing that the Commissioners have done to destroy the comfort or convenience of visitors in the valley—visitors from abroad? A. I do not; I certainly do not.

Q. Or for the welfare of the residents of the valley? A. I know nothing.

Q. You know of nothing of that kind being done? A. I know of nothing whatever, I am sure.

[Adjourned to the call of the Chair.]

FRIDAY EVENING, February 8, 1889.

GEORGE BARNES.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Where do you reside, Mr. Barnes? Answer—In Jacksonville, Tuolumne County.

Q. What business are you engaged in? A. Mining.

MR. TULLY: We propose to question Mr. Barnes in regard to charge twelve, with regard to work done in the valley and withholding wages.

Q. Have you ever worked in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time, and what years? A. I have worked there for this last four years.

Q. How long since? A. Oh, I have worked in the valley before. I have been working in the valley off and on ever since 1874, when the roads started.

Q. Who employed you to work there? A. Mr. Hutchings, first, in the valley.

Q. And afterwards for whom did you work? A. Mr. Dennison.

Q. Who is Mr. Dennison; he is one of the Guardians, I believe? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you working for the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what were you engaged; what particular branch of labor? A. Well, I was engaged in work.

Q. What kind of work; cutting wood, plowing, or what? A. Cutting wood and putting up wire fences and trails, roads, blasting.

Q. You worked generally in anything of that sort? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whatever was required of you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you regularly paid for your services? A. No, sir; they kept back time; they kept back time all the time; I was paid except this overtime that they promised us.

Q. That overtime, I understand, is time that you worked over and above eight hours a day, which was your regular day's work? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the overtime is the time you worked outside or beyond eight hours a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, to what particular time does that back pay refer; under whom were you working? A. Mr. Dennison.

Q. That was under Dennison's administration? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whilst he was Guardian? A. Yes, sir; I have the time here, I believe, that Dennison gave me. [Produces paper.]

Q. What portion of this did they pay you? You say they paid you for the eight hours every day; for every day of eight hours. They paid you that, did they? A. They didn't pay me; when I left I sold my time to Louis, and I asked him if he would take the overtime; he said, "No." I says, "I will keep it, anyway." I sold my time; there was $155 coming to me, and I sold it to him for $150.

Q. How long had that been due and unpaid? A. About two months and three weeks, I guess.

Q. Had you demanded your wages in the meantime? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your pay? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of whom did you demand it? A. Of McCord; I asked him if the pay was coming up

Q. Who was Mr. McCord? A. He was the Guardian of the valley.

Q. At that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he the one who usually paid the wages of the laborers there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you demanded your wages of him for your full time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What excuse did he give you for not paying it? A. Well, he said he didn't think that we would get our overtime; he told me that.

Q. What excuse did he give for not paying you your just time? A. He told me the money hadn't come, "and just as soon as it does come you shall have it, George," says he, "and if you want money to pay your board, I will let you have it." Says I, "Mr. McCord, I work for money, and I don't care about borrowing any money." I had to quit then to go home.

Q. You sold your claim? A. I sold it to one of the Italians, named Louis; I can't think of his other name.

Q. What was the amount due you? A. $189 06, overtime and all.

Q. That was the overtime and all? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What amount was due you on the time, exclusive of the overtime. A. There was $155.

Q. That would leave some thirty odd dollars for overwork? A. $34 06.

Q. Well, I understand you to say that he said he didn't pay it, because he didn't have the money; the money had not arrived. Is that true? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did the money arrive before you sold out? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it had arrived or not? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know that it had arrived, or that it had not arrived? A. I know it had not arrived when I came out of the valley.

Q. How long after your demand was it before you sold out, and left the valley? A. I sold to him, about three days before I left the valley, my time.

Q. How long was that after you demanded your pay? A. Well, it might have been a week; it was just about a week, because I waited a week to see if it might come, but then it didn't come, and I sold to Louis and went out. I had to go out to work a quartz mine.

Q. Do you know whether it was a usual thing for them to be behind-hand in the payment? A. Yes, sir; they used to keep the money back from the boys for three months to four.

Q. Do you know of any other instance in which the money was kept back three or four months? A. No, I don't; I know that they owed the boys on work; that they owed them three or four months at a time.

Q. How do you know that; by conversing with the parties to whom the money was owing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They told you they had not been able to get their money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did you say you sold your claim for? A. I sold my claim for $150.

Q. For $150? A. Yes, sir; it was $155, and I gave him $5 when I sold it.

Q. You discounted it $5? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was for the regular eight-hour pay? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That didn't include the overtime? A. No.

Q. You gave him a certain bonus? A. $5; yes, sir.

Q. Your account was $180 and something? A. Mine was $189 06.

Q. Then you lost something on that transaction, didn't you? Supposing that you were entitled to that overwork, then you consider you lost something on that transaction? In other words, you got $150, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Well, I got this from Louis; I gave him $5 for taking it.

Q. $150? Then I understand you to say that your claim against them for the regular eight-hour work and the overwork was one hundred and eighty odd dollars? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then did you or did you not lose any money on that transaction; any money that you considered was legally due to you, overtime and all? A. Well, that is all; that was all.

MR. GARDNER: You lost $5? A. Yes, sir, I lost $5; I gave him $5.

Q. That was all you lost? A. Yes, sir.

MR. CRAWFORD: Did you sell the whole claim, for the overtime and the regular pay, for $150, or was it simply the regular pay? A. Simply the regular pay.

MR. TULLY: Well, have you ever got anything for that overwork? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any demand for it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you sold out; after you left there? A. I never made no demand before I came here to Mr. Goucher.

Q. Did you or did you not get it? A. No, sir.

Q. Did they pay it? A. No; I have not got it.

Q. What reason did they assign for not paying it, if any? A. Well, they were to see some one else first.

Q. Had to see somebody else? A. Before they could pay it; yes, sir.

Q. Then I understand from this statement of facts that you consider they still owe you for that overwork? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, some thirty odd dollars? A. $34 06.

Q. You say that you have made a recent demand for it, lately? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the answer was they would have to see somebody else? A. Well, they would see some one else to get it.

Q. They would see some one else to get it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They didn't deny that they owed it? A. No.

MR. CRAWFORD: How long has it been since you finished that work and made your demand for the pay? A. Well, it is since, as near as I can recollect, about the twenty-seventh of last July.

MR. HOOK: How often were the Commissioners in the habit of paying money to workmen? A. Well, once every two or three months; and, then, it might come two or three months—

Q. Didn't they have a regular time to pay you? A. They let us get a few months behindhand.

Q. Did they pay you four times a year, or three times a year, if you worked steadily? You worked eight hours a day; I understand that? A. Well, I think they paid about three times.

Q. Three or four times a year? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the demand that you made on them was the time they had not money on hand so as to pay you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no doubt but that they would pay you? A. No.

Q. You have no doubt now but that they would pay you $34 06? A. No, sir; not a bit.

Q. You don't think the Commissioners intended to defraud you, anyway, do you? A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. It is simply the delay on account of being State business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They treated you pretty well? A. They treated me as well as any man ever treated me.

Q. You had no difficulty in any way or shape with them? A. No.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Barnes, did you ever write to Controller Dunn about this business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever get any reply from him? A. Yes. Mr. Robinson has got the letter.

Q. What was your object in writing to him? A. Well, it was just because I thought I might get the money quicker, and I would stop that week, and then go down and work a quartz claim. That was the reason. I thought I might get it quicker by doing that. I thought he might push it on.

Q. Now, Mr. Barnes, you say you worked down there in all kinds of work? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you build any fences down there, or help build them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of those fences; what kind of fences? A. Well, wire, and hemlock and little pines, and cedar posts.

Q. In what part of the valley are those fences? A. Well, there is one fence away down by Black's Springs; that is in the lower end of the valley, and then there is another from, you might say from Leidig's away up—well, to Harris' place, I suppose. I know we run that.

Q. You are a pretty good judge, Mr. Barnes, of the size of a field, by acres, a little more or less? A. Yes, sir; I am, guessing by acres.

Q. How much land is there fenced in, under fences, wire, and brush and tamarack, or whatever it is, in that valley? A. Well, I guess down to the lower end, by Stegeman's garden, down at Black's Springs—I should think there was about near seven hundred acres in all.

Q. Fenced? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Seven hundred acres of land fenced within the valley? A. I think so; within the valley.

Q. Well, in what portions of the valley? Is the bigger part of that valley fenced, or all of it? A. Well, it is right in the center of the valley; right in the best part of the valley.

Q. Most of it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How does that lie with regard to the hotel; the bigger portion of that. How does it lie with regard to the hotel and the main road that is there? A. Well, it lies pretty crooked, I would say.

Q. Does it lie above or below—does it lie up towards Mirror Lake or is it down below the hotels? A. Well, I should think Barnard's hotel was in about the middle of it. It starts from Leidig's to the Central Dome, and runs plump up to Harris', and Barnard's is just about the middle of the fence.

Q. To what uses is that land put; what do they use it for? A. Well, they farm on Harris' place. There is great deal of grain raised.

Q. They farm it? A. Yes, sir; the other end is meadows for horses.

Q. And pasturage? A. Yes, sir; and pasturage.

Q. About what is the portion of meadow land or pasture land; one half, one third, or one fourth? A. Well, I should think if you take it at the new hotel, there—

Q. Everything; all the land; all these inclosed lands. What is the proportion of grazing land to the land that is under cultivation? A. Well, I think there was maybe two hundred acres.

Q. Two hundred acres is under cultivation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what is that seeded? A. Grain, principally.

Q. Do you know who sows that grain on the land? A. I think it was Coffman & Kenney.

Q. Who are Coffman & Kenney? A. Well, they are the men who have the mules in the valley.

Q. The owners of the saddle train? A. The owners of the saddle train.

Q. Do you know whether they farm that as having rented it, or whether it is a gratuitous gift to them, the privilege of doing that? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Barnes, you have been pretty well over that valley, haven't you, at different times? A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Now, I will ask you one question in regard to those fences. Simply in the light of a fence or a barrier, or an obstruction to the free ingress and egress, or the going in or going out of that valley, in order to look at it as a tourist or visitor would want to look at it. How do those fences operate? Do they prevent them from doing it or not? A. Well, I don't think the fence looks very well, myself.

Q. I am not talking about how they look, but is it an obstacle, a barrier to the free egress and ingress to the beauties of that valley; to a person wanting to go out and look at it all over and take it in in its entirety. For instance, if you were a stranger, and went into that valley and wanted to take a general look at it all over—enjoy all its scenery and everything—do you consider that those fences would operate as an obstacle or a barrier to the free access to any portion of it there that you would desire to see? A. It would not; not at the mountains.

Q. You can see the mountains from the ground? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But suppose you wanted to go in the little nooks, and holes, and corners, and examine it in that regard, as perhaps many persons would: would you have to climb over those fences, or how would you get in? A. Yes, sir; it is fenced along the roads; it is fenced plumb to the road on each side.

Q. You will understand the nature of the questions. Do you consider that those fences are in the way to a visitor that wanted to go and have free access to all the scenery of that valley? I don't mean to look up at the mountains, but to look at any portion of it—to go into these little cañons? A. Yes, sir, it is in the way, because you would have to go over the fences.

Q. You would have to go over the fences? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those fences supplied with gates pretty generally around there, so as to give a man a chance of going through the gate instead of climbing the fence? A. There is two places: one going down towards Leidig's, and another over to Yosemite Bridge.

Q. Outside of those gates a man would have to climb a fence, or go under it, or through it? A. Yes, sir, as far as I can see.

MR. HOOK: He can go in those fields any time he wants to, can he? A. There is one of these swinging gates.

Q. He can climb the fence, or go inside there, any time he pleases to view the scenery? A. Yes, sir, he can climb through the fences.

MR. GARDNER: Are there any turnstiles or any way for foot-passengers to get across the fences? A. There is a turnstile to go to the Yosemite and to go down towards Leidig's, and then the rest is all inclosed. Those are the only two I can remember.

MR. CRAWFORD: Do they permit people to go through those fields whenever they please? Do the authorities allow people to go through those fields? A. I don't think they will hinder them. I see them go through once in awhile.

MR. TULLY: How many horses, more or less, have Kenney & Co. there? A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. Well, fifty, or sixty, or seventy-five, or twenty? A. Well, I should think they had fifty.

Q. Are those horses accustomed to roam at large through those pasture fields and over that inclosed land? A. No, sir; they have got places for those by the Yosemite Falls there and up at their place.

Q. They have special pasturage set apart for their own use? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In which they turn their horses? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not there is a part of that meadow land set apart for campers? A. Yes, sir; there is a piece up by Mr. Kenney's; he has got it now.

Q. That is towards the upper end of the valley, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What amount of land is reserved there for the accommodation of campers and visitors? A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Well, a little more or less; make an approximate? A. Well, there may be thirty acres.

Q. You think that there is no more than thirty acres? A. I can't tell how long the lot is; I am working away from there for the last two years. I have been through it once or twice, but didn't examine it very close.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is all, Mr. Barnes.

FRED. BRIGHTMAN.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Mr. Brightman, where do you reside, sir? Answer—In Mariposa.

Q. Are you acquainted with the Yosemite Valley country up there? A. Yes, sir; pretty well.

Q. You have been there, have you? A. I have been there for the last twenty years, working in that vicinity.

Q. What was your occupation whilst you were there? A. I went there first and worked for Hutchings. I went in there to buy his pack train.

Q. To buy the pack train? A. To buy his pack train, and I couldn't buy it. I went in there to buy the train so as to pack in Johnny Smith with a saloon—his fixings; and I couldn't buy it, and went to work for Hutchings.

Q. In what way were you employed? A. Well, guiding parties.

Q. How long were you in that business? A. Well, I worked for him two seasons.

Q. Well, after you got through with that, were you engaged in any other business there? A. Then I started in the saddle train business myself.

Q. Well, did you have a saddle train there? A. Yes, sir. The first year I had six head of horses and couldn't give satisfaction, and the next year I took in twelve, and the next year I took in thirty-two, and the next year I had ninety-six. I had Hutchings' saddle train with my own.

Q. From whom did you obtain permission to go in there and operate your saddle train, if you had it from anybody? A. Not any one. I went in there the same as all the rest did at that time.

Mr. Hook: That was before the Commission was formed? A. Well, no; the Commission was formed then. Mr. Raymond was in during the old Board of Commissioners' term. I went in there with the expectation to take the camping parties. That was my intention in the first place, to go in there and furnish saddle horses to camping parties at $2 50 a day. I thought I could make it pay, and it would be reasonable on them. That was my intention, and I followed it up until the year that I took Mr. Hutchings'. I didn't interfere with any one, because the parties was all ticketed in by Washburn. The custom was then to sell tickets in San Francisco, and furnish horses as many days as they wanted them in the valley.

Q. They came with a ticket that gave them the right to use the horses? A. Yes, sir. If there were any parties went up to the valley, and didn't buy saddle horse tickets—they got into trouble, and after awhile they wouldn't buy them, tourists wouldn't, because they found they could hire horses cheaper in the valley than what they were selling tickets for; and for that reason any parties I could find that hadn't got the round-trip tickets, I would offer them horses at $2 50 a day.

Mr. TULLY: Who furnished the horses to those ticketed parties? A. Mr. Washburn; they were running the stages.

Q. That was then a part of the stage line business? A. That was the stage line.

Q. Well, how long did you remain there in that business? A. Well, I remained there—I have been in the business all the time; but the season that we had the ninety-three head of horses we run horses for nothing—that is, you may say for nothing; we didn't run them for nothing, because we got two bits, and I paid parties $1 apiece to ride my horses into the valley—this is, if they went to Black's hotel. If I engaged a party to go to the valley from Jentry's—that was the Oak Flat road; I run on that road altogether; I didn't run on Washburn's road at all; and if I went out to Jentry's and got a party to go to Black's, I would pay them $1, and Black paid me the $1 back, and they agreed to take my horses. If they rode any in the valley, they rode my horses at $2 50 a day; that was that arrangement.

Q. Then I understand there was some competition between the saddle trains there? A. Yes, sir; there was a good deal.

Q. You were competing with whom? A. I was competing with Hutchings and Washburn and Stegeman.

Q. They also had trains? A. They had trains too, the same as me.

Q. Are you in that business yet? A. No, sir.

Q. When did you retire from it, and what was the reason, if it is a fair question? A. I think it was in 1877, that I applied; Mr. Lemmon died. I had always had that branch, with this condition: that I was to cut his hay in one field that was fenced in—the old Lemmon field. I cut the hay on shares. I had one half of the hay, with the privilege to run my horses above Mr. Hutchings' old claim. You understand there were two claims, the Hutchings claim and Lemmon's. I run mine on Lemmon's claim, with the understanding, when I went there, to have both sides of the river, where the Stoneman House is now, and where Hutchings' or Lemmon's house was burned down. But the second year we got to having considerable hot times, and the horses went up to old man Lemmon's orchard (and it was not fenced in, you understand), and the horses got to bothering him and his trees, eating the apples off and knocking them off, and he commenced shooting them. And Mr. Hutchings had horses (he had run his horses up there and bothered him), and they got to shooting them. And then we called a meeting, and I proposed to Washburn and to the rest that had saddle trains, that we hire a man, and pay the man betwixt us, to herd the horses away from the orchard.

Q. Mr. Lemmon's orchard? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: What were your receipts for that year that you had the ninety-three horses? A. Our receipts for that year were $2,500, and Washburn paid me $500 for twenty-five head of horses to run to the Big Trees, which I took right out of the valley, and when we came to settle up in the fall the books showed that we only received $2,500.

MR. TULLEY: Now, did you lose any share in the saddle train? A. Well, I came pretty near losing it.

Q. Well, will you please state to the committee here what was the nature of that transaction and how it happened? A. I applied, with George Kenney—he was my partner then—we applied to the Board for a lease; Mr. Lemmon had died, and we applied for a lease of the ranch.

Q. What ranch was that? A. That was the Lemmon ranch; the two meadows there and the house that was burned up. They granted us the lease for ten years—a ten years' lease. After we had got the lease we found that we were short of money. I told George then: "The best thing we can do is to let Mr. Sprague in with us," and he proposed Mr. Harris. Says I: "All right," but still I didn't like Harris, but still we let him in, with a written agreement that he was to pay the lease money, and the seed would cost about $300. That was the money that he was to furnish.

Q. What was the lease money? How much was it? A. $500. Well, we got the lease and transferred it to him, to Harris, with the understanding that he was to furnish that money; and the next fall, if we paid him, we were to take the ranch back. Well, I went to work then—started right in to plowing. I borrowed a plow of Leidig, and we owned a good four-horse plow that Sprague had. I expected him in in a couple of days, and I had put four horses on two plows—one single plow, and one four-horse plow. I started in to work, and I hadn't been to work more than an hour and a half before Harris came up, and said that George Kenney was complaining about my running the thing at too big an expense; and I told him the circumstances, and we got into words, and I told him I would burst up the transaction that we had entered into. Well, I still kept my bed in the house. I thought to myself that as long as my bed was in the house, that was my home, as I leased the place to get my mother there to make her home. I thought as long as my blankets were there that I would see the thing settled up, anyway, before I got out of it. I went down one morning—I had been up to Mirror Lake—I went down, and found my blankets thrown out under a tree. Well, of course, I thought my foothold was gone; that let me out with the saddle train. I had my blankets, and the next spring I went in there, and I had to go to work hiring out. I went to work for Mr. Washburn, by the month, and I worked on that summer. That fall I applied—I sent in my application for a lease of that barn—Washburn's barn, it is called; the upper barn. I asked Washburn if he was going to use it, and he said no; said he didn't want it. "Well," says I, "I would like first rate to have that barn." And says he, "Why don't you put in application for a lease?" "Well," says I, "I think I will. I will put in a lease, just to keep hay and barley, and to take transient custom that comes in from Stockton—private teams—any teams that come in." I applied for the house, and I didn't get it. I never heard from it at all. So, of course, I kept on to work for Washburn, and the next year I was working for Washburn, and through him I applied for a lease then to run a carriage, and it was through him, too, that I asked for the lease, because he was to help me along in case I got it. We calculated to put in as good carriages as there is in Stockton, and to satisfy the public right; do what was right. Well, I didn't get it. I have still worked on for Washburn, ever since. I have been in his employ all the time; but here three years ago—well, I wanted to state this thing just as it is, and show to you where this ring—if there is any ring, as you call it, I want to show it.

Q. What year are you now speaking of, and what year did this other transaction take place? A. That was in about 1870. I never have kept any dates, because I was working by the month and had no reason to. But you will see that Kenney's, and Harris,' and Stegeman's, and Hutchings' saddle train was running against Washburn at this time.

Q. That was about 1870? A. Yes, sir; and they didn't give good satisfaction to tourists coming into the valley. People were complaining all the while; and Washburn, of course, was giving very good satisfaction, but he didn't care about the saddle train business, and they proposed to give him 10 per cent on what money was received in the saddle train business.

Q. That is, these other parties you have mentioned? A. Yes, sir; and it was a combination, you will say.

MR. GARDNER: How do you know they agreed? A. I knew, because I was there. It was common talk amongst everybody, and they told, themselves. That is all the way I know. I had nothing to do with the business, any more than I was watching them the same as everybody else. It was common talk; I don't know any further than that. So it run on a couple of years that the company gave their 10 per cent, and everything went smoothly, until Kenney & Coffman refused to give the 10 per cent. Well, that let Washburn out of the saddle train business altogether. He had disposed of all his saddles and had no horses. Of course, he could start a saddle train up any time. We have oftentimes run horses in that belonged to the stable, to accommodate the public, when we knew they didn't have the horses, or when parties wanted to go by Glacier Point.

MR. TULLY: When you say "we," you mean Washburn? A. Washburn himself. I say "we," because I was working for Washburn, and I generally went; but I had no interest in the saddle train business at that time. Well, Washburn, several times—once or twice—made applications for leases for carriages, and to run a saddle train, and it was not granted to him. Of course, he was out of the saddle train business, the same as I was, only he had plenty of stage stock and I didn't.

Q. Are you through? A. Yes, sir; I am through.

Q. Now the difficulties that you had in there that you speak about, and about bursting up; with whom was that difficulty? Was it with the Commissioners, or with your associates in business? A. Oh, the difficulties were with tourists applying for horses, that they made these complaints.

Q. But you said awhile ago that you bursted up, and your blankets were put out, and one thing and another. Was it between yourself and your associates? A. That was between me and Kenney. I wanted to state to you, in regard to the valley—that is the meadows where our feed was at the time that I was in the saddle train business—of course I would like to show to you how the thing is run, just as it is to-day.

Q. That is what we want to know. A. That is just what I want to tell you. I have got no interest one way or the other, for Washburn. Of course he is a friend of mine, but no more than to pay me daily wages; and I have watched the thing through and kept my mouth shut. Now, you are acquainted with the valley, are you not?

MR. TULLY: Yes, sir. A. Well, when I went in there, there was no fences at all. When Lemmon got that field fenced up—the old Lemmon field—that was fenced, and I cut the hay inside of it, and when he died I applied for this lease, and I had paid for grubbing out that old field, and cutting the ditches to lead the water down to the river that was soaked from the mountains. I had paid $300 on that first field. Then I paid the Indians $150 for grubbing out in that new field that Harris fenced in. That is what I paid for grubbing it out, but he fenced it. He fenced that field in, and he has built one or two houses there, and he puts in—I see by the papers when I came up here, that he makes a claim there against the State of between $4,000 and $5,000 that he has spent on that ranch; but I don't see where it is, any more than that fence, and two or three little houses, made from common shakes and such things. Well, now, to-day there is—Mr. Mills testified there was forty-eight acres. It had slipped my mind, but I remember now, old man Clarke surveyed the whole lot. There was forty-eight acres in that; and when we got the lease there was ninety acres in that claim. Well, now, I took a piece of paper, and sat down with four men, since I have been here in this camp, and give our best judgment, judging from that forty-eight acre field, or of the Harris ranch of ninety acres, either one. There is ninety acres fenced in there, that Coffmann & Kenney have got. The next is Barnard's, which, if they get short of feed, they have that. Then there is a space between the road and Yosemite Creek, to the left, as you cross the meadow, that Barnard generally keeps for his own cows and horses. Well, then, we will cross Yosemite Creek. George Kenney has got from there clear to the old Folsom bridge. That is all under a fence.

Q. About how much is there in that inclosure? A. I didn't give you an account of the upper field. Of course, that is Barnard's, but then they have it in case they need it. I should judge, to the best of my knowledge, judging from the ninety acres at Harris', that there are at least one hundred and twenty-five acres, including Leidig's field that was taken away from him. You understand the saddle train men broke those fences down, and the Commissioners bothered Mrs. Leidig. She tried to hold it but she couldn't. The saddle train men would burst the fences open, and Mrs. Leidig kept a man there trying to keep the horses out, but he couldn't do it. She made a complaint to the Commissioners—she didn't know what to do, whether to lease it—some one of them said if she leased it it would throw her out of the claim. At last she let it for $50, and then the Guardian—I think it was Dennison; I am very sure it was Dennison—told her, or told Coffman & Kenney, not to pay her the $50, but to pay it to him, and so it was done so. She told me so; that she paid it to him. Well, they had the whole of it then; they got it all. They got her field, and clear to Yosemite Creek, which I think is one hundred and twenty-five acres, to the best of my judgment. Well, the next, you know, is the butcher shop and the field belonging to it, and next comes the El Capitan meadow. Well, I have put in the grain there; I sowed in two tons of grain there myself, and I should judge at least—I don't want to call it any more than what it is—but I would judge there are seventy-five acres, because they have broken up and plowed more since I did the work; but I should call it seventy-five acres in that field.

Q. That is controlled by Kenney & Co.? A. That is inclosed. They have it for a field. Well, now, we will cross the river at the Bridal Veil Fall. Now, Kenney & Coffman have that field, which takes all the ground that is open.

Q. That is on the south side of the Merced? A. On the south side of the valley next to the Bridal Veil. That field—gracious, I don't know. It is two pieces, the meadow is, and they are large. It takes all the meadow ground. It is all fenced in. That takes in all below the Cathedral Spires.

Q. All the valley? A. Yes, sir; all the valley that a horse would graze on, if you should turn him out. That they have; and I should judge, to the best of my knowledge, there were one hundred acres of open ground there, with no trees on. We will call that one hundred acres. Then they have the Leidig field that he had, right above Folsom bridge there—the first one he fenced in. That one they have. So you might say they have got the whole valley; that is, Coffman & Kenney and Washburn; because Washburn is in the ring now. Of course, he bought into the ring. You can't blame Washburn for buying in. Of course, he is into the ring.

MR. GARDNER: How do you know there is a ring? How do you know all these things? A. I don't know, any more than what we call a ring. They say that is a ring. I don't know it.

Q. You don't know whether there is a ring or not, of your own knowledge? A. No. It looks like a ring to me. I don't say it is a ring.

MR. TULLY: Now, I will ask you, are all these fields that you speak of, are they all inclosed? A. Yes, sir; all under fence.

Q. To-day? A. To-day.

Q. How long have they been so? A. Well, I'll tell you. Before 1880 there was not much trouble; but since 1880 Mr. Briggs and Mr. Mills, and Dr. May—of course there has been a great deal of this going on since. All this trouble has been going on since, and they are brought into it by degrees by complaints. Of course everybody is complaining to them, and I suppose they try to do the best they can to keep from having any trouble, but they have overreached the thing, in my mind. I don't say that they have, but I think that they have given Kenney & Coffman too much rights.

Q. You say "they." You mean the Commissioners? A. The Commissioners; because they have given them all the fields there is.

Q. As far as you know, did those men to whom this is rented rent that from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that is all fenced? A. That is all fenced.

Q. Do they exclude any other persons except tourists and visitors from those premises? A. Of course. There has nobody any right to go in there. They are rented for their horses.

Q. They have the exclusive privilege of using all those inclosures to which you allude? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have leased those privileges from the Commissioners? A. They have leased them, the same as I would lease a piece of ground from you.

Q. Do you know what they pay for those privileges? A. I understand Coffman & Kenney pay $500 for the lease, but since I have been down here I have been told they have reduced the lease, on account of the burning of that building, to $250. All I understand Coffman & Kenney pay to-day for the running of the saddle trains and carriages, and for those fields, is $250. That is what I consider an exclusive right.

Q. In the upper part of the valley, away up there towards Snow's? A. Well, that was my old place to run horses.

Q. Is that all fenced up? A. That is another field that I will tell you of now. The field that the Stoneman House—of course they have put that field into grain. That was twenty-five acres. I wanted to get that to plow it up when Lemmon had it, but I couldn't get it; but that is all an open field there opposite the Stoneman House, if you remember.

Q. I have not been there since the Stoneman House was built. In order that I may better understand that, will you please state to me where the Stoneman House is located, as regards the old Barnard hotel, and the one that was right in front of it, that the tree run up in the middle of it, or, in other words, that was built around the tree? A. The old Hutchings house?

Q. Yes. Is it across the river? A. No. It is right up on the same side. You keep right up, on the same side of the river, until you get where you can see Glacier Rock.

Q. Is it before you get to the old Harris place? A. Right opposite the old Harris place, in the open meadow.

Q. You know there is a place where a hurricane struck it, and snatched up a good many of those big trees? A. It is a little above that—about a quarter of a mile.

Q. I want to locate that hotel, because there is a good deal of talk about it, and that has been located since I was there. The old Barnard hotel was down on the Merced, opposite the bridge—opposite the Hutchings place. When I was there Barnard had a hotel, right in front of the house built around a tree. A. That is the old Hutchings place.

Q. Barnard was using that as a hotel? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the Barnard hotel yet? A. That is the Barnard hotel. I see the Board don't understand a great many things which I could sit here and listen to. I like to see every man testify to the best of his knowledge.

Q. I have been through the valley, and know where the old points are, but can't locate the new points. A. You have not been there since the hurricane.

Q. I have been there since the hurricane, but not since the Stoneman House was built. A. It is only a little way further up, to the Stoneman House, on the left hand side of the trail, up towards old man Lemmon's. After he got his money, he told a great many people that came up from below, wealthy people and people that were traveling, that that was where he intended to put a hotel—right where the Stoneman House was put up.

Q. I will ask you a question outside of this. I think your acquaintance with the valley will enable you to throw some light on it. I believe I asked you about how much ground there was left there for pasturage for tourists and campers? A. No; you didn't.

Q. Will you please state what proportion of that valley—how much land there is there that is dedicated to the use of tourists, and campers, and persons who wish to turn their animals loose? A. Well, from the old Hutchings line, where the gate was when the road ran right up through the meadow, they have all the ground between the river and Harris' fence. I should judge, to the best of my knowledge, there might be in that little meadow, as you go up to Mirror Lake and take the whole ground in, perhaps there may be two hundred acres there altogether.

Q. That is open common? A. That is open ground, and goes on up to Mirror Lake, which the campers have. They can camp all the way, clear to Mirror Lake; but then there is no feed.

Q. What is the character of that open country there, for feed, for pasturage? A. Well, you see, when the rush of the season is, there may be two hundred campers in there. There is oftentimes that in the warm season. Sometimes there will be two hundred in there; and, of course, after it has run a couple of weeks there is no feed at all. They have got to keep their horse up and buy hay.

Q. That is what I was trying to get at? A. That is just the way it is.

Q. It is a fact that the amount of pasturage left out there is totally inadequate to the demands of campers during the busy season? A. There is no show for them at all; none whatever.

Q. They would have no recourse but to purchase hay or take it in with them or purchase it in the valley? A. They have to do it. I have sold them hay myself to take in, because they would know there is no show to pasture in the valley.

Q. What is the character of the soil there? Is it rich, alluvial, or scarce? A. Yes, sir; that is good ground. Opposite the Harris house, between there and the river, it is good soil. There is some fern; wherever there is fern it is rich ground; but as you go up towards Mirror Lake there is a great deal of sandy ground where there don't anything grow. And in regard to a man keeping a cow in there to-day—a man down at Barnard's, or even at Cook's old hotel, if he had a cow and turned her out at six in the morning and drove her in at night, that cow would starve to death in two months, to the best of my knowledge, because there is nothing for her to get, it is all fenced up.

Q. Mr. Brightman, you have been a long time living there, what is your idea, predicated upon your knowledge of actual occurrences there, with regard to the granting of exclusive privileges to individuals to do the business of the valley? A. Well, it is all exclusive right now, in regard to the saddle train business, it is Coffman & Kenney, and nobody else.

Q. And with regard to the use of land? A. Yes, sir; the use of land; there is none to be got.

Q. I understand from your answer, Mr. Brightman, that the valley is absolutely under control of the persons to whom it has been let by the Commissioners, to the exclusion of all others; almost the entire valley is in the hands of persons who hold it under leases from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; the exclusive right to Washburn, and Kenney & Coffman for the saddle train business, with the exception of Barnard. That is the way I understand it.

Q. Mr. Barnard is the only exception? A. He is the only one that has got anything in there to turn his cattle and horses in.

Q. And those three men control absolutely the business of the valley, as I understand it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, I will ask you another question. Are persons from the outside who have anything to sell, allowed the free access to that valley and the privilege of selling there? A. Yes, sir; but I will state this: we will suppose that you go in there with a load of hay, as a rancher—

Q. It would be a very violent supposition, but still it is possible. A. I want to make this thing plain to you. Not that I expect ever to receive a dollar out of that valley from this on. But to-day, if you had a load of hay and went in there to sell it, there is no one to sell it to except campers; you might go in there with a load of hay and not find any campers there. What are you going to do with your hay? There are no houses except the old Black stable that you could get to put your hay into to store it; so you have got to take your hay out. They don't let that.

Q. Couldn't they sell it to some of those men who are enjoying those exclusive privileges? A. They don't want to buy hay, because they are going to raise it.

MR. GARDNER: Do they raise sufficient hay for their own use? A. Well, yes, they have.

Q. Don't they sometimes have to purchase hay and have it hauled there? A. Yes; I have bought hay myself; when I owned that ranch I bought hay. Of course, if they get out of hay they would have to send out to Washburn's, or send out somewhere, and let them bring it in there; but people won't bring it in, because they won't take their chances, to take it in there and can't sell it, and can't store it. Of course, they would want to store it, because they don't want it to be left out-doors, and they won't take it; of course, they have done it up to the last year or two. There has been hay brought in there, a great deal of it, but I am speaking of the present time. The buildings have been taken down that a man could have stored in, except that one stable. I saw how the thing was going, and that was why I applied for that stable.

MR. TULLY: Then I understand that while persons can take their produce in there to sell, yet the condition and management is such as to deter people from doing it? A. That is the way you can see it, and I look at it in the same light. Not that I censure the Commissioners. I think that they have done wrong; that is all I can say. If it is mismanagement I don't know; it is managed, any way, and the rights of people have gone, because when I went in there there was good times and everybody had money, and if we couldn't get a dollar for a horse we would take him for two bits and have just as good a time until they had gone out. Now, gentlemen, I have told you to the best of my knowledge; I don't favor anybody; I have told you just as near as I can.

MR. TULLY: We are not here to take any advantage of anybody; convict anybody. We want to get at the facts. A. I have seen that by the meetings.

MR. TULLY: I want to get at the facts. I am not representing anybody but simple truth and justice with regard to these charges, and propose, if I can, to get to the bottom of them, and the result of our investigation will be given to the public for what it is worth. A. I am very glad you asked me just as you did, because I didn't know exactly how to get at it, but I wanted to tell you just what I did and no more. If you ask me more I will answer. I have been in the valley and have taken items, and think I have been pretty near run out of the valley.

Q. I want to ask you one more question, and I know that you are competent to answer those questions. With regard to the destruction of timber, trees, and burning off the young forest there, what do you know about that? A. I know it all; I think I do; I won't go into any small items, but I will tell you in a few words.

Q. State what you know with regard to the condition of that valley today, compared with what it was when you went in there. Be as brief as you can, to get at the main facts, whether forests have been cut down, any number of trees cut down unnecessarily, and in what condition the valley is now as compared with what it was when you went in there? A. The year I packed in I packed in the doors and windows of Black's hotel; that season there was a few trees cut for the sills of that building. There was a good deal of complaint. I don't know who made the most complaint, but I think Hutchings was at the bottom of it, and then there was others. Everybody was talking about it; it was the county talk, that they ought not to cut the trees; but there was a few trees cut for the Cook hotel, known as Black's, and then the next tree was an old stump right there by Hutchings' saloon, that Johnny Smith had. Johnny wanted to get it down, and Hutchings didn't want it down, and they liked to get to fighting about that old stump; but one day the stump was down. Up to 1880 there was no more trees cut to amount to anything—nobody knew anything about it. They may have cut a few trees up in the rocks, but it was generally understood that no more trees were to be cut. Since 1880 they have been cutting trees everywhere, and I think the Commissioners, on the line of these new roads around the valley, might have skipped a few trees which they did cut; but the motive was, I think, to run a straight road as far as they could; where they could see a long piece of straight road to be made they would make it; and they grubbed out everything in connection with the road; and there has been a great many trees cut since; but I wouldn't say what number, because last night you got the testimony of what was in front of Barnard's. I have heard it talked, but I don't know anything about it. I didn't know there was half as many cut as there was; but that is the amount of what timber I know of. There has been a great deal of timber cut. When I went in there and worked for Hutchings, we would hitch up a four-horse team and go all over that Barnard country there, and up towards the Stoneman House, and it was hard work for us to get wood enough for that old fire-place at Hutchings', and to-day you can get plenty.

Q. You mean it was hard work to get wood without cutting it down?

A. Without cutting it down; and the old man wouldn't allow us to cut down a tree. We would go out and pick up wood wherever we could find it. If we would find a tree down, we would cut it up. We would load what we could on the wagon, and the rest was left there to rot.

Q. Do you consider that there has been any wanton or unnecessary falling of timber there? A. I would not testify to that, because I was not interested, and I don't know any more than I think. Me and Conway was riding down the road, and was looking to see what the State paid for grading out them roads, and I didn't take much interest in it, but John thought it could have been done for a great deal less: but that was only a matter of his idea and mine. We thought there had been a good many trees cut out.

Q. Those trees that have been cut down, do you think that they seriously mar the general effect and beauty of the valley? A. Well, there at Barnard's, I think that they have cut trees there that didn't benefit the view a bit; people could have stepped a few feet one way or the other and got just the same view that they have got now.

Q. I understand the ostensible object of cutting those trees was to give a better view? A. That is it; of course, that was it. I know that right there at Cook's hotel there was a fine black oak tree there, that was right between the Yosemite Falls and the front door, and Mr. Cook wanted the tree cut down; I don't say that he wanted it, either; I wouldn't say certain how that was brought up, but I know that there was a good deal said about the tree, and the tree was cut down; and there was a big pine stood right in front of the bar-room, that they were afraid would fall on the house. That tree ought to have been felled, because it was liable to fall. If the wind happened to blow up, it might kill forty men or horses. The tree was rotten, anyway, and they cut the tree down. I thought it was a good thing.

Q. The security of the building required it? A. Yes, sir; it was the security to life. I just cleared my life of a falling tree once, myself. When persons see a tree coming they don't know which way to go; they get confused, and are liable to get killed. That was a big tree. I guess it was nearly four feet through, but it was not safe to have it there; it was rotten.

[Adjourned to the call of the Chair.]

MONDAY EVENING, February 11, 1889.

Cross-examination of George Barnes.

MR. GOUCHER: Mr. Barnes, you said in your testimony at the last meeting of this committee, that you never made any demand before I came here. These were your words: "I never made any demand before I came here, to Mr. Goucher." What did you mean by that? I didn't understand that. Did you mean that you made a demand of me? Answer—Well, I asked you for the back pay, of course.

Q. That was here? A. Yes, sir; well, I did make a demand.

Q. Where? A. At the time Archie Leonard brought you down there, I asked you if we would get it, and you said we would have it.

Q. State the circumstances; how did you happen to invite me down there? A. Well, we were there; the crowd was there, and we came together and told Archie to go up and bring Goucher down.

Q. That was at the last June meeting, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir; and then you and McCord were going to go up to the hotel about the same time, I think, and Archie spoke to you, and you said: "Well, I must go down and see the boys before I go up." Mr. McCord wanted you to go, and we asked you, and you came down there and told us—

Q. I meant you and the other workingmen that were interested? A. Yes, sir; you told us: "I will see that you get your pay." Those are the words you said.

Q. That was the second time that this question about paying for the number of hours over eight per day that had been worked had come up, wasn't it? That was the second time that the subject had come up before the Commissioners? A. I think it was.

Q. Don't you remember that in June, 1887, that I introduced a resolution before the Board providing that you gentlemen who had been worked more than eight hours a day should be paid for the excess, for the overtime? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember that I did that, don't you? A. I heard the boys talking about that; yes, sir.

Q. Well, don't you know that the Commissioners at that time—that is, in June, 1887, ordered that extra time paid for; didn't you hear that also, in 1887? A. Paid for?

Q. May be you don't understand me. Don't you remember that in 1887 the Commissioners ordered the extra time paid for? Don't you remember that the Commissioners, in 1887, at their June meeting, ordered that the workingmen should be paid for the extra time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your amount of time would entitle you, under the resolution, to receive about $34? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were not paid up to the June meeting, 1888; you were not paid that $34? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, in June, 1888, is the time when you and the rest of the workingmen called my attention to the matter, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir; I think it was, if I remember correctly.

Q. And I believe I expressed my surprise to you gentlemen, that you had not been paid; isn't that true? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I told you at that time was this, wasn't it: that I would inquire of the Guardian and the Secretary and ascertain why it had not been paid? A. Yes, sir; I remember your saying something like that.

Q. Don't you know that the Commissioners, at the June meeting in 1888, still again ordered it paid? Don't you know that last June when we were there that we again ordered it paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as to why it has not been paid, you don't know, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. You stated in your last examination that there were about thirty acres of ground allotted to the campers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which ground did you refer to at that time? A. That up by Harris'.

Q. Don't you know that last June, June, 1888, the Commissioners assigned other ground to the campers besides that? A. I don't know; I didn't hear nothing about it.

Q. Didn't you hear that they had assigned the ground formerly used by Leidig for garden purposes, and also some territory towards Bridal Veil Falls from Leidig's, to the campers? A. I don't remember it.

Q. You worked there last summer, didn't you? A. I worked until July.

Q. Didn't a great many campers camp on the south side of the Merced River, in the vicinity of Leidig's old hotel? A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. Then it must have been by permission of the authorities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the Guardian objected? A. I don't think he objected; I didn't hear him objecting.

Q. Where did the campers camp; on the old camping ground, in the neighborhood of the houses, or on the new ground in the neighborhood of Leidig's hotel? A. Well, the most—there was some camped up by Cook's; well, I think the biggest camp was down by Leidig's hotel.

Q. Do you know how many acres were embraced in that tract at Leidig's hotel? A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Do you know whether there were any meadows in that tract? A. Not on this side of the river.

Q. Which do you mean by "this side?" A. Well, Leidig's side.

Q. Isn't there the meadow that Liedig used for pasturage purposes? A. Yes, sir; there is.

Q. You had forgotten that? A. I had forgotten about that; I was looking right up by Cook's.

Q. You don't know how many acres there are on the south side of the Merced River allotted to the campers; I mean, of course, in the neighborhood of Leidig's place? A. No, sir; I didn't hear no one say nothing about—I heard the campers were down there camping, but I didn't hear them say about giving it to the campers.

Q. Well, you don't know how many acres they were allowed to occupy, do you? A. No, sir.

Cross-examination of Fred. Brightman.

MR. GOUCHER: In your testimony at the last session of this committee, you stated, "I went in there," meaning in the valley, "first, and worked for Hutchings; I went in to buy his pack train." Will you state to the committee what year that was? Answer—Well I never set it down.

Q. Well, about? A. I should judge it was about 1867 or 1868, as near as I can remember.

Q. About 1867 or 1868. Do you know who the Commissioners to manage the Yosemite Valley were at that time? A. Well, I don't know them all.

Q. Well, do you remember any of them? A. Mr. Raymond, Mr. Ames, Mr. Madden, Mr. Ashburner; that is all that I remember of; that is the best of my knowledge.

Q. That is all that you can name, is it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, the Governor? A. Who was the Governor?

Q. I suppose it was Low, wasn't it? In 1868 it was Haight? A. I don't remember.

Q. The Governor, whoever he was at the time? A. The Governor.

Q. Now these troubles that you speak of here, that you had with Kenney in regard to running these saddle trains; did the Commissioners have anything to do with your difficulties with Kenney? A. None at all.

Q. Now you spoke about having a talk at one time with Mr. Washburn in reference to a barn which you called Washburn's barn, upper barn; that you had a talk with Washburn about it, and subsequently that you applied to lease it. When was it that you made that application to lease that barn; I don't care for a year or two? A. I didn't keep any account; it was the year that Lemmon died, in 1878.

Q. About 1878? A. About 1878; 1878, I think; about that.

Q. From the time you first went in there up to the time that Lemmon died, or up to the time when you applied for this barn, was anybody on the Board of Yosemite Commissioners who is now a member of the Commission? A. Mr. Ashburner was one.

Q. He is not a Commissioner now; has not been for some time; has not been for several years. A. Well, I don't know who the Commissioners are. They have been changing them so that I have never taken any notice.

Q. Ashburner is not, but Madden is. He is a Commissioner yet. A. That is what I say.

Q. You said Ashburner; you meant Madden, did you? A. Yes, sir; I meant Madden.

Q. Outside of Madden, is there anybody else on the Commission now who was on at that time; that is, from the time you first went into the valley? A. Is Ames out of it?

Q. Ames is not a Commissioner now. A. Then I don't think there is any.

Q. Do you know why you did not get this barn? A. No, sir.

Q. To whom did you make the application? A. I made the application, a written application, and sent it before the Board of Commissioners.

Q. You don't know why you didn't get it? A. I never heard a word of it, from that day to this.

Q. You have spoken about certain parties afterwards running a saddle train in a combination; that is Washburn, Kenney, Harris, Stegeman, and Hutchings. A. Coffman & Kenney.

Q. No; that was before Coffman's time, that you were referring to. You say you knew that there was a combination because it was common talk amongst everybody, and they told themselves. That is what you testified. A. Well, I think Coffman had bought Hutchings out at that time.

Q. Do you know whether the Commissioners knew anything about the combination between these men? A. No; I don't.

Q. Do you know whether these men that you named were paying any leases for the privilege of running saddle trains at that time? A. I don't think they were. I know that Kenney was not paying any lease, because he got his lease on the ranch, and that entitled Harris and Kenney—Harris never had no title; he had no saddle train; even George Kenney, at that time had no saddle train; at the time he got the ranch.

Q. I am referring to this testimony, Mr. Brightman; I will read it to you: "What year are you now speaking of; what year did this other transaction take place?" You were speaking of the time after you failed to get the barn. "That was in about 1870. I never have kept any dates, because I was working by the month and had no reason to." A. About twelve years ago.

Q. "But you will see that Kenney's and Harris' and Stegeman's, and Hutchings' saddle train was running against Washburn at this time." And then the question is: "That was about 1870?" And then the answer is: "Yes, sir." Well, now, what I ask you, in this connection, is this: Were these men paying for the privilege of running saddle trains in 1870; did they, at that time, to your knowledge, have any lease from the Commissioners? A. At the time I went out of the saddle train?

Q. In 1870? A. At the time I went out of the saddle train, I don't think there was any of them paid any leases.

Q. I am not asking you when you went out of the saddle train, because it don't cut any figure here; it is not material; but I read your answer, and I am asking you if, at that time, the time you referred to, when Kenney, Harris, Stegeman, and Hutchings— A. No, sir.

Q. And then there was not any leases to these people? A. No; there was not at that time. All leases to run saddle horses were to George and me. There is where I first started. George and me applied for a ten-year lease to run the saddle horses, and for that ranch; that was the time.

Q. Now, Mr. Brightman, when these men in 1870 were running saddle trains in there, and when you were running saddle trains in there, where did you get feed for your horses? A. Well, I raised about fifty tons of hay off of that field there.

Q. Which field? A. Off the old Lemmon field.

Q. Was that inclosed at the time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did these other gentlemen that were running saddle trains get their feed? A. Well, they didn't have any.

Q. The horses went without it? A. They turned them out.

Q. Turned their horses out? A. They fed about a quart of barley a day, in the morning, and then they turned their horses out.

Q. Where did these horses get their feed; wasn't it on the meadows of the valley? A. Yes, sir; they had the Bridal Veil, and they had all on the side of the river where the Stoneman House is.

Q. These horses, then, at that time, were allowed, after being turned out, to run at large all over the valley and over its roads and trails? A. They were.

Q. Were any cattle allowed to run at that time? A. Everything run at large.

Q. About how many horses were kept in the valley during the time that these men were in the business? A. Washburn kept about forty head, Hutchings had about sixty head, Stegeman had about thirty head, and we had about thirty head—thirty-three.

Q. Where did the campers get their feed? A. Well, the campers used to buy hay of me if they were not satisfied with what they got on the outside; and I used to have to buy hay, too.

Q. In 1870 you did not import any hay from the outside, did you? A. Oh, yes, we hauled some hay in.

Q. Where from; over what road? A. Over the Coulterville road, and over the Oak Flat road, some.

Q. Was the Oak Flat road completed in 1870? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that? A. Well, they hauled the hay in both ways, I know, at that time.

Q. Over those two roads? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are positive on that point, are you? A. I am positive we hauled hay in at that time that I went out. It might have been a difference in the years; I won't say about the date, because I am not certain about the date.

Q. When you first went in there conducting a saddle train business, was there any wagon road leading into Yosemite? A. No.

MR. HOOK: What year was that? A. Well, I say twenty years ago; about twenty years ago; I don't remember exactly.

MR. GOUCHER: About how many years did you do business in the Yosemite Valley before there was a wagon road constructed to the valley? A. About four years, as near as I can remember.

Q. You spoke, in your testimony at the last sitting of this committee, of a meadow of about—you didn't mention the number of acres—of a meadow that had been taken away from Leidig. What meadow is that? A. On the west side of the river, right opposite the house.

Q. On the same side as the Leidig hotel? A. No; on the other side.

Q. Now, when was that taken away from Leidig? A. It was taken away from him, I think, either three or four years ago.

Q. Was it inclosed? A. Inclosed. I hauled the fences for it.

Q. Do you know anything about the circumstances under which it was done? A. Well, Mrs. Leidig told me—

Q. I don't care about that. Nothing except what you were told? Do you know anything of your own knowledge? A. I was told, and I was over there one day when Charlie was keeping the stock out of the field; and that the fences were down and they couldn't keep the stock out, and Charlie was sent over there to keep the stock out, and it was impossible for him to keep the fence up, because nights they would tear it down, and they would eat out the whole field.

Q. You used this expression: "Some one of them said that if she leased it it would throw her out of the claim." That implies that she was afraid to apply for a lease for fear she might lose—. A. No; I stated it differently from that.

Q. That if she leased it to third parties—. A. She leased it to Coffman & Kenney, and when she demanded the money for the rent the Guardian told Kenney not to pay Mrs. Leidig, but to pay him.

Q. That was on the principle, as you understood it, that tenants there—lessees—were not permitted to sub-let premises? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the Guardian, Mr. Dennison, demanded the pay from the sub-tenants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From Mrs. Leidig's tenants; sub-tenants to the Commissioners. Now, Mr. Brightman, here is another question that I want to call your attention to. I will commence three or four questions back and read: "Mr. Gardner: How do you know there is a ring? How do you know all these things? A. I don't know, any more than what we call a ring. They say that is a ring. I don't know it. Q. You don't know whether there is a ring or not, of your own knowledge? A. No. It looks like a ring to me. I don't say it is a ring." I don't understand your explanation when you say that "It looks like a ring to me. I don't know that it is a ring." Above you said, "I don't know whether it is a ring or not." What is your meaning in regard to that? A. Why, it was all run by the saddle train men.

Q. What do you mean by "it?" A. Well, the three saddle trains are run with the Commissioners. It looks that way to me.

Q. The three saddle trains? A. Well, there is Coffman, Kenney, and Washburn.

Q. It is one lot of horses, isn't it? Q. It is all one lot of horses.

Q. And under one management? A. All under one management.

Q. You say that is what looks like a ring? A. The Commissioners, in my judgment—now I am just testifying for myself—the Commissioners gave them privileges outside of other parties, and that constitutes what they call a ring, or what they term as a ring.

Q. When you had Lemmon's ranch you had that privilege so far as that ranch was concerned, didn't you? A. What?

Q. The privilege of using it for raising hay on it, and selling it? A. He had. I suppose it was Lemmon's. That field was Lemmon's. He fenced it in. I don't know how he got it.

Q. How did you get it? A. I cut the hay on halves. I had one half.

Q. Who did you apply to? A. I applied to Lemmon.

Q. Didn't you know that Lemmon leased it from the Commissioners? A. No; I don't think he had a lease.

Q. You don't think he had a lease; that he just fenced it in, and was using it regardless of the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What seems to you to be a ring is this: that certain fields or inclosures in the valley are leased to Coffman & Kenney and Washburn, or whoever constitutes the parties to that saddle train management, and that they are allowed to run saddle trains? A. That is it.

Q. Is that the only thing that you have observed in Yosemite that strikes you as being a ring; is there any other thing? A. Well, there is Mr. Leidig had to close his hotel up, and it is all run by Cook and Barnard; and the general supposition is up there that Barnard will be froze out pretty soon, the way it is going on.

Q. Well, now you say that is the general supposition; how did you find that out? A. Well, I hear it talked around.

Q. Just mention the people that you heard, please; we might need them as witnesses? A. I don't know any particular person.

Q. I would like to have the names, because they are nearly all here from the Yosemite. Who have you heard mention that, if you remember? A. Well, at the station it is all talked over there by the men, where I have been to work there.

Q. Just please name the men; those that you heard express themselves that way? A. I can't refer to any particular person that I know of.

Q. You are sure that you have heard it discussed? A. Yes; I have heard it talked that way; it is common talk.

Q. Common talk, and you are unable to name anybody? A. Well, I couldn't say any particular person.

Q. Didn't you hear Mr. C. D. Robinson talk about it? A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Never? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Harris? A. No, sir; no particular man. I wouldn't say that I have heard any particular person make the remark, but I have heard hundreds of people make the remark; it is common talk.

Q. Were these people residents there or travelers? A. People that were around Mariposa.

Q. In Mariposa? A. In the valley; we have always talked it that way.

Q. You couldn't have always talked it that way prior to the formation of this management? A. That is, for four or five years past.

Q. And that is because these fields and meadows have been used? A. It looks as though they were running to help one another, or the Commissioners favored them in preference to the outsiders like me. Now, I applied for that barn; I never got it; why I didn't get it I don't know. I applied for a carriage right, and offered $500 too.

Q. You are not able to name anybody that you heard; is that so? A. No; I wouldn't say any particular person, because I don't remember.

Q. Now, Mr. Brightman, you spoke about Mr. Leidig having to leave; having had his place closed up. Do you know why it was closed up? A. Well, because—one thing was that they favored the other hotels more than they did them.

Q. Who are they? A. Well, that is Cook.

Q. You say they favored the other hotel. Who do you mean, the Commissioners? That the Commissioners favored Cook? A. I don't know how to get at that. I have heard a great deal said. Mrs. Leidig has told me—

Q. That was before she left there, wasn't it? A. Oh, long before; for years.

Q. Do you know why Mr. and Mrs. Leidig left? A. No; I wouldn't testify to anything of that kind, because I don't know.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Brightman, that they voluntarily sold out their right to run a hotel business there, outside of the knowledge, and outside of all request, or wish on the part of the Commissioners, and that they left after such sale? A. Well, my knowledge as far as that goes, Mrs. Leidig has told me lots of grievances about the way the Commissioners put questions to her, and told her to do this, and told her to do that, and she didn't know which way to do; and of course now, in regard to the field, some of them told her not to lease it, and others told her to lease it.

Q. I am not asking about the fields. I am asking about what you know in regard to her leaving that hotel? A. Well, I don't know anything about her business, any more than what was talked around the house.

Q. You never talked with her after she left the valley on the subject, did you? A. No; I did not.

Q. You don't know whether she sold out or not? A. I don't know whether she sold out or not.

Q. Did you ever hear that the Commissioners compelled her to leave? A. No, sir.

Q. Here is something, Mr. Brightman, that I want to ask you about: in one of your answers you used this language: "I have been in the valley and have taken items, and think I have been pretty near run out of the valley." What did you mean by that? A. Taking items?

Q. Yes? A. Well, I see what was going on.

Q. Well, when? A. I see that I didn't get any lease, and that George Kenney—

Q. That was how long ago? A. Well, that was in 1870. I am not certain about the dates.

Q. Before 1880, was it not? A. Well, about that time.

Q. Well, was it before 1880, or after? A. Before that, if anything.

Q. Is that the reason you say that you think you were pretty near run out of the valley? A. Well, I think that is one thing.

Q. What else makes you say that? A. Well, I put in two applications for a lease and I didn't get neither one of them. That is on my own part. I don't think they had any reason why they shouldn't let me have a lease.

Q. That was before 1880, was it? Both of them; both of these applications? A. Yes, sir; I think it was.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke awhile ago in relation to an answer to a question of Mr. Goucher, something about certain moneys; that the Guardian didn't allow certain moneys to be paid to Mrs. Leidig, and directed that they should be paid to certain other parties? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were those other parties? A. Kenney & Coffman.

Q. You also stated, did you not, in answer to the question of Mr. Goucher, that you thought they were paid to those parties, on the principle that she had no right to sub-let them, did you not? A. Well, it was generally understood that a person had no right—well, it was talked; she didn't know what to do.

Q. You said to Mr. Goucher you thought it was on that principle. Now, did you merely think so, or did you know it to be a fact? A. Well, I know it to be a fact that they would not allow her to have the money.

Q. She didn't get the money? A. She didn't get the money.

Q. How long after that did she leave? A. Oh, I should judge it was five years or something like that, as near as I can remember.

Q. Is there any other harsh action toward her in that respect or in any other respect? A. I wouldn't testify—of course they have told me their grievances, but I don't remember, and wouldn't testify anything one way or the other.

MR. GARDNER: You stated all you knew last Friday night? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Was she frozen out, or kicked out, or did she leave of her own accord? A. Well, they feel as though they were kicked out, pretty near.

Q. Was there any way by which they might make a living, when they left? A. Well, if they could have had a show to have got along—I have been there for the last—

Q. Your idea is that when they left, they left because they had no means of subsistence, and could get no privileges, or couldn't make a living in the valley. Is that a fact? A. Yes, sir; they could not work with any peace. They worked hard, but they had to fight for the travel, and stages would run by them; and that field—I hauled the rails for that field, for both of them, and fenced them in, and you see how it ended, and they took the field away from them.

Q. Then they were practically exiled; they had to either get out or starve to death, had they? They had nothing to live on? A. They have always made a living.

Q. As compared with other parties in the valley, it was hard times with them, was it not? A. It was hard times, and he had to work hard for the travel, and it always looked to me as though the stage company didn't treat them just right, because they run stages around the other side of the river.

Q. Do you think their hard times were influenced by favors which were shown to other parties, and yet denied unto them? A. Well, that is the way it looks to me.

MR. HOOK: Was that during the present Commissioners' term of office? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think the Commissioners were opposed to Leidig's staying there? A. Well, I couldn't say that they were; but, then, they ought to have made the stages go to each hotel. I suppose after awhile the Commissioners did stop them, because they went by there afterwards.

Q. Did the Commissioners know anything about their going on the other side of the river away from them? A. Well, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Do you think that after the Commissioners were informed of it that the stages run by there? A. No; I think not; I think not. After the Commissioners found out that they were running around there it was stopped.

Q. Then the Commissioners stopped it? A. I don't know. I says to Washburn myself: "Just as quick as you start running around that house, it is going to hurt you worse than it does them." And so it did. A man testified to me to-day—Hiram Rapalje—that he carried whole loads of passengers around there and drove them right by the house; and they wanted to stop there.

Q. Do you know whether the Commissioners were guilty of allowing them to drive around on the other side of the river, away from Leidig's hotel? A. I don't know; I couldn't say that they were.

MR. GOUCHER: Didn't you hear that was stopped promptly, upon the Commissioners being informed? A. No; I didn't hear that.

Q. You know it was stopped? A. I know it was stopped; yes, sir; the boys told me.

Q. While Cook was running his old place, and Barnard running the present hotel, and Leidig the Leidig hotel, do you know where the Commissioners made their stopping place? A. Oh, they stopped at both houses.

Q. There were three at that time? A. Well, they stopped some at Mrs. Leidig's; the most of them stopped at Mrs. Leidig's, but some stopped at all three hotels.

GEORGE BARNES.

Being recalled, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: In your testimony to Mr. Goucher awhile ago, did you or did you not say something about a new pasture, or a lot of ground being allotted to the campers, upon the south side of the Merced River? Do you know that it was, or that it was not given to them? Answer—I do not, sir.

Q. You don't know it for a certainty? A. No, sir. There were a lot of campers camped down there.

Q. Well, you don't know for a certainty that any ground was allotted to them by the Commissioners, or by the representatives of them, at all? They may have gone and camped there or not? A. I never heard of any. I know there were lots of campers camped all over the valley last season.

Q. You don't know whether ground was allotted for that purpose or not? A. No, sir; I don't.

MR. HOOK: Did a camper have a right to camp on any ground without its being allotted by the Commissioners? A. I don't think they had. On the camping ground?

Q. Yes; on the camping ground.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know anything at all about that, whether they have or whether they have not? A. No, I don't. They generally camped down there by Leidig's every season, because I have always boarded at Leidig's.

Q. You have no absolute knowledge of that matter at all? A. No, sir; I have not.

MR. GARDNER: Hasn't the Guardian the charge of that? A. I think they have got to go to the Guardian to see.

MR. HOOK: If they went to the Guardian, he couldn't do anything without the authority of the Commissioners, could he? A. I know a great many campers do camp there without going.

Q. Without going to the Guardian? A. Yes, sir.

[A. Mazzanini was sworn by the Chairman to correctly interpret the testimony of Angelo Cavagnero.]

ANGELO CAVAGNERO.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Where is your place of residence? Answer—In the Yosemite Valley.

Q. What is your business there? A. Storekeeper.

Q. Will you make a statement to the committee regarding attempts to evict you from the valley, and from your store and building? Address yourself to the interpreter, and he will address himself to the reporter. Tell him in a few words, what was done to you there? A. In 1881 I bought the place that I have at present, from Mr. Harris.

Q. You kept the store in 1881? A. I bought at that time, of A. Harris.

Q. You bought Harris out in 1881? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a store did you keep there; general merchandise? A. General merchandise. Drygoods and groceries.

Q. Do you keep a store there still? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, was there ever any attempt made to turn you out of your store? A. Last year they tried to drive me out from there and give the privilege to Mr. Cook.

Q. Who did that? A. The Commissioners.

Q. Well, did you leave? A. No; I am still there. I do the most business with people that camp there; but now they remove; they go up above; they go up by the new hotel.

Q. The fact of the campers removing up to the upper end of the valley has injured your business? A. Yes, sir; when people go up to the new hotel I can't do any business at all.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke of having been driven out there. How? In what way were you driven out, in what manner? Who spoke to you, and what did they say? A. Nobody drove me off from there, but when the trade goes away from there it is just the same as to say they drive me away from there. When the trade is taken away from me it is just as well to drive me out.

Q. It had the effect of driving you out? A. Of course; people can't live where there is no business to do.

MR. GARDNER: But you are there yet? A. I am there still.

MR. TULLOCH: Your business is not there yet? A. Yes, sir; the same business yet.

MR. CRAWFORD: As a matter of fact the Commissioners didn't do anything to try to make you leave there, did they; to try to break up your business? A. No; they didn't do anything of the kind, to drive me away from there, but they took the trade away from me.

MR. GARDNER: The Commissioners did? A. That is what I think.

MR. TULLOCH: They didn't do anything directly, but they did it indirectly: is that it, by carrying the trade away? A. That is exactly what he means about it. I made an offer to sell my property and improvements there, but they didn't want to buy me out.

MR. CRAWFORD: Isn't it a fact that whenever buildings are put up there, they are to belong eventually to the Commissioners; to go under the control of the Commissioners? A. Everybody that was building in there built with their own money, and parties sold out there and was paid for it, and so I expected to be treated in the same way.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you expect to be bought out or kicked out? A. Well, I don't know about that.

THE CHAIRMAN: The mere fact of your business leaving you was not owing to any act on the part of the Commissioners; it was the campers moving their camp that took your business away from you? A. There is parties in the valley that have forced those people not to camp there, but to move far away to the other place.

MR. GARDNER: Who were these parties that did the forcing? A. Mr. Cook and everybody else that have got their interest up above that place.

Q. Did you pay for the right to carry on business there, to the Commissioners? A. With the permission of the Guardian, I bought Mr. Harris and John Bachecalupi out. I bought Harris out in 1881 and Bachecalupi in 1882.

Q. Ask him how long that lease extended to, that he bought? A. I asked for a lease, but they told me it was not necessary to have one.

MR. GARDNER: Did these parties, Cook and the other fellows—how did they force them; did they force them or hold out better inducements for the campers; how could they force them? A. Anybody that calls there that wants to camp a length of time, inquiring about where there is a place to camp, they will drive them all up there; parties, but I don't know who.

MR. TULLOCH: He just now spoke about parties now driving and inducing other parties to go up to the other place for business and neglecting his, did he not? A. They don't neglect my business, but where they used to camp; they go and camp perhaps two hundred yards from this place.

Q. What makes them camp two hundred yards from there? A. It seems that strangers that go there and inquire about it, the natives—the people that live in the neighborhood there—tell them the place that is away above to camp.

Q. Tell them to go up to the other place? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He spoke awhile ago about getting permission from the Guardian, didn't he, to carry on his business? Did you pay any money for the permission? A. I paid rent.

Q. How much did he pay? A. I always paid $60 a year rent. Mr. Dennison raised it up to $120.

Q. He paid $60 a year and finally paid $120, did he? A. I paid for two years $120, but now they fix it that I will be allowed only to pay $100. It was promised to me that the Commissioners will reinstate the trade. He said to me if I pay $120 a year, he would try to give me the exclusive right to carry on business in the Yosemite Valley, and they will give me a piece of ground to keep a horse and a cow for my family, but I have not got that land yet. There has been built a fence there about ten or fifteen yards, or twenty, from the store, in the park. The fence is in my way for my business; interferes with my business; when there is a team, it can't easily turn around.

Q. Who had that fence built? A. Mr. Dennison put that up. Mr. Dennison made it.

Cross-examination.

MR. GOUCHER: How many years have you been paying $120, Angelo? Answer—I have been paying for two years, and, you see, this year I make my application. I can't support the place no more, because I do all my improvements, you know.

Q. You testified that the campers had been camping further up; what did you mean—what place? A. They camp up here; last summer they camped down to Leidig's a good deal, but last year, in August or September, there was a couple of bridges that they showed to people to go to and camp, on the other side of the river.

Q. For several years past the campers have been camping up near the Harris place, opposite the Stoneman House, haven't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But there were no bridges across the river at that time? A. No.

Q. Now, this last summer the campers commenced to camp down near Leidig's old place? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So long as they camp near Leidig's place it was better for you? A. Yes, sir; better for me, because I got the trade.

Q. Then your store was in the nearest place? A. Yes, sir; the nearest place.

Q. But later in the season, in August and September, they commenced camping up above again? A. Yes, sir; they fixed two bridges.

Q. After they fixed the bridges? A. Yes, sir; they fixed the place all nice for campers, and this year they camp up there.

Q. Since these bridges have been put across the river, if the campers camp at their old camping ground it will be very easy for them to cross the river on these bridges and get to a nearer store than yours? A. To Cook's.

Q. Nearer than yours? It will be nearer for them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that will injure you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So if those bridges were not there it would be just as well for you as before, wouldn't it? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Did they go up and leave your business, and go to that other place of business because they were nearer to it and the bridges facilitated it, or did they go there because they were induced to go there by other parties to injure your business? A. When people call by there and inquire where is the place of camping, why, everybody shows the new place to go and camp. So my place of business would be injured, and it would be the furthest one; about a mile further away from my place of business, the camping ground.

MR. GOUCHER: Angelo, is the place where the people tell the campers to go, the same place they have camped for a great many years? A. Before, they camped any place they wanted to. There are too many fences now.

Q. What place do you mean as the camping ground that people tell the campers to go to? A. They asked the question of the Guardian; he shows the camping ground up there.

Q. Which is the place; is it near Harris' place? A. Near Harris' place.

Q. Didn't the campers camp there a great many years? A. They camped there a great many years, but before, they camped any place they wanted to; but now it is fenced in; I saw the Guardian making a fence; they have got no place to camp.

Q. Isn't your trouble because the bridges were put across; isn't that what injures your business? A. Yes, sir; because the bridges are close by the new hotel.

MR. TULLOCH: Did Guardian Dennison or anybody else tell parties to move up to the other ground and thereby injure you in your business? A. Dennison sent all the people up above my place.

Q. Dennison did so?

INTERPRETER: That is what he said; and to camp there where they used to, they have got to have a permit to camp there.

Q. That is, to camp in the old ground, they have got to have a permit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in camping in the old place it would benefit you, would it? A.

In 1881 there were no other stores; I was the only one that was conducting a store there; and after they raised the rent they gave the privilege to Mr. Cook to keep a store and put up business there.

THE CHAIRMAN: How many stores are there in the Yosemite Valley now?
A. Mr. and Mr. Cook; two.

WILLIAM G. LONG.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: State your place of residence? Answer—Sonoma, Tuolumne County.

Q. The first of these charges is: "Misappropriating public moneys and appropriations in relation to the Yosemite Valley?" Do you know anything of that? A. I do not, so far as my knowledge goes.

Q. The second is: "Destruction of public and private property in the Yosemite Valley?" A. I know nothing.

Q. "Unnecessary destruction of timber in the valley?" A. Nothing whatever. I was never in the valley but once, a very short time.

Q. "Clearing and plowing the valley and meadow land?" A. Nothing.

Q. "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley?" A. I can hardly make any answer. All that I know about the valley is hearsay. I have not been in the valley myself.

Q. You know nothing of your own knowledge? A. Nothing, so far as that is concerned.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State laws?" A. I know nothing.

MR. GOUCHER: Do you remember when the law was passed forbidding, and how it happened to be passed, forbidding meetings with closed doors? A. I do.

Q. You may just state to the committee for their information, please. You are the only witness who has been on the stand who is familiar with the matter? A. I will state that, being a member of the committee at the time—Senator Goucher also was a member—that the committee, or Mr. Goucher rather, I think, introduced—you drew up the bill; I think it was by you that that clause was introduced, was it not, Senator?

MR. GOUCHER: I believe it was; yes, sir. You or I, one or both of us? A. I think so. I think we drew most of the bill together.

Q. Just state to the committee when that was? A. 1885, I think; the session of 1885. I think it was considered for the better government of the valley that Mr. Goucher and myself—and it was recommended by the committee afterwards—drew the bill up; an amendatory Act to amend the Commissioners, so far as their meeting with closed doors, that they should not be held with closed doors; and also that all moneys received by them for rent should not be paid out, as it had formerly been, without an account; it should be paid over to the treasury; and moneys that would be by a warrant on the State Treasury, through the auditor.

MR. TULLOCH: Those were the essential privileges of the bill? A. And another part, that the Commissioners should not grant any exclusive franchises; that was part of the bill. I don't know what was recommended in parts of the bill; but I think that those were parts of it, and we passed it that session.

Q. [7.] "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of franchises or privileges in the valley?" A. I know nothing of my own knowledge, only hearsay.

Q. You don't know that they have ever been violated? A. Not of my own knowledge.

Q. You don't know that they have not? A. I don't know that they have not.

Q. [8.] "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." A. Nothing.

Q. [9.] "Failure to recognize their own contracts." A. I don't know anything about it. I will state that I have not been in the valley, I think, since 1870, or 1872, or 1873.

Q. [10.] "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the Board, and illegally leasing the same." A. I know nothing about it.

Q. [11.] "Rendering useless the district school of the Yosemite Valley." A. Nothing.

Q. [12.] "Neglecting the public roads and trails within the grant." A. Nothing.

Q. [13.] "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." A. I know nothing.

Q. [14.] "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." A. I can only judge by hearsay. How far do you go back in the examination? To what years? I have been several times on the committee, the same committee that we spoke of here—

MR. TULLOCH: I don't know how far we go back. I suppose several administrations.

THE CHAIRMAN: We will go back to the commencement of the management of the Yosemite Valley by Commissioners.

MR. GOUCHER: That would take you back to 1864 or 1865. The Congress bill was passed in 1864. I presume the State took charge about 1865. A. The old Commissioners of the valley, Ashburner, and others, claimed that they were appointed for a lifetime, during good behavior, and they took the case to the Supreme Court, and I think the Supreme Court decided against them. Their management, I should consider, was a little loose, but I never heard any strict charges against them. They thought they were the sole managers of the valley, and had a perfect right to be Commissioners as long as they chose. The Supreme Court decided against them, and afterwards there were others appointed. So far as my own knowledge of the valley is concerned, I know but very little about it; but I had had some relations with the Yosemite Committee here, two or three different sessions. I have some idea how they are managed, but I have never seen any charges sustained that were brought against them. There were none particularly in 1885. There was a great deal of talk on the outside, but there was nothing came before the committee that could be sustained. Mr. Briggs, one of the Commissioners—some gentleman had made the charge before the committee that he got away with a mule team, but there was no evidence before the committee that sustained the charge.

MR. GOUCHER: He was a preacher, wasn't he? A. He is not present, is he?

MR. TULLOCH: You don't know whether they did get away with the mule team or not? A. I believe the team was lost. Somebody had it. It was not to be found at that time. They couldn't tell where it was.

Q. Who was charged with taking mules? A. Mr. Briggs, one of the Commissioners.

Q. Does he follow the same calling as Sam Jones? A. I think so.

Q. Have you or have you not an idea that the affairs of the valley have been adversely managed by the Commissioners, Mr. Long? A. Well, that is a hard question to answer. There is one thing certain: if the Commissioners have granted exclusive privileges, which, by the papers—I think I have read that they have admitted some of them; Mr. Mills admitted them—exclusive franchises—they have violated the letter and spirit of the law; the intention of it, anyway. It was talked over with Senator Goucher and myself, and I think by him it was incorporated in the bill, by Senator Goucher, he being an Assemblyman, stopping the granting of exclusive franchises or privileges. Every one should have an equal chance.

Q. Do you or do you not think that that law has been violated? A. I know nothing of my own knowledge, only from what I have heard. I read, I think, that it was admitted before the Senate committee, or before this committee, by one of the Commissioners.

Q. You really have no absolute knowledge then in the matter? A. No; I have not.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know anything about the ground being fenced up in the valley? A. I do not, of my own knowledge. I have heard it since I have been here. I have not been there since 1870, I think, or 1872.

Q. Do you know anything about the roads and trails, how they are kept? If they are kept well or ill? A. No; I do not.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know whether there has been any eviction of settlers or other parties from the valley? A. I do not.

Q. Anything about wood having been cut in the valley? A. I have heard such things, but I don't know.

Q. Don't know of it? A. Don't know of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you know anything about quantities of land having been enclosed, plowed up, and farmed? A. I have heard there was.

Q. Do you know anything about sections of land having been inclosed by fences? A. I have heard it stated so this evening.

Q. You don't know it as a fact? A. No, sir; as I said before, I have not been in the valley, and have no way of gaining knowledge other than hearing of it. I have heard it said in the last two or three years that the Commissioners have paid more attention to the valley, and it has been better governed than it was before; the finances, for instance; they keep the books in some shape, and you can tell, so I have heard, how they manage the business. In earlier times you could scarcely find a voucher for anything that was paid out.

MR. GOUCHER: No mules have been missing since I have been on the Commission. A. I have not heard it; there might have been; and horses.

CHARLES ANDERSON.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know anything about the charge against the Commissioners for the management of Yosemite Valley of having swindled your brother out of his wages? Answer—I only know this much, that he never got nothing, that I know of.

Q. Was he working in the employ of the valley, the Commissioners, or the Guardian? A. Yes; working on the trail.

Q. Who employed him? A. Briggs, I believe, Commissioner Briggs.

Q. What year was that? A. 1880 or 1882.

Q. How long did he work? A. Two hundred and twenty-two days, I believe.

Q. Did he work by the day or month? A. By the day or month; I don't know which.

Q. Was it by the day or month? A. By the day.

Q. How much per day? A. $5 a day.

Q. How much, if any, money was ever paid for his services? A. I don't know if he ever received any of that. To the best of my knowledge he never received nothing.

Q. He never received anything? A. Not that I know of.

Q. If he had received any, would you have known it? A. Well, I would have known something of it, I guess.

Q. Well, do you know as a fact that he was swindled out of it? You know he didn't get it, do you? A. Well, I am informed so, that he never got it. I was not in the valley all the time. If I had been there, I would have known; but I was not there.

Q. Did he ever bring forward any claim for his money, subsequently? Did he ever try to get it? A. No; I didn't get it so far.

Q. Did he ever try to get it; your brother? A. I don't know. He put it in the hands of Mr. Goucher, I believe, to let him get it if he could.

Q. Who put it in his hands; your brother? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was ever done in the matter? A. Nothing, so far as I know.

Q. Where is your brother now? A. Dead, and buried. Lying up in the valley, in the graveyard.

MR. TULLY: What were your opportunities for knowing whether or not your brother ever received any of that money? Did you ever converse with him about it, and upon what do you predicate your idea that he didn't get it? A. Well, I have not seen him, probably, since 1879, and he died, and was dead and buried before I saw him again.

Q. Where did you get your idea that he didn't get it—that he was swindled out of it? A. Well, there was no signs of it; when I went there I didn't get only $2 50. That was all the money that he had, after he died and paid his funeral expenses.

Q. Did you converse with your brother often about the nature of that claim, or debt, before he died? A. Not very often, I did not.

Q. In any conversation that you ever had with him, did he ever state to you that he had never gotten any of that money? A. I had not seen him after he had worked by the day.

Q. Didn't see him after this debt was contracted? A. Not after he got done that contract.

Q. How much was the amount, do you think, that he lost? A. Well, $1,110.

Q. You said that he sent the account to Mr. Goucher. How do you know that fact? A. Well, I know it through Mr. Goucher. I went there and found the vouchers with Goucher, in Mariposa, that he delivered over to him before he died.

Q. Did you see those papers? A. He read them to me.

Q. What was the nature of those papers? Was it in the nature of an account, demanding payment of this money or this indebtedness? Were the papers that you read there in the nature of a demand upon Mr. Goucher for the wages or money that was due your brother? A. Certainly; by all means.

Q. That was what it was? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Goucher about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Goucher tell you about it, if anything? A. Well, he told me this way: He couldn't get it from the Commissioners; if he got elected to the Legislature, he would try to get it through that way.

Q. He told you that he had not been able to get it from the Commissioners, and if he was elected to the Legislature, he would try to get the money through the Legislature? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he give you any reason why he had not been able to get it from the Commissioners? A. Not yet, so far.

MR. GOUCHER: Let me state, Mr. Tully; it may facilitate that some. The occurrence he speaks of was before I had anything to do with the Commissioners, as a Commissioner, some considerable time.

MR. TULLY: You were not one of the Commissioners at that time?

MR. GOUCHER: No. His brother put this account into my hands. His brother, George Anderson, put the claim in my hands, in 1885, I think.

THE WITNESS: Was it February?

MR. GOUCHER: No. It was just before the June meeting of the Commissioners.

THE WITNESS: It was a good deal before that.

MR. GOUCHER: A month or so?

THE WITNESS: February or March. I know it was one or the other.

MR. TULLY: They were placed in your hands as a private individual?

MR. GOUCHER: I appeared afterwards, I think at the June meeting, 1885, before the Board, at Yosemite, at the annual meeting.

THE WITNESS: That was all, the leases and papers from Mr. Briggs.

MR. TULLY: Did you succeed to your brother's interest in these debts up there, if he had any—his estate, whatever he had left? A. Yes, sir; I meant to pay all that, if I got anything to pay it with; but some of it is not settled yet.

Q. Did you apply there for his assets—for what he had? A. Yes, sir; I can show you that, if you want to see it.

Q. No; it is not necessary. A. I have got the administration papers here, if you want to look at them.

Q. What was the nature of his assets? How much property did you find there—moneys, or other properties? A. Well, I found very little property, very little money, as I told you before; two and a half, I told you.

Q. In money? A. In money.

Q. Did you find any other property? A. Well, there was other things there, but they didn't amount to nothing; some old tools he had been working the trails with.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you find any accounts? A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you find any notes? A. No notes.

Q. You never found any evidences of indebtedness to your brother; that other persons owed your brother, that might have been the result of his lending money out, if he had received that? A. He loaned no money out so far as I know, sir.

Q. You didn't find any evidences of outstanding indebtedness to him? A. No.

Q. Debts due him? A. No; they were all silent on that. If any were indebted to him, they were silent upon that subject. I found out, though, that he owed Mrs. McGlynn $29 for board. I paid her that.

Q. A board bill that he died owing? A. Yes, sir; he died owing a board bill, and I paid it to Mrs. Glynn, and I guess she can testify to that; she is here, isn't she?

MR. GOUCHER: Yes, sir; I hear so.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understand you to say you have been working in the valley? A. Not me; I have not been working in the valley; only helped my brother, in 1876, to haul up some timber to South Dome. He was the first one to get on to that.

MR. TULLOCH: How came you to know your brother was working up there? A. Up where?

Q. In the Yosemite Valley? A. I could not help but know it. He worked there from 1884 up until the time he died, more or less.

Q. Do you know he worked there that length of time, two hundred and twenty-two days? A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. You know he was to have been paid $5 per day? A. Well, he never got it.

Q. Was that the agreement? A. What?

Q. That he was to have gotten $5 per day? A. That is what I understand; that is the best of my knowledge. I can't swear to what I don't know.

Q. To the best of your knowledge he didn't get anything for it? A. To the best of my knowledge he got nothing.

MR. TULLY: From whom did you derive the information, that is, who told you he was to get $5 per day? A. Well, that was reported to me.

Q. Did your brother tell you at any time? A. No, he did not; because I hadn't seen him, and we didn't correspond but very little.

Q. Your opinion, then, is founded upon what you learned there; from those who were supposed to know? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who, you assume, at least, did know what they were talking about? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: If he had ever received any of this money, would you have had any knowledge of it subsequently? A. I think I would have had some. He done a heap of work there that he never got no pay for at all; that was around the Dome. The timber is laying there yet; that he done a great deal of work where he built his house, getting timber up, and I hauled it up for him, and the timber is laying there yet. After that, he went to build a piece of trail to the Dome, but he could never complete it for lack of means.

Q. Who was he working for at that time? A. Nobody but himself. That he can't charge anything for, I guess. The valley wouldn't allow him anything for that, I reckon—cutting roads and trails.

MR. TULLY: That was his own business? A. That was his own business, I reckon. They are there yet for anybody to look at, if they want to go to see them.

MR. GOUCHER: What time was it that George Anderson, your brother, died? A. You know very well what time he died.

Q. I did, but the date has escaped my mind. A. He died in 1884, May eighth; the eighth day of May. Mr. Clark could testify to that; he is here. Mr. Leidig can do it, too.

Q. Your word is good enough for me. A. That is all that I can tell you. If you don't doubt my word, that is all right.

Q. If I did, I would tell you, but I don't. A. You can, just as well as not.

Q. I never said anything about doubting your word. You were the first party that mentioned that. Nobody else expressed anything in regard to doubting your word. A. I will testify what is right. That is what I came here to do.

Q. I had merely forgotten the date. A. No; you didn't forget, I guess. Your recollection is not that bad.

Q. Well, I have a great many friends who have died, and I can't remember when each one died. A. Oh, yes you do; pretty good recollection.

Q. Well, you are under oath, and I suppose you have got no right to question my memory at all. It is as much as most men can do to take care of their own. A. That is so; you are right about that. You know very well, when I came to ask you about the papers, you told me you gave them over to the Commissioners, the whole bunch of them.

Q. That is true, sir; that was a fact. A. Well, yes; I believe it is a fact too. I never saw them after you read them to me that time.

GEORGE E. SPRAGUE.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside? Answer—I reside in Groveland, or two miles from Groveland.

Q. Do you understand the nature of these charges that you are going to testify about? A. I have read something of them in the papers.

Q. Are you acquainted in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir; I was in there in 1858, 1864, 1869, and every year since, except 1879, 1878, and 1883.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know anything as to the misapplying of public moneys and appropriations? A. I do not.

Q. "Destruction of public and private property in the Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, there has been considerable timber cut there and some houses torn down this last season. I have seen them torn down—saw that they were torn down. I don't know anything more about it than that.

MR. TULLY: Of your own knowledge who tore them down? A. I do not.

Q. To whom did those houses belong, if you know? A. Well, one of them was the old Black hotel, that the State bought by an appropriation, and the other is what is termed the Leidig house.

Q. You simply know that they were torn down? A. They were torn down, yes, sir; this last summer.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know at whose instance they were torn down? A. I do not.

Q. "Unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, there has been some timber destroyed that I think should have been left to stand. There is a good many small trees there that are standing yet, that should be cut down. When I first went there, the undergrowth was comparatively limited, and fine meadows; and since then they have been destroyed by debris coming down from the mountains, in some cases, and in others, overgrown with young pines.

MR. TULLY: I understand that this charge about the destruction of the timber will refer to the destruction of such timber as would tend to mar the beauties of the valley? A. Well, there has been some timber cut that I should think would better have been left standing; especially about the Stoneman House; and some oak trees directly on the line between Barnard's hotel and the lower Yosemite Falls.

Q. How much and what was the general character of those trees? A. I couldn't say how many trees, some pine and some oak.

Q. Whether there was ten, a dozen, twenty, or fifty? A. Well, I am not familiar enough with that portion of the valley to say.

Q. You simply know that a number of trees have been cut down? A. Yes, sir; there was a good many trees, I noticed, that were marked by the Commissioners to be cut down, at their meeting in June, 1887, and they were cut down afterwards.

Q. You assume that they were cut down by order of the Commissioners?

A. Yes, sir; that is what I understood, that they had marked those trees, and ordered the Guardian to have them cut down.

Q. Did you learn what the object in cutting the trees down was? A. To clear the ground around the Stoneman House.

Q. Did they obstruct the view to any part of the valley, or were they simply in the way of the guests? A. They were in the way of guests, and some of them they were afraid in case of a storm would blow against the hotel, and others they thought marred the view of distant points.

Q. Do you believe that the destruction of that timber was unnecessary to the security and proper enjoyment of the valley? A. There was some few trees that I would not have cut down, if I had been manager.

Q. What was the character of the trees? Were they large sightly trees? A. They were large trees—pines and oaks.

Q. Such trees as would have added, if they had been preserved, you think, to the beauties of the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think that their destruction was an injury to the valley, looking at it from an artistic standpoint? That visitors coming to enjoy the beauties of the valley, would like to have seen them? A. They looked prettier than the stumps that were there, and that are still left there.

Q. Are the stumps still standing there? A. Some of them have been dug out. I don't know whether they all have or not.

Q. Your opinion is that there was an unnecessary destruction of timber, looking at it from your standpoint? A. There was some trees destroyed that I would not have destroyed.

MR. GOUCHER: Do you know about how many trees were removed in the immediate vicinity of the Stoneman House? A. I do not. I heard that there was about one hundred marked to be cut down. I don't know how many were cut down.

Q. You heard that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been there since the house was completed? A. Yes, sir; I was there in September.

Q. You was familiar with the ground before the building was there, wasn't you? A. I have been past it a good many times; was not very familiar with it.

Q. From the appearance of the ground around the Stoneman House when you were there last time, how many trees did you believe to have been removed? A. I couldn't say.

Q. They are not all taken out, are they? A. No; they are not all taken out.

Q. Your understanding was that those that were taken out were to give room around the building, and also to provide for the safety of the building, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir; the most of them.

Q. And you heard also, didn't you, that others were taken out because of their unsightly condition? A. I heard that there was some taken out.

Q. For that reason? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, can you make any estimate as to the number you think were unnecessarily cut? A. I could not.

MR. TULLOCK: "Clearing and plowing of the valley and meadow land." A. There has been considerable land fenced in there, and some of it plowed. When I first went there, there was considerable many natural meadows for a person to stake out their horses—get feed for them. Now, those meadows are all fenced in, and there is no show for a camper to get feed for his animal unless he buys it.

Q. About how much of those meadow lands have been plowed up? A. In the Harris place, I think there are about sixty acres plowed up there, and about twenty plowed near the Stoneman House; and at the old Leidig place I don't know how much there is: some fifteen or twenty acres, I should judge.

Q. By whom was it plowed up? A. By the lessees, Coffman & Kenney, I supposed.

Q. Plowed up for agricultural purposes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sowed in grain and harvested? A. Sowed in grain.

Q. Do they cut hay there? A. They cut hay there.

Q. Is that inside of the inclosure? A. Inside of the inclosure.

Q. You say there were about sixty acres in one piece there? A. In one piece, I think about sixty acres.

Q. What part of the valley is that? A. That is what we term the Royal Arch farm; the place that Harris formerly rented.

Q. On the south side of the river? A. On the north side of the river.

Q. Right under what they call the Royal Arch? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Plowed up by Kenney & Co., the lessees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was that land, all, collectively; how much altogether, do you think? A. Well, I should judge something like one hundred acres.

Q. Was it sown in grain? A. It has been sown in grain this fall, and some of it before. Some of it was sown last spring and winter, and some of it was plowed this fall. It has not been sowed before.

Q. In addition to that, how much land did you say had been cleared? A. Well, there was a good deal of that that never has been cleared. The underbrush never grew up on it. The Lemmon place has been under fence for some twenty-five years. That is, he was there the first time I was in there, and in 1864, and he fenced it soon afterward. The second time I was in there, he was there, and fenced in and planted an orchard. That is, one upon the south side and one upon the north side of the river. Afterward, he built a house upon the north side of the river.

Q. Who planted the orchard? A. Mr. J. G. Lemmon.

Q. "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley?" A. I don't know, except upon the ground that is fenced in; that is all.

MR. TULLY: I understand that question would be directed toward the fencing in of the valley? A. If it was not fenced, why, people could stake their horses there, in the spring of the year, and they would get some feed.

Q. Do this field and inclosures, that have been fenced in, operate as a bar to the free ingress and egress of tourists and visitors who go to the valley, to such portions of the valley as they might want to see? A. No; they do not.

Q. Suppose, Mr. Sprague, that a tourist should want to go into the valley, and should want to go out of the main roads and highways that are made, and to go out into the little byways, and corners, and cañons around there, would these fences operate as a barrier to his freedom of locomotion over and about the valley? A. There is a road outside of all those fences, in the valley, outside of those fences, so that he can go to any part of the valley, except upon those meadows that are fenced.

Q. Then a tourist or a visitor, when he goes there in order to enjoy the beauties of that valley, must follow the roads, or must he not? A. Well, it is difficult getting around the valley except upon the roads, in some places. In some places they go close to the debris falling from the cliffs, and there is no possible show to travel, except upon the roads. In other places there are wider spaces between the fence and the bluffs.

Q. Take one of those roads going up to Mirror Lake, for instance; suppose he wanted to go up to see Mirror Lake, and upon his return he wanted to turn off to the sides and go up into those little cañons and byways, could he do so without getting over or under or through fences? A. Yes, sir; there is nothing to hinder his going out upon the sides.

Q. He could leave the road anywhere? A. Leave the road and go out as far as he could from the rocks.

Q. Is it not a fact that those roads are fenced in on each side for quite a distance, on both sides of the valley? A. There is a portion of the road between what is termed the old Hutchings place and the Harris house that I have not been over for—well, in fact, I never was over it but once; and I don't know whether there is a fence upon both sides of the road there or not. I don't know.

Q. I was going to ask you if it was not true that those roads are simply lanes between fences? A. It is not; except with relation to that portion of the valley, and I don't know about that.

Q. Is it the case in any other portion of the valley? A. It is not; except on that portion there; right at the old Hutchings orchard there is a lane there for a short distance, and above I don't know. As I say, I never was over the road but once since it was built, and I don't know whether it is fenced upon both sides or not.

Q. How long since you were there? A. On that portion of the road? I was there in 1885; that time I went the round of the valley, but the last time I was there was in last October. I have not been over that portion of the valley, though, since 1885.

MR. TULLOCH: About how much fencing would you judge there is in the valley? A. Well, I should think there must be at least six miles in length.

Q. In width? A. Well, that is the length of the fencing.

Q. All, collectively, six miles? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that inclose lands or ground that parties might desire to see and might want to visit? A. Nothing more than they might want to go—if there were no fences there they might go there and stake their horses out and get feed.

Q. They would not be spots of interest, would they, or would they not? A. No.

Q. What is the nature of these fences? Are they picket fences? A. Some picket fence and some wire fence.

Q. Is there much wire fence? A. Well, from the old Hutchings place, clear to the lower end of the fence around the north side of the river; and what it is on Barnard's place and up through the Harris way—I think there is a portion rails and a portion pickets, and perhaps some wire fence.

MR. GARDNER: On these wire fences is there a board also? A. No.

Q. Just wire? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they common barbed wire? A. Common barbed wire fence. There is a portion fenced from the Guardian's office, down past Cavagnero's store, about—well, perhaps an eighth of a mile—that is, this wire with poles nailed on.

Q. Are those fences close to the roads? A. Yes, sir; a portion are there right by the side of the road.

Q. For how long a distance? A. The road from the old Hutchings barn up through the Harris place, the fence there is right directly upon the road.

Q. What distance is that? A. Well, I should judge it is a mile and a half.

Q. And for that distance the fence runs right along close to the road? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A person couldn't go up on the right side without running against the fence? A. In going up the valley it will be upon his right side, and coming down it would be upon his left.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State laws." A. Well, there was some feeling in regard to the meeting there in 1885; about its being held with closed doors. The Senator will recollect that.

THE CHAIRMAN: State to the committee what that was.

MR. TULLY: What was the circumstances attending it? A. In the morning they received petitions and complaints and referred them to committees. In the afternoon they adjourned, and met in one of the back rooms of the office. I don't know whether they gave orders not to admit anybody, but it was the understanding that there was no parties admitted except one or two that they invited in to hear them, Mr. Fitch of the "Bulletin" for one; and some parties outside that desired to hear the business of the meeting, and also to address the Commissioners, were complaining some about not being allowed in. Some of them went in and others did not; and after the business was done they threw the door open, and announced their decisions in cases.

Q. What was the nature of that meeting; for what purpose was it called?

A. It was the general meeting in June.

Q. Just a meeting of the Board? A. A meeting of the Board.

Q. For general purposes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any person applying there for admission at that time that was refused? A. I don't know that they were refused admission, but there was some parties that would like to have had heard the discussion in relation to matters before the Board that didn't feel like crowding in before the Board to hear the discussion, and so they stayed out.

Q. Found the doors closed? A. Yes, sir. The door was closed and locked, upon the front part of the office.

Q. What year was that? A. 1885.

MR. GOUCHER: What Commissioners attended that meeting, do you remember? Mr. Griffith, Mr. Madden, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Mills, and Governor Stoneman. I don't recollect whether Mr. Mentzer was there at that time or not.

Q. Was Mr. O'Brien there? A. Mr. O'Brien, I think, was there.

Q. Mr. Madden? A. I named Mr. Madden.

Q. Chapman? A. Chapman was there, I believe.

Q. Mr. Raymond—do you remember whether he was there? A. I think Mr. Raymond was not there, although I am not certain about that. I believe he was there, too. I think he was there at that meeting.

Q. You say that was the June meeting in 1885? A. The June meeting in 1885.

MR. GOUCHER: Before my distinguished honor as Commissioner commenced? A. Yes, sir. You was the gentleman who was very indignant because you were not allowed in the meeting.

MR. GOUCHER: The fact was, I was an attorney for the Commission at that time, and I resigned because they held a meeting with closed doors. That was a fact. Mr. Sprague knows that.

THE WITNESS: There was another matter that he wanted to address the Commission in relation to, and he had to apply for admission to the meeting of the Commission, of which he was the attorney, to be allowed in.

MR. GOUCHER: I want to say this: that I don't wish anything that I have said to be construed as condemning what they did. I don't know what excuse they will offer for that, or what explanation they will give—the gentlemen who were Commissioners at that time.

MR. TULLOCH: "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley."

MR. TULLY: I suppose so far as the violation of State law is concerned, that is a matter of opinion; but as to the fact, what do you know about the fact: whether or not exclusive privileges are or have been granted there? A. I don't know of my own knowledge, anything about it.

Q. Who are the lessees there? A. Coffman & Kenney, J. J. Cook, John K. Barnard, Albert Snow, I believe. I think that is all; Angelo Cavagnero, and John Finch. He leased the blacksmith shop; Mrs. Glynn, James McCauley.

Q. Those gentlemen all are there and have leased, I understand, from the Commissioners? A. From the Commission, as I understand it.

Q. Do these leases, or does the possession that those parties hold there in the grounds that they have leased and with the privileges that they secure, thereby operate in the nature of an exclusive privilege? That is, excluding others from the enjoyment of either similar or other privileges in the valley? A. I don't know whether other parties have applied for similar leases or not. I don't know that they have, and don't know but they have.

Q. You don't know that any other parties have ever applied there? A. I don't know of my own knowledge.

Q. You don't know whether or not if they had applied, they would have been able to obtain leases or not? A. No, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you ever apply for a lease of anything, or any privilege? A. I applied for a lease of the Royal Arch farm, in 1886, offering the sum of $700. I told Dr. May that that was my purpose in there, and he suggested that I make application for the lease. Before I made application it was talked among the guides and other parties there that they were not going to allow Harris to have it another season, but after the meeting of the Commission, Dr. May told me that the Commissioners had decided not to lease the ranch the next year, but to cultivate it themselves and then lease it with the Stoneman House; lease the ground with the Stoneman House in two years from that time.

Q. You didn't get a lease? A. I did not.

Q. Who ultimately got a lease of the ground? A. Harris got the lease of it for the next year.

Q. What did he pay for it? A. I don't know.

MR. GOUCHER: What year did you say that was? A. 1886.

MR. TULLY: Do you know who it was afterwards let to after Harris' term expired? A. It was let to Coffman & Kenney.

Q. Have they had it ever since? A. They had it last year and have it now.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know what they pay for it? A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether it was greater or less than the amount you offered? A. I don't know; I heard that it was less, but I don't know.

MR. TULLY: I understand you to say you did make application? A. I did make application.

Q. You offered $700? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And didn't get it? A. And didn't get it.

Q. And you know, don't you, how much the present lessees, or those who did get it, gave for it? A. I do not.

MR. TULLOCH: You don't know what Harris paid for it? A. I do not.

Q. Who had it before Harris had it? A. Lemmon had it at first.

Q. Do you know what he paid for it? A. He sold the property to the State, and there was an appropriation made, and then, as I understand it, or my recollection of it is that he rented it from the Commission. But how much he paid I don't know. He rented it then to Brightman & Kenney; and afterwards Harris had it, after Lemmon's death.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. As far as I know they do recognize their own contracts.

MR. TULLY: Of your own knowledge, you don't know of any instance in which they have repudiated their own contracts? A. I do not, of my own knowledge.

MR. TULLOCH: Have you a knowledge of their dealings, and would you know, anyway? A. Well, I have been at several of their meetings, and seen the reports in the papers; that is all I would know.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State, and illegally leasing the same?" A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. I don't know anything about those.

THE CHAIRMAN: What is the condition of the roads generally from your observation? A. The roads are in pretty good condition, when I have been over them.

Q. Do you think they are well kept, well cared for? A. They appear to be. All I have been over the roads for the last year or two are from the foot of the grade, from the Big Oak Flat road up to the hotel and back; up as far as the Stoneman House.

THE CHAIRMAN: Were you over any of the trails? A. I have not been over any of the trails for the last four or five years.

MR. TULLY: "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties?" A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States?" A. I could criticise in regard to that.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Sprague can state, for the benefit of the committee, what is his opinion in regard to the management of the valley, from his observation. He states that there has been a good many trees cut down and a good many fences built.

Q. What is your opinion, Mr. Sprague? A. I think the valley should be managed in the interest of the State, and not as a source of revenue. I think the State Legislature should apportion money for the benefit of the valley, for the benefit of the grant, and that the valley should be thrown open at a nominal rent to parties who wish to do business there, and the fences should be taken down, and allow people that go in there with their own teams to get as much feed as they can there upon the natural meadows. People that are used to buying hay for $5 or $6 a ton, don't like to go in there and pay 3 cents a pound for it. There have been considerable many complaints in relation to the high prices for feed there.

MR. TULLY: That would raise the inference that the management does not permit of all those things? A. Well, it is a question between the Commissioners and people that desire to visit the valley. If the Commission want to make a money-making investment of the Yosemite Valley, the higher rents they can get, and the more they can get for those rents, the bigger income there can be from the valley.

Q. Then looking at it from your standpoint, you don't think the valley has been managed in such a manner as is conclusive to the best interests of tourists and the State, and the public generally? A. Not in that respect. The season there is very short, and parties paying high rents have to charge high prices, in order to make a success of the business.

Q. From your observation there—as long as we have gotten on to that branch of it—from your observation there, do you or do you not believe that the better policy for the State would be that these Commissioners should change their present style and system of management there, and throw it more open to the public, so that the public would have freer access to all the enjoyments or privileges, and everything else in the valley? A. I do.

Q. You think there is room for improvement on the present management? A. Room for improvement on the present management in that respect.

MR. TULLY: I understand that it will devolve upon this committee, after they shall have gotten through, to suggest anything, and to draw our conclusion as to whether the present management, in our opinion, is conducive to the best interests of the State, and we are required, under our resolution, to make some recommendation.

MR. GARDNER: If they would remove all these fences, how long would the feed last? A. If they would remove those fences, and keep up the saddle train horses, there would be feed for all the campers that would go in there, for the season.

THE CHAIRMAN: Without buying any feed? A. Without buying feed; that is, if parties wanted to stake their horses out upon grass, they could get plenty of feed for them.

MR. TULLY: Then I understand from that, that you consider, in your judgment, that those fences and the inclosure of pasture lands there, are not conducive to the best interests of the valley, and the convenience and the accommodation of those who desire to visit it? A. Those who desire to visit with their own teams would find better accommodations there.

Q. If those fences were removed? A. If those fences were removed.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke a moment ago of having to pay $60 a ton for hay? A. They come from the plains, where they can buy hay for $6 a ton, and they don't like to pay 3 cents a pound in the Yosemite Valley.

Q. What are the nearest ranches to the Yosemite Valley? A. On this side there is one about twenty-five miles from the valley.

Q. What could hay be raised at on those ranches and sold for in the valley, and a profit be made at it? A. Well, hay has been sold in the valley, hauled from two miles the other side of Groveland into the valley, and sold, this season, for $40 a ton.

Q. Was it a good quality of hay? A. The best quality of hay.

Q. Wheat or barley? A. Wheat and barley, both.

Q. For $40? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the amount asked by Coffman & Kenney? A. $60.

MR. GARDNER: Do they raise all the hay they want for themselves there? A. They bought some hay of parties before harvesting; I don't know how much; but none since.

Q. Do parties meet with a ready sale, coming in from the outside? A. They do not.

Q. Is there a movement on foot by Coffman & Kenney, or other parties, to prevent parties from the outside from coming in and getting a market for their hay? A. If a person hauls a load of hay in there, he can't sell it, unless he will sell it at whatever price they are willing to give. If he can get orders for it before he takes it in, he makes his own price then. I saw a bill the other day of fifteen thousand and odd pounds of hay that was sold to the Commissioners for $40 a ton; it amounted to $311 08.

Q. For $40 a ton? A. $40 a ton.

Q. And that was brought from the outside? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Then the difference between what hay could be placed there for and would, if they had free access to it, under fair dealings—the difference between what it could be put there for from the outside for the accommodation of visitors, and what Kenney & Company ask for it, is about 50 per cent—an addition of $20 on to the $40, making $60 a ton? A. Yes, sir; if a person was in there buying hay, they would want some little profit on it for $40 a ton; but if there was no hay raised in the valley, parties would lease the barn at a nominal rent, and haul hay in there, and put a man there to sell it.

Q. For the convenience of campers? A. Yes, sir. If a man has a market for hay—

MR. GARDNER: Then it would cost them at least $50? If they had to pay $40 for it they couldn't sell it for less than $10 a ton profit and keep a man there, could they, for a short season? A. If they leased the barn there for a nominal rent, they would put a man there and dispose of their hay, and get cash for it. They could pay for keeping a man there at $45 a ton, I think.

MR. TULLOCH: In relation to the hay which is raised in the valley by Coffman & Kenney, at what price could they sell the hay that they raise themselves and still make a profit? A. Harris used to sell hay from $35 to $40 a ton.

Q. And raise it in the valley? A. And raise it in the valley.

Q. Do these parties raise any better hay than Harris? A. A good deal better hay.

Q. The parties in the valley? A. No, the parties outside of the valley.

Q. I have reference to Coffman & Kenney? A. They raise their hay in the valley.

Q. The kind that Harris raised? A. The same that Harris raised.

Q. And the same that he asked $40 a ton for, they ask $60 for? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Don't they raise grain hay? A. Yes, sir; but they raise a great many brakes in it—a great many weeds.

Q. Harris raised only grass? A. He raised some timothy hay, and some grain hay. Timothy hay was really the best of the two. There is so many weeds among the grain hay.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know what it costs a party to go into the valley; how much it costs per day there—his board and lodging, and the value of his horse and things? A. I understand the charges are $4 a day for a person at the hotels, and $2 for a horse at the stable.

MR. TULLY: Do you know whether those horses are fed hay and barley, or simply hay, at the stables? A. I suppose they are fed hay and barley.

MR. TULLOCH: Is that an exorbitant price? A. Well, it is a little higher than rates on the outside. I don't know that it is very exorbitant.

Q. Could a man make money by letting them have horses for $1 25 a day, or $1 50? A. Well, they would not get very rich at it. If he only had the business of private teams that go in, he couldn't afford to keep them for $1 50.

Q. What do Coffman & Kenney charge for their horses, for saddle trains? A. $3, I believe, is the charge.

Q. For a whole day or a part of a day? A. To certain points. The Commissioners fix rates to certain points; for instance, they go to Snow's or to Nevada Falls, their rate is $3, with the addition of a guide to the parties. Each one of the parties, or whatever the number is, pays their proportion of $3 a day to the guide. If there is only one in the party, he has to pay $6 a day, and he has the guide; if there are five or six in the party, they only pay a proportion of the $3, in addition to their $3 for the horse.

Q. If there is one party, his expense would be $6 a day in that matter—$3 for the horse and $3 for the guide? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether a whole day or a part of a day? A. In going to Snow's, if they go to Snow's and around by Glacier Point, I understand the charges—well, I don't know whether it is $6 for the round trip or $5. I think it is $5. It is rather a hard trip for a horse.

MR. TULLY: They pay $3 a day for the guide? A. For the guide.

MR. GARDNER: Are they compelled to take a guide? A. They are not compelled to take a guide, but most of people that are not used to horses, want a man to take care of the saddles.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you think it would be safe for a stranger to travel over a trail without a guide? A. If a person is used to horseback riding it is perfectly safe; if he is not used to horseback riding it is not safe.

MR. TULLY: There are a great many persons who come in there who don't know much about horseback riding? A. There are many ladies come in there that never were on a horse in their life. Some of them want a guide to lead their horse; of course, if they get a guide for them, they will have to pay him $3.

[Further hearing continued until to-morrow, February 12, 1889, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.]

TUESDAY EVENING, February 12, 1889.

MRS. ELIZABETH GLYNN.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: State your residence? Answer—Yosemite Valley.

Q. How long have you lived in the Yosemite Valley? A. I have lived there since 1877.

Q. Well, now, will you state to the committee first in regard to your connection with your house up in the Yosemite Valley? A. In 1877 I moved into the valley; moved up to Glacier Point, in Mr. Macauley's house, and kept it for three years, or three seasons. Then I moved down into the valley, and I have been there ever since. The winter of 1880 I wrote to Mr. Hutchings, who was then in San Francisco, in January, and asked him to ask the Commissioners if I could have the privilege to keep a restaurant and bakery, if I wanted to, and he wrote back that the Commissioners said if I could get a house I could have the privilege, but that I could not have the privilege to build. So, after my husband died, of course, I gave up the idea of that; and Mr. Hedges boarded with me, and two men; and he owed me $126 50. He offered me this place, and I said to him, "Have you asked the Commissioners?" and he says, "Certainly I have asked them, three or four times—the old Board," he says, "and they always told me whenever I got ready to leave, if any one wanted it, I could turn the building over to them." And he asked me at first $1,500. I says, "No, it ain't worth that." There is two stables connected with the place, and I bought the place for the stables, because the house, there is nothing to it; it is good for nothing; and I bought it in good faith; and he says—Mr. Hedges then came down to $1,000, and I was to pay him $600 down and give my note for the rest, with 10 per cent interest; and I did so; and then after that I paid him $140 more. Well, the next season after I bought it I had paid my rent, $50. Then I was waited on by Briggs and Raymond, that is now dead; and I says, "Mr. Raymond, I hear you are going to take the stables." "Well," he says, "I don't see how any one could say that, for we have no idea of doing any such a thing, because it always takes some one that is interested to take care of these things and keep them in repair, "but," he says, "Mrs. Glynn, I don't want you to think that you own one thing in this valley." "Well," says I, "I don't pretend to own anything but the buildings, I suppose I own them." "No," he says, "he sold you State property." That is Hedges; and he says, "He had no right to sell it." Said I, "Why not?" And he says, "Because he had not." "Well," said I, "did the State ever pay for this property?" He says, "No." "Well," I says then, "how is it the State's if they didn't pay for it?" "Well," he says, "I don't want you to think it is yours." So then he says, "How much rent do you think you ought to pay?" I says, "I will leave that to the Commissioners." And so he fixed it at $50, and I paid $50 twice. And the next year after that, in June, before they had their public meeting there, Mr. Briggs and Mr. Griffith called. Mr. Griffith says: "We are going to take the stables." "Well," said I, "what am I going to have to help me pay this money, this back note, that Hedges got from me? Will I be obliged to to pay it?" "Why," says he, "I suppose you will, if it is a note of hand." "Well," says I, "what have I got?" (I had already paid him $780) "and I have not got anything." Well, he didn't know; they were going to take the stables; and he talked awhile, and then they went off; and then I had notices, one after another, from Mr. Dennison, that under no consideration whatever should I have the rent of the stables. So they took them and reduced my rent to $1. And then Mr. Dennison—and that was not the worst they done. They restricted me to two boarders; and I sent for Mr. Goucher the next meeting, and Mr. Mentzer, one of the Commissioners, and told them that I couldn't live on two boarders. Said I: "I suppose I have a right to make a living here as well as any one else, and I am obliged to stay here on account of my health, because I can't breathe in any other place;" and said he: "Well, they can't let you have only two employés that work in the valley." And at that time I had old Mr. Sinning. I live in his house now; he boarded with me; and another man that was in business for himself. I told Mr. Sinning. "Why," said he, "I don't call myself an employé; I work for myself." Says I: "That is what Mr. Dennison said; it included all." And then I had another notice from Mr. Dennison, because those men didn't go away; and he says: "I hope you won't give any more trouble by keeping more than two employés that work in the valley." "Well," said I, "Mr. Dennison, I didn't know that I was violating any of the Commissioners' orders. I don't wish to do anything to offend them." And so it went from that; and I never got nothing for my place, but still I have it yet; the house.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understand you are still occupying the house in the valley? A. No; I live in Mr. Sinning's house; I can't live in the house in the winter, in cold weather; it has been good for nothing, hardly; it is a very good house for the summer, and the water is very handy there; but I have lived in Mr. Sinning's house. I didn't leave at all last summer, because I stayed there to take care of his place, because he is sick; been sick two years. I don't pay any rent; I stay there and take care of his house.

Q. That is all you know; that is everything connected with your house?
A. Yes, sir; I have nothing to say about the management of the valley.

MR. TULLOCH: How did you come into possession of the property? A. I bought it of Hedges.

Q. What did the property consist of? A. Well, it consists of a house and stables and fences, and everything that was inclosed in the lot; wood and all that was there.

Q. What was the amount you paid for it? A. I was to pay $1,000, and I paid $780, and I have not paid the rest. Then I wrote to him and told him. Mr. Hutchings made out the bill of sale of the place. Hedges made it himself first, and I wouldn't accept it, and then Mr. Hutchings made it out; he is a Notary Public, and I thought that if it was not right Mr. Hutchings ought to have told me.

Q. Do you know how Hedges got the property? A. Old Mr. Hedges bought the lot and paid his money for it. That is more than any other one done in the valley.

Q. Did Mr. Hedges build the houses and stables there? A. Yes, sir; Hedges built the houses and stables. I presume you have seen letters in the "Examiner," and it is stated just as he wrote to me.

Q. Then was it his own property, do you think? A. Well, it was his own money bought it.

Q. His own money bought it? A. The rule in the valley, ever since I know anything about the valley, until lately, was, if a man put up a building, and if any one else wanted to buy it and he wanted to leave, they had permission from the Commissioners to turn over that building to any one that wanted it and pay him what it cost him; of course not the land, but the buildings.

Q. Then the buildings themselves belonged to Mr. Hedges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the fact of his having built them? A. Yes, sir. And he said he had been often complimented by the Commissioners by making everything so convenient for himself. They told me that they would not allow me to sub-let. "Well," I says, "why didn't you tell Mr. Hedges that? He has let the stables." They never said nothing to Hedges.

Q. Were you deprived of the use of the stables then? A. Oh, yes.

Q. By whom? A. By the Commissioners. Mr. Griffith and Mr. Briggs were the ones that waited on me. I don't know anything about the rest.

MR. HOOK: What year was that? A. Mr. Goucher has got all my papers.

Q. What year was it; do you know? A. That I bought?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes; what year was it? A. That I bought the property?

Q. Yes? A. It was four years ago—in 1885, I think. Mr. Goucher has got the papers.

MR. TULLOCH: Who was it restricted you to two employés as boarders? A. Well, Mr. Dennison notified me. I suppose the Commissioners notified him.

Q. He notified you? A. Yes, sir; he notified me. He was Guardian then.

Q. Do you know what the reason was; was there any reason assigned for it? A. I don't know of any. I believe there is but one Commissioner on the Board that was a Commissioner then, and that is Mr. Mills—Mr. Mills, I think. There is not any other Commissioner now that was then, is there, only Mr. Mills, on the Board?

MR. DENNISON: Mr. Madden. A. Was he on the Board?

MR. DENNISON: Yes. A. I had forgotten it. I know he was Commissioner once, but he gave up.

MR. DENNISON: And Mr. Chapman was Commissioner then.

MR. TRUMAN: I would like to state that we permit the lady now to have eight boarders, and only charge her $1 a year.

MR. TULLOCH: That is your testimony, is it, Mrs. Glynn? A. Yes, sir.

GALEN CLARK.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: Where do you reside, Mr. Clark? Answer—In the Yosemite Valley.

Q. Do you know anything respecting the general management of affairs in the Yosemite Valley? A. I have lived there for quite a number of years and have had more or less observation of the management. Since I was out of the office as Guardian and Commissioner I have never attended any of the meetings of the Commissioners, and don't know fully what business has been done in their meetings.

Q. How long have you been out of office? A. The new Board of Commissioners came in after the adoption of the new Constitution—they were appointed in 1880—and then there was a contest between the Secretary and the people with regard to whether—he refused to give up his books, and the matter was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States and it was decided in March; so that, from September, 1880, until March, 1881, both Mr. Hutchings and myself acted as Guardian. There were two Guardians there and two sets of Commissioners until that time. Then, since then I have had nothing to do with the management of the valley, as Guardian or Commissioner, since March, 1881.

MR. HOOK: Were any of the present Commissioners then in office? A. In 1881?

Q. Yes? A. Well, it seems to me that there were not, any of them. To my present recollection there was not any of the present Board in office at that time.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know of your own knowledge anything that has happened since; any movements or management of matters there? Do you know of your own knowledge how affairs have been managed since? A. I know the result of management there to a certain extent.

Q. What are those results? A. Well, I don't know that I can give a direct answer to it. There have been some changes and improvements made there since then. Houses have been built; some fences have been built; some improvements have been made otherwise; some changes have been made; old houses have been torn down; leases have changed hands to some extent.

Q. The first charge is: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." A. I don't know of anything of that kind that has been done. Nothing has been done, to my knowledge, to that effect.

Q. Do you know anything about destruction of public and private property in Yosemite Valley? A. I know with regard to their tearing down and removing buildings there; removing what was termed the old Black building; the old Folsom saloon; Leidig's hotel; that was all done this last season.

Q. Was that a destruction of property, according to your ideas? A.

Well, according to my idea, some portion of it was. That is, I think Leidig's building was a good, substantial building, suitable to do business of some kind in for a good many years, providing it was wanted.

Q. Then was it, or was it not, in a good condition when torn down? A. In a very good condition. The timbers were so sound that they were all used in other improvements. But that is a matter of judgment with the Board of Commissioners.

MR. HOOK: Then you think it was a matter of judgment regarding whether it was proper or not to remove them? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: As regards the material of this house; was the material sound or not, when it was pulled down; that is the question? A. It was so sound that it was used in the erection of other buildings.

MR. HOOK: There was none of this lumber that went to waste—it was all used, was it? A. Pretty much all used. Some of it, the lighter portion, like shingles and clapboards on the outside, went to waste. The main framing timbers were all used.

MR. TULLOCH: In what were they used—in the construction of what buildings or improvements were they used? A. A considerable portion of them were used in the enlargement of Barnard's hotel. Some little of them, I believe, were used in improvements at the Royal Arch farm; but most of them in the enlargement of Barnard's hotel.

Q. You say the Leidig hotel, the materials used therein, were used for improvements on the Barnard hotel, and what else—and what other buildings? A. I think some portion of it was used up at the Royal Arch farm, but not very much of it. The most of it was used at the Barnard building. That is, to the best of my knowledge. I had nothing to do with the removal or hauling of it. It was only by casual observation that I saw where it went to. I didn't make a special business of—

Q. This building you call Black's building—what became of that? A. That was torn down, and nearly all the good portion of the framing work was used in the improvements on the Royal Arch farm.

Q. What was the nature of those improvements; were they fences or not? A. No, sir; they were buildings. There was a barn built there and a dwelling house, a guide house, office, and wagon shed; and the framing timbers were used and worked in to the best advantage in all the different buildings.

Q. Who then had a lease of the Royal Arch farm at that time? A. Coffman & Kenney.

Q. And the saloon, do you know where that went to? A. That went up to the Royal Arch farm, the best portion of it, in the improvements there.

Q. Do you know of any further destruction of property, either private or public, of any kind? A. No, sir.

MR. TULLY: Who did that building that was destroyed there—that Leidig hotel—belong to when it was torn down; do you know? A. Leidig claimed it as his private property. It was put up by him under a provisional lease from the Commissioners, in 1869.

Q. Do you know whether or not his title was extinguished by those who tore it down, before they did tear it down? A. His lease had lapsed by expiration of time; and the leases were all drawn in that way; at the expiration of the leases all the property reverted back to the State.

Q. Then it was not private property when it was torn down? A. Not in a legal, strictly legal sense, I think.

Q. Well, do you know who owns the premises, who has control of them, where that lumber was subsequently used? A. Coffman & Kenney have a lease of that farm, of the Royal Arch farm, where considerable of the lumber that was taken out of these buildings was used; but the principal part of Leidig's building, the main part of it, went into the enlargement of Barnard's hotel. Barnard has a lease of that yet.

Q. Coffman & Kenney, I suppose, simply own or have possession of those houses that they built there of this lumber, by virtue of a lease? A. Yes, sir; the buildings were put up by the Commissioners, and while they occupy the place under a lease, they have the use of them.

Q. These buildings that are built are the property of the State, as I understand it? A. Yes, sir; they are built for the benefit, as I understand, of the carriage and saddle train company. Whoever has that privilege in the valley will occupy that farm, and have the use of those buildings.

MR. HOOK: In moving these buildings, do you think it was better for the State to let them, or could they let them better where they were moved than they could at the place they were moved from? A. A portion of the buildings—the old Black hotel, especially—was unfit for any permanent use. It was built in 1869 or 1870, and built of the cheapest kind—as cheap as it could possibly be made; the most room was made with the least money, and it was a very unsubstantial building, and unfit for public use in the valley, the most of it.

MR. TULLY: What was the condition of this Leidig hotel when it was torn down? A. The Leidig hotel was a pretty good, sound house; was substantially built.

Q. Was that such a house as a person could use for a hotel? A. It might have been used as a hotel, provided it was wanted.

Q. Had it been used as a hotel? A. It had been used as a hotel since the spring of 1870.

Q. Up to the time it was torn down? A. Up to last spring—about the first of May.

MR. HOOK: The Stoneman House was built at that time, wasn't it? A. The Stoneman House was built and opened in 1888.

Q. These were torn down afterwards? A. These were torn down afterwards.

Q. Didn't the building of the Stoneman House curtail the people coming to the different hotels? A. Well, the Stoneman House took so much of the travel that it was unprofitable for anybody to carry on the business in the Leidig house. The Leidig folks left.

Q. Then, do you think if that had been left there, could the Commissioners have rented that as a hotel? A. Some persons might have been willing to lease it; I can't say about that. I never heard of any special applications for it; but still there might have been parties that would have leased it.

Q. You stated a few minutes ago that it was just an opinion of judgment between the Commissioners and yourself about the removal of those buildings? A. Yes, sir; they are supposed to have full management and control of that valley for its preservation, and pass all rules and regulations for its preservation and for the comfort and convenience and pleasure of tourists there.

Q. Do you think they do it with the best idea of the interest of the State at heart? A. I have no reason to believe otherwise, sir.

MR. TULLY: Do you think it was a judicious and wise movement on their part to destroy that hotel, taking into consideration the facilities it might have afforded to campers and people coming in there and wanting out-houses, wanting some place to stop; do you think it was a judicious movement to remove that house, or would the interests of tourists and those visiting there, and the State, have been better subserved by leaving it there, in your judgment? A. That is a question I could hardly give a positive answer to.

Q. You have not formed any definite opinion on that subject? A. From my experience as having been a Commissioner there for sixteen years, and Guardian also, and having the interests of tourists solely at heart, as all the Board of Commissioners did while I was there, it is my opinion that they can be amply and better accommodated where the hotels are now than they could there. It is possible there might have been a cheap rate house put up there that would have accommodated some, but in my judgment, if I had been a Commissioner, I should have probably supported with the rest of them to have taken the house down.

Q. Do you not think that it would be conducive to the best interests, not only of the State, but to the satisfaction and convenience of tourists, to have some cheap house around there where they could stop and rest, without being compelled to go to such a house as the Stoneman House? A. I think a good first class restaurant there would be conducive to the interests of tourists, where they could go at all hours of the day and get a meal whenever necessary.

Q. Don't you think that some cheap house, some less expensive house than the Stoneman House, would really contribute to the best interests of the traveling public, and accommodate them in many instances where they would not be able to go to the other house—where, if they had a cheaper house, they would be satisfied with the cheaper house? A. I think it would be a very good thing if properly managed.

Q. Don't you think it would be just not to compel all of those people who come there and want to put up at a house, to go to the first class house; don't you think there are many people from the country, and from the world at large, who go there, who want to live cheaply? They have not $4 or $5 a day to spend, and they would like to have some little out of the way place where they could go to, and find accommodations at a lesser rate, and live more economically than the absence of that kind of a house would compel them to go to the other house, a more expensive house? A. I think it would be very satisfactory to a certain class of the traveling public to have a house of that kind to go to.

Q. Don't you understand that that valley is understood and considered to be open to all classes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not particularly for those who are able to pay $5 and $6 a day, but that there are many who go there who would like to see the valley, and that a cheap house is almost an absolute necessity to meet the requirements of that class? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: What are the charges at the Stoneman House? A. The charges are $4 a day for first class board and rooms. Anybody can go there and get meals at 50 cents a meal in the second class dining room at the different hotels, all of them.

Q. Can you do any better in Sacramento to-day? A. Well, under the circumstances, I have been obliged to put up at the cheapest house I could find here.

MR. GARDNER: There is an opportunity for persons camping there to purchase provisions—places to purchase provisions? People can go and camp there and there are stores to sell them any provisions they want, are there not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would a second class house pay there then? A. Not at any very large rental.

Q. The season is very short, and they would need to make some money in a very short time to make it pay at all? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Leidig charge when he kept his second class house? A. He charged at different times different rates for accommodati^on. Prior to four years ago the charges were from $2 50 to $3 50 a day at all the different hotels in the valley. Since then they have been from $3 to $4 a day, at different times varied. I think they sometimes charge $3 a day and sometimes $4, according to circumstances.

MR. TULLY: What did I understand you to say with regard to the prices that were formerly charged; what were the prices? A. From $2 50 to $3 50 a day.

Q. What time do you allude to? A. I allude to the establishment of business in the Yosemite Valley until within the last four or five years.

Q. About 1881 or 1882 what were the charges there; do you know? A. They were about from $3 to $3 50 a day.

Q. Do you know what Barnard charged there per day in 1883? A. From $3 to $3 50; I am not certain which.

Q. Didn't he charge $4 50? A. I don't know that $4 50 has ever been charged there at any single hotel to any single tourists.

MR. TULLY: I have a receipt that I paid $4 50. A. Have you?

Q. Yes. A. At Barnard's?

Q. Yes. A. I had no knowledge of any such charge being made.

MR. HOOK: Were the Commissioners in the habit of stopping at Leidig's, a second class hotel? A. There was no second class hotel there. They were all alike. One was as good as the other.

MR. TULLY: Now, as a matter of fact, do you not consider that it is not only a convenience, but it is an absolute necessity to the full enjoyment of tourists and visitors to that valley, to have some cheaper house than the Stoneman House at which they can go and live without camping out; that is, there are many who would prefer a cheap boarding house to camping out, and that it is an absolute necessity that there should be some provision made there for that class of people, in the interest of the traveling public; not so much the interest of the State, but the interest of the traveling public, for whom that park is set apart? A. I think it would be a great accommodation to a certain class of the traveling public.

Q. Then I understand that this house that was torn down was a house of that character; that was a second class house, where tourists of that kind and visitors could find just the accommodation that I have reference to? A. It was as good a house as ever was in the valley until the Stoneman House was built; gave the best accommodations; that is, people were better satisfied there than at any other house in the valley.

Q. Did many people stop there? A. A great many people stopped there; they were full during the busy part of the season.

Q. When it was removed, they had no alternative but to go to the Stoneman House, or to camp out? A. Or go to Barnard's.

Q. Do they charge the same prices; the Barnard House and the Stoneman House? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is $4 a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the presence of that house would probably make a difference of $1 or $1 50 a day to a man who would be satisfied with accommodations of that kind? Supposing there were such a house there as Leidig kept there now, instead of paying $4 a day, he would find accommodations at $3 or $3 50—to put it at $3, and he would save $1 a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be an accommodation to a great many tourists who go there? A. If they could stop there, it would be. Tourists are controlled—sometimes under the control—go in there under circumstances which they cannot always control themselves.

Q. But yet there are many go there who did control themselves, and would like to do it again; is that a fact? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: How long do tourists, as a general thing, stop in the valley? A. On the average the main portion of them stop only about two days; some stop two or three or four days, and some a week, and some only stop one night; from two to three days is the average.

Q. Do they stop any shorter time now than they did when Leidig's and Black's was in operation? A. I don't think they stop as long as they used to eight or ten years ago, as a general thing; not taking the mass of the traveling public.

Q. Are there less campers coming to the valley now than formerly? A. No; the camping parties are somewhat increasing yearly. There were a great many more there the last two or three years than came there six or seven or eight years ago.

MR. TULLY: Then the practical effect of the destruction of those cheaper class houses is to compel a great many people to either camp out or go and pay the higher prices? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have no option except to camp out or to pay the higher prices? A. There is no other way of being accommodated there.

MR. GARDNER: Is that big hotel enough to accommodate all the visitors? A. No, sir; not in the rush of business, in the busy part of the season it can't accommodate them all. But that and Barnard's hotel together have been able to accommodate all that have visited there this last summer, and we have had as many this last summer as any season prior to last season.

Q. If there still was another house there to divide the business with these two, could they all make a living? A. Well, that is a question that I can't say, whether they will all make a living or not and pay the rents that they have to pay there.

MR. TULLY: You say that you have been one of the Commissioners there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand it to be the duty of those Commissioners to run those hotels with a view to making a profit from them, or simply for the accommodation or upon such a scale as would meet the want of the traveling public, without running the State in debt? Do you think the State should be speculative in its management of those properties? A. I don't think it should.

Q. Then it is not a question as to whether it would pay or not, so long as it don't bring the State in debt. If they are managed upon such a basis that the State is not brought in debt by them, and the public interests are also met, don't you think that would be about the basis upon which it ought to be run? A. I don't think the State should run that business in as close a financial way, in many respects, as they would run a piece of private real estate in order to make money.

Q. The management should not be speculative? A. It should not be speculative at all, in my opinion. The amount of tourists who visit Yosemite Valley—who come to California to visit Yosemite—yearly leave in this State, outside of the valley, and outside of their trip to the valley, they leave on an average not less than $400 or $500 in the State, and many of them, including the trip to the valley, the majority of them, leave hardly less than $1,000 in the State of California. Consequently the State is amply paid for whatever appropriations are made there for improvements: even the tax on the money that is left in the State by tourists will equal all the appropriations that have been made there.

Q. That is simply in confirmation of the proposition that the management there should not run it with a view to speculation? A. No, sir; that has always been my view. It should not be managed for the purpose of making money, because it is a section of California that California should be proud of. No State in the United States has got such scenery. There is no place in the United States that draws so many tourists; there is no State which commands that admiration throughout the world by tourists who visit there as that Yosemite Valley and its grand surroundings; and the State should take so much pride in its management as to be willing to appropriate liberally towards all the improvements necessary there, and charge but very little rental for any kind of business there.

Q. Then do you not think that it is the duty of that Commission to provide a cheaper set of houses or class of houses there to accommodate tourists who come here with limited means? Don't you think it would be the better policy for the State to erect not very expensive buildings, but such as would meet the requirements of a class of persons who have no great amount of money to spend there, and yet want to see Yosemite and will go and see it, and many more would go and see it if it were not for the fact of these exorbitant prices, or, at least, these high prices—I won't say exorbitant—deter them from going, and that a cheaper class of houses would offer more inducements and that more people would go there? A. My opinion is that the Commission—all the Commissions that have ever exercised any management of that valley—would cheerfully and gladly make it as cheap as possible; make the rates as low as possible, providing the State would come up and pay liberally in affording the means to make the improvements and keep them in repair.

MR. HOOK: Do you consider the State has made the appropriation so as to not handicap the Commission? A. They have been made in that way recently. In early times they were not made that way.

Q. Then you say that the appropriations that are made by the State rather handicap the Commission? A. No, sir.

Q. The question is this: Is there sufficient appropriation to the Commission to carry out these improvements for the benefit of the public? A. No, sir; not in my opinion.

Q. Then they have to practice rigid economy, which, if they were more liberally provided for, they would not have to practice? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Do you consider the destruction of the houses there, do you think that their removal and putting them into barns—was the State benefited by it, do you consider; putting them into barns for Kenney & Company. Wouldn't the interests of the State have been better subserved by preserving one or two of those cheap houses, in the interest of tourists? A. That is a matter of judgment.

Q. I ask it as your judgment as a gentleman who has been a Commissioner? A. As I am not a Commissioner now, I am not fully empowered to express the views of the Commission.

Q. I simply ask your opinion on that point, as you have been a Commissioner. I want your unbiased judgment about it. A. As an ex-Commissioner, my judgment would be that it would have been better to have kept the Leidig hotel for a cheaper house, provided the Commissioners could have obtained sufficient means to have gone on with other improvements without charging high rents for the other hotels.

MR. HOOK: Could the Commission have let the Stoneman House at the rate they are letting it at present if they had let two other hotels at a cheaper rate there? A. I don't think parties would have taken the house at the rates they are paying now.

Q. What difference does it make to tourists—you say they stop there two or three days, and some a week—what difference does it make in the actual cost for a tourist who only stops there for a few days, between the present prices and the past prices; does it make much difference? A. Not very much.

Q. He wouldn't save very much money, would he? A. No, sir.

MR. TULLY: Are there any places in the valley where a camper can get to live in? A. No buildings for that purpose. They sometimes, in case of a storm, get in under shelter, under some shed, or some rooms, occasionally.

Q. Wouldn't it be best for the Commission to build little houses of that kind, the same as are built at these springs, to accommodate campers? A. It would be a great accommodation to have them, in stormy weather, in some localities, but it would need somebody to look after that constantly, because persons coming and going all the time, they would leave the houses and grounds all littered with dirt and empty cans, and mark up the houses with chalk and disfigure places. It would need somebody all the time to look after a camping ground under those conditions.

Q. Then you think the reason that they have not built these places is simply because the appropriations have not been sufficient to maintain them? A. They have had use for the money that they got in building roads; improving the roads and trails to the different points of interest. I think, if they had ample appropriations, that all these conveniences would be provided for camping parties, and cheaper places provided for tourists that come in who are unable to pay the large prices.

Q. A short time ago there was a question asked you: do you think that the Commission has misappropriated any public money? With the limited amount that they have had appropriated, do you think there is any way of their getting away with any money? A. I don't think so; I don't think there is any way. I don't believe there has ever been any misappropriation of money there. I am certain, to the best of my knowledge, there was not any while I had anything to do with it, and I have no reason to believe there has been any change since.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you think an insufficient appropriation for the Commissioners ought to entitle them to charge $4 a day at that hotel?

MR. TULLY: Do you think the insufficiency of the appropriations by the State to conduct and manage that affair, justifies the charging of $4 a day in those hotels for board? A. If those hotels did not pay more than half the rent they do, they could then charge less rates to tourists, but they charge all that the business will bear or sustain under the circumstances of not getting sufficient appropriations. They have to make the valley pay as much as possible, because of the need of those financial means to go on with improvements or keeping the roads and buildings in repair that are already there. More appropriations and less rentals all along, would give such results and better satisfaction to the public.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you think that an absolute necessity existed for the building of these roads and trails of which you have just spoken? A. It is an absolute necessity for the interests of tourists that they can get to all the different points of interest. They come there from long distances to see the valley, and spend a large sum of money to come there, and when they are there they feel anxious to go to all the most important and interesting points, and they cannot go to them without these improvements, these trails and roads.

Q. How long ago were those roads built? A. Some of these trails to the higher roads have been built well—some time in the sixties, some of the first of them. The Snow trail was commenced in 1869; built in 1869 and 1870, or somewhere about that time. Previous to that persons had to climb around, like climbing mountains, through the brush, and on foot, and among the rocks, and all those early trails were built by private enterprise.

Q. You spoke of some roads having been built; when were they constructed? A. The first public expenditure of money for roads was commenced in 1881.

Q. How did people get around without roads before that? A. They rode on horseback around the valley.

Q. They had no roads; they merely had trails? A. They had no regular roads; only horseback trails.

Q. Those trails were sufficient to go around on horseback, were they? A. Yes, sir; they could get around very comfortably on horseback, but not up the different heights.

Q. With the exception of a few trails there was no necessity absolutely for these roads? A. Well, it is a necessity, from the fact that there is a large portion of the tourists come there that don't like to ride horseback, cannot ride horseback, and it is necessary to have roads built for carriages to run around for the convenience of tourists there.

MR. HOOK: Will you state where some of those roads are built from the valley proper; up into what places? A. The wagon roads run around the valley, around the level of the valley to Mirror Lake, and all around the valley, and down to what we call the Cascades, eight miles, or at least three or four miles below the regular level of the valley; but the trails are built up to Glacier Point, up to the Vernal and Nevada Falls—

Q. I understood you to say there was a wagon road built; these wagon roads you say were built in 1881? A. They were commenced in 1881; they have been building them ever since 1881.

Q. Were there not roads through the valley in different parts of it in 1875? A. There were trails there as early as 1875—yes, sir; there were roads into the valley in 1875. The stage roads were built in.

Q. Were there not roads also up in through the valley? A. Then they could drive up through the valley; yes, sir. But the stage companies, in building their roads into the valley, they built their roads down into the valley and up on to the level of the valley, where they could get around. The roads had already been sufficiently improved so that they could get around, but they were not improved by State money. They were improved by private individuals.

Q. There were good roads there in 1875, were there not? A. There were fair roads to get around. The Washburn Company in building their road into the valley—their contract was to build the road to the first hotel in the valley; that is, three or four miles from where it entered the lower end of the valley—and the other parties, their contract was to build their road up on the level of the valley so they could get around.

Q. There was a good road from the time you went into the valley, there was a good road coming into the valley, and then from there up to the hotels, up to Hutchings, and also up to Mirror Lake, was there not, in 1875? A. Yes, sir; there were toll trails running up in 1875, up to Glacier Point, and up to Vernal and Nevada Falls, and up to Mirror Lake.

Q. At that time the trails were all owned, and tolls collected in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tolls have all been abolished since that time? A. All been abolished.

Q. There is no toll collected at all in the valley? A. No.

Q. The Commissioners do not allow any tolls to be collected? A. No; they own all the trails and roads. They have bought those trails and roads by the appropriations made in the few past years.

Q. Hasn't the buying of those trails and roads drained them of a good deal of the money appropriated by the State? A. It has taken a good deal of it.

Q. Does that leave the Commission in a cramped condition? A. They are in a cramped condition; that is, with what appropriations are made, they are in a cramped condition, and they are, you might say, in a cramped condition for the want of money to make more improvements.

Q. Then you think, from the benefit the State derives from people coming here simply to see the Yosemite Valley, and leaving, as you say, from $400 to $500, or a $1,000—don't you think it would be better for the State to take a more liberal policy with the Commission? A. I do; I have always thought so. If you will allow me to make one particular statement with regard to the first management of the valley, it might throw some light upon some trouble which originated in regard to those claims.

THE CHAIRMAN: All right; make your statement so the reporter can take it down.

MR. TULLY: We are not here for the purpose of accusing anybody particularly. We have certain charges that we want to examine. Our mission is not specially to convict anybody, but to ascertain whether the charges are true and get at the truth. A. I understand you are trying to get at the bottom of many complaints that have been made.

MR. TULLY: Yes, sir; that is simply the object. We are not here to convict anybody. A. When this valley was ceded by Act of Congress, which passed in June, 1864, there were some settlers, three or four claimants there, that had gone in there and made improvements. At that time, all the improvements that were made there and all the claims there could have been settled by the State of California for not exceeding $5,000; and the next session, early in the session, there was $2,000 appropriated to pay the expenses for two years, and the expenses of the Guardian for two years, $2,000.

Q. What year was that? A. That was the first session after 1864.

Q. What year was that? A. 1864 and 1865. There were $2,000 appropriated. Well, these settlers that were in there refused to take leases at nominal rents, which the Commissioners offered them for ten years, which was the longest time that the Commission could grant any leases. They refused to take it, claimed that they had settlers' rights there, and chose, rather, to go into the Courts. Suit in ejectment was brought against them, and then the next session after that—for four years after the first two years, after the first $2,000 was appropriated—for four years there was not a dollar appropriated by the State of California to pay the expenses of the Commissioners, to carry on this lawsuit, or to bring suits against any depredators whatever, and they were handicapped in that way, that they had no money to transact business with whatever, and consequently they allowed parties to go in and make improvements, such as became necessary, and that more improvements should be made to accommodate travel, and they allowed parties to come in there and make these improvements under certain conditions and contracts. Some of them already had regular contracts and some had not, and they gave them leases for ten years. Well, those parties who had made improvements and considered that they would take the chances of getting their pay back with a lease of ten years, supposed that they would probably get a lease of ten years more, but all the smaller business was cut short. And another fact in the matter was, when this was contending—this suit was contending against those parties—they brought a bill in the Legislature, had bills in the Legislature, to get a title to their improvements there; and the Legislature passed the bills, both in the Senate and the Assembly, granting these settlers there one hundred and sixty acres, after the State had accepted it, the State of California, on condition that it should be forever inalienable. They passed a bill, provided Congress would sanction their action. But that bill failed to become a law, although it was passed by both branches of the Legislature. The State, taking side against the Board of Commissioners, failed to support them in the management of the valley, the improvements of the valley, and in carrying on the lawsuits. It encouraged what might be called the rebel party. They went on and were a great cause of trouble to the Yosemite Commissioners, and it prevented the settlement of that claim for quite a good many years; and these men that were in law, and in rebellion against the Board of Commissioners, went on and made such improvements as were necessary, as they considered, for the accommodation of the people; and what property could have been bought for $5,000 in 1864 in 1874 those men received $55,000 for by an appropriation from the State.

MR. HOOK: Who were those men, Mr. Clark? A. Those men were J. M. Hutchings, J. G. Leinmon, A. G. Black, and Ira B. Folsom. These very men who had been fighting against the Board of Commissioners, and had caused them all this trouble, got amply paid for all the improvements they made, while these other men, who had leased of the Commissioners, at the end of ten years were refused leases again, only from year to year, which cramped them very much in their way of doing business. They couldn't make the same preparations for accommodating guests in any manner whatever, under leases from year to year, as they could have done under leases of five or ten years; and consequently there has been several bills introduced, or several times bills have been introduced in the Legislature for pay for these improvements put up under those disadvantageous circumstances. If they could have had leases for five years or ten years granted them, they would have been willing to have gone on and carried on business without asking pay for their property; but these other men having been paid under the conditions which they were, after having been fighting the Commissioners for ten years, these other parties who had put up the improvements and complied with all the rules and regulations of the Commissioners, felt that they were justly entitled to their improvements, as these other parties were who had been fighting the Commissioners and causing so much trouble; and some of these are still thinking. Leidig was one of those who thought he ought to have pay. There are several others. Mr. Snow, in there, thinks he ought to have pay for his buildings, and Cavagnero, and Mrs. Glynn, and Mr. Sinning. I have a small little building myself that I put up at my own expense, and all the improvements about it. And that has been the cause of why these claims have been presented to the Legislature.

Q. So the men that still held on to that property, and were paid for it, and still held on to it after they were paid for it—were they ejected by the Sheriff? Were they driven out by the Sheriff? A. Hutchings was ejected by the Sheriff.

Q. What year was that? A. 1875.

Q. Does he still hold a grudge against the Commission, and caused them trouble in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that trouble caused by a grievance? A. The trouble originated between him and his friends, those others associated with him—it created a faction, a factional influence against the Board of Commissioners, and against their management, and was an eternal source of trouble to the old Board of Commissioners as long as they stayed, because the State itself had failed to back the Commissioners in maintaining order, and peace, and quietness there in the valley.

MR. TULLY: Well, Mr. Clark, now that with regard to the extinguishment of those claims there is a matter of history here. But is it not a fact that the claims of Hutchings and Lemmon that you speak about—their original claims—they were original pioneers there; in other words, they were squatters. They went in there as settlers before the State acquired a right to the valley; when they were bought out, it was to extinguish the equities that they had acquired there before the Act of Congress denoting that valley to the State? A. Well, it paid them for all their improvements.

Q. But, as a matter of fact, that was—— A. As a matter of fact that was it.

Q. To extinguish their equities that they claimed by virtue of having been prior residents and occupying the land under the preëmption laws of the State before the State acquired any right or title to the property, and the difficulty arose in extinguishing their titles, their equitable title, that they claimed by virtue of their prior possession? A. Yes, sir; their title never had been liquidated until money was appropriated in 1874, and they got pay for all their improvements up to that time.

MR. HOOK: You think they were sufficiently paid for what claim they had there? A. I do.

Q. They still persisted in annoying the Commissioners afterwards, and still do it at present? A. Mr. Hutchings thought he was not amply paid. There were three men appointed as a Commission by the Governor to go and assess their damages; to go in and examine all their premises, and assess what their valuation was, and to pay them for it. They were, I believe, good and honorable and just men; and Mr. Hutchings was not satisfied with the $24,000 that was awarded to him; and after he had received his pay and signed a relinquishment of all claim there, then he placed his mother-in-law in charge of the hotel, and he acted as agent, and attempted to hold on to the premises. When the place was advertised for lease by the Board of Commissioners, after Hutchings had received his pay, he puts in a counter advertisement in the paper, warning all persons from buying or leasing that property which he had, as he intended to hold on, hold possession, and get a lease from the Legislature and do business there himself.

Q. Wasn't it a general feeling in the valley that when he was taken out by the Sheriff in 1875, that there was a great grievance gone from the valley? A. That was the cry from all that side of that factional portion of the residents and citizens.

Q. Wasn't it of a great portion of the valley at the time? A. That it was a great grievance to turn him out?

Q. No; that it was just, as an act of justice, to take him out of the valley, after he was causing so much trouble? A. As he would not bid for the property—he would not put in a bid; when the advertisement was put in the paper he put in a counter notice forbidding or cautioning all persons from bidding—the majority of people thought it was an act of justice.

Q. In fact, didn't he create a great deal of disturbance or annoyance by still remaining, and holding on to it after he had received this money? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Black also attempted to hold on to his property after he received his money; and Folsom also offered to hold on to his after he received his money; yet neither of them would offer any bid for the rental of the property.

MR. TULLOCH: Can you name any one who considered it an act of justice for him to have left the valley; for his leaving the valley?

MR. TULLY: His ejection; putting him out; whether it was just to evict him? A. I don't know as I could name any one in particular.

MR. TULLOCH: You don't think you could call the name of any one at all? A. I can name all the Board of Commissioners. I know they thought it was an act of justice or they would not have done it.

Q. Do you think you can name any one outside of those Commissioners? A. I would not call any one's name in particular.

Q. Then you don't really have any recollection, positive recollection, of any person outside of the Commissioners, who deemed it an act of justice, do you? A. This faction had become so strong that the majority that lived in the valley at that time sided with those persons who had grievances.

Q. But have you any recollection of any one party?

MR. GARDNER: Were you a Commissioner then? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: Can you name one single party, any one person, who considered it an act of justice—his eviction from the valley? A. I cannot name any one, or would not attempt to name any one. But it was considered by those who had the management that every one that was in a state of rebellion against the Commission, and would not come under their rules and regulations, or submit to any of their rules and regulations whatever, that the best way to get rid of them was to evict them from the valley.

Q. But by parties who were not concerned in the management of the valley, was it considered an act of justice to evict that party? A. By a great many persons it was thought not to be an act of justice.

MR. HOOK: Didn't they hold a celebration in honor of the event of Hutchings being evicted from the valley? A. No celebration whatever. Some people, guides of persons living there, fired off some giant powder cartridges.

Q. Didn't they fire anvils, guns, and pistols? A. No; they fired a few giant powder cartridges.

MR. GARDNER: There were some persons who thought it was just? A. Yes, sir; but I wouldn't like to call any particular names. I know Hutchings made complaint that they did fire off giant powder cartridges, and other powder preparations.

MR. TULLY: The next question is: "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." A. Yes, sir; that means the trees, I suppose, on the level of the valley. Well, in answer to that question, there has been some few trees cut there within the last four or five years; according to my own judgment, and the judgment of many others living in the valley, that it would have been better not to have cut them; but the majority of the timber that has been cut there has been judiciously done, I think; and the large and the young pine trees growing up there—there are hundreds of acres that were called meadow land thirty years ago, that are now covered with young pines, from twenty to twenty-five feet high; and some of those have been cleaned out entirely; some of them have been trimmed out and thinned, but my judgment is, it would have been better to have cut out a great many more of them where they have even trimmed out; it is better to cut more; and there are hundreds of acres there that it is necessary to keep, and preserve the valley in its best condition; for parties to see the views around, it is necessary to cut out and clean it out a good deal more.

Q. Doesn't that apply principally to the undergrowth? A. Yes, sir; to the undergrowth.

Q. And not to the larger timber? A. And not to the larger timber, except in certain localities where they might want to open views, or around the Stoneman House, where there were large trees liable to be blown down in some cyclone or hurricane, or heavy wind, which we have every year or two, coming through the valley there; it is necessary for the preservation of that property that cost so much, that those trees should be cut down and removed.

Mr. Hook: Has it or has it not been the policy of the Commission to take out dead trees instead of those slightly and beautiful trees in the valley? A. Yes, sir; it is the policy. All the firewood has been cut from dead trees or trees nearly dead ever since the Commissioners took hold of the valley.

Q. Have they taken out any trees that made the valley unsightly or not as beautiful as it was before they were taken out? A. There have been some trees cut that might, perhaps, better have been left, but the majority of the trees, the very larger portion of them, were trees that were necessary to be cut out of the way.

Q. Was it necessary to cut those trees around the Stoneman House? A. Yes, sir, those about the Stoneman House; I think it was very advisable that they should be cut close about it.

Q. Did it add to the view of the Bridal Veil Fall by cutting those trees about the Bridal Veil Fall? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It made the view more perfect? A. So that parties riding along the road could see the Falls to better advantage.

Q. In 1875 wasn't there a regular jungle, so that the beauties of Bridal Veil Fall were entirely lost to the tourists, with the growth of timber, and brush, and one thing and another? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That has been removed, has it? A. There has been a new road built up nearer to the Falls. In three or four places trees have been cut out between the road and the Falls, so that parties driving in carriages can sit in their carriages and see the Falls—the rainbow illumination in the afternoon—to great advantage, where, prior to that road being built they couldn't do it except by riding up among the brush on horseback.

Q. As early as 1875, we had to walk out? A. There is a very good carriage road, so that you can get a fine view.

Q. The spray swings with the wind, one way and another? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have removed the timber so a person can get out of the way of that spray? A. There is but very little spray that comes down to the road, sometimes.

Q. But I mean up on the granite rocks, where the spray swings backward and forwards fifty or a hundred feet? A. There is no improvement that can be made so that you can get out of the way of that spray.

MR. TULLY: Those trees which you spoke about having been cut out to improve the view. You mean the view from the hotel, do you? A. There are some trees cut out to open a view from Barnard's hotel to the lower Yosemite Falls, so they could stand upon the back porch or at some of the back windows and look through that avenue and get a view of the Falls.

Q. Do you think that was an improvement that enhanced the beauties of the valley? A. It was an improvement in the view from that hotel, and that was all. It was not an improvement to the valley particularly, only just a view from that hotel.

Q. Views might have been had, or might they not, of those Falls from other places? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Equally as fine views? A. Roads and trails running right around to the foot of them, but that was done to accommodate parties at the hotel.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you regard the cutting of these trees rather as an improvement of the hotel than as an improvement of the valley? A. Yes, sir; I consider it was done for the benefit of the views of the hotel and not for the improvement of the valley.

MR. TULLY: "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land." What do you know about that? A. Some meadows have been plowed up.

Q. By whom and for what purpose? A. There is what is known as the Royal Arch farm. Some portion of that has been under cultivation since Lemmon's existence there; and other meadows have been fed down so successively, year after year, for the last thirty years, that all the natural grasses, and flowers, and vegetation has been cleared out, and it has become a matter of necessity to plow them up and sow them, and eventually seed them down in other kinds of grass; what is called tame grass, cultivated grass.

Q. Who does that plowing, and for whose benefit? A. Some portion of it has been done for the benefit of the State; done under the direction of the Commissioners, by the Guardian; some portion of it has been done by Coffman & Kenney; it is considered one of the ways of reclaiming the valley from its present condition.

Q. From the encroachment of the undergrowth? A. From the encroachment of the undergrowth, and seeding it down in grass, so that it reclaims it to a certain extent; plowing up the young pines, the rose bushes, and briars, and ferns, and acrid kind of vegetation that grows in there that stock won't eat. It is the only resource to reclaim the valley, is to plow and re-sow those meadows; as a matter of reclaiming them.

Q. What are those meadows sown to; what grains, if you know? What grains are sowed upon those lands that are plowed up? A. Wheat or barley. On the Royal Arch farm there is perhaps twenty-five acres of timothy, about that. I don't know for certain the exact amount, but somewhere about that.

Q. What did they do with that? A. Coffman & Kenney have the lease of the ranch, and they feed it, for feeding their saddle trains, or for selling to campers; to supply them with hay.

Q. As a matter of fact it is plowed up there, and the lessees there cultivate it for their own benefit under their lease, and use the ground for the purpose of raising hay to sell to tourists, and for their own teams? A. The same as Harris did. He had it for ten years; he used it for the same purpose.

Q. They use it for the purpose of obtaining hay and feed for their stock, and to sell it to tourists and persons who need it outside of what they need themselves? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The State derives no benefit except from the lease? A. That is all. They pay an annual rental for it.

Q. About how many acres is there that is plowed up and sown to grain and grasses in that valley, Mr. Clark? A. At the Royal Arch farm there, in plowed up land, sowed in wheat or barley and timothy, there is about ninety acres. Over at the Stoneman House, in the field which is rented with the Stoneman House, which was cleared off and plowed up by the Guardian under the direction of the Commissioners two years ago, which now goes with the Stoneman House, there is about, I should judge, twenty-five acres plowed, but I don't know certain, I never have measured it, I judge by the general appearance. In a portion of what was Leidig's lease, on the north side of the river, the pasture, they have plowed in that meadow somewhere about twenty acres—Coffman & Kenney have.

Q. Is that all? A. That constitutes all except the garden or orchard lots. In the Lemmon orchard there is about ten acres; Barnard's garden is, perhaps, about eight acres; seven or eight acres.

Q. That would make about one hundred and fifty acres? A. And Cook's garden also; that is leased with the Stoneman House.

Q. How large is that? A. In the orchard there is probably about five or six acres.

Q. About one hundred and fifty acres in all, according to the estimate? A. About that. I don't know the exact amount of all of it as well as I do the Royal Arch farm, because I surveyed that.

Q. Is that land inclosed with a fence? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the character of the fences? A. The fences on the back side, as it is now, are board; either board, or post, and rail. On the side where the regular drive is it is barbed wire fence; posts and barbed wire from post to post between wires.

Q. Now, the next question is: "Debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley." I understand that that question is directed to ascertain whether or not there are any obstacles in the shape of fences or any other obstruction there that impede the free ingress and egress of tourists to the valley or to any portion of the valley that they might desire to visit? A. Well, the fences are a great inconvenience to parties getting around who wish to stroll at leisure along the river or out through the valley. There is a regular drive all around, that they can go on horseback or in carriages; and through some of these inclosures they have what they term turnstiles, that they can pass through on foot and get inside of the inclosure, but they are only on regular walks, for a certain course, defined course. But if they wish to go strolling around in various other places around, they will run against a barbed wire fence occasionally.

Q. As a matter of fact, to a very great extent, except by means of these turnstiles, access to a great deal of that valley there is impeded by those fences? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the tourist or the visitor who would like to turn out of the roads and go out in the little corners and byways, these fences are a natural barrier to his ingress and egress? A. In many cases they are.

Q. There are no other provisions made for getting through, except those turnstiles, unless a tourist would crawl over or under or through the fences? A. No, sir.

Q. Is that pretty generally the case throughout the floor of the valley there? A. Well, to a great extent.

Q. Those fences, then, operate as a barrier to the free locomotion of visitors and tourists there almost throughout the entire floor of the valley, if the fences are considered as such? A. Within the boundaries, towards the river, towards the regular carriage drives, there is a great deal of the valley fenced. From the carriage drive around on the outside, towards the walls, it is all open. The meadow land lies adjacent to the stream. These fences are made to inclose the meadow land for various purposes.

Q. This says: "The joint and legal use of the valley." As I understand, the legal use of the valley would seem to be the rights that individuals have from all parts of the world to have access to it, that the law contemplates that they shall have that, and anything that impedes that would be a barrier to their legal rights and legal use of the valley. You consider that those fences and obstacles are barriers to the free and we may say legal use of the valley by those who visit it? A. Certain portions of the valley.

Q. What portions—a large proportion of the floor of the valley or a small proportion? A. Well, you might say half of the floor of the valley.

Q. One half of the floor of the valley is in such a condition that it operates as a barrier? A. That is, bordering on the river, along where the meadow ground is; perhaps not half of the whole area of the valley, because there is a great deal of pine timber land there that does not produce any grass whatever, which is not fenced.

Q. "Holding annual meetings with closed doors, in violation of State law?" A. I know nothing about that.

Q. That has reference to the Commissioners? A. That has reference to the Commissioners, and the old Board never held closed meetings. I know nothing about the present Board, how they hold them. I never have attended one of their meetings.

Q. You know nothing about that as a matter of fact? A. As a matter of fact I know nothing.

Q. "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley?" A. I don't know of any what might be termed exclusive privileges granted in the valley.

Q. What would you term an exclusive privilege? A. Giving one company or one individual an exclusive right to transact any considerable amount of business without competition. There is some business there that is of so small a nature that might be called a single privilege, or something of that kind; that other parties would not care to compete at all with it. There would not be sufficient business perhaps to justify it; something like a blacksmith shop, or something of that kind. They did attempt to get two blacksmith shops in there, and did get them, but one of them froze out and left. There was not business enough for two; and so it is with some small business carried on; but there are no exclusive privileges, to my knowledge, granted to anybody.

Q. Is it or is it not true that privileges are granted there; that at stated periods the privilege of doing certain kinds of business there is put up at auction, or, in other words, it is opened to bids, and that the person to whom the privilege is awarded, when he gets into possession of that business, that it operates as an exclusion to anybody else acquiring the same right? A. To a certain extent it operates that way.

Q. Would that not be termed an exclusive privilege; a privilege that excludes somebody else from the enjoyment of the same privilege? Is that what you would call a single privilege instead of an exclusive privilege? A. Perhaps it might be termed an exclusive privilege if a person carried on all of one kind of business without any competition whatever; that is, a large business, as sometimes it is claimed that the saddle train company have an exclusive privilege. Well, I will give one reason why it might be considered advantageous in many respects that one person should carry on that business instead of three or four. The travel commences early in the spring, and those persons doing that business, that have the permission of the Board of Commissioners, have to be there in time to commence with the business in the spring, and they have to keep up the business as long as travel lasts in the fall. During the rush of business in the busiest part of the season, June and the latter part of May, first of June and first of July, if it was open to competition by anybody that wished to come in there with saddle horses, they would run in there for a short time, a month or six weeks, and do business and then they would run out again. They would pay the Commissioners but little rent, and they would ruin the business of those who were paying rent, and it would be impossible to get that valley supplied with ample accommodation throughout the whole season without some arrangement by which those parties could be protected who pay the highest rent and do the business to their satisfaction.

Q. That is to say, I understand the view the Commissioners take of it is, that it is necessary to grant those exclusive privileges—because we will call them such—to confine those to certain persons, in order to keep out that competition which would interfere with their making a profit on their investment? A. Yes, sir; or making either a living on their investment.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, if that valley was open during the busy season, if it was known that any persons who had five or ten, or any number of horses or pack trains, might go in there, and take in with him hay and grain, and such equipments as would be necessary to enable them to do business during that term, that is if it was open to competition, and if men knew they would have those facilities afforded them that are afforded to those men who lease that property, that they would come in there, and instead of there being a lack of facilities for accommodating the tourists, that there would perhaps be a superabundance of them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by reason of that excessive competition they would destroy the profits that these men who lease would naturally expect to derive from their investment? A. Yes, sir; they would derive all the profits, and those persons who had to stay there during the season would not be paying expenses for about one half of the season.

Q. That is not the question. That is a matter, when people want to speculate, they do that at their own risk. But as a matter of course, the object or the view that the Commissioners take of it is to protect them by granting them this exclusive privilege, in order that they shall not be interfered with by outsiders? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Protect them in their monopoly of the business, because it virtually amounts to a monopoly of the business? To protect them from loss by reason of outside competition? That is virtually the operation; and as I understand it, that is the view the Commissioners take of it? A. Yes, sir; they take that view of it. They consider that the general public is better accommodated in that way than they would be to have a large amount of competition in the summer, and then have the horses all run out as soon as it didn't pay to do business there, and leave the traveling public without any conveniences to get around.

Q. Then they consider themselves not only the guardians of the valley, but they are the guardians of those poor deluded beings who would like to go in there and attempt to compete with those exclusive privileges? A. That is why the Commissioners were appointed—the accommodation of the traveling public; and that is the main portion of the business of the Commissioners; in fact, you may say all the business is to protect people in that way, which will conduce to the greatest pleasure and interests of tourists visiting there in all the different departments. It is a large place, and there are a great many departments of business to manage, which does not occur in common ordinary public parks.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you think it is conducive to the welfare of the general public to go in there and get a horse and guide for $6 a day, when a man hasn't got but $3 with which to pay it? A. That is a hardship upon that man.

Q. Do you think it conducive to his welfare then? A. If he was to make his condition known, that he had not that money, and wanted to go to certain places, I think he would be accommodated.

Q. Do you think it conducive to his welfare and a great many more like him?

MR. TULLY: His enjoyment of the valley? A. There are certain trips there for which the prices are $6 a day, but they are extra trips; not the ordinary day trips.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you think it would be consistent with his opportunities of enjoyment to pay that amount of money in preference to paying a small amount, if he had the opportunity so to do? A. I think it would pay him much better to pay the small amount.

MR. TULLY: Do you think the tourist, if he goes there with a view to seeing the valley, and enjoying its beauties, do you think it is a matter of very serious consideration with him whether or not the gentleman who furnishes him with those horses makes any money on it or not, so long as he gets it as cheap as he can? A. I don't think he understands the nature of the business.

Q. He would like to get it just as cheap as possible, like all other sensible men? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Regardless of whether the parties of whom he hired those animals made any money on them or not, so long as he was accommodated? A. The prices are regulated by the Board of Commissioners.

Q. The prices that are charged there? A. The prices that are charged there. Originally the parties furnishing saddle horses charged their own rates, and they varied according to the competition; and then the old Board of Commissioners, in order to establish a regular system of rates, that there should be no extra exorbitant charges, they advertised for proposals to parties who were then doing business with saddle horses and carriages, who would take parties to certain different points of interest, at what prices they would take parties, and for the sole or exclusive privilege of doing that business. The bids were put in by four or five different parties to the Board of Commissioners. They considered those bids, and then from those bids that were put in they fixed the maximum rates which parties should be charged for the use of saddle horses to Glacier Point, or Vernal, or Nevada Falls, the top of Yosemite Falls, and all the different points of interest; but instead of giving them the exclusive right, they let any one and all that might come in at that time, use saddle horses to carry them to the different points, but only charge those rates; and for about three or four years the old Board gave notice that any one might come in and do business there with saddle horses and carriages, by paying a certain rental per annum on the saddle horses, per head, and on the carriage horses; $3 a head for saddle horses, and $4 a head for carriage horses; and the business was run in that way for several years.

MR. TULLY: Are there any provisions, or accommodations, or facilities offered to outsiders, other than those men that enjoy those privileges, of providing themselves with hay and grain and other necessary adjuncts to a saddle train, if they should come into the valley? Would they find there any conveniences by which they could stop in the valley and go on and carry on their business there; the business for which they came? In other words, to store their hay, and a place for their horses to run? A. They could not, without getting a permit and a lease from the Board of Commissioners.

Q. There are not such facilities offered to outsiders now? A. No.

Q. Unless they get them under a lease from the Commissioners? A. No.

Q. Is it not a fact that the absence of any provisions or anything in the way of such accommodation as I refer to, operates as an actual barrier to the introduction of saddle trains from the outside? A. I presume it is so. It operates to that extent. Yes, sir; or in that manner to a certain extent.

Q. If there were openings there, barns and little houses, small houses, convenient for the storing of saddles, and places to take care of horses, and places to store away hay and barley, that an outsider coming into the valley with ten or fifteen or twenty horses—some poor man who didn't have a hundred and fifty—if he would haul in his hay and grain, don't you think it would be a better plan to open that valley and to give him access; let it be known to the outsider that he might come in there and find a place, by getting a permit to come in there and paying a rental for the houses and accommodations that he has while he is there, don't you think it would be an inducement to people from the outside to come in; in other words, as I first stated, that the absence of any accommodation of that kind operates as an actual barrier to others coming in there to attempt to compete with those other parties who have those facilities? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: What does it cost for a party to see the wonders of the valley? What does it cost for a guide and a horse, a day? A. The regular charges, for the regular trips, are $3 a trip for a horse, and $3 for the guide and his horse. That is for one man or for six or eight. If there is more than one man it is divided pro rata among the company.

Q. Have you not known a number of parties who had to pay $6 a day and then pay the guide besides? A. I have known that to be the case on certain trips, where they make what are considered double trips.

Q. In one day? A. In one day, where they make double trips. These rates are fixed, not by the day, except on the level of the valley; they are fixed by the trip; a trip to Vernal and Nevada Falls; a trip to Glacier Point; a trip to the top of Yosemite Falls; a trip to Eagle Point; the prices are established for those trips, and not by the day.

Q. I thought it was by the day? A. No, sir; not by the day. The only day trip there is for a horse under the saddle is around the level of the valley. That is $2 50.

Q. When you make double trips in a day what do you say it was? A. If you make a double trip you pay $6.

Q. $6; and in addition to that you have got to pay the guide? A. You have got to pay the guide the same price that you pay for your horse.

Q. That would be $6 more. That would be $12? A. Divided among the party, the guide is.

Q. If there is but one party, it is $12 to him? A. Unless they make special rates, it is.

Q. Do they ever make special rates? A. Under certain conditions I think they have made them.

Q. Do you know they have made them? A. They have made them with regard to special excursion parties; for instance, to school teachers that came in last summer they had reduced rates on carriages and saddle horses; and in other instances where there has been large excursions come in, under certain conditions they have had reduced rates, special rates, both on the stage and after they came in there.

MR. TULLY: School marms are a privileged class, but the ordinary visitor and tourist as a rule, has to come out with his little old $6 or $12? A. Well, they have to come out with the regular charges, as a general thing.

Q. The next charge is: "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." I understand that applies to the hotel privileges and another privilege that has been granted; these single privileges, for instance. A. My own idea is that the rentals are all too high there and should be reduced, and that the State should make appropriations and make up the deficiency.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is hardly an answer to the question.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any instances in which reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State have been made? That is the question. Where the State has been injured by reducing rentals? Where the best interests of the State have not been subserved? A. I hardly know whether it has been so or not. It was reported last summer that Coffman & Kenney have had their rent reduced for certain reasons. I never understood fully what the reasons were, and I am not prepared to say what the reasons were that they were reduced.

Q. You have heard there was a reduction? A. I heard there was a reduction.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts." I understand that applies to any contract that they have made of any kind, whether for labor or otherwise, and that they have failed to comply with the terms of their contracts; with the terms and conditions of their contracts? A. I don't know of any special circumstance of that kind, except as applied to the trail built by Conway, called the Eagle Point trail. Those trails were built on certain conditions. The Commission allowed certain persons to build certain trails, on condition that a full account should be kept of the cost, and that they should be paid. If ever the State had the means to buy those trails, the parties building the trails should sell them at a discount of 10 per cent per annum on the first cost, for a term of ten years; and if they failed to buy them within the ten years, those trails reverted to the State free of charge. Well, in the case of Conway, he had been using his trail some three or four years. They had bought out the Glacier Point trail, bought out Snow's trail to the Vernal and Nevada Falls; and as those were free trails, and Conway's was a toll trail, the parties, as a general thing, took the free trail, and left out the trail that they had to pay $1 a head on their horses for; and Conway applied for pay for his trail under those conditions. He applied at a time when, according to the contract, the face of the writing, like the face of a note, showed that what was due was $1,800, and the Commissioners at that time offered him $900; and, as he says, they wrote out a writing stating that he accepted it, as free and ample and full compensation for the trail, which he refused to sign.

Q. Well, what became of the contract? What became of that case? What was done with it? A. After that the trails were all declared free. Conway had a man on his trail collecting toil. The Guardian, Mr. Hutchings, with a party, went and put him off the trail, and passed over the trail free of charge. Conway had him arrested, and the Justice fined him $5. Then, at the next session of the Legislature, after one year more had expired, and the amount due on the contract had been reduced 10 per cent for that year, the Legislature appropriated money and paid him $1,500 for his trail.

Q. That was the outcome of the whole transaction? A. That was the outcome of the whole transaction.

Q. He got $1,500 from the Legislature? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He didn't get it from the Commissioners? A. No.

Q. His contract was originally with the Commissioners, was it not? A. It was with the Commissioners.

Q. Was that a contract in writing? I believe you said the contract was in writing? A. Yes, sir; to the best of my knowledge it was.

Q. The Commissioners then refused to pay it? A. The Commissioners offered to pay him $900. He refused to take it because it was not according to the contract.

Q. He appealed to the Legislature? A. Yes sir.

MR. GARDNER: What year was that, Mr. Clark; about what time? A. Well, it has been—I couldn't say for certain, maybe—about five years ago he received this pay, I think.

Q. Were you on the Commission at that time, Mr. Clark? A. No; I was a Commissioner at the time he was granted the privilege of building the trail, but not at the time the offer was made to buy him out.

Q. Were you on the Commission at the time the Commissioners declined to buy? A. No, sir. The old Board had been entirely legislated out of office by the new Constitution, which specified that no Commissioner should hold office more than four years. The new Board was appointed under Governor Perkins. That Board was in session and acting at the time they refused to pay.

Q. Is there any Commissioner on the present Board that was on the Commission at that time? A. Well, I think there is, though I have not kept the full run of the changes that have taken place, as they are changing every two years now; four of them appointed every alternate two years; and I wouldn't say certain, but according to my best belief there is some of them on the Board now.

Q. You don't know the name of any of them? A. I couldn't name any one of them; there may not have been any one, because I have not kept run of the changes. The more I think of it, the more I think there is not one on the Commission that was on at that time; it is a matter I had not thought of at all.

MR. TULLY: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House, and illegally leasing the same." Do you know anything about that charge? A. I do not, sir; I know nothing about it except what has been published in the papers, what everybody knows.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, that charge as it is specified there is not correct, because the school is still in existence. There has been a great reduction in the number of scholars, but the school still exists, as usual.

Q. Well, to what is it attributable—the reduction in the number of scholars? A. Well, when Harris left the valley, Harris and Leidig had families, each of them had large families. Each furnished a large portion—more than half the scholars that went to the school; the two together. They have both left the valley on certain conditions, or under certain circumstances, and consequently the amount of scholars is reduced very much from what it was, but not sufficient to destroy the public school. It is within the legal status of support by the school law.

Q. Do you consider that the Commissioners were responsible for that reduction? Do you know any act of the Commissioners that would lead you to believe that the reduction of the number was directly attributable to some act of the Commissioners? A. I don't think it could be attributed to them.

Q. You think it was attributable simply to the fact that those gentlemen chose to go out of the valley under circumstances that were satisfactory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They went out voluntarily? They were not put out, were they? A. No.

Q. You don't consider that the Commissioners are responsible for their retiring from the valley? A. I don't think they are, at all. I don't think they are in anywise responsible for the reduction of the scholars in the school.

Q. There is no circumstance that you know of there that is attributed to any act of the Commissioners, that would tend to destroy the utility of that school? A. No, sir.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. Well, there has been some complaints made at times with regard to the roads not being in good repairs for carriage driving.

Q. About what time; since when; about what time were those complaints made, and since when? A. There were some made last summer, when the whole force of men were engaged on the grounds and work up about the Stoneman House and Royal Arch farm; the trails were somewhat neglected in the lower part of the valley.

Q. The trails and roads? A. The roads; I mean the carriage roads and trails, in places; not so as to render them dangerous, but not so convenient and easy to ride on as if they had been put in better repair.

Q. To what was that attributable, do you think—to what particular act of the Commissioners? A. I don't think it was attributable to the Commissioners at all. It was simply a neglect or oversight on the part of the Guardian for a short time there.

Q. To look after it? A. Yes, sir. The Commissioners had nothing to do with it particularly.

Q. If the Guardian had attended to his duties zealously, were there means at his disposal, could he have kept those roads in good condition? A. The amount of business which was going on took up his time above. That could have been done, I suppose. Men could have been taken off of the other work and that improvement could have been made.

Q. He was giving his attention elsewhere, and neglected those roads on account of his attention to business elsewhere in the valley? A. Yes, sir; they were considered safe and easy enough, as a general thing, but still there were complaints made.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." Do you know of any instance in which persons in the employment of the State were working or did work for private parties? A. No, sir.

Q. You know nothing about that? A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." That is very general and very broad. A. I can't say that I think they have failed. There is a difference of opinion in all bodies of men to transact business as Commissioners or as Courts or any other body of men; there is a difference of opinion, and the public might vary in opinion different from what the Commissioners would with regard to the management.

Q. That question is a summary; it covers the whole ground of all the questions we have gone over? A. It is a very hard matter for any Commission and the public at large to agree positively upon any points or very few points.

Q. Your opinion about it, as to whether you would think they were willfully negligent? A. I do not.

Q. Or failed to comply with the requirements of the law, as they understood it? A. I think they have done the best they could according to the best of their judgment, and the laws under which they acted, and with the means which they have had to carry on the improvements there; I think they have done the best they could.

MR. TRUMAN: Do you think what is termed a second class hotel, in the Yosemite Valley, would be patronized enough to pay? A. Not if they had to pay much rent for it.

Q. Do you think any parties who go into the valley as campers would patronize a second class hotel? A. Well, do I understand by that, that instead of coming as campers they would come in to patronize the hotel, without coming as campers at all?

Q. I don't refer to the first class hotels; I don't mean in contradistinction to the first class hotel, because Mr. Tully spoke of a second class hotel, and I think it is a good subject to think of. I have never thought of it, except in looking over the minutes of the Board for the last two years; they have had it in consideration, but believe that it would not pay; that nobody would go there; that ninety-nine out of one hundred or more would want to go to the first class hotels; that they only stay a day or two, and because generally the people that went into the valley were people who lived at a first class hotel, or went to a first class hotel, or were first class people, or else were too proud to go to a second class hotel if there was one there—and, therefore, that it would not pay; and it was not considered that it would be expedient to keep them standing there as eyesores on that account; that there would never be anybody who would patronize a second class hotel. I wanted to touch on the campers; that is the reason I touch on that question. I will ask you that second question over again. Do you think any parties, who generally come into the valley as campers, would patronize a second class hotel? A. They might, to a very small extent, but not to any great extent, according to my judgment.

Q. The camping parties all carry in blankets and some other sleeping apparel, do they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there was a second class hotel then that charged from $2 50 to $2 a day, and Mrs. Glynn only charged $1 per day, wouldn't these campers go to Mrs. Glynn instead of a second class hotel? A. Some of them would, probably.

Q. Have you ever heard a human being complain of the rates for board in the Yosemite Valley? A. I have heard some tourists think the charges were too high; in driving them around the valley and having conversation with them as I come in contact with them, some of them complain, but very few of them; most of them think the charges are very reasonable when they come to understand the conditions upon which business is done there in the valley; that they are so far from the base of supplies, and so far from help, and the difficulty of running a hotel in there being so much greater than it is on the outside, according to the fare they get, the majority of them don't think they are charged any too high, and some think it ought to be higher.

Q. Did the people who complained generally, if you heard any, did they impress you as being people who had been at other like places of resort? A. They would impress me as being people who had been accustomed to travel a good deal.

Q. I was in the Yellowstone Valley last August; I have just been to the Raymond and Sierra Madre Villa, and Coronado, which are accessible, and I paid $4 a day at all these places for less than I got at the Stoneman; and in the Yellowstone we had to pay $5 a day for horrible board and indifferent quarters. How many acres are there in the floor of the valley? About how many? A. I couldn't answer that question correctly.

MR. TRUMAN: How many are there, Mr. Guardian?

MR. McCORD: There are two surveys. One is from wall to wall. According to Mr. Whitney's survey, the official measurement, it is eight thousand four hundred and eighty acres. Hoffman's survey gives seven hundred and fifty-four acres of meadow land and three hundred and sixty-six fern land; that is the level floor of the valley.

THE CHAIRMAN: How many acres are fenced? A. Inclosed within the limits of those fences there has been not far from seven hundred acres inclosed; a year ago last fall, the fence of the Bridal Veil meadow, some portion of it was broken down, and that never has been put up so but what it lays open to a certain extent. Some of the old fence remains there; and whether that will be inclosed in the future or not, I don't know. The Leidig pasture, some of the fence is down. Whether that will be fenced up and used for campers in another year, I don't know.

Q. If there are about between seven and eight thousand acres upon the floor of the valley, and between six and seven hundred acres fenced, how is it that the greater part of the floor of the valley is shut out from free access to tourists? A. That fence incloses the meadow ground instead of the high dry pine land, the higher pine land around; rather barren land among the pines, but the meadows border more or less upon the borders of the river, and it is more desirable for tourists to travel along the borders of the river around in the meadows, where they can get flowers and things of that kind, than it is to travel among the pine trees and on the more barren portion of the valley.

Q. Well, now, as a general thing, when the people are there, the largest crowds of people, do they frequent the meadows? Do they wish to frequent the meadows or the woods, the most? A. Well, there are more or less groves in connection with the meadows. They generally wish to go where they can get flowers, people who are stopping there and not able to ride to the different points.

Q. Are not the meadows generally wet? A. Early in the season they are, later in the season they are dry.

Q. Considering that there has been nearly thirty-six miles of road built there, isn't it necessary to do more or less fencing to keep stock—cattle, cows, and oxen, and other animals—from going on these roads? Wouldn't it be dangerous for these hundreds of horses to be running around? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there were two or three butcher shops, or bakeries, or blacksmith shops in the valley, there would have to be just so many places built for such purposes, would there not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wouldn't the Commission have to pay for them, according to law? A. Pay for the building of them, you mean?

Q. Yes? A. Yes; they ought to pay for them if they allow them to be put up.

Q. You say that for awhile the trails were neglected by the Guardian during the past summer. What trails were neglected? A. I don't know anything of my personal knowledge about the trails, for I was not on them. I have no knowledge of the trails. I have some knowledge of the roads. I said there were complaints made; but of my own knowledge I had no knowledge of the trails; only of the roads.

Q. Well, those number amongst the multiplicity of complaints that you hear off and on about many things, don't they? A. Yes, sir; daily, some complaints.

MR. TULLY: Now, Mr. Clark, the Major has directed your attention to two classes of tourists, or at least two classes of visitors there; one class has reference to the aristocratic visitor—the traveled man who has been to Europe, and the Yellowstone, and other parts of the country; the other class that the Major's questions represent are campers, those men who come in there and sleep on their own blankets. Is there not a class intermediate between those who would prefer, in your opinion, to go there and not take their blankets, provided they could find more reasonable accommodations—go and sleep in a cheap hotel, and eat at a cheap hotel, rather than be incumbered with their blankets and the necessary annoyance and inconvenience of camping out, if they had cheaper accommodations? There is an intermediate class—the people who are not very aristocratic, and yet are not footpads. A. There are some who camp and some who go to the first class hotel who would go to the cheap hotel if they could have it, I presume; but there are many who prefer to camp. There are many rich men, wealthy men, who go on a camping expedition and enjoy it better than they do to put up at a hotel.

Q. Well, now, I understood, awhile ago, in speaking about the area of this valley, that one measurement, seven thousand acres, I believe, is from wall to wall; and I understood the gentleman further to say that seven hundred acres—there was a strip that I understand to be the floor of the valley, the floor proper—it don't include the little outside that is broken up, and is not the valley proper. That is about seven hundred acres, is it not?

MR. McCORD: It is about eleven hundred and fifty-one acres.

MR. TRUMAN: About the meadow; that might be technically termed the meadow; but there is more of the floor, lots of level land, that runs up into nearly two thousand acres of pretty near level land.

MR. TULLY: We will call it eleven hundred acres. Did I not understand you to say that the valley proper, the meadow lands there that were fenced in, were about seven hundred acres? A. Somewhere near about seven hundred.

Q. That would leave of the meadow land proper, the floor of the valley, that would leave the difference between seven hundred and eleven hundred that were open and not fenced in? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be about four hundred acres of the floor of the valley that was not incumbered with these fences, assuming that that is the difference between eleven hundred, which is the measurement of the floor proper, and the amount that is inclosed, which is assumed to be seven hundred. Then there would be about four hundred acres of the valley proper, the meadow land, that is open and unfenced? A. I should think there was all of that, or more.

MR. GARDNER: If these meadows had been left unfenced, would the land there not be just as barren as the balance of the floor of the valley? A. If the same amount of stock had been run there, they would have been just as barren; they would have eaten up everything just the same without the fence as they do with it.

MR. TRUMAN: Speaking of intermediate people, isn't there provisions made at both the Barnard and Stoneman House, and haven't we ratified them, that there shall be second class accommodation given them? Haven't they got dining rooms and lodging rooms for people who don't want to pay $4 or even $3 a day? A. They have dining rooms, both the hotels have dining rooms, at less rates, but I don't know that they have less rates for lodgings.

Q. The rate in bulk is less? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is a second class rate at a first class hotel? A. Second class tables. That is, if you go in the first class dining room you pay a dollar; you go in the second class room and pay four bits a meal—50 cents.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke awhile ago, in answer to Major Truman, about the lands having been fenced up and the stock kept out, did you not? That it kept the cattle and horses from running out on the valley? A. From running at large; yes, sir.

Q. How comes it that there are several hundred head of horses and cattle up there kept in the inclosure and kept from running out in the valley? A. There are not several hundred head of stock in the valley, altogether. Cattle, and horses, and all amount, perhaps, to about one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty head, or maybe one hundred and fifty; say one hundred and fifty head.

Q. You gave in evidence, I think, Mr. Clark, awhile ago, that you didn't think if there was a second class house established that it would find considerable or much patronage, did you not? A. I didn't think it would pay if they had to pay much rent to the Commissioners for the privilege.

Q. Then that being the case how do you account for the success, if that wouldn't pay under the conditions, how is it possible for a first class house that contains both a first class table and a second class table to pay?

A. Well, it requires no more help to set the two tables than it would to set one; the expenses are no greater; the rent is no greater. It all comes in together and makes enough to pay the rentals and help for the season; it doesn't come so hard upon the proprietor who runs both classes of tables; the expense is not so great in proportion as it would be to run a second class hotel, I don't think.

W. C. PRIEST.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: State your name? Answer—W. C. Priest.

Q. Where do you reside, sir? A. I reside near Big Oak Flat, Tuolumne County.

Q. From these questions here you understand the object of this investigation and its general nature? A. Yes, sir; that is, I have heard the testimony of quite a number.

Q. Your name appears here—I infer from the reference made here, "Regarding enforced stage line pools and his Commissionership." Is that it? A. I have been interested and am yet in the stage line that runs in the summer months to the Yosemite Valley. Some years it pools with the other side and some years it runs independent. Some years it runs independent of the other side and some years it pools. It was last year pooled. I don't know what I will do with it this year.

Q. What was the nature of that pool? A. Well, it is to prevent cutting rates. When they run opposition they cut rates to such an extent that nobody makes anything out of it.

Q. Then they pool their issues, I understand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And establish a fixed rate? A. Yes, sir. You are not quite right about that. For instance, ours is considered the weakest side. The other side has the Southern Pacific behind them, and we have got nobody but ourselves.

Q. Who is "ourselves?" A. It is a little community of stockholders that own that stage line up in our country, where we live.

Q. What is the name of the stage company? A. The Great Sierra Stage Company.

Q. And your competitors are whom? A. Washburn & Company, on the Raymond route.

Q. Then the competition is between your side and the Washburn side? A. That is it; yes, sir.

Q. Go on and state anything you know. This says, "Enforced stage line pools." A. Well, there is nobody enforced but the owners of the two lines. No one else, I think, has anything to do with it.

Q. They pool their issues? A. Yes, sir; they did one year; last year.

Q. What is the general effect of it? A. Well, that I can't tell.

Q. Upon the valley and upon the tourists who go there? A. Well, it may be a little tough upon the tourists, but it is tough on the stage company to act otherwise.

Q. Then it is not like the old fable of the boys and the frog—fun for the frog and death to the boys? A. You know very well, that railroads and everybody else pool things all over the country, just the same as these stage companies.

Q. Unfortunately for the public at large, that is the case. A. You are correct about that, sir.

Q. Then it is true that there are times when the different stage companies form what is called a pool? A. That is it; yes, sir. They did last year. Whether they will this, I don't know.

Q. The object is mutual protection? A. That is it; yes, sir.

Q. What is the effect of that pooling process upon the traveling public and the general interests of tourists and persons who want to go into that valley? A. It is an injury, but there is a necessity for all these things; it is a necessity in this way: that our country up there is full of livery men, livery stables—Milton, Copperopolis, all that whole country—Sonora and everywhere, is full of livery; and if a party of tourists want to visit the Yosemite Valley, they can consult the agent of the two lines in San Francisco, or they can telegraph, or come up there, and make, probably, better rates with the livery men. Last year, on account of this pooling and high rates, there were a great many people hauled in there on livery teams; so that we have got no good thing on the pooling business. On the pooling we have not got a very good thing, for the reason that these other folks cut in on us when we undertake to do that.

Q. What is the effect of that cutting in, so far as it affects? A. It is an injury to the stage companies. There has nobody got rich out of it, or even made money out of it. It is a hard scratch to keep even, and some don't do that.

Q. How do you run those lines? What are the conditions so far as the Commission is concerned? Do you obtain your license and permission to run those lines? A. No; we have no license. We rent barn privileges for stabling.

Q. From whom? A. From the Commissioners. Our side does. I don't know how the others get theirs. They have more privileges than anybody else; but we pay for ours. We pay for a small stable for eight horses; we pay $60 for the season, and for a little office that we occupy there, $10; making $70 a year.

Q. Well, in making your lease or renting your privileges there, is there any stipulation that you shall not or shall do this thing? A. No, sir.

Q. You get your privileges and then act as your own interest dictates? A. Yes, sir; I never was questioned but once on that subject, and that was by one of the present Commissioners, J. H. O'Brien. He asked me once, in talking about that matter, if I thought the Commissioners would allow it. I told him: "The devil take the Commissioners." I didn't see what they had to do with it; that they pooled everything in the valley, and I didn't see what right they had to pool anything outside of it, or prevent its being pooled.

Q. Do the Commissioners know that such pools were formed? A. Oh, yes; it is no secret. I would tell every member of that Board as quick as I would tell you.

Q. Have they ever spoken to you and remonstrated in regard to it; or made any suggestion with regard to the impropriety or propriety? A. No member of the Commission has ever mentioned it, except Mr. O'Brien, and he only mentioned it in that way, to know if I thought they would stand it. They couldn't help themselves. I wouldn't care whether they thought well of it or not.

Q. Do the Commissioners have anything to do with regulating the prices charged in going into that valley? A. No.

Q. You are perfectly free? A. We sell the tickets in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Stockton, and all over the country. We don't sell tickets in the valley. There is no occasion to sell them except to some fellow that strays in and is anxious to get away; maybe went in on foot, and is anxious to get out, and pays his way out on the stage line.

Q. Isn't it a fact that this pooling process has a tendency to keep up the prices? A. I suppose it does, certainly.

Q. If it were not for this pooling process, the probabilities are that outside competition would come in and reduce the prices? A. It does come, Mr. Tully; these livery men cut in on the stage lines all the time. There is not so much on the Raymond route, cutting by livery men, as there is on this route, and the reason is this: their tolls are so exorbitant there when they put them on, which they do, to keep livery men off; they don't want them there; but on the Big Oak Flat road the tolls are so much smaller, so much less than they are on the Raymond road, that it is on this side that we get crippled. But the Commissioners never have interfered with the stage lines, as far as I know, and I think have no right to.

Q. You have said, I believe, that they have nothing to do with the fixing of your prices, at all? A. No, sir; nothing at all; never have interfered, nor have no right to. They may do some things they have no right to, but that is something they have not meddled with.

Q. I was going to ask you if the privilege that you enjoy there from the Commissioners, if the conditions under which you get it do not operate—if it does not tend to exclude and discourage others from coming there? A. Oh, not at all. No, sir.

Q. It is the fact that you do pool your issues there? A. We did, one year, Mr. Tully, last year. This year we don't know what may be done yet. Probably we will pool and probably fight each other. I can't tell. There is no secret about it.

MR. TULLOCH: Mr. Priest, before you pooled issues with the other company, or these parties, do you know of any exorbitant rates having been charged by the Washburn company, and of which the Commissioners had some knowledge? A. Mr. Tulloch, I think there has been no man ever made any money in staging into the Yosemite Valley. Washburn's company now—it is no secret about the prices. Some of these tickets have been sold as high as $55 from San Francisco and return; that included railroad, stage fare, and the whole business. Well, other years it is cut away down. Last year on their road they sold tickets for $50. I don't know if they sold it for less; but you take these excursion parties, they always get reduced rates, but they come in great bunches and big parties. It makes it very expensive to handle them; and then on this side, on account of the livery men cutting in on us, tickets were sold last year that didn't pay horse feed.

Q. Do you know what the Hayes party had to pay once in coming out; making the round trip? A. I only know—well, yes; I know, too. I was four or five years on the Yosemite Commission. Mr. Clark was on the Commission when I first went on the Commission. Mr. Clark was a member and the Guardian of the valley. I was appointed, and then reappointed. During the time that I was on the Yosemite Commission the Hayes party came to this coast, and there was a meeting of the Board of Commissioners in San Francisco; and at that meeting—the Hayes party was already on the coast, or would soon be here—and this question was talked over. The Commissioners felt well towards them, and wanted to give the State a good showing—make a good showing to the party—and that question was talked of; whether it would be right and proper and would not be the best for the interests of the people of this State to show them as many of the sights as possible, and at the State's expense, or at the Commissioners' expense—the same thing. Well, some thought one way and some thought the other; and Colonel Jackson was then on the Board, and the Colonel was called on, he being a lawyer, for advise in the matter. The Colonel thought the thing over a little bit, and says: "Gentlemen, we have no right to spend one dollar in that way. We have to give that up." So that settled it. In a few days, or a very short time after this—I was then interested in staging from Milton to the Yosemite Valley; and Mr. T. J. Madison, who lives at Murphy's Camp, Calaveras County, was interested in staging from Milton to the Calaveras trees; and him and I met and went down the road to San Francisco. And on the way down—that was already our object—was to go down to try to get that party to go either in or out over our road—and everywhere along the road everybody says: "You are going down to try to get the Presidential party over the road." We told them, "Yes." Well, we got to San Francisco, and we found that Colonel Jackson had the managing of the party, directing them when and where to go, and how to go, and all that; and we called at his office. He was then editing or managing the San Francisco "Evening Post." We called on him; he knew us both, and we told him the object in calling upon him. He says, "Well, gentlemen, I am sorry to tell you that I think you have no show to get that party." We asked him why? He says, "Washburn & Co. have offered to take them from here to the Yosemite Valley, pay their railroad fare, pay their stage fare, pay their meals there, their beds, and all their expenses on the trip." Mr. Madison says, "Well, that is pretty tough, but we have got to get them, if possible, our way." So we talked the matter over, and it was arranged that Mr. Madison and I would take the responsibility—I kept a hotel where I lived and a station for Yosemite travel, and he was interested in some hotel at Murphy's, and Mr. Sperry at the Calaveras trees, and it was arranged that we would take the chances and stand good for the business; and we told Colonel Jackson that we would take them one way on those terms, if Washburn & Co. had agreed to. He said he would see what he could do; and with that we went out and told him he could telegraph us to Stockton, Sonora, or Murphy's, or wherever we might be at the time, and let us know if we were going to get them. The first thing we knew they had been into the valley and out again, and we never got to see them. Well, a short time after this there was another meeting of the Commission, and at this meeting Washburn & Co. came in with a bill for something like $600. Dr. Briggs is here, I think, and would have the bill, or would know the exact amount. Dr. Briggs told me they claimed that they hauled in fourteen, when there was but thirteen; it don't matter about that; but Washburn came in with this bill, charging the Commission for hauling the Hayes party to the Yosemite Valley, and we were all surprised that he did—at least I was, and I think all the Board was; and he says, "Well, I will have that money; I am going to have the full amount, too." And we took a vote on it in the Commission, and all voted no except Colonel Jackson. Colonel Jackson says, "I will vote yes as a complimentary vote to Washburn & Co," and did so. So I supposed that was the end of it. Not very long after that I resigned as a Commissioner, and since then, not very long, I think, after, that money was paid to Mr. Washburn.

MR. TULLY: That bill? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was it? A. Somewhere a little more or a little less than $600.

Q. That was for bringing those parties in? A. That was for bringing President Hayes and his party from San Francisco to the valley and return.

Q. The same party who Mr. Jackson had told you they were going to take in? A. Yes, sir; they were going to take in, and take for nothing. Here is Mr. Gardner, who is well acquainted with Mr. Madison, to prove it. I can bring Mr. Madison here and prove every assertion I have made.

MR. GARDNER: Yes; I know him myself.

MR. TULLY: The other parties who you represented there in talking with Colonel Jackson about that, offered to do the same thing? A. Madison and I was in together.

Q. If the others took them in for nothing, they would do the same thing on your line? A. Yes, sir; we volunteered to do the same thing, whether they did or not. We offered to take them one way, in or out, by the Calaveras trees, and show them as much of our route as possible, on the same terms that Colonel Jackson represented they would take them in and out for.

Q. He represented that they were going to take them for nothing? A. Nothing.

Q. And subsequently put in a bill for $600 or $700? A. Washburn & Company put in a claim, claiming they had made no such agreement.

Q. Who paid that money? A. The Commissioners. The State paid it, of course.

Q. Do you know upon what grounds that was paid? Were you a member of the Commission? A. Not at that time; I had resigned before this happened; before the money was paid. I was on the Commission when it was voted positively not to pay it.

MR. GARDNER: Were any of the present Commissioners on the Board then? A. Madden was on, I think, at that time. I am not positive. Let me think it over a little bit. I am not sure, but it rather strikes me that Madden was on. Madden has been off and on this Commission almost since its organization; since the valley was ceded to the State; he is the oldest member now living that has served on that Commission.

MR. TULLY: You said that that bill was paid. Where do you obtain your knowledge of that fact as a fact? A. There is no secret about it. Here two years ago, at the investigation of that Yosemite Commission, our Senator from our county, Mr. Reynolds, now here at Milton, was one of the committee to investigate that matter. Of course the old man was pretty hot and talked about the frauds and all that, like a great many other people; that Hayes was a fraud, and all that sort of thing; but that didn't matter, but I was talking yesterday with Reynolds in regard to the same matter. Briggs is here. He will acknowledge the whole business. He was then Secretary, and no doubt paid the money, or drew the warrant for the money. There is no secret about that. Mr. Washburn will acknowledge receiving it. He can't help it, because I know he got it.

Q. It was paid by the Commission? A. Why certainly; yes, sir.

Q. Paid from the State's money? A. Yes, sir. No doubt Dunn's books here will show the warrant. It was a little more or a little less than $600. I am not very particular about dates, but I think it was about four or five years that I was on that Board of Commissioners. I was appointed and served a term, and reappointed, and got disgusted and then quit. Mr. Clark here was on the Commission at the same time. How long did you serve after I was appointed, Mr. Clark?

MR. CLARK: I served until the old Board was legislated out under the new Constitution. I was not on the Board at the time this transaction took place. That was after the new Board had been appointed by Governor Perkins.

THE WITNESS: Have you ever heard this business that I speak of?

MR. CLARK: I have heard it.

THE WITNESS: Do you know it to be a fact?

MR. CLARK: I believe it to be a fact.

THE WITNESS: I know it is a fact.

MR. CLARK: I know nothing only by hearsay.

THE WITNESS: Do you remember, Mr. Clark? It must have been about 1883.

MR. CLARK: You were appointed by Governor Perkins in 1880? A. Yes, sir; I was reappointed by Governor Perkins, but I think I resigned in 1883.

MR. CLARK: You resigned before your term expired.

THE WITNESS: Yes; I resigned; I got sick of it, and my reason for getting tired of this thing was, as every old member of that Board knows, the executive committee is the whole business, or was in my time; like this Anderson trail, that has made such a thundering row and squabble. I was in the Yosemite at one of the general meetings, and we went up and looked at it, and I knew—I had been over and through that cañon often enough to know that that thing was entirely impracticable for the money that we had or could get; and it was not necessary to build it, anyhow; there was already a trail that answered the purpose. I opposed its being built from the start; and when we all went up and looked at it—Mr. Ladd, and Mr. Sperry, and Mr. Meany, and some others were on the Commission at that time—and it was unanimously agreed except by Dr. Briggs—I think he kept on with the business—that the thing should stop right there. But the Commissioners met in San Francisco, and either the executive committee or Dr. Briggs, on his own account, ordered the work to go on, and it did go on, and that man Anderson was robbed and swindled.

MR. TULLY: After the Commissioners had decided that it was not necessary? A. Yes, sir; it was decided, Mr. Tully, that the work should stop. We considered it impracticable to build it. We had not the money to do that.

Q. The executive committee, nevertheless, went on? A. Either they, or Dr. Briggs, on his own account, or somebody, went on with the work.

MR. GARDNER: And never paid Anderson? A. Never paid him.

MR. TULLY: Never paid for the work? A. No, sir; the latter part of it.

Q. You referred to the investigating committee? A. That was four years ago.

Q. Did you testify before that committee? Were you examined as a witness? A. Did I testify at that?

Q. Yes? A. No.

Q. In regard to that investigation? A. No; I was not here at all.

Q. You were not summoned? A. No; it was an investigation of the Secretary and Treasurer's books. There was some wrangle about the way Dr. Briggs had kept his books, and this investigation was brought about to examine into it.

Q. By what authority was that investigation had? A. By the Legislature.

Q. A committee appointed by the Legislature? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what that committee found in regard to it? A. I don't know. I suppose it is easy to find it here.

Q. Then the work that was done in extending this trail that was ordered by Dr. Briggs, or the executive committee, was nevertheless done, but never paid for? A. Well, no; it was not done.

Q. They continued the work? A. In the first place, Mr. Anderson had a very foolish contract. He was a very industrious, very energetic man, but had very poor judgment, and he thought this trail could be built for $1,200 or $1,500, and he took a contract to build it for that money, and it didn't any more than start it; it barely started the trail. That many thousands of dollars wouldn't do it; and after that amount was expended, then the Commissioners thought they would stop it, and ordered it stopped, and somebody then ordered it to go on again. Do you remember, Mr. Clark, how much was paid Anderson on that first contract?

MR. CLARK: His first contract was for $1,500.

THE WITNESS: That is what I thought, but the State furnished powder and tools.

MR. CLARK: The first contract he was to furnish everything for $1,500, but I was not then a Commissioner.

MR. GARDNER: Did his contract state that if he didn't finish it, he was not to get any pay? A. No; I think not. That second contract, there was no condition about it. He was ordered to go on with the work.

Q. Wasn't he to be paid then by the day? A. Maybe. I don't know if it was a private arrangement between him and the Secretary; I don't know how that was fixed.

MR. CLARK: Anderson told me after the contract had expired, that Dr. Briggs told him to go on with the work, and he would see that he was paid by the day.

THE WITNESS: I think myself that Dr. Briggs is the man to blame for the whole business. That is my opinion.

MR. GARDNER: The long and short of it is that Anderson did a great deal of work and got no pay for it? A. Yes, sir; that is, Anderson, on his first contract for $1,500, no doubt owed his men.

MR. CLARK: He paid that all to his men?

THE WITNESS: He paid all of it, and then didn't have enough to pay, and he went on and hired more men and worked himself, and these men didn't get a cent, and he didn't, and he owed everybody. He was a very enterprising, industrious man, but had the most miserable judgment in doing anything of any man I ever knew. I knew him well.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Anderson has already testified in regard to that. He states that he did the work and never got the money; or, at least, that was his brother; that he did the work by the day. A. The trail is barely started. I believe now that $15,000 or $20,000 won't build a good trail there; and it is not necessary to have it there, anyhow. There is already a trail there which answers every purpose; that might be a little improved. There are a great many things that can be done.

Q. It is your judgment that even if the trail had been finished, and the money paid, that it would have been a useless expenditure of money? A. Oh, no.

Q. An injudicious expenditure? A. I think so. I think there are many other things that the money is more needed on than it is on that trail. That place, Mr. McCord, going up the ladder, between Register Rock and the Fall: are you going to make a trail there?

MR. McCORD: We are going to make one next spring.

THE WITNESS: That has been more needed than anything in that valley. It won't cost but a trifle to do it; a hundred or two dollars will make a good foot trail.

MR. McCORD: Do you know whether the Yosemite Stage Company pays anything or not? A. I do not; I don't know.

Q. Is it not a fact that they pay $100 a year? A. I don't know a thing about it.

Q. It is a fact that they pay that amount? A. I never did know. It was never any of my business to know.

Q. You say the Commissioners didn't interfere with the rights of companies and persons on the stage lines? A. Not that I heard of.

Q. They never had any right to do it, did they? A. No.

Q. Hasn't that stage company the right to enter into pools with any other stage company? A. Certainly, they have that right.

Q. Hasn't your company that right? A. We have a right not to run a stage at all, if we don't want to.

Q. Hasn't your stage company a right to charge whatever it is a mind to? A. Certainly.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the business on your line doesn't last more than four or five months, or six months, or on either line? A. No; not more than that.

Q. The tolls charged on the other line wouldn't keep the road in repair, would it? The tolls charged from Raymond into the valley wouldn't keep the road in repair, would it? A. Yes, sir. That, I think, Mr. McCord, is a very exaggerated history or account of Washburn's road. If the Big Oak Flat Company, which I am on, hauled all the travel that goes over that road into the valley with their stages and paid nothing for it, it would not pay to keep the road in repair; but now every passenger that is hauled in over that road by the stage company pays $1; the stage company is paid $1 for every passenger that rides on its stages into the valley; every livery team that hauls a load of people in there, one or more, pays $1. All the freight that goes in there is charged. In that way the Oak Flat road pays to keep it in repair; but if Washburn & Co. paid tolls on their roads into the valley, or their stages, in proportion to what a private team does going in there, they would not pay. That is where the secret of their success is—in paying no toll.

Q. It is because they own the road? A. Certainly; but here, in the Big Oak Flat road, there is some members of the stage company that own in the toll road. The thing is about equally divided; there is about half the owners of the toll road that don't own in the stage company, and about half the owners in the stage owns in the toll road.

Q. Isn't it a fact, or don't you think that if the Anderson trail was completed from where it is now to the other side of Vernal Fall, that it would be the best road to the Nevada Falls? A. It would be easier, certainly.

Q. Better grade? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Less snow? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Freer from accidents? A. Yes, sir; I don't know about the accidents. Did you ever know of an accident on them?

Q. No; but on account of there being less turns; less chance for accident? A. These trails never hurt anybody; but, Mr. McCord, that is a good thing if it was built, but I think the money is worth more than the trail. That is the way I look at it; but it would be a good thing if it was built, but it is next to impossible to do it. I have built a good many roads and trails, and know a good deal about what that is. I never followed it up; a dog or cat can't go up where that trail is to go. Now, Mr. McCord, can a cat or a man or a dog or anything go up around—

MR. McCORD: Not between the two trails at present.

JOHN CONWAY.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: You understand the nature of this investigation, Mr. Conway? Answer—Yes, sir; I believe so. I have not heard the charges, though.

Q. You have not heard the charges? A. I have not heard the charges.

Q. I will read you some of the charges here. I will go over all of them, but I am going to direct your attention to one branch of the business. [Reads charges to the witness.] Those are the general charges. You have been summoned here especially with regard to what you were supposed to know about the trail matters. What do you know with regard to the trails of that valley? Any of them, or all of them? A. I know all the trails that are in existence there. I constructed the greater portion of them.

Q. Do you know any instance in which money has been injudiciously spent in opening or improving of any of those trails? A. There is none that has been constructed directly by straight orders, except that Anderson trail, to my knowledge. They were all constructed by private enterprise.

Q. What do you know about that? A. The men that had them constructed, the owners put up the money, and paid the expenses; hired me, and paid me for building it. The Eagle Point trail I built out of my own money. The first thing was the right of way—the privilege—the right of way to construct the trails, and go on and build them; and there was leases issued, and the authority to collect tolls on them.

Q. On those trails? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that, Mr. Conway? A. Well, the first work that I did in the construction of trails, I believe was in 1871.

Q. Is this trail known as the Anderson trail? A. No, sir; it was that trail above Snow's, going up from the Yosemite Valley. I built that stairway up there by the Liberty Cap, at the head of Boulder Gulch, on the trail leading up to the Little Yosemite and Cloud's Rest. That was in 1871.

Q. You obtained permission or right of way from the Commissioners? A. This I built for Washburn and McCready. That was my first work in the Yosemite Valley. At that time, they were running saddle trains into the valley, on all the routes that were coming into the valley.

Q. Did you do that with money furnished by the Commissioners? A. Washburn and McCready paid me my wages.

Q. You built it for them? A. Yes, sir; that was their property up to to-day, so far as I know; they never were paid for that trail. They collected tolls for awhile, but they abandoned collecting any toll. They built it also from there on around to Glacier Point. On the trail through the Illoutte, I believe they collected toll for awhile; I collected toll a short time for them when I was working there.

Q. Did their lease or the conditions under which they got it, entitle them to collect toll? A. They told me they were authorized; they told me they were authorized by the Board to collect toll.

Q. You collected the toll for them? A. Yes; John Bruce was conducting their business in the valley at the time, during that season, and he told me he had authority from the Board to collect toll. When I was working there I collected toll for them.

Q. What year was that? A. That was in 1871. I never heard of them collecting toll after that season. I never heard that they were paid for the work that I did for them; and others have worked; there was a lot of men employed to cut the trail around through to Glacier Point, that fall.

Q. You never heard that they were paid for it? A. I never heard that they were paid for it.

Q. Who has control of those trails now? A. The State; I have not been around them for several years.

Q. Do you know how the State obtained title? In other words, how the right of these parties that built it was extinguished, if it was? A. I never heard that there was any transfer by the parties to the State; it just merely took possession of it.

MR. GARDNER: The State may have paid for it for all you know? A. I don't see how it could; there never was any appropriation; I have noticed all the appropriations that were made.

Q. That was about eighteen years ago, is it? A. Yes, sir; that was in 1871 that I did that work. I left that; I had not quite completed all the work they had ordered me to do, when Mr. McCauley came after me to build the Glacier Point trail. That was in the latter part of November, 1871. I worked on that until we got stormed out; heavy storms and snows and we couldn't work any longer; we left for the season. I returned the next spring and helped to complete that trail up to Union Point. I had an accident there; came very near getting killed. After I recovered from that, the next work I done was for J. M. Hutchings. I built the road on the north side of the valley.

MR. TULLY: Did you build it for him as an individual? A. He paid me as an individual. That was before the property was purchased by the State.

MR. GARDNER: That was before the State had anything to do with it? A. The State had assumed authority there. We couldn't do anything without the consent of the Board. That was about all that the State undertook to do at that time, was granting those privileges to construct roads and trails.

MR. TULLY: That is about all you know about the trails? A. Yes, sir. Then in constructing my own is what followed. I constructed that, I think, in 1873; they gave me a lease of the trail. We had a good deal of trouble there in regard to business; the saddle train men. The conditions of the lease—the only thing that I can remember is, I was bound to obey all ordinances—conform to all ordinances—that the Board would pass in regard to the government of the valley. I couldn't do anything without their consent, the way I understood it. Well, the saddle train men had—it was in their power at that time to make or break any man's business, almost, there. They had control of the tourists; they would go where they would take them, and so on. If they wanted to take them up some other trail than mine—

MR. TULLY: They could boycott you? A. Yes, sir; use all their influence to go some other place.

Q. Were you boycotted; was your trail boycotted? A. That was the condition from the beginning. Well, in order to protect the business of my trail, I applied to the Board for the privilege of running a saddle train. They would refuse to furnish parties horses to go up the trail if they couldn't beat me any other way. The first application was in person, I think, in 1870. I asked the Board there to grant me that privilege, that protection, or to take the trail according to the conditions of the lease. The conditions were that they fixed the value at $3,000; the nominal cost value at $3,000; depreciating in value 10 per cent per annum; $300 a year; at the end of ten years it was to become the property of the State; it was to lapse to the State. Well, I asked the Board to either grant me that protection or to take the trail at the unexpired valuation. That was an informal meeting held by what was styled in them days "the new deal." Mr. Perkins informed me that it was an informal meeting; that they had not come to transact any business; that there was no money to pay me for the trail, or they would take it; but he would endeavor to have an appropriation at the next meeting of the Legislature to purchase the trails; and further, he stated, that the first business meeting for me to make my application in writing and it should be granted; and in June, 1881, at the next meeting, the first meeting of the new Board, I made my application in writing; and as they were about to close the meeting—the usual way was, they would call in property owners there in regard to their applications, and what they would do in regard to their business. I noticed everybody was called in but myself. I was waiting around all day, and I heard they were about to adjourn; they had about got through with their business, and I knocked for admission. I was admitted, and I supposed that the Board was to purchase the trail, because an appropriation of $25,000 had been made for that purpose. I was informed in the room, by the Chairman, that there was a motion before the Board to offer me $700, and the motion was lost; and, furthermore he stated "the Board has concluded to let the saddle train business an exclusive right. Therefore your application is denied." I told the Board that that ruined the business of the trail, and I walked out of the room. There was nothing more done for that season. It was virtually ruined. About all I could get to go up the trail was those to go a foot. Tourists told me they couldn't get horses to make the trip.

Q. In other words, you were frozen out? A. Frozen out; frozen to death, as near as they could freeze me.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you were informed that they had concluded to make that saddle train business an exclusive right? A. That is what they told me; that the Board had concluded to let that an exclusive right—the parties that received that exclusive right; those parties are the only parties I have ever seen run saddle trains there since.

Q. Who were they? A. There were other parties there running saddle trains at the time. As long as there was a crowd of them there I generally had some one that would furnish horses for my route, because I could keep their saddles full.

Q. You say those are the same parties that run saddle trains to-day? A. No: there was Hamilton at that time—a man by the name of Hamilton. He had a trail there, and the next morning he told me that he was ordered to take his stock out of the valley. He was very ill at the time—at the point of death—and he died in a day or two after that. I never have seen any other saddle train since except parties that I was told they granted the exclusive right to.

Q. What became of your route, your trail? A. I held possession until they made an effort to take it from me. They declared it free; tore down my toll gates; interfered with the collection of toll. I came to the Legislature here and fought it out—got an appropriation that paid me for the trail.

Q. You were paid by the State? A. Yes, sir. I have had nothing to do with the valley since.

Q. You had to appeal to the Legislature? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A private claim? A. Yes, sir; that was nearly four years ago.

MR. GARDNER: Were there any of the present Commissioners on the Board at that time—at that time that you speak of? A. Mr. Mills; he was Chairman at the time. It was him that told me that there had been a motion before the Board to offer me $700—I think it was for my trail—but the motion was lost.

Q. What proportion did that bear to what, under the contract and under the agreement, you were entitled to, giving the 10 per cent decrease?

MR. GARDNER: Wasn't it $900 they offered you? A. Oh, this was after that; a year after that. You see, from that time when that was voted down to offer me $700, a year passed by; they told me they didn't wish to buy the trail; but they thought, as I had been to a good deal of expense—they asked me how the trail was paying. I told them it was a bill of expense; it had been from the day and hour that they granted the exclusive privilege to the saddle train; but I made up my mind that I would hold on to it as long as I could get a cracker to eat, and fight it out.

MR. TULLY: I asked you what proportion the amount that they—
A. I think it was at that time $2,100, the unexpired valuation; $2,100.

Q. And they offered to pay you $700? A. Yes, sir; one year later it was $1,800. That was the time they offered me $900, provided I would give acknowledgment that it was a full, just, and honorable settlement of all the conditions of the lease. I wouldn't sign any such paper for $900.

Q. If you would relinquish the difference between $900 and $1,800?
A. Yes, sir; that was just the difference; 50 per cent of the unexpired valuation. Of course, the indenture was their paper.

Q. That offer was made to you by the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were the parties that made you that offer? A. Yes, sir; Jackson was Chairman at that time. Mr. Madden was one of what they used to call the old Board, but he was not on the Board at that time, as I remember it. It was since that. Just about the time the last appropriation was made; about the time that Madden was reappointed.

Q. Then, if you had accepted that proposition you would have lost just 50 per cent of your pay? A. Yes, sir; I was so sick and disgusted with it that I would have taken $900 and given a receipt for $900, but it occurred to me like this: the only object they could have in demanding what they did demand—an acknowledgment that it was a full, just, and honorable settlement—was that they intended to charge the State with the full amount by the indenture.

Q. You concluded it was an attempt to rob the State to the extent of the difference? A. That was my opinion, and I thought I would not accept it and give those terms. I was willing to take $900 and give a receipt for $900, and would have delivered up the property just the same as I did the day I was paid the appropriation, but I was determined that I never would sign any such acknowledgment for $900.

Q. You would not put your hand to a lie? A. No, I would not. When they offered me the $900 they didn't state the terms. I expostulated for some time. They said: "Well, you say your trail is of no value; it is a bill of expense to you." So I had, right there, during that very hour. They said: "Well, $900 is better than no money." And I insisted that it was nothing but just and honorable that they should pay according to the terms of their own paper—the $1,800. They said: "Well, we would not give any more. It is better for you to take that than take nothing." "Well, I suppose it is," says I; "if that is the best you will do, I will take $900 in this way: if a man has got a pistol to his head, he has got to take about the best terms he can." "But," says they, "you will take the $900?" I says, "Yes." There was not anything said for several minutes, and I rose up to leave the room and stepped towards the door and was called back and the terms then were made.

Q. That they would pay you $900? A. The Chairman says: "If you take the $900, Mr. Conway, you will be required to sign this acknowledgment that it is a full, just, and honorable settlement of all the conditions of your lease." I told them, "No;" and I walked out of the room. I told them I would not sign it for $900.

Q. That would have left them in a position to show your receipt in full for the payment of the $1,800 claim? A. Yes, sir; it struck me that that was the only object they demanded those terms, that they could charge the State with the $1,800.

Q. They were discounting their own obligation—it looked like it, didn't it? A. Yes, sir; but, as I say, when I went into that valley that morning I would have taken $500 and given a receipt for $500; actually I would to have got the trail off my hands and let the people of the State of California get the benefit. But those conditions—it looked to me that the only object in those conditions was that.

Q. Looking at it from that standpoint, you considered it was not giving it to the State, but putting it in such a way that they could put it in their own pockets? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is why you refused to sign the paper? A. That is just the reason I refused to sign the acknowledgment. I have seen so much that I was perfectly satisfied that there could be no other object.

Q. Then the granting of that exclusive privilege destroyed your prospective profits in your road? A. Yes, sir; that trail would have brought me thousands of dollars. If I had been allowed to furnish saddle horses there, I would much rather have retained the property than for the State to take it at the unexpired valuation. It was a one-sided iron-clad instrument, the indenture. It reserved the right to take the trail at any time, at its unexpired valuation. Well, now, if the trail had been paying me $1,000 a day, I could not have refused that unexpired valuation. I have a printed copy in my pocket, if you wish to see it; all its terms. Well, after I left the room and went out, perhaps a couple of hours afterwards, McCauley and Snow happened to arrive there. McCauley owned the Glacier Point trail and Snow owned the Nevada Falls trail. They asked me if the Commissioners had bought me out; I told them they knew what had occurred. "Well," says they, "they have got to buy you out, for they have agreed to buy us out," or had bought them out; something to that effect. At this time, I was building the road towards Raymond, that the stages are running on now, for the Enterprise Mining Company, and I had left a large gang of men there to go in. I was in a hurry to return there, and I had to return next morning. I supposed they would come to terms and would pay me a fair valuation for the trail. I thought the money had been appropriated. This was the second year, and it had been done the year before.

Q. I understand you to say that there had been an appropriation, and that they had the money? A. $25,000 had been appropriated. Yes, sir; at the very time that the motion to pay me $700 was made, the money was appropriated and lying in the treasury. The record will show that. Instead of coming to a settlement, the next morning, along a little after sunrise, I saw Hutchings, the Guardian, posting up notices around the valley, and I was asked by several acquaintances if they had paid me for the trail. I says, "No." "Well," says they, "the trails were all declared free." A few minutes after I saw Hutchings coming up to Barnard's, and he had a bundle of papers in his hand. I saw him tacking one upon the side of the door, and I went and looked at it, read it, and saw what it was. He went in to the desk. As he was coming out says I, "Well, Colonel, will you give me one of them?" "Certainly, John," he said. I looked at it, and saw there was no date to it. I asked him if he would date it. He said, "Certainly." He walked back to the inkstand and dated it. I think it was the third of May, 1882, declaring all trails free. About an hour after that he came to me, and told me that he was ordered by the Board to inform me that the trail was declared free, and that I should remove my toll collector and collect no further toll. I ordered my collector to remain at his post. It was a day or two after that that there was a party going up, and Mr. Hutchings, the Guardian, interfered with the collection of toll. The gate was closed, and he tore it up. It was not locked—it was closed. He tore it down; at least, that was the evidence. Just as soon as I found my collector I told him to keep to his post until he saw me. Otherwise I told him to do his duty as well as he could, but not to use any violence or resistance; any violence; and he informed me what had occurred. I had the Guardian arrested for misdemeanor, and he was tried and convicted. The record shows it all. I do certainly think that they violated the lease most grossly—their own paper.

Q. Their own contracts? A. Yes, sir; at least there is all to show. I have always looked upon it in that light. I consider it a violation to refuse me the right to protect the business of the trail. The only reason they ever gave me that they withheld that right was that the Board had concluded to let the saddle train business an exclusive right.

Q. Your toll road then became a dead letter? A. It was a bill of expense on my hands from that on. The State paid me.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are you familiar with any of the other trails about the valley? You didn't build any of the others? A. The trails are all free. There is no toll trails in the valley at the present time.

MARK L. McCORD.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: You are the present Guardian of the valley? Answer—Yes, sir.

Q. You are not a Commissioner? A. No, sir; I am not a Commissioner.

THE CHAIRMAN: We had just as well let Mr. McCord make his own statements.

THE WITNESS: As far as I am concerned I desire to be asked.

Q. "Misapplying of public moneys and appropriations?" A. I know nothing of that at all; I have seen no misappropriations in my term.

Q. "Destruction of public and private property in Yosemite Valley?" A. I know of no destruction of private property in the Yosemite Valley.

Q. Do you know of any destruction of public property? A. The public property that you say has been destroyed has been simply at the order of the Commission, upon their judgment whether it was buildings that should stand or should be taken down.

Q. As regards the destruction of private and public property in the Yosemite Valley; do you know of any destruction of private property? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Destruction of public property, if any? A. It was at the discretion or instruction of the Yosemite Commission.

Q. Do you know of any being destroyed? A. I know that several old buildings were torn down.

Q. What buildings were they? A. There was the Folsom building,

Black's building, and the Leidig building. The Folsom building was of no earthly use; neither was the Cook building; and the surroundings of the Cook building, and a portion of the surroundings of the Leidig building were of no earthly use. I testified before the Senate committee that the Leidig house proper could be made, by the expenditure of money, a good building, likely would be made fit for use.

Q. Was it destroyed, in the sense of destruction? A. No; it was not; it was used in other buildings. It was simply torn down and appropriated to other uses in the valley.

Q. As much of it as was available? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was done by order of the Commission, as you understand it, in the exercise of their authority and discretion? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider it an unnecessary destruction of timber? A. No, sir; I do not. Their judgment was greater than mine, and I am simply carrying out their instructions.

Q. "Unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley?" A. Not in my time.

Q. You know of nothing of that kind? A. No, sir; my term begins, if you understand, from September, 1887.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge of any having been destroyed prior to your becoming Guardian? A. Only from hearsay.

Q. In the sense of unnecessary destruction of timber? A. Only from hearsay, that was all; that is merely a matter of judgment of the different men that have been on the Board.

Q. "Clearing and plowing up valley meadow land?" A. The clearing, in my opinion, and also as Mr. Clark has stated to you, has not been enough; I see no cause why it should not go on and appropriations made, so as to make the valley as pretty as it is said to have been twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Q. That was when the Indians occupied it? A. Yes, sir; when the Indians burned it out every fall, as I understand through other parties.

Q. Plowing of the valley? A. There has been some plowing; perhaps less than ninety acres in the valley has been plowed.

Q. By whom? A. There have been about sixty acres plowed by Coffman & Kenney; about fifteen acres plowed by Mr. Cook and seeded to grass seed, so as to make it a beautiful plot.

Q. Has that been done by persons holding a lease and who had a right to it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley." A. In what way?

Q. Well, that is the nature of the question. I apprehend, however, it means obstruction to their free ingress and egress to the different parts of the valley? A. I will answer that question this way: In my opinion they have free access to the valley for driving, to the extent of thirty miles, if not more.

Q. Over the roads of the valley? A. Over the roads of the valley, crossing and recrossing the valley in many directions; crossing over seven bridges across the main Merced River; that is, on the floor of the valley, there is a drive way all around that; then as to the foot passing, there are seven turnstiles besides other gates that allow people to pass out and in through the different meadows, as they wish; and the inclosures run along parallel with the river, and people cannot cross the river at those points without coming to the bridges; and, therefore, I say the fence does not obstruct, to any great extent, foot passengers or people wishing to walk.

Q. Are these turnstiles so arranged that they bring the parties nearly in the neighborhood of those bridges? A. They terminate at the bridges generally.

Q. That is the only obstruction, those fences there, provided that those turnstiles and bridges across the river are the only obstructions—that is, the fences are the only obstruction to the free use of the valley—free access to all its different parts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom was that fencing done, and who controlled it? A. I suppose Mr. Hutchings did as much as any of them.

Q. Who controls it at present? A. It is under the different leases, and at the authority of the Commissioners.

Q. In other words, the persons lease those lands from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are those persons? A. Coffman & Kenney and Mr. Cook; the State pastures are also inclosed. I believe that covers all—and Mr. Barnard.

Q. Do you consider those fences, those inclosures there, in their present condition, or at any time since you have been there—do you consider that they are an obstruction, debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley? A. No, sir; I do not; I think they have free access. When they go into a turnstile they can go anywhere over a field that they wish, and come out on the other side; they can cross through and have free use of the field. I don't know as a person would like, or would care to cut diagonally across those fields, because they couldn't cross the river if they did; I mean opposite to where the turnstiles take them, and the paths.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State laws." A. Never to my knowledge have they done so but only once, I understand. I heard of it being done once at the church. That is from hearsay, and I give that as no testimony.

Q. Of your own knowledge you don't know anything of that kind? A. No, sir; nothing of the kind since I have been Guardian of Yosemite Valley.

Q. "Violating State law regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley." A. I never have been asked that question before except at this present time. That, in my opinion, is, to a certain extent, necessary. It seems to me that they could not grant to more than one man a privilege of doing business. For instance, taking the blacksmith business. It barely pays one man, and in fact, it doesn't average him wages the year round. It barely pays him for the five or six months that he is in the valley; and if one or two more blacksmith shops should come in the valley, it would either create a blackmailing system, and he would have to buy those parties off, or else leave the valley, and let some one else take it. And it is the same way with the butcher business. That is carried on by one man. If several different parties had that, why, there would be no use of doing business there. They couldn't make a living. The different parties would object to purchasing from them, because they couldn't keep meats; they wouldn't kill enough to keep meat on hand. And you might go on and state in regard to saddle train privileges. I have heard—I don't say it from my own knowledge—but it has been said time and again, that different parties having saddle trains in opposition, that they took parties to different places free; and running opposition, they have often taken 25 cents. A man was harrassed to death by these opposition lines. And then they would take them free to different points, and likely, leave him there and go back, and wouldn't take the man back unless he would pay full price for it. That is why I claim that the exclusive privilege should be granted to a certain extent.

Q. They would get him in the door? A. Yes, sir; they have done it; at least I understand so. It would only give a chance for buying off.

Q. A chance for blackmailing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand that you give it as your judgment that it is necessary, in order to secure blacksmiths, and butchers, and other necessary persons there in the line of business, that it is necessary to restrict them by some provisions in their contracts or otherwise, and that after having secured what was deemed necessary for the accommodation of the valley, that you don't consider it conducive to the general interests of that valley or the public to grant privileges to others? A. No, sir; I do not. And I will state here that the saddle train business last year, to my knowledge—they state that other people would stay there and would take and do the business. Now Mr. Stegeman, who has made application time and again, as Mr. Clark knows, for saddle train privileges, had it offered to him last year; he had eight or ten horses that he had gathered up, and it was offered to him to go ahead and do the business after the time had expired of the saddle train company, and there was an order given him for ten horses. I believe he had three horses, and couldn't get the others—couldn't catch them—and there was a general muss up. That is the way it would be if it was open to competition; at the latter end of the time they would all leave, because there is not any money in keeping horses in the valley.

Q. You think it is absolutely necessary? A. I think so, to a certain extent.

Q. To restrict the number of individuals to whom those privileges shall be granted? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand that you give it as the motive of the Commissioners to prevent the contingency arising of finding the valley at some time destitute of those necessary conveniences that would be likely to be brought about if there was no restriction? A. Yes, sir; these people are compelled to be there so many months in the year, so as to protect and give to the traveling public what they demand.

Q. Those privileges have usually been designated by the Commissioners as single privileges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are designated here as exclusive privileges; is it not a fact that they operate as an exclusive privilege? A. Well, you may say that to a certain extent. The word single is offered as a substitute for the word exclusive. You understand why that word is taken in that way.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." A. Well, there is a difference of opinion. I think, in my opinion—of course, I can't say—the authority is greater than I am, that created me; but it is as Mr. Clark says—in my opinion, I would think that it would be to the advantage of the State, if those privileges were reduced to a nominal rent; but that has not been decided upon. I think in a few years it will be that way. I think the tendency is to draw it to that conclusion, whenever the State will give it appropriations enough to carry on that work.

Q. Taking the facts connected with them into consideration, state whether or not any reductions that you may have known to be made, whether those reductions were to the prejudice of the State's income? A. The only reduction that I know of that has been made—there were two reductions: one was to Mr. Robinson, from $20 to $1, at Mr. Thomas Hill's suggestion to me and from me to Mr. Goucher; and the other reduction was made to the saddle train company, because of a loss; they lost several hundreds of dollars in the building, in grains and implements and things, and they thought as long as they had lost that, they would make this reduction, as they had asked it on that ground.

Q. Your understanding is that the reductions were made in view of the fact that these men had sustained those losses and that the interests of the valley required that they should let up on them? A. I don't know that you would take this case, particularly. The income from the valley is not sufficient to carry on the work of the valley, by any means. If we had to depend altogether on the income we couldn't repair the trails and keep the roads in proper repair.

THE CHAIRMAN: Was that loss that these parties sustained, private property? A. It was grain, and implements they used for farming, and hay and barley that they had for feed; that is, barley, not hay; barley seed, grain, and chopped feed; they had a storehouse and this fire took place and destroyed it.

Q. The buildings were private property? A. No; the buildings were State property. It was an old log cabin, and old log building.

MR. TULLY: "Failure to recognize their own contracts." Do you know of any instance in which they have failed to recognize or comply with their contracts? A. I do not.

Q. Of your own knowledge? A. I do not.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House, and illegally leasing the same?" A. I don't know anything of that. That was at the time that I was appointed Guardian, and of course I knew nothing of the Yosemite Valley. I was just dropped into the Yosemite Valley as a perfect stranger to all its workings.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. That is still going on, and the teacher is hired to go ahead and begin on the first of April.

Q. Do you know of any transaction in the valley the effect of which would be to tend to the breaking up of that school? A. No, sir; you might say, as it has been alleged, the driving of Harris out, because he had quite a large family of children, and a better offer was made for the Royal Arch farm than he made, that he was driven out. That would have the effect of reducing the number of children in the valley; and also Leidig's selling out.

Q. It would injure the school to the extent of losing that number of children, if it were an injury? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Harris left there; was he ejected or forcibly driven out of that valley? A. He was not ejected, and he was not forcibly driven out. He simply, by competition of bids, gave up the place. Harris states that he was driven out for feeding hungry men, but it has been proven that he had the place two years, two successive years after this action had taken place.

Q. Did he bid for the place that year? A. He bid for it that year, and he got it less the next year after the four men were there: he got it for $450; he got it the next year for a less bid than had been offered; and his bid the third year was $450, and the bid of the saddle train company was $550, making a difference of $100; and that was the forcible ejection of Harris, you might say.

Q. His failure to obtain the lease? A. His failure to give a higher bid.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know what that property is leased for now? A. The reduction was made in June in regard to that loss of the $250; it was originally $550, and it is to be paid $300 for last year and next.

Q. The school there is drawing State money for its support? A. It draws its regular money, as I understand, from the county; the regular tax. The Yosemite Commissioners have nothing to do with the school.

MR. TULLY: "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. They have not been neglected during my time that I know of. Just as I came into the valley the lumber and timber that had been hauled in to build the new hotel cut up the roads fearfully; and as any man knows who has anything to do with road building, he knows that roads cannot be built up in the fall when there is nothing but dust to build with; and that, you might say, was a neglect of the road, because it was not profitable or would not be right to waste money upon throwing the dust into the road for the next team to splash it out. That would be the cutting up of the road, in my judgment; and during that fall I went to work while it was muddy, and in the spring and fall, and leveled these places, so that when the first stages came over it would pack and make a fair, decent road. The road is better now than it was when I went in, and I think that any one that will drive over the floor of the valley this spring will find the road in better condition than it has ever been in the Yosemite Valley.

Q. You think it would have been an injudicious expenditure of money to repair those roads at that particular time? A. It would have been; yes, sir. That is why I didn't do it. I have gone over the trails every month, and I am continually asking the guides, men that are running on those roads every day, if they are in a bad condition, and in what way; and the moment they report to me anything wrong, I send men on those trails immediately, and I go over them as often as I possibly can, and see for myself. Of course, we have to prepare in the fall and spring for heavy rains. Any man knows that the trails running up those steep mountains will wash, and to a certain extent, we have to leave in logs that have been spoken of, so as to turn the water off the grade, to keep from washing those trails. If we did not, in a very few days a stream would ruin more than we could build in months; and we have to leave those in, because during the summer we have heavy thunder storms and heavy rainstorms that wash the roads every once in awhile.

Q. They are left there really as a necessary protection? A. They are, to a certain extent; some of them we take out; and when they get filled up—that is, they get deep from stepping over them—then we fill them up; when they get bad, I send men over them to do that, at the suggestion of the guides, who are running over the roads every day.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties?" A. I know of none of that.

Q. Nothing at all? A. It has been stated, last year it was said, because my men decorated the hotel at Barnard's, it was said that the men were employed upon private work. Well, that was not true; because the men were paid by the man that they did the work for, and they did it off hours; they did it from five in the morning up to the time they had to go to work. It has been my attempt to get as much work as I possibly can, and it has been stated that I have been rather arbitrary in that, and tried to drive the men.

Q. It was their own time and they were paid by private individuals? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not from State funds? A. And not from State funds.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley, in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." A. I think that is an unjust and false charge, in my opinion.

Q. Do you know in any instances in which anything has transpired in the management of that valley that would lead you to believe that they were neglecting their duties or violating any of the conditions of the contract between the United States and the State of California? A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. No act of theirs that you consider, that you construe into being a violation? A. No, sir; I don't think the Board of Commissioners would do anything of that kind intentionally. It may be simply a misjudgment or a difference of opinion.

[Further hearing continued until to-morrow evening, February 13, 1889.]

WEDNESDAY EVENING, February 13, 1889.

FRED. LEIDIG.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Where is your place of residence? Answer—Los Angeles.

Q. You were for a long time a resident of Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You kept a hotel there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state to the committee the circumstances under which you kept the hotel—all the circumstances about it, as concisely as you can, to the reporter, who will take it down? A. Well, I first went to the Yosemite Valley in the year 1866; leased premises known as Black's hotel; kept them for four years. The old Board of Commissioners leased the premises to me when I was ready to buy them, but they made the statement to me that Black had no rights there, so they would lease me the property. They leased me the property and Mr. Black ejected me, using the California term, by shotgun rule; and Henry H. Haight then became President of the Board of Yosemite Commissioners. Mr. Galen Clark happened to be in the valley that same evening, or came in; so he wrote the circumstances down to the Commissioners. Governor Haight wrote up a letter that they probably had done wrong in leasing me those premises, and that I should select a piece of ground and build on it and improve it. That is the way that I came to build a house; that is the way that I went to the Yosemite.

Q. How long did you remain there? A. Well, I remained there altogether twenty-two seasons; that is, you might call it twenty-two years. I moved out in the winter times; that is, the winter of 1866 and 1867. In 1868 I remained in the valley; from 1868 until I left, last April.

Q. Go on and give the committee a history of your connection with the hotel business there, as concisely as you can? A. Well, I don't know hardly how to get at it at all, to make the committee understand thoroughly. I would answer any questions that you have to ask, or answer them to the best of my knowledge and ability.

Q. We have no questions given us to ask you. We want your testimony particularly respecting your eviction and the destruction of the hotel in the valley? A. When I quit the valley I had two reasons for quitting the valley. One was that I couldn't compete with the Stoneman House, and the second was that the Commissioners refused to give—not me—my wife was the business manager, or had the lease. The Commissioners refused to give a five years' lease, and we came to the conclusion that we stood no show at all in the matter.

Q. Did you make application to the Commissioners for a lease, Mr. Leidig? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A written application? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was refused you? A. They refused it on the conditions that because they had committed one wrong, that they didn't think they would be justifiable in committing another. They were willing to give me a permit from year to year; they never refused me a permit from year to year, but they refused to give me a five years' lease.

Q. State to the committee what wrong you conceived they had done you? A. Well, that is about all the wrong they did me in that respect. After I left, of course—I left my two boys in possession of the premises, and they have now torn all the premises down, and used the lumber to make improvements for other people in the valley.

Q. In what year did you leave the valley? A. I left last April, 1888; twenty-fifth day of April.

Q. Was that application for a lease made to the present Commissioners who are now on the Board? A. Well, not all the present Commissioners, because there has been some new ones appointed; there were some new ones appointed last April; two only, I think; one was Truman, and I think the other was Taber.

Q. In what way do you consider the Commissioners threw obstacles in your way to keep a hotel there? A. Well, I don't know that they threw any obstacles in my way whatever, as regards keeping a hotel. If I had received a five years' lease, I could have made improvements to have justified me to have stayed, so that I could have probably competed with the other hotel more. At one time there, the Commissioners served a notice on Mrs. Leidig that if she went into a pool with the other hotels, that she was liable to forfeit her lease; so she didn't go into the pool with them.

Q. What pool was in contemplation? A. Well, the pool was, that the three hotels were to charge a uniform price, which was $4 a day.

Q. What price were you charging per day at that time, Mr. Leidig? A. Well, of course, that year I charged all the way from $2 50 to $3 a day.

Q. Did you have a fair show with the balance of the hotels, with the passengers? A. Yes, sir; I got lots of passengers that summer.

Q. No effort was made to keep them away from your house at all? A. Well, they drove the stages by me about two weeks, or three, probably—drove them on the other side of the river; they called it boycotting. But in a great many instances, after doing that, they were compelled to drive their stages—even after driving around a mile and a half or two miles out of the way—they were obliged to bring the parties to Leidig's hotel; at all events, parties had telegraphed me for rooms and accommodations; so they were obliged to drive them down anyway. I made complaint to the Commissioners about it, because in their rules and regulations it is laid down; they asserted that the stages should stop, as they drove into the valley, in rotation, and stop long enough to give persons a chance to decide what hotel they would stop at; but there was no attention paid to it at all. The stage drivers told the passengers that there was a bridge broken down, in some instances, and there was a big tree across the road in the other; but when the stages left the valley there was no bridge broken down nor no tree across, but it was only coming in that these things happened.

Q. Whose stages were they? A. Washburn's; and the other stages the same way; the other stages, though, done it later in the season.

Q. Do you consider your business was injured by the fact of their driving stages across the river away from you? A. It was only for a short time.

Q. About how long a time? A. Oh, probably two weeks or so. I didn't consider that my business was injured, however, as bad as the stage company's business. They were in the wrong, and of course, tourists complained about being driven out of the way two miles, and they quit it of their own free accord and will.

MR. TULLOCH: When do you say you built the hotel? A. Well, I built the hotel that I occupied latterly, in 1869 and 1870. I first occupied it in 1870.

Q. Did you build it yourself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you evicted? A. Well, I was not evicted.

Q. When were you boycotted? A. Well, that was in—I guess it was 1886, or it might have been 1887.

Q. Did you receive any consideration for that hotel? A. No, sir; never got a quarter of a dollar, and it never cost the State a quarter of a dollar.

Q. You were then in a manner compelled to leave, were you, by the reason of commercial losses? A. No. I won't say I was compelled to leave. I sold out the business and furniture. I sold it to Cook and Barnard for a consideration, and signed an agreement with them that I would not do business in the Yosemite Valley for ten years.

Q. But before you sold hadn't your business been injured to such an extent that you didn't desire to remain longer? A. Well, I didn't desire to remain longer unless I could get a five years lease so I could put some more improvements; some cottages or something.

Q. Did you make application for a lease? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it denied you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a time when your house was broken open, when you left parties to attend to it, in charge of it, when it was broken open? A. The Guardian, Mr. McCord, broke it open with a crowbar.

Q. Under what conditions? A. Well, he had orders, as I understand, from the executive committee of the Commission to manage the Yosemite Valley, to take possession of the house. The house was all locked and barred up. I left my two boys there in charge. One was twenty years of age and the other is fourteen.

Q. At that time had you turned over the house to those parties or not? A. To the Commissioners?

Q. Yes? A. No.

Q. You had not? A. No, sir; they didn't ask me for possession of the premises at all.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did you ever ask them to give you any compensation for the property? A. Well, I made a statement to them that they should do it, and some of them said yes; I ought to have it. I never put in a writing; it was merely verbal, and never at their meeting; it was only talking to one or the other of them. I never did it in meeting to them.

MR. CRAWFORD: Was it understood that the buildings being put up there by you and other parties were after a time to come under the control of the Commissioners of the valley? A. Well, it was so stated with other buildings, but in this building I think it was entirely different, because the Commissioners invited me to put it up; I didn't go and ask permission of them at all, they invited me to put the building up, after having leased the Black premises to me; there never was any statement made.

Q. With the understanding it was to be your private property? A. No; there was no understanding about it; they gave me leave to put up the premises with a rental of $120 a year to be paid for by improvements; that was the wording of it.

Q. In other words, you were to put up the improvements? A. I was to put up the improvements.

Q. And to give those improvements at the rate of $125 a month? A. $120 a year; that was the understanding, and the lease read so.

Q. How many years did you say you did business there? A. In Yosemite Valley?

Q. Yes? A. Twenty-two years.

Q. In that building? A. Not in that building.

Q. That building that was torn down? A. Eighteen years in that building.

Q. What was the value of that building? A. Well, of course the lumber was all whip-sawed, if anybody knows what whip-sawing is, it is pretty expensive work; and things were very high. There was nothing but a trail into the valley. My nails cost me, in Mariposa, 10 cents a pound, and 5 cents a pound to have them carried into the Yosemite; and everything else in proportion; so that I suppose that the actual value of the large house cost me between $5,000 and $6,000. Then, afterwards, I built, I don't know how many cottages around there. And of course lumber is cheaper; after I could get lumber from a sawmill, it didn't cost me one tenth part as much as it did to whip-saw the lumber for the main house. The house was the best constructed house that there was in the Yosemite Valley, except the Stoneman House.

Q. Did you ever have any settlement in relation to the buildings you had put up, and the rent? A. No, sir.

Q. There never was anything said about it after you began building there? A. No, sir; I paid rent for the past two seasons that I did business there. The Commissioners did a lot of improvements there, but I paid for them. They put new porches down; new flooring on the porches; and I paid for it, and Senator Goucher has the receipt to-day, to show that I did pay for it.

MR. GARDNER: Did you ever make any demand on the Commissioners for a settlement? A. No, sir.

MR. CRAWFORD: You were satisfied, and I suppose they were too, during the time? A. Well, I was satisfied as long as the Commissioners didn't bother me for rent. This present Board of Commissioners contended that I didn't pay any rent for eight years. Well, I was content when they didn't ask me for it, and it seems that they were content not to ask me until the last two years.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you feel very contented about the time that they refused you a lease of the premises? A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Didn't you think they had acted unjustly by you in the matter? A. Well, I thought they were not acting justly.

Q. Then you did not feel very contented about it? A. No; they gave one party a lease. They had it in their laws that they would only give permits for one year, but they gave another party a permit or a lease for five years, and I considered that if one party had the right to that, others have.

MR. CRAWFORD: You couldn't afford to go on and make improvements for a one year's lease? A. For a one year's lease, or a permit, rather. I had made all the improvements that ever were made.

THE CHAIRMAN: What was the name of the party that received the five years' lease at the time they refused you? A. That got the lease?

Q. Yes? A. Coffman & Kenney.

Q. For a hotel? A. No, sir; for a livery business.

MR. CRAWFORD: Did they pay the same rent that you pay or a higher rent? A. Theirs was an entirely different business. Mine was a hotel business, and theirs was a livery business.

Q. They had no connection? A. No, sir. They had it in their laws that as the leases expired they would only give permits from year to year. Coffman & Kenney's lease, I believe, had expired, but they turned around and gave them a lease for five years and ignored every person else.

MR. TULLOCH: Then you practically lost many years of your service and work there? A. Sir?

Q. That amounted to practically losing your many years service and life of work in the valley? A. Yes, sir; of course it is natural that when they destroyed the property that they took my home. Of course, I went down to Los Angeles with the expectation of probably bettering myself in different respects. I thought it was a duty I owed to my family that I should take my children out, because there was some of them that never had been out of the valley; some of them had been as far as Mariposa; and I considered that if I didn't like it down in Los Angeles, that I still had a house, a home to go to, and that I might have gone back to the Yosemite Valley. I didn't consider that myself or wife ever had committed any crime that we would ever have to leave there anyway, if we couldn't do business.

MR. GARDNER: Did the hotel business pay pretty well? A. It did at times. Of course the hotel business—a great many people have an idea that the hotel business in the Yosemite Valley is a big, fat business. but it is not as big as people imagine, because you only do business about half the year; well, it is not half the year that you do business.

Q. You didn't entirely lose your time, and waste your life altogether? A. No.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know anything about misapplying public moneys and appropriations? A. I do not.

Q. Anything about the destruction of public and private property in Yosemite Valley? A. Well, that is the only thing I know of, that they destroyed my premises there.

Q. You have no knowledge of any other destruction? A. No, sir.

Q. You do know they destroyed yours? A. Well, I don't know. I was not present. What I know of my boy told me what they did.

Q. "Unnecessary destruction of timber in the valley?" A. Well, I think there has been a few trees cut there that should not have been cut. I think there is a great deal more that ought to be cut really, in the way of small pine trees.

Q. "Clearing and plowing of valley meadow land?" A. Well, I couldn't tell you. There has been a heap of plowing done I believe since I have come out. I don't know it to be a fact, only what I have heard.

MR. CRAWFORD: How long since you left the valley? A. Last April.

MR. TULLOCH: Was there much plowing and clearing of land before you came out? A. Well, there was the Harris ranch and about twenty acres that was rented in connection with the Stoneman House, that was plowed, and there was a great deal under fence that was not plowed; not at that time.

MR. CRAWFORD: Used for pasture, I suppose? A. Yes, sir; of course I have never measured it; I suppose there was probably five hundred acres under fence used for pasture and farming purposes. There may be more or less, but I would judge about five hundred acres.

Q. What kind of a fence is it fenced with? A. Principally barbed wire.

Q. Are there gates in those fences, so that people can go around over the valley at their pleasure? A. There are no gates that I know of where the barbed wire fences are at all. The barbed wire fences are principally along the road where they have their driveway.

Q. On both sides? A. Yes, sir; I don't know of any other place; at least, not when I left the Yosemite Valley, that there was a barbed wire fence on each side of the road, because the roads are so constructed that they are constructed on the high ground; that they didn't interfere with the meadow lands at all. I don't know of an instance where there was a barbed wire fence, or above the upper and lower side of the road, as you may term it.

Q. There is a portion of the valley that is not fenced and set apart for campers, isn't there? A. I don't know. They were talking about setting a place apart, where my premises were, this summer. Whether they did it or not I never made any inquiry.

Q. Were there no places of the kind when you were there? A. There used to be a place up at Harris' ranch.

Q. A place that was set apart for campers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know whether that is open to campers yet or not? A. I do not.

MR. TULLOCH: How long ago did they set that place apart? A. For campers?

Q. Yes, sir? A. They set it apart ten or twelve years ago.

Q. How large was the spot? A. Well, I should suppose there was fifty acres.

Q. Do you know whether or not it is used for the same purpose to-day? A. I don't know.

Q. Is it or is it not under fence? A. Well, it was not under fence then. It may be now; I couldn't say. If I understand it right, I think that Coffman & Kenney have barns or something built there. I don't know. They have built two bridges since I left the valley, but where I don't know exactly.

Q. "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley?" A. Well, I think if there was no fences at all in the Yosemite Valley that the public would have better use of it.

MR. CRAWFORD: These fences were an obstruction to tourists, were they not, in going around over the valley? A. Well, they certainly are; because people, ladies especially, cannot climb a barbed wire fence. If they want to go from one point to another it makes it very inconvenient for them.

Q. Do these roads you speak of run around the edges of the valley, or through the meadows? A. They run around the edges principally; yes, sir.

Q. Then the fencing is in the center of the valley, as you may say? A. Mostly.

Q. And roads on each side? A. On each side, close to the bluff.

Q. It is not likely that a sightseer would want to go out into those meadows, is it? A. Before these wire fences were put up, I know that parties, especially when the river became so that people could ford it—you could go from one point to another in half the distance that it takes you to go now; it was much more convenient. You take it there in the middle of July, you can ford the river in almost any place; for instance, a party wanted to go across to Yosemite Fall, they could do it in half or three quarters of a mile; now it would take a mile and a half or two miles.

MR. TULLOCH: Well, you don't think then, as a matter of sound policy, do you, or do you not—you don't think it was a matter of sound policy to inclose the land? A. Well, no; I don't think it was good policy; not so much of it. I think that the saddle train and carriage company ought to have a pasture to turn horses in, if they are unwell or unfit to work; if a horse gets a sore back or something or another, I think it is a very good idea that they should have a place.

Q. "Holding annual meetings with closed doors, in violation of State law." A. Well, I have not attended but very few of their meetings in Yosemite Valley: when I did attend one, I never saw any doors closed.

Q. Do you know of any being closed? A. Well, I have heard so, but I couldn't make the statement, so far as my own personal knowledge goes.

Q. "Violation of State law regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley." A. Well, they say that Coffman & Kenney have an exclusive right in the saddle train and carriage business; whether they have or not, I don't know. Mr. Clark has the privilege of running a carriage, and had the privilege of running saddle horses; he has utilized one but never has the other.

Q. How long ago is that? A. That has been three years ago.

Q. Do you know of any such privilege existing now? A. Well, Clark has the same privilege yet, to run a carriage or two carriages, if he wants to.

Q. Has he any means of doing so if he chose? A. No, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does he pay anything to the Commissioners for that privilege? A. He pays $50.

Q. A year? A. Yes, sir; to run one two-horse carriage; that is all he runs.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know of any other parties who would like to get like privileges there, if they had the opportunity? A. Well, I have heard a great many people say they had made application to run a saddle train. Mr. Stegeman, I believe, wanted to run a saddle train; he was in the saddle train business once, and they bought him out, and I believe he made application again but was refused. I am only giving you that as a statement that is hearsay; not that I know positively.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." A. Well, I don't know nothing about this only what I saw in the papers, that the Harris ranch was leased to Coffman & Kenney for $500 or $550, and now at the present time they are paying $250; whether that was correct or not, I couldn't say.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge? A. No, sir.

Q. Outside of that do you know of any reduction of rentals? A. No. Well, I know that Barnard's rent was reduced some years ago, from $1,000 to $750 a year.

Q. When was that? A. I can't tell you exactly how many years ago; it was seven or eight years ago.

Q. Do you know why it was reduced? A. Well, I couldn't say, only Mr. Barnard complained that he was paying too much rent for the business that he did in Yosemite.

Q. Has his business increased or decreased since then? A. Well, I think the business has increased.

Q. But still there was a reduction? A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts." A. That is, the Commissioners?

Q. Yes? A. That I couldn't answer.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House, and illegally leasing the same." A. That I don't know anything about.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, I have been told that since I went out of the valley—and Mr. Harris going out previous to my going—that it has broken up the school in the Yosemite Valley, because there are not children enough there to support a school—a public school.

MR. CRAWFORD: That was not the fault of the Commissioners, was it?
A. No.

MR. GARDNER: Isn't the school still going on, and has been right along?
A. The school-marm didn't teach her term out, quite, and I saw her a short time ago in Los Angeles; and she told me they would not have a school there at all, because there was not the required number of children to establish a public school.

MR. TULLOCH: Then your going away, your children going away, and Harris', had something to do with the stopping of the school? A. Well, we would naturally suppose so.

Q. No other children there? A. Mr. Kenney has six children and Barnard has two; I don't know how many of Kenney's are old enough to go to school: probably three or four.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant." A. Well, the trails and roads, while I lived there, were kept in ordinary good repair.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." A. That I know nothing about.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States?" A. Well, I couldn't define that to you. I couldn't define to you what the duties of the Yosemite Commission are.

Q. In your judgment have they faithfully discharged their duty towards the public? A. As far as I know they have.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did you ever hear any complaints from any tourists against the Commissioners? A. I never did.

MR. TULLOCH: You have heard no complaints about their granting exclusive privileges? A. From the tourists?

Q. Yes? A. There never was any complaint made to me.

I. CHOYNSKI.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows: •

THE CHAIRMAN: Where is your place of residence? Answer—San Francisco.

Q. You have been a resident of Yosemite Valley? A. No, sir.

Q. Never have been? A. No; never have been a resident of Yosemite Valley.

Q. State to the committee, as concisely as you can, what you know of the circumstances concerning the leasing of the Stoneman House in the valley? A. I inquired of Commissioners Griffith and Madden, in the early part of June, 1887, the conditions upon which the Stoneman House could be leased when finished. They told me that it would be advertised in due time in the newspapers. I scanned the newspapers from that time on until within a day or two, when the time was set that the Commissioners should meet; then I happened to discover an advertisement in the "Bulletin," the only paper in which it appeared. I made my application in conformity with the advertisement. The Commissioners were to decide upon leasing the hotel the following morning. When the bidders called, we were requested to withdraw our bids, and other specifications were submitted to us upon which we were to make new bids. The specifications contained conditions which were not advertised: some conditions that but one bidder had asked for, that none of the others had asked or mentioned: and it enjoined the bidders from asking any restriction regarding the stages, or any compulsion of the stages stopping at the new hotel. The Commissioners desired the bidders explicitly to understand that they would not interfere with the stages; they could stop at the hotel or not; that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction over the stages. They reduced the rent from the amounts that we had bid down to the lowest amount; they reduced it to the amount of the lowest bidder. I had offered $3,000 more than the lowest bidder for the rent of the hotel alone, exclusive of the additional pay for privileges, which we were not asked to bid on according to the advertisement; other bidders had offered more than I did; Tyack had offered more, and Judge Grant had offered more than Tyack. The conditions contained in the second specifications included privileges for the sale of milk, butter, eggs, and merchandise, which was equal to keeping a store in conjunction with the hotel. This was a clause that but one bidder had asked—one condition—and the entire specification appeared to any of the bidders as though it had been dictated by the one bidder. Every condition asked by the one was included therein, and conditions asked by others were particularly excluded.

Q. Will you state the name of that bidder? A. Mr. Cook. The specifications appeared as though they were intended for Mr. Cook only and for no one else.

MR. CRAWFORD: He got the hotel? A. Indeed he did; and the conditions referring to the stables were such that only Mr. Cook could get the hotel, and that no one else could keep it. It was evident that if Mr. Cook would take the Stoneman House Cook's hotel would be closed, and the stages would run to the Stoneman House; while if any one else was to obtain it, it was a sort of caution by the Commissioners to let the bidders know that they couldn't very well keep that hotel. If any one else should be the successful bidder, and the lease would be awarded to him, he would take his chances of not having that stage come near his hotel, and allow tourists to grope their way over a rocky road, or a mile and a half or two miles to the new hotel.

Q. Was Cook the proprietor of the stages also? A. Certainly, Cook asked me to buy him off after the first bids were opened. Mine appeared to be the most favorable one for the State.

THE CHAIRMAN: Had Cook a license or privilege to keep a hotel in the valley at this time? A. Oh, yes, he did.

Q. Was anything said by the Commissioners by which you inferred that they would give that privilege if you got the Stoneman House? A. His lease had not expired. The Commissioners asked me particularly—Commissioner Mills asked me whether I expected the Commissioners to close up the other hotels if I obtained the lease. I told him that I didn't know that they had the power, and if they did, I didn't expect them to do anything of the kind; that I would take care of my own business. The Commissioners asked me concerning my financial ability. I told them that I would spend as high as $50,000 in fitting up that hotel and making necessary improvements; and I have given them, upon their inquiring, ample proof that I had the financial ability. Senator Goucher told the Commissioners, at the time, that he was reliably informed from the best authority that the money was at my command, and Senator Mills corroborated his statement, that he had the same information; but when the second specifications were submitted to us, I came to the conclusion that it was very risky business for any one to invest his money under those conditions.

Q. You and the other bidders were given to understand that if you got the hotel stages would not run to it? A. We were given to understand distinctly that the Commissioners would not control the stages; we were told so in plain language, and repeatedly.

Q. Leaving it optional with them whether they would run to your house or not? A. That is exactly the idea; that the Commissioners couldn't control the stages. Mr. Cook told me that he would not run the stages to the Stoneman House unless he got the hotel, or unless I would buy him out, and I told him that the Commissioners were able to control the stages within the valley; and he said on a previous occasion that an order had been issued to him and that he disregarded it.

Q. An order about running his stages? A. About running his stages.

Q. You spoke of Cook's wanting you to buy him out? A. Yes, sir; he wanted me to buy him off; he wanted me to give him $6,000; from that time when he spoke to me—it was late in the afternoon—up until the following morning at nine o'clock; between those hours.

Q. That was after you got the contract? A. No; that was when the first bid was opened.

Q. To buy out his hotel, or his stage, or what were you buying? A. Buying the contents of his house, no matter what they were worth; he wouldn't even make his statement or give me an inventory of the value of the contents.

Q. Of his hotel? A. Of his hotel. I told him it was valueless to me; but he said he would guarantee that he would abstain from doing business in the valley thereafter, and that the stages should run to the Stoneman House. I told him then that I was willing to give him $6,000, but I wanted the same guarantee from his partners in the stage company, so that I should not be assessed for a similar amount at any time thereafter by the other shareholders of the stage company.

Q. Was he willing to give you that guarantee? A. He said he couldn't do that, because he couldn't reach his parties; he could only do that for himself.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke about the conditions being different in Cook's bid from those in your own and other parties' bids, and you spoke something about the conditions possibly being only known to Mr. Cook and to the Commissioners, you gentlemen having no knowledge of them. What makes you think that there was a knowledge between the two parties? A. In the original bid, the first bid that we put in, I made the bid in accordance with the advertisement by the Commissioners, offering $15,000 for the rent of the hotel, and agreeing to pay for the use of the meadow land which was mentioned in the advertisement, which the advertisement read, at whatever the Commissioners would charge. I didn't ask anything about compelling the stages to run to the Stoneman House. I didn't mention that. I didn't ask for the privilege of selling merchandise, milk, butter, eggs, bread, or anything else. I was asked whether I would improve the grounds at my own expense, and keep them in good condition; and I told the Commissioners that was matter of fact; it was to my own interest. I was asked whether I would put in gas works at my own expense, and I told them that would be one of the first things that I would have to do; I told them even that if there was no range provided, I would build one, or if the one that the Commissioners had provided didn't suit me, I would build one at my own expense; that I would build a bake oven, no matter what the expense would be. And, under those circumstances, the Commissioners couldn't very well award the lease of the hotel to any one else, except to me, without stultifying themselves, or showing their hand openly, that they were in collusion, or show a preference to one as against the other.

Q. Then the conditions of the lease to Mr. Cook were not as favorable as the proposition embodied in your own? A. His conditions, no; he offered less, and he asked certain privileges.

Q. Your own proposition would have been largely in favor of the State?

A. Most assuredly, and for that reason we were asked to withdraw our proposals.

Q. How much higher was your bid, monetarily, than Cook's? A. Upon the rent alone, about $3,000, exclusive of all the privileges.

Q. And beside that, what you proposed to do, your conditions, and so forth, were still more favorable, were they, than the other conditions? A. There was no bid asked upon that; not on the first bid. Subsequently, we were asked not to bid upon the rent, simply upon the privileges; but the lease was for ten years; the rental was for ten years and the privileges but for one.

Q. You spoke about Mr. Cook having a lease at the time, did you not?

A. Yes, sir; he had a lease of the house.

Q. How long was that lease to run? A. That I don't know.

Q. Don't know how near it was up? A. No; that I don't know.

Q. Do you know anything about Leidig's hotel; about him not getting a lease? A. Only from what Leidig told me. At the time the Commissioners met; they held three meetings at that time; three consecutive days. That was in August, 1887.

Q. You don't know why the lease was denied to him and given to Cook, do you? A. Only from what I surmise, that Mr. Cook was the favored one.

Q. You don't know why a lease was denied unto Harris, and yet given unto Cook? A. Probably for the same reason that the lease was given to him for the Stoneman House in preference to any one else.

Q. Were there any evidences of collusion in the matter? A. Most assuredly; unmistakable evidences; and the evidence was apparent in the second specification, where every condition that Mr. Cook had asked for in his original bid was mentioned.

Q. Then those favors and partialities, in your mind, were discriminations, were they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations?" A. Well, I believe in making improvements upon the Stoneman House which I had agreed to make at my own expense. I was asked particularly whether I would make those improvements at my own expense, and I agreed to do so.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those improvements were made by the State afterwards, by the Commissioners? A. I understand that the State is employing laborers now in improving the grounds of the Stoneman House, and I was asked whether I would do that at my expense, and I agreed to do so.

MR. GARDNER: Do you know these things of your own knowledge? Have you been there? A. No; I have not been there.

Q. You have just heard it? A. I come in contact with tourists and residents of the valley. I have kept a hotel for a number of years in San Francisco, and I have seen a great many tourists; have had people that were employed by me employed in the hotel in Yosemite Valley; originally in Cook's hotel, and subsequently in the Stoneman House; not in the same capacity. A man who occupied the position of fourth cook, or pastry cook, in my house, was chief cook up there.

Q. It is all hearsay to you? A. Yes, sir. If you elicit the fact from other witnesses that people are being employed at the expense of the State upon work which I have agreed to perform at my expense, then you will be satisfied that there is a misappropriation.

MR. TULLOCH: "The destruction of public and private property in the Yosemite Valley?" A. No, sir; I know nothing about that.

Q. "Unnecessary destruction of timber?" A. Nothing.

Q. "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land?" A. No.

Q. "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley?"

A. No.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors?" A. One part of the meeting, when they considered to whom to award the hotel, we were excluded.

Q. Who were excluded? A. All outsiders; all the bidders.

Q. Was Mr. Cook excluded? A. Mr. Cook was excluded.

Q. Do you know of any other occasions of exclusion of parties? A. Not of my own knowledge. I only attended those three meetings.

THE CHAIRMAN: These parties were excluded from that meeting while the bids were being considered? A. While the bids were being considered.

Q. While the bids were being opened? A. While the bids were being opened.

MR. TULLOCH: Were they admitted subsequently? A. Subsequently, in order to hear the verdict.

Q. "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges?" A. I couldn't tell you anything about that.

Q. Do you know whether any exclusive privileges were granted; whether they were in violation of the laws? A. I don't know.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. In that one instance that I had offered so much more money. I was asked whether I would give sufficient bonds for the performance of my contracts, and I was prepared with the best bonds obtainable in San Francisco.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. Well, they went back on their original advertisement; went back on their conditions.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House, and illegally leasing the same?" A. Well, I don't know that the public ever was made aware of its acceptance, or when the lease was made out, or whether it ever was legally leased.

Q. What is your judgment in the matter? A. My judgment of the leasing of the hotel?

Q. Yes? A. That was a matter made up between the lessor and lessee; that they accepted it at their leisure, and whether the lease was executed is a matter of doubt. I don't know that.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley." A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails." A. No.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." A. Possibly that may be, around the Stoneman House.

Q. Did you know that in the case of the Stoneman House? A. No; only from what I have learned since this investigation was commenced.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." A. Well, that is a general complaint by the tourists, that it is improperly managed, and that it is detrimental to the best interests of the State, and depriving the people of the State of a very large annual revenue; that instead of facilitating travel and affording people ample accommodation, at least adequate to the present charge, the charges are extortionate and they repel tourists, and it deprives the people of this State of an annual income of no less than $1,000,000 by which the people would be richer if the Yosemite Valley was properly managed.

MR. GARDNER: That is your opinion? A. That is the general opinion of people that have traveled there. I entertain annually no less than from one to three hundred people that have visited the valley, from all parts of the world.

MR. TULLOCH: You have talked with them? A. Talked with them! Grievances have been laid before the Governor himself, and he promised to investigate them.

Q. You then think that if it was properly managed that a much larger revenue would accrue to the State, for one thing, and you think greater satisfaction would be given to the public? A. Most assuredly.

Q. Do you know anything about the charges of the Stoneman House? A. $4 a day is the minimum; all extras are paid for extra.

Q. You would have charged that much should you have got the place? A. That is the rate fixed by the Commissioners. People don't complain about the charges, but they complain about the fare—that it is not worth what they charge.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any other circumstances not contained in these questions, that you know of, about the management of the valley by the Commission? A. People traveling in their own conveyances being charged exorbitant rates for toll; being deprived of comfort when they get there; campers finding a lack of accommodations; they are hampered in every way. And if the valley was properly managed the traffic to this State, on account of the valley, would treble; and every tourist, the calculation is, leaves in the State among the people from $200 to $300.

MR. TULLOCH: If one or two more hotels in addition to what is there could prosper, if they were there and had a low rent to pay, one good hotel in that valley, kept by a competent hotel man, could prosper and make a good deal of money, and it would be a benefit to the State? If in the same degree as the people of Mariposa County have voted $75,000 to build a road to the valley, independent of this so called ring road—or the robbers' road, as the tourists call it—if a hotel were built by similar enterprise, by public spirited citizens or by the State, the value of the valley would enhance to the people of the State? A. Very largely.

MR. GARDNER: How long were you in the Yosemite Valley? A. I was not in the Yosemite Valley.

Q. How do you know the campers have not proper accommodations? A. I have been in the hotel business.

Q. Well, I have been in the hotel business, and I don't know it. A. You don't come in contact with the tourists.

Q. I come in contact with a great many of them. A. Of the tourists?

Q. Yes. A. Then they have told you different.

Q. They never told me anything about the campers; the people that go to hotels, don't generally go there to camp. A. Indeed they do. I have had people stop in my house, living there, boarders, that went up camping, not once, but several times.

Q. You don't know any of this of your own knowledge? A. Only from the corroborating evidence of several hundred people.

MR. TULLOCH: Then in your judgment the affairs of the valley have been improperly managed? A. Decidedly so.

Q. And it has therefore worked a detriment to the State's income? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was not an administration of affairs, but a maladministration? A. That is the idea.

JAMES McCLELLAN.

Being asked by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Where is your place of residence? Answer—Up in the Yosemite Grant, in the summer time, and in the winter time about seven miles from the valley below, that is my place of residence in the winter—in the summer time I am in the valley, or in the valley grant.

Q. Are you pretty familiar with the administration of affairs in the valley? A. Pretty well.

Q. Did you ever keep a hotel in the valley? A. Yes, sir; on the valley grant—not right in the valley, but in the valley grant.

Q. Whereabouts was that hotel? A. Well, take this room for instance, in the valley, mine was there about two hundred feet above, in the rim of the valley, on Glacier Point.

Q. Well, will you state to the committee now, all the circumstances, as near as you can, in regard to the attempt of the men to get you out of the valley—as it is called—of you call it a trap? A. They never tried to get me out of the valley.

Q. About trying to get you out of the valley? A. No.

Q. State any circumstances connected with your hotel that come to your mind? A. About my hotel?

Q. Yes? A. Well, I went into the valley there in 1871, and I built a crude path from the valley and opened up that point of interest, where a person could visit it in half a day going and coming, if necessary. I collected toll on it for seven years, and the State bought me out some five years ago, five or six years ago.

Q. That was the Glacier Peak trail? A. The Glacier Peak trail.

Q. The Commissioners bought out your trail? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they buy your hotel? A. No.

Q. You keep the hotel still? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did you consider the compensation they gave you for the trail sufficient? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were well satisfied with it? A. Yes, sir; I had to be, according to my terms of lease.

Q. No fault to find with the Commissioners in any respect; you think you were fairly treated? A. Yes, sir; I am treated very well.

Q. No fault to find with them? A. Well, I think it is very wrong for them to allow the valley to be fenced up with rails, and pickets and barbed wire, for the interest of private owners, I don't think that is right.

Q. Do you think that is a detriment to the public? A. I do. I think it is a great detriment to the travelling public, the public at large, as regards access, I have no personal animosity against the Commissioners, or no aim to grind any more than I think it is wrong for them to allow that valley to be fenced up and planned, and restricted for the interest of two or three private individuals.

Q. The word "trap" is mentioned here. What trap does that allude to, what is the nature of that trap? A. Well, it means—I don't know anything about the trap any more than what I have heard since I came to San Francisco. Well, I hear it talked of by the valley about Cook getting the hotel in preference to the gentleman who just went out, the gentleman who was in this seat before I sat down, and Mr. Grant and others offered more than Mr. Cook, and Cook getting the hotel in preference, I think it was very wrong, the Commissioners seem to be satisfied. I believe it would be better for the travelling public if there was free competition with every business there. I also believe a second class hotel for $2 or $2.50.

or $3, would be better; I think it is necessary to have it. I deem it very necessary to have those fences pulled down, for the benefit of the traveling public.

Q. "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." A. I don't know anything of my own personal knowledge about that, only that I heard Mr. Hutchings' testimony that there was a trail by the name of the Anderson trail; that there was $7,000 spent on that by the executive committee, so I am informed.

MR. GARDNER: On the Anderson trail? A. On the Anderson trail.

Q. How much did Anderson get out of it? A. He got whatever he eat; not a quarter of a dollar; he told me himself.

Q. Who got the money? A. The men that worked there; he worked, and got nothing only what he eat; this was his own words.

Q. Well, do you know that it is a fact that they spent that money on that trail? A. I heard Dr. May say so last night in this room.

Q. Dr. May can tell us that himself, without giving it through you, I guess? A. Well, that is the only way that I know it; and also I have read the Commissioners' report, and it was several thousand dollars; I don't remember the number of thousands; that should be authority.

Q. Yes, sir, if they tell us so; but it is not authority coming from them to you and then from you to us? A. No; well, this is the only way that I could know it.

Q. Then you don't know it at all any more than I do? A. Any more than I don't know whether you ever read the Commissioners' report of that year or not; I think somewhere about 1882, I think it was.

Q. We can get that report if it is needed in evidence. A. That is where I got it.

MR. TULLOCH: Did Anderson tell you he had never received any money? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you that? A. He told me that.

Q. Did he tell you how long he had worked, or do you know how long he had worked? A. I don't; only what I heard in the other room.

Q. Do you know how long he had been working when he told you that, or how much work he had completed, or had he got through? A. No, sir; he never did get through; well, he got through work, but he didn't get through with the contract.

Q. When he said he had received no money for the work, how long a time did you think that comprehended; how long did you think he had been working, or do you know? A. I know he told me himself he spent the $1,500 which he took the contract for. He had a contract to build a trail for $1,500.

Q. He received $1,500? A. No; the men got paid; he spent that with hired labor and expenses; that is what he told me himself; then Dr. Briggs, the Secretary of the Board of Commissioners, came up, and asked him: "Well, George, how is it?" "Well," said George, "there is nothing here for me, doctor."

MR. GARDNER: Was you present then? A. This is George's words; Mr. Anderson's own words to me afterwards.

THE CHAIRMAN: "Unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." A. I know that J. M. Hutchings, several years ago—I don't know whether it is in the Yosemite Grant or not—the stage company were running opposition to the saddle train company, running horses into the valley, the passengers with horses, and I know that J. M. Hutchings went out to the mountain and blockaded the trails. I call that destruction.

Q. How did he blockade them? A. Felled trees across it; built fences.

Q. Did he do this of his own volition, or at the instance of the Commissioners? A. I understood, but not positive, that is, of my own knowledge, I understood it was by authority of the Commissioners.

MR. GARDNER: What was the trees laid across the road for? A. To stop Washburn and the stage company from bringing passengers into the valley by the upper end of the valley.

Q. He didn't want them to come that way? A. Didn't want them to come that way.

THE CHAIRMAN: "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land." A. Yes, sir; there is a good deal of the valley cultivated for the benefit of private individuals.

Q. How much land has been cleared and plowed up there? Make an approximate. You need not be exact with regard to it, but make some approximate? A. Well, I suppose there would be three or four hundred acres of land, altogether.

Q. Taking all that is plowed in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that land inclosed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How is it inclosed? A. By a picket fence, rail fence, and barbed wire fence.

Q. Who plows up that land, sir? A. I believe Mr. Harris did. I think Mr. Cook plowed some of it—I am not positive of that—and the State plowed some.

Q. Do Kenney & Co. plow any of it? A. Yes, sir; Kenney & Coffman.

Q. What do they sow there, grain or grass? A. Grain.

Q. Kenney & Co., I understand, are the lessees of that land? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They hold a lease? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next question here is: "Debarring the public from joint and legal use of the valley?" A. Well, that is on account of so many fences being on it.

Q. Do you think those fences operate as a barrier to the free access to the valley of persons and tourists, and persons coming to visit it? A. Yes, sir; I think it is really an imposition on the traveling public.

Q. You think it is a serious inconvenience to the public? A. I do, most decidedly.

Q. What is the character of those fences, are some of them wire? A. Yes, sir; wire, some of them.

Q. Are there any means of access or getting through those fences to the interior? A. I don't know of one gate; that is, I have never seen one gate through those barbed wire fences, unless going into Barnard's garden or field.

Q. Are there not some turnstiles there, in front of some of those bridges or passages? A. Yes, sir; there is some of them on the walk.

Q. How many of those are there, sir? A. I think it is two.

Q. That is all there is in all that amount of land that is fenced up? A. I think there is several other places going into Barnard's place; and there is another one going into the State pasture.

Q. You think that those fences are really an injury to the valley? A. I do, sir—to the traveling public.

Q. Looking at it from the standpoint of the fact that tourists when they come there want to go over the valley, and don't want to be disturbed? A. Most decidedly so.

Q. You think it is a serious injury to the valley? A. I do.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State law." Do you know of the Commissioners there ever having held their annual meeting with closed doors? A. The first time that they had a meeting there, after Governor Stoneman was Governor, I heard Mr. Mills telling the Governor that they examined—took information, or something like that—and then held executive sessions.

Q. You know that of your own knowledge, or is it simply hearsay? A. Well, I know it of my own knowledge that they had the doors closed that meeting.

Q. You know that they did, on one occasion at least, hold a meeting with closed doors? A. But not since, that I am aware of.

Q. But on one occasion they did? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was several years ago, or lately? A. That was several years ago.

Q. Who was Governor then? A. Stoneman.

Q. "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley." Do you know of any exclusive privileges being granted to any persons to do business there? A. I don't know what you call it, whether an exclusive privilege or otherwise. I know that a man went in the valley with his own private carriage, and, I believe, stopped at Cook's, before the Stoneman House was built, and took a little walk up the valley, and found some acquaintances at Barnard's, and asked them to take a drive out to Mirror Lake; and the Guardian came out the next morning and forbid them to go with that carriage. Says he: "Here is a party that pays for the privilege of carrying you around."

Q. Who was that Guardian? A. J. M. Hutchings. This was a man by the name of Hutchings, in San Francisco.

Q. He told him that he had no right to drive his carriage? A. Had no right. And this man got up to the head of his dignity, and says: "You get in, ladies, and I will stand the consequences." And Hutchings run over the bridge. I didn't see this personally, but I know it to be true; I can bring witnesses to prove it.

Q. Do you know of the granting of any privileges in the shape of leases or anything, the natural result of which is to operate to exclude other people from the free use of the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For any purposes? A. Yes, sir; Coffman & Kenney have got, I believe, the exclusive right, with the exception of one man, the privilege of running a two-horse vehicle there, and driving it himself.

Q. Others are not allowed? A. Others are not allowed.

Q. How do you know that others are not allowed, outside of this example that you gave us with regard to Hutchings? Is it general notoriety that others are not allowed to go in there? A. It is the general notoriety that no person is allowed to run in there, only this party.

Q. They are the parties who do all that business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the fact that they have that privilege granted them operates to keep other people out, or not? A. Oh, it keeps other people out without a doubt.

Q. Then you consider the right they have there—you consider that to be an exclusive privilege; that the effect of it is an exclusive privilege? A. I do, to the best of my knowledge. Mr. Goucher, I told him, before he ever sat on the Board of Commissioners, after he was appointed—I told him that I hoped that he would see and break up this monopoly, this exclusive rights in the valley.

Q. You told Mr. Goucher? A. Yes, sir; says I: "Mr. Goucher, I thought there was an Act passed to prohibit any exclusive rights?" This was in Mariposa; and he says: "Yes, there was; but," says he, "the Commissioners ignore that by giving the right to one person and depriving others of it."

“They get around the law that way?” I says; he says, “Yes.” That was about what it was.

Q. Was Mr. Goucher a Commissioner at that time? A. He was appointed, but had not acted.

Q. He had not become an acting Commissioner? A. No.

Q. “Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State’s income.” Do you know anything about that? A. Not to my own knowledge.

Q. “Failure to recognize their own contracts.” That is, where they have contracted to do certain things with certain parties and have failed, and refused to comply with their obligation; repudiated their own obligation; do you know anything of that kind? A. No.

Q. Do you know of their hiring or contracting with any parties to do work there, and subsequently refusing to pay them for it? A. No, sir.

Q. “Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House and illegally leasing the same.” A. Not of my own knowledge; only what I hear from evidence given in this case.

Q. From what you have heard in this case? A. By that gentleman, there (referring to Mr. Choynski).

Q. Unless it was by common notoriety or common repute there, so that you would know it? A: It is common repute; it is commonly talked of that this man offered more than the lessee of the Stoneman House. It is commonly talked of.

Q. That he did what? A. That the Commissioners leased the Stoneman House for less money than this gentleman has offered.

Q. Less money than others would have offered for the same privilege? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a matter of common talk—common notoriety? A. Common notoriety.

Q. You don’t know anything about the facts of the case? A. Oh, not the least.

Q. “Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley.” A. I don’t know anything about that.

Q. “Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant.” A. Yes, sir; I know personally about the Glacier Point trail being kept in very poor order, being really dangerous; but the roads I don’t know, nor the other trails, only from hearsay.

Q. You know that the trail to Glacier Point has at times been out of repair, and really dangerous? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you considered it really dangerous? A. I did.

Q. Do you know whether any efforts were being made about that time to put it in repair? A. It was in very bad repair when the travel stopped last fall.

Q. What was the difficulty in the trail? Was it ditches, and gulches, and chuck-holes? A. Yes, sir; and loose rock, and rocks sticking up; and material, dirt, and sand is hard to be got, and they put poles across, perhaps as thick as my two arms, here and here, a foot or fifteen inches apart. Where it is very steep they put poles on; put big poles here and here, and let the horse go in between them.

Q. You don’t know of any trails or roads being out of repair in the other parts of the valley? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You consider that trail really was dangerous to tourists and visitors driving or passing over it? A. Yes, sir; not driving; it is a mountain trail.

Q. Riding; you could ride over it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the condition of that trail interfere with your business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It kept tourists from getting up to your hotel? A. Well, they start from the Stoneman House, or Barnard's, or campers; they get up there on the top, and talk about the trail being in bad repair, frequently.

Q. Do you think it interfered with your business? A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. Kept the tourists from going up there? A. I don't know whether it keeps any, but it makes them talk about it. I think I would be fully as well off if it was kept in good order.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." That is a very broad question, and would cover anything that you may know of the management there? A. My knowledge is that the Yosemite Valley was given to the State of California in trust for all time, and I don't think it is right for them to lease it to private individuals for the personal interest of private individuals.

Q. You think the fact of their doing that is in violation of the laws and the conditions under which the State got it from Congress? A. That is my opinion of it.

A. HARRIS.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: The first question here is—and I would ask that you answer as directly as you can, because we have a great many witnesses to examine. State the facts that you know, with as few words as you can and give the full meaning. The first charge is: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." Do you know anything about that? Answer—I do, gentlemen.

Q. State what you know, now—give it in as few words as you can? A. When my lease was expired, I had applied for a lease, and I made the most liberal offer as could be made; I made an offer if they gave me a lease for ten years, that I will build a dwelling house at my place—which the old one was no more fit to live in; and I will also build a barn and anything that is necessary on said place. Then I also promised, I shall keep the fences up, which there is needed a new fence almost around the whole entire place; that is, with my own money; and I will pay $1,750 every year, if they give me a ten-year lease for a livery stable; that is, if they give anybody an exclusive right I would like to have it; I will bind myself to keep the very best horses, good saddle horses, and a stable as it is needed in the Yosemite Valley. If a tourist wished to ride a horse an hour, I was to charge him for an hour's ride; if a tourist wished to ride a half a day, I shall charge him for a half a day's ride; if a tourist will ride a whole day, I shall charge him according to what the honorable Board of Commissioners will set the price—whatever they set. And if they shall doubt what I said, I will give the very best kind of security. And the Commissioners know very well that I had the place there, and made a good deal of improvements, and lived with my family there for twelve or thirteen years. They shall give me a chance to do business. Should there not be granted an exclusive ranch, all I ask is that they give me a lease, and I will take the chances of my business the same as the balance. I do believe if the Commissioners would throw open the business for the public, so everybody can do it, it would be a great benefit for the public. The lease was denied; I couldn't have it; then I couldn't say a word. I had a paper, black and white, and I left it the other day in the Senate, and have not got it back. I can show you the paper.

Q. Just state the facts? A. This is one thing; now you can ask me. Then to finish this, gentlemen, at the same time the same business is run by Kenney & Coffman for $1,200. There is no doubt, gentlemen—I couldn't say the estimate of the ground; I have not measured it, but I will come pretty near it. There is nothing less, what Coffman & Kenney keep, from two to three or four hundred acres of ground, the meadow land, the ground for pasturage for their horses, and raising hay and grain. And the way they feed their horses, they run them out at nights, out in the pasture, and in the morning the horse is driven from four to six miles or more in the corral; I don't know if they feed them any or not, but very little feed they get.

Q. That does not matter with us? A. If they feed them, I couldn't tell you.

Q. That was their business? A. Yes, sir; and those horses are saddled for tourists to ride, and I have heard from my knowledge a good many times that tourists have rode the horses, that they couldn't get them back; if any gentlemen doubt it, take and go in there in the summer and I will convince you that I am right. All that brings in to the State is $1,200, which I offered $1,750 to keep an A No. 1 livery stable, so that you or any man that comes in can ride with comfort and come back with comfort, which they have not got at the present time.

Q. That is, you offered them $1,750 for what they subsequently let somebody else have for $1,250? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was for the privilege of running horses, running a saddle train? A. I didn't ask no privilege afterwards; I only wanted to take the chances on my business. They have now an exclusive right for $1,200; there is where it comes in. You can tell the difference between an exclusive right and the public doing business; it is three fourths of the amount of the business.

Q. The fact of the business is, that they let the business to somebody else for $1,200 that you were willing to pay $1,750 for? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they don't do as good service as you offered to do? A. They can't; it is impossible.

Q. What do you know, Mr. Harris, about the destruction of any private and public property there in the valley? State as briefly as you can; tell us what it was—just what you know? A. They have destroyed property in the Yosemite Valley; what they have torn down, and dragged off and burned off; what has injured the State, if you wish to figure it up—you know what it costs. Mr. Leidig would be glad any day to pay $500 for that hotel—glad to get it back; it was a fine building, one of the best hotels that ever has been kept in the Yosemite Valley for a small hotel, so that any poor man could go in and get a good meal for 50 cents—a camper.

Q. What became of that house? A. That house was torn down; that house, I understood myself, I have not seen it—that the Guardian, McCord, broke it open with a crowbar, when his boys was left in charge of that hotel. I heard of that; Mr. Leidig has said that. I know the house was a good house.

Q. You know it was torn down? A. It was well kept, and it was torn down.

MR. GARDNER: Were you there when it was torn down, or did you see it torn down, or know anything about it but what you heard? A. It was last October, in passing, it was torn down; I drove through there.

Q. What did they do with that stuff when they tore it down? A. I couldn't say; I don't know anything what they have done with it.

Q. "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the valley." A. They have. I can show you in the Yosemite Valley, gentlemen, in hundreds and hundreds of little trees of pine, three fourths grown or half grown, has been chopped down, and the stump been left, that size, from two to three feet in height, and it naturally has disfigured the beauty of the Yosemite Valley; not one or a hundred, but thousands of them; the sap of them little trees, the tops has been shaved off—spent a good deal of money from the State—and nailed down to fences. If any of you has been a farmer, you know it is not fit to build a fence; just as soon as the sun strikes it they crook up and drop off, but it has cost money to the State.

Q. They have spent money to cut those trees down? A. And built fences out of it, and it was no good; it was unjustly cut.

Q. You know that of your own knowledge? A. That I know of my own knowledge; and also, they have chopped down a good number of trees, which has injured the valley a good deal in beauty, which they had no right to do.

Q. Have you any idea about how many, whether it was twenty, or forty, or a hundred of those trees? A. It is hard to count; there might be twenty and might be fifty; if I was there I could show you every stump.

Q. What part of the valley were those big trees cut down in? A. Some at the upper portion of the valley and some up towards the Yosemite Falls, and in all directions all around the valley you might say.

Q. Do you consider the cutting of those trees down was an injury to the valley; to its beauty? A. I do. What right have the Commissioners to cut down the trees?

Q. We have nothing to do with their right to do it; we want to know whether they have done it? A. They have done it.

Q. Well, the next is, "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley?" A. Gentlemen, the whole valley, what is fit to go around and see anything, is fenced in with a barbed wire fence. I have taken around tourists there for ten years, in carriages; I can't do it now. I used to show them the views and sketches. You can't go through—if a lady wants to go through she tears her dress. You can't get anywhere except you stumble against a wire fence. It is an injury, and has injured the State a good deal of money through that.

Q. You think it is a serious embarrassment or obstacle? Do you think it is really an embarrassment or an obstacle to tourists enjoying the pleasures of the valley when they come there to see it? A. It is.

Q. It is in the way? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Interferes with their enjoyment of the valley, as in your opinion they ought to enjoy it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State law?" A. Gentlemen, I have been there at the last meeting; whenever I have got there the doors were closed. I have been in their meetings before; but whenever I got there the doors were closed. I didn't state exactly, but every time I came the doors were closed.

Q. Did you attempt to enter? A. Of course I couldn't enter; the doors were closed.

Q. And locked? A. Locked.

Q. Do you know that of your own knowledge? A. That I know of my own knowledge. I was in San Francisco at the meeting about the hotel, and just the same thing; they ordered us out.

THE CHAIRMAN: How many times did that occur? A. I couldn't tell.

Q. More or less? A. It is most of the time.

Q. Do you think it is their custom to hold their meeting with closed doors? A. I don't know if it is their custom or not, but they generally do it. What they want us to hear they give us a smell of it, and what they don't they close the doors, but the most of the time I found the doors closed.

Q. "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley." You have testified in regard to that; you have stated that they do grant exclusive privileges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who do they grant those exclusive privileges to? A. Coffman & Kenney, Washburn & Cook.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." That is, that they have reduced rentals on property there to the injury of the State? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that they have done so? A. Yes, sir; they have had my place when I applied for a lease.

MR. GARDNER: You told us that. A. No. There is another thing; they refused to give me the lease, and they went to work—and I generally have paid for the place $450; I paid $553 at a time and $450 at the other. The $533 was when I had a saddle train; then they took that entirely away and gave it to Barnard. Then I paid $450 for the ranch and orchard. Then that party went to work, and the time they were there Dr. May was in the valley; I said: "Doctor, I don't think I am treated right. I want that place. I have spent so much money. Shall I apply for it?" "You don't need to apply," he says, "you can get the lease as long as you want to, Harris, sure." Mrs. Barnard even heard it, and I naturally thought he meant it. He smiled in my face and I thought he meant it, so I didn't apply for the place at that meeting. Just at the fall meeting I heard something. Kenney & Coffman went to work and put in an application for my place, and I went below and I put an application in for $450. Kenney put in an application for $550, and I had no idea that he would take it away from me at all; and they gave it to Kenney & Coffman. Well, of course I couldn't get it any more.

Q. They gave it to him because he offered $550? A. $550, and I offered $450.

Q. $50 more? A. $100 more. Then I had to sacrifice a good deal of money; I was a good deal loser. You know if a man lives thirteen years on a place and accumulates as much as I did, it don't put him in good shape; but I couldn't help myself; and in June, at the next meeting—they never had the place hardly at all—they went to work and had an A No. 1 crop on the place. They had a good thing; they sold hay for $60 a ton, which has never been done in the Yosemite Valley by Harris; I can prove it. They made an application that they cannot pay that rent, $550; they can't make it. The Board of Commissioners went to work right away and reduced it down to $250—the same place. Then, gentlemen, they went to work for the $250 and built them all them places with the State money at the same rental.

THE CHAIRMAN: Put all these improvements on your place? A. On the place, gentlemen; that has cost a good deal of money.

Q. You say that you lived on that place thirteen years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those improvements were your private property? A. Gentlemen, I improved everything, and they took it away from me. I went to the city, to the next meeting—but we will get to it after awhile.

Q. This memorandum says: "Barn built in 1888; house 64 feet long, 24 feet wide; barn 100 feet long, 24 feet wide; guide house; carriage house." All these have been built? A. Yes, sir.

Q. By these parties? A. By these parties, which they pay only $250 for at the same time; at the same time the campers had a place; I have heard—I couldn't say—that they took that away and gave it to them to pasture their horses, and the campers had to whistle.

Q. They built these houses in addition, and charged them—— A. $250. If it is worth one cent to-day, it is worth $1,000.

Q. For property that you offered them $450 for? A. The old property. There was another thing; I was living in a log house with my family. I have asked the Commissioners—if I have asked them one time, a hundred times: "Gentlemen, I can't let my family grow up—I can't live in this same house any longer; it is impossible." They wouldn't put a nail in. I had to do it. I fixed the house; I fixed the barn; I built the fences; I cultivated the land. If I have spent one dollar, which I can prove, I have spent from $5,000 to $6,000 on the place.

Q. They took those improvements from you and paid you nothing for it? A. Nothing for it.

Q. You never got a dollar? A. Not a single dollar. They say I can't get a dollar. I will show you Dr. May's letter.

MR. TULLY: They refused to pay you anything for your improvements—house or anything else? A. Yes, sir; nothing. They kicked me out of there.

MR. TULLOCH: What was the value of those improvements and things? A. My improvements, you mean?

Q. Everything that you had there? A. I don't believe I could replace it for any less than between $5,000 and $6,000. Clearing up land in the Yosemite Valley costs money, gentlemen, a good deal of money.

MR. TULLY: Did you ever demand payment for these improvements from them? A. I did.

Q. What did they say? A. Couldn't get a dollar; they haven't got no money.

Q. Well, did they intimate that if they had the money they would pay you? A. Well, they say I wouldn't get a dollar; they have no money; and if the committee had it I don't think I could get anything.

Q. You never did get it? A. No; never got it.

MR. GARDNER: Wasn't it understood, or was it not, when you left there, that what improvements you had made belonged to the State? Wasn't that the general rule there? A. I had a lease, gentlemen, for ten years. When I got it there was nothing there. The place was not fenced; there was nothing there. How could I make a living?

Q. Of course, you had to improve the place; but wasn't it understood, and isn't it a rule, that when a tenant leaves, what improvements he has made belong to the State? Isn't that the rule there? A. I don't know their rules; but the old Board, gentlemen, the old Board of Commissioners formerly has said: "Harris, if you go on as you have been doing;" when they see me making improvement, they actually was liking that. Everybody says: "Harris, you have a park here: you have the prettiest place in the mountains." I naturally thought when my lease expired, that the Board of Commissioners would not go and kick my family out of doors and take it away from me, when I was willing to give more. Another thing; if I would not conduct myself, and would be a gambler and loafer, or would be disagreeable at the Yosemite Valley to the people, I wouldn't mind it. There is a book of nine thousand people who have come to my place, and just as good citizens as there is in the State of California, which I have got here, everybody. You show me one who will not say that I was the only man that treated them right. And that was the reason that I was kicked out the valley. I succeeded in treating the public right, and that they don't want.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. Well, gentlemen, not to interrupt you there, when you get to it I wish to ask the question to me why they have kicked me out of the Yosemite Valley? There is a big reason for that.

Q. We will go through with these questions first. Do you know of any instance of their making contracts with anybody, for labor or anything else, and then refusing to pay it? A. Gentlemen, I couldn't tell you facts, only what I have heard.

Q. Of your own knowledge you know nothing about it? A. I don't know nothing about it.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State and illegally leasing the same." That is keeping back from public knowledge? A. Well, gentlemen, I was at the meeting in the City of San Francisco at that time. I was down there at the same time when speaking about the lease business. I can't remember everything, and can't say, but I wish I could. I wish I had everything down. I would like to state it, but I can't state; I have forgotten it entirely; but the way things have been managed there it is a shame and an outrage; that is all I can tell you; that is all I know about it. Whatever that gentleman has stated, I don't believe that he has stated one half of it.

Q. You can't say anything about that of your own knowledge? A. I can't state nothing about that.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley." What do you know about that? A. Gentlemen, I left with my family; Mr. Leidig, too, and we left the valley without any children, because we had quite a number of them. I had nine and Leidig had ten, and so that lets them out with the school business.

Q. Did that break the school up? A. That broke the school up. I don't need to answer you that any more. That settles that question.

Q. Is there any school there now? A. I couldn't tell you. I was in the valley twice last year, but didn't notice about the school.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that that did break the school up? A. That did break the school up, without a doubt.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant." Do you know anything about their neglecting to repair those roads? A. The road, the last year or two I have been in the valley—of course, I drove around a good deal; the roads were always in pretty bad condition. The trails, I couldn't say; very seldom I went up the trails. I couldn't say nothing about the trails.

Q. What was the difficulty in the roads; were they full of chuck-holes? A. They were not kept in good shape, and a good many holes, and dust up to your knees; what was the cause of it I couldn't tell. They didn't put no dirt there, or something.

Q. What time of the year was that? A. That was about July.

Q. In the dry season? A. In the dry season, sometimes, sooner or later. There is one thing, so far as that is concerned: if the State would spend money, they can make a good road, but if they don't they couldn't make a good road, on account that the ground naturally gets very dusty.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." Do you know of their employing any labor or doing any work there at the expense of the State, for the benefit of private individuals? A. I couldn't say that, gentlemen.

Q. You don't know anything about it? A. Don't know anything about it.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed on the State by the United States." That is very broad, you know. It covers their general management there.

A. The management of the Yosemite Valley, so far as I could say, has been very bad for years; for two or three years, or more. You can tell by listening to the public. I don't believe, gentlemen, that everybody that goes to the Yosemite Valley will tell a yarn, and somebody must be right. Everybody what has went there during my time, why didn't they holler that Harris has treated them bad? Why do they holler that the balance of the valley people has robbed them? There must be something there. The public isn't wrong with everything. So it must be managed wrong. You take the wire fences, or anything of that kind. That is bad management.

Q. You wanted to state something awhile ago. What was that that you wanted to state?

MR. GARDNER: Where you were kicked out?

THE CHAIRMAN: Tell the committee those things that you know of your own knowledge. A. In 1878 the party was living at my place what has happened to have bad luck; they failed up; they had bad luck in business, didn't manage it right, and they failed up; they busted up, and they had quite a big bill in the store. I kept a merchandise store. I said to my wife, "I want to be a farmer;" and I applied to the Board of Commissioners if I can get the place, I might get even what the boys owed me; so naturally I done it. I made application for it. The answer came, "If you wish to pay the back rent $800, due by Brightman & Kenney, and to Lemmon's estate, $1,349 and 40 odd cents, you can take the place and get a ten years' lease." I answered him, "Gentlemen, what do you mean by a ten-year lease for the place. If you grant me the privilege to keep a feed yard, so that I can raise something and sell it there, and give me the privilege to keep some saddle horses and carriages, so that I can supply campers and everybody, and treat them right." They said, "Yes." I told my wife—well, I hesitated quite awhile to pay it, so much money as $2,100 and odd dollars; but I made up my mind that I would try it. I gave them a note of $1,300—I have got the note here; I gave them a note of $1,349 and some odd cents, and the $800. I paid rent what the other boys couldn't come up with it. One of them is Kenney here. That is the party what has the ranch now. I took the ranch and improved it. At that time you couldn't see a camper at my place. All I had was a few. In 1878 I went before the Board of Commissioners and told them, "Gentlemen, now here, the campers is knocked around in all directions. They have no chance. Why should not a citizen of this State come in here and have just as good a time as a tourist? I think they have just as good a right as the tourist. If a camper comes to my place, they say, 'That is my place—get away.' If he comes here, he say the same thing. Give them some ground and have somebody to show them and sell them what they need, so they can stay here, and give them a comfortable home." They say, "Will you take it?" "Yes, I am going to move on the ranch with my family, and will do the best I can, if you will lay that upper portion off for the campers, which is the best part of the valley, which is dry most all the time." The Commissioners say, "How do you know you are going to take care of those campers?" I says, "I will tell you what I will do. I will give you a book. You put down on the book whatever you wish to." And the Secretary went to work and took the book and put on, "If you have any complaint to make for any accommodation, you have a right to put it in the public book." And there is the book right here yet. They bind me down. I kept that book from 1878 until I left the valley. I have got nine thousand just as good citizens as there is in this State signed. The book was a public book. I never was home at the time, because I attend to my business. Everybody that comes shall sign their names, judges, lawyers, and senators, and all kinds. The nine years past; my lease was expired.

MR. TULLOCH: Have you got the book with you? A. Yes, sir. Three years ago—it is not quite three years ago—there happened to be something, which I am too soft; I am too good natured; that is the trouble with me.

Q. Tell us what happened? A. Mr. Lundy lived at the Merced River, a gentleman that I was a stranger to him. I stopped there one or two nights; as nice a farmer as I ever could see. He came to the valley; it was the fall of the year; I think it was the last of October. He says, "Harris, I want to see you a minute." He called me out of Leidig's hotel. "What is it, Lundy?" "Will you do me a favor, Mr. Harris?" I says, "If it is in my power, I shall do it." He says, "Now, here, Mr. Harris, the river is so high, the water is so high that I can't get no flour. I have got no flour in my house: Will you lend me a few sacks? I solemnly swear and promise you that I will get you the same brand of flour and just as good flour back." I says, "Why, I don't like to sell flour to you; don't like to have any trouble. Why don't you go up to the store there and buy flour?" The man never answered me. He was an honest man, but I don't think, gentlemen—I couldn't swear to it—I don't think that he had a cent to buy flour. What would you do in a case like that? I says, "Yes, you can have flour, but be sure to give me other flour in place of it." His child was there at Leidig's hotel. He says, "How will I get the flour home, Mr. Harris?" I says, "Mr. Lundy, the water is so bad, I don't know how you will get back." He says, "If you do me a favor, I will pay you for it. You bring my child down to the Cascades, and I will meet you with jacks and I will pay you." And the next day I hitched up my carriage and took my boy in the heaviest rain and snow storm, and took that flour down at the end of the road, right at the Cascades, nine miles from the valley, and he met me and his child, too. He met me there. He packed his flour home. I came home, and in a day or two, as Mr. Dennison was the Guardian, some of his pets—he always had around a lot of pets and work- ingmen—he went to the Guardian and told him that Harris sold flour to Lundy, and he went to work and took the special amount, and sent it down to the Board of Commissioners about the flour business, and they sent for me, and I went down there, and they asked me, and I told them, "Gentlemen, I didn't sell the flour. I gave the flour away almost. If the man gives it back to me, it is all right. He promised to give it back, but I have not received a cent yet, and I took the flour down to him. Is that anything wrong?" From that time I had trouble. It commenced, and I had trouble. The next year—one thing always happened after another—the next year four Judges from San Francisco came up there. They came in at my place in the morning. It was raining. They camped there. It was in the spring of the year. It was raining and snowing, and they came in. The weather was very bad, and I was sitting at my breakfast, and a gentleman stepped in. He said, "Good morning, Mr. Harris." Said I, "Good morning; it is awful cold." I told him to sit down at the stove. He says, "Is your name Harris?" I told him, "Yes." Said he, "Mr. Harris, I have got three more gentlemen out there. Shall I call them in?" I said, "Undoubtedly, if they are cold, let them come in and warm themselves."

And they all sat down and had a talk, and they said, "Harris, here, I would like to ask you something. I see you are just eating breakfast. Couldn't you let us have a breakfast, a warm cup of coffee?" Well, I didn't say nothing. I knew I would put myself in trouble if I did it. My wife spoke up, "Now, here, Harris, we can't let these gentlemen go down in such weather as this. If they are cold, we had better give them something to eat." I said, "You are boss; go and do it, if you want to." I did it, and we had three meals. These Judges ate three meals, and they put me down $1 for three meals; that is 33½ cents, and I made lots of money out of that. And about three weeks after that, or it might be more, gentlemen, Dr. May came to the valley.

MR. TULLOCH: What were the names of those parties, do you know? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they? A. Four Judges. They were here the other day.

Q. Do you know their names? A. Judge Maguire, Judge Hunt, Joachims, and Judge Lawler. In about three weeks—it might be a month after, I couldn't tell which—the honorable Dr. May came to me and shook hands with me. He says: "Harris, I am sorry for you." I says: "What is the matter, doctor?" "You keep a boarding house at your place. I am sorry for you. You will have to lose your place." I said: "Doctor, if I have got to go and leave the Yosemite Valley, the way you started in to me about the flour business and this business, I see it plain that you want my place. I will leave, but I will let nobody go out in such weather as that, and get nothing to eat. Harris will never do it. If it is an Indian, I wouldn't do it." "Well, I am sorry for you." He shook his hand and smiled to me. "You have no right to interfere with the hotel business." So I went away from him. Well, they have been pouring at me, and pouring at me, until they gave me a permit, and take my place away. I got a permit for one year. What could I do for one year? I couldn't improve the place; couldn't do nothing. The next year again I begged them for another permit for another year. I couldn't do nothing then; and the third year they took it entirely away from me. That ends the Harris farm.

MR. TULLOCH: How long did they make the leases to these parties who now have the place? What is the length of their leases? A. They have got the saddle train lease for five years. How much they have on the ranch I couldn't say, and they are the only persons that could get the lease. Every one of them was refused except Kenney & Coffman—well, the hotel—of course, that was entirely different.

MR. TULLY: Is that all, Mr. Harris? A. So far as I know, gentlemen.

MR. TULLOCH: State what you know about the old State pasture or the wrongful use thereof, or anything you know of it? A. There was another thing, gentlemen. The State has fenced in a pasture right on the public road, near the road, near the store. The man who lives in the store can't move around. The pasture is right in front of his door. I don't think it is further from his door than from this door to that library. That is fenced in for the State mules, which they only had two, and the Guardian had a saddle horse. It is quite a fine piece of meadow. I don't know how many acres. I have been there every day and saw it, and a camper coming in there, the pasture they have given was no account, it was not much account, but the campers say, "Here, Harris, I have got no money, what shall I do? I see the Guardian has got a pasture." Let them go to work and put in a horse there. You have just as much right as they have to it. No man dares put in a horse there, except if he turns him loose he has to pay 25 cents. There was lots of horses in there, if you stake him out, 12½ cents.

Q. A day? A. 12½ cents a day, over night. If you stake him out, 12½ cents. He is only the employed man; the employed man had a horse. I don't think the State let him put horses in for nothing. Where has that money gone to? There is another instance, and that pasture is just as much feed—it is right in the finest place, in the heart of the place; the finest place, which ladies have always made a walk around; the finest green place, where ladies have always walked without any trouble; a fine green spot, and that is fenced in for the State mules.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do I understand you to say the State charges 12½ cents a day? A. Over night, to stake their horses, and 25 cents for turning them loose.

MR. TULLY: Who is that money paid to? A. To the Guardian of the valley. Now, there is another instance, gentlemen: Mrs. Glynn's property has been, as you are aware of—she stated here they took away the stable from her. Just as soon as they had the stable away—took the stable from her, they rented it to the Nevada Stage Company. They have rented it out to teamsters, from two bits to four bits a night for a horse. They charge the teamsters for putting in his horses there. Where has that money gone to? By right it ought to belong to Mrs. Glynn. She has paid for that stable, but where the money is paid in it is to the Guardian. You are not aware of everything that goes on in the Yosemite Valley. I wish you were. That is two instances. Here, gentlemen, is another thing: I stated in the Senate Committee, and I have to state it here too—I can show you I am coming here to tell the truth. I didn't come here to fight any Commissioners; didn't come here to make any statement whatever only for the benefit of the public, and the benefit of the State at large, that they shall go there and be treated like white men. Before that hotel had been leased—I couldn't tell which day it was or which month, but it was before the hotel had been leased—my daughter and myself went down to Cook's. She has made fern cards, and she made her living with it. She made her own clothes and living with it. We went down there that night, and she was sitting just as close to Dr. May as that gentleman is sitting to me. I was standing so far out as from this door to this door, and talking to somebody on business, and Dr. May was sitting—Cook was sitting on a long bench, outside, by the porch; and Dr. May came there and sat alongside of her. He asked Cook, "Have you made up your mind?"—he generally talks loud—I could hear it across the street almost—"Mr. Cook, have you made up your mind on what you are going to do with the hotel business? Have you made up your mind to rent the hotel? Are you going to take it?" "I have not made up my mind yet," he said; "I will rent it if you give me certain privileges, and certain things has to be done," or something like this, you know. Says he, "What is it?" Says he, "We won't allow any more than two hotels in the valley; that is mine and Barnard's," and a good many other things. Says he, "How can you get Leidig away; that is Leidig's place?" "Well," he said, "I don't know; you will have to buy him out." He says, "He wouldn't sell; I don't think I can buy him out." Says he, "If you can't buy him out, you have to drive the stages around, and bulldoze him out of here; that is the only way you can get him out."

MR. TULLOCH: Who said that? A. Dr. May. My child heard it just the same as myself. Now, gentlemen, is that right for a Commissioner to do? I didn't come here to state nothing only justice to the State. I have been wronged. I know I have been wronged, but that is past. I don't calculate to go back and live there again; if they give me the whole place for nothing I wouldn't live on it. They didn't give me a minute's peace.

[Further hearing continued until to-morrow evening, February 14, 1889, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes.]

THURSDAY EVENING, February 14, 1889.

A. H. WASHBURN.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: Where do you reside, Mr. Washburn? Answer—In San Francisco.

Q. Mr. Washburn, do you know anything about misapplying public moneys and appropriations in relation to the Yosemite Valley? A. There is only one instance that I know of. At the time that they started in to build the trail up to Mr. Snow's, over the Vernal Falls—the time that they let the contract to Anderson. I think it was let for $1,200 or $1,500; and I think it ought to have been plain enough that it would have been impossible to have completed the trail for that amount of money, as I have understood that that money was all gone. They worked until they expended that, and then did actually expend from $7,000 to $8,000 altogether, and still did not have it completed. Of course, I have examined the country through which it would have to go, and it would take a large amount of money to build it. At least, I would not want to undertake it for $2,500, to build it now. But they have used a certain portion of that trail. I do not think now there is but a very little of it that was built that was necessary.

Q. That is the trail that goes up on the north side of the Merced River, up next to Grizzly Peak, isn't it? A. Yes, sir; they made a survey down on the river, below the Falls, and built a bridge, and then used the old trail from the other side of the river to go up.

Q. You think there has been an unnecessary expenditure of public moneys on that trail? A. Yes, sir; that is, that portion of it that remains now and not in use; but how much there is of it I could not say; but, really, I do not suppose that there was more than one third of that money that was actually expended up to the time that they started and made this survey down across the river, that was expended in that portion that remains now. It is not used, to my memory. That is what I think.

Q. Was that contract made, was it ordered at a general meeting of the Commissioners, or was it simply the result of the efforts of the executive committee? A. I understood it was by the executive committee.

Q. You do not know that it was ever considered by the entire Board at one of their annual or regular meetings? A. Only what I have heard—that it was not.

MR. GARDNER: Did the Commissioners pay Anderson for the work he did there? A. The time they had a meeting in the valley, it was brought up before the meeting by Senator Goucher, and there were no arrangements made to pay the bill. It never was paid—never to my knowledge.

MR. TULLY: I understand you to say you do not know that they ever did? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that Anderson ever asked for pay for that trail? Ever put in any claim, or demanded payment for it? A. Not at the time he was living. Afterwards there was an effort made by Senator Goucher to collect it.

Q. Do you know with what success? A. He did not succeed in collecting it.

Q. Do you know why he did not? That is, what was the obstacle? A. Because Anderson did not fulfill his contract.

MR. GARDNER: But did he work after that contract? After he gave up that contract, did he not work a number of days by the day, and was never paid for it? A. I cannot say in regard to that.

MR. TULLY: Do you know how much the demand of Anderson was? How much he claimed to be due him? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of your knowledge, or have you good reasons for forming an opinion, as to why it was not paid? Whether there was any other objection than the fact that he had not completed his contract—the legal objection? A. There was no other objection that I know of.

Q. There was no plea put in that they had not the money at their disposal to pay it? A. No.

Q. They simply refused upon a legal technicality that he had not complied with his contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say you do not know that he ever worked there by the day on that trail independent of any contract at all, except that he was simply to work by day's work? A. I have so understood that he did work there; after he had expended that amount that he contracted for, then he worked by the day's work. Whether he ever was paid for it, that I do not know.

Q. Do you know how many days he worked? A. No, sir.

Q. What was a day's work worth; a good, honest day's work, put in on that piece of road? A. Do you mean to board himself?

Q. Yes. And suppose a man boarded himself. If a man comes and says, "I will do so many days work out there and board myself." A. It is worth $5 a day. I pay Conway that. He is a good stone mason. I pay him that and board him.

Q. You paid him that and boarded him? A. Yes, sir; I do now.

Q. What does it usually cost a laboring man to live per day? I do not mean to board at the hotel, but to secure such accommodations as a laboring man would have, were he to cook it himself or get somebody else to do it? A. If he had to board it would cost him $2 a day.

Q. Is it not a fact that provisions and everything that he would have to get there are very high in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this Anderson a very good workman? A. Yes, sir.

Q. First rate workman, wasn't he? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: If he boards himself he gets $5 a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He would be netting $3 a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you these questions because Mr. Anderson, a brother of the deceased, has testified in regard to the number of days he worked. It is in evidence before the committee that he did work so many days, and we want to get an approximate estimate of what that work was worth? A. Anderson we considered an expert at blasting and rock work. Most of the trail was of that character; that was the reason.

Q. You think $3 a day for an expert that cared to work upon that Grizzly Flat precipice and take chances—do you think that is an adequate compensation for an expert? A. Yes, sir; I think he would have worked for that. I do not know what he did get by the day, but I consider him cheap at that.

MR. GARDNER: There was a good part of the season he could not put in; he lost a good deal of time in the winter? A. It depends altogether upon the winter. There are some winters you can work. This winter you could have worked nearly all the time; very little time lost.

Q. What kind of a winter was it? A. I could not tell you.

MR. TULLY: I understand that Mr. Anderson put in a claim for so many days; there is nothing before this committee to warrant them in believing that the number of days that he claimed were ever objected to. I want to get at some idea whether or not he put in those days. Do you know of any other instance in which money was misapplied there, or misappropriated? A. No, sir; I do not recollect of any now. Well, yes; there was one instance there of the repairing, I think, of the old sawmill, by Hutchings; I think there was money expended on that, which I considered at the time unnecessary. They did not want any mill in the valley.

Q. They paid money for the destruction of that mill? A. No; for the repairing of it; repairing or putting up a new frame.

Q. That was inside of the grant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The one that was originally erected by Hutchings? A. Yes, sir; well, it is near that I examined; I could not say in regard to that.

Q. Is that mill being used now, or has it ever been used after Hutchings repaired it for the use of the grant? A. No.

Q. "The destruction of private and public property in Yosemite Valley." Do you know of any instance in which private or public property has been destroyed? A. No, sir; not what I call destroying it. The hotels have been torn down, and I always looked upon them as a disgrace to the State of California. They were nothing but lined and papered houses, and I have been in great fear at times, when we had a large number of passengers in there, and those hotels were filled, that there would a fire break out at the night time, and it would not have been but an instant before it would have been through the whole building, and probably nearly all of them perished.

Q. To what particular hotel have you reference? A. All those that are lined and papered—cotton lining.

Q. Did not a gentleman named Leidig have a hotel there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that hotel extant now? A. No, sir; it is torn down.

Q. What kind of a hotel was it? A. The same kind; lined with paper. Those parties that were renting—persons that rented them—I think they paid all of $1 a passenger for every one that they entertained throughout the season; that is, in rent; that rent was not expended on the hotels. I do not think there should have been any rent charged. It should have been very small for any hotels there of that character.

Q. How many hotels are there there now? A. In fact, I have heard parties that I have taken in there claim that they were indecent; that they were not fit for the hotel.

Q. How many hotels are there now? A. Two.

Q. What hotels are they? A. The Barnard and Stoneman.

Q. What is the character of those hotels? A. Well, the Stoneman House is hard finished; the other one is not; there have been some additions put on to it, but of course the buildings are separated; there is four of those; a cottage and an old house that was first built there; and I think there was three of them that were put up by Hutchings; and the largest hotel was put up by Coulter and Murphy. Some portions of them are ceiled, which makes it much safer than if it was just lined and papered with cotton cloth.

Q. What is the character of the hotels as to the style, are they first class? Are they way up big hotels, or are they hotels adapted to the use of that class of people who would like to visit, or go there? A. They are now arranged so that they are very comfortable. The Stoneman House, of course, is newly built, and it is all hard finished. There have been repairs made on the other, so it is much more comfortable. It is nicely situated.

Q. That hotel was erected and is conducted, presumably, on the plan of a first class hotel, suitable to aristocratic visitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the conveniences and surroundings that an aristocratic tourist would like to find there? A. It is that way with the exception of some of it being lined and papered; in fact, all of it pretty much except some rooms that are ceiled. Of course, I do not consider, as I said before, any house that is lined and papered, I do not consider it the proper house to run as a hotel. I think they should be all hard finished.

Q. What is the rate of fare there? A. $4 a day.

Q. That includes lodging and grub? A. That is, they are allowed to charge that; that is the highest price. Of course, there are reductions made to excursion parties, and some persons that remain there by the week or month.

Q. Do you not believe, Mr. Washburn, that the interests of tourists and campers, and the rest of the aristocratic class of visitors who go into that valley, would like to find cheaper accommodations, and it would advance the interests of the State, and it would redound to the benefit of those who manage it and the State, if there were some second class hotels to which tourists who cannot pay $4 a day would like to go and find cheaper accommodations, and might find it in those second class houses? A. No, sir; I do not think the travel justifies it. No; I think that the present hotels there are sufficient to accommodate all the travel that goes in there, and that they do now even give them reduced rates; they do not charge them any $4 a day. Those that occupied the first floor of course pay their $4 a day. Those that go up on to the third, or even the fourth, in the Stoneman House, they have made a reduction to them. I know they boarded them in there for $2 50 a day and $3. Whitcomb & Raymond's parties, all that they pay, provided that they stay three days, is $9. There have been reductions made to all parties that have gone in there, and they can be accommodated at those hotels.

Q. There are three classes of people; we may classify them in about three grades, who visit that valley. There is the aristocratic tourist, the man of means, the man who is able to pay $5 or $6 without its being any great inconvenience to him. Then there is the poorer class who go in there to camp out, who bring their blankets and their cooking stove, or something of that kind, that do not want to go to a hotel, but prefer to camp out. Then there is an intermediate class of people, who form the great bulk of the world at large. Now, there are many of those people who can afford to pay $1 50 or $2, or even $3 a day for accommodations on a trip of that kind, that cannot pay $4, and still do not want to go and camp out and take their blankets. Are there accommodations and any inducements to people of that kind to go in there and camp? A. Yes, sir. They can go in there and stop at the hotels. They have been accommodated that way. There has been that reduction made to them. I do not think it is necessary at all to have any third hotel there now for the travel that comes, for the class that you speak of. There is only probably—well, at the most, three weeks in all the season that these hotels are filled up, and when persons come along they can get their special rates. If their means are limited, they get a reduction, both on the stage line and at the hotels, too.

Q. Was that Leidig hotel pretty well patronized before it was torn down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the rates paid at the Leidig hotel as compared with the others? A. Well, I think the same. If he cut on his rates, the other hotels would cut.

Q. What were his rates? A. He would charge $4 a day, but take them for $3 or $2 50. I have known him to take them for $1 50, but of course it was a ruinous price.

Q. Ruinous to whom? A. To Leidig or any hotel man there. The result was that when the Leidig or other hotels were running in competition, why, they had their runners; they would go down to see the passengers, to meet the stage near Bridal Veil or Inspiration Point, and solicit travel for their hotels. They did not then ask any $4 a day; they would go down to $3 and $2; as low as $2 and $1 50 a day, and it got to be so that it was a nuisance really, annoying the passengers, and made it really unsafe for those persons that were in the stage, especially if the driver was out watering his horses, which he had to do at the time near the Bridal Veil.

Q. That was the result of the competition, competing for the patronage between the two hotels? A. Yes, sir; but from the time that Cook went in there, and there was pooling of hotels—that is, they made arrangements to charge so much to parties that went in, and made reductions to excursionists that were coming. There was less complaint from the tourists who went in there than there was before. The public was better satisfied.

Q. Do you think the conditions under which those Commissioners assumed the charge of that valley—do you think that it constitutes them the guardians of the travelers there, or even persons who want to pay for the patronage there, to enter into the questions as to whether or not parties competing are making money or not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think it is? A. I think it is.

Q. You think it is conducive to the public interest? A. I think it is necessary. I think it is necessary, because no man can go in there and run a hotel if he is losing money all the time; and he can't run it at those rates.

Q. Is not that a matter for those gentlemen, and outside of the Commission? Whenever they can't run it at a profit, isn't there a reason to believe they would get out of the business? A. There is no man who can go in there and take those hotels, any three men, at the time they existed there, and make anything. As long as there was that competition, they could not very well make much money out of it. There is none of them that has got rich.

Q. I am asking you whether you think it devolves upon the Commission to take into consideration that matter, and why do the Commissioners assume the guardianship of those deluded men who want to rush in there and compete for that privilege to run a hotel? Why do they assume that it is not policy to let them go in there and injure themselves, because I understand that, if it is ruinous, it is a matter that concerns those who are competing, and not the Commissioners? A. Well, I do not know as I understand your question exactly.

Q. I will try and make myself plain. I am very unfortunate sometimes in not being able to get my ideas in shape so people can understand me. A. I may be a little dull.

Q. Do you consider that amongst the duties of the Commissioners, that of looking after the interests of those who desire to compete for the patronage of that valley by going in there and opening hotels; whether it is their duty to take into consideration whether those men are making money or not? A. Oh, no; I do not know as it is.

Q. Then why is it that they are so anxious to save those men from injuring themselves by not allowing second class hotels to be run there? A. In the Stoneman House and the other house there are rooms that can be let at lower rates than $4 a day, and I stated before that if you had the third class house—

Q. I speak of a second class house? A. Well, a second class house, and they kept them for $2 50 a day—you could not possibly ask them to keep them for less than that—they can keep that class just as well as the other.

Q. Is it or is it not true that the result of having no second class accommodations there, that tourists are reduced to the alternative of camping out or paying the prices of the first class hotels? A. No, sir; I do not think that is the case.

Q. How did the Commissioners get possession and the right to tear down that house from Leidig? A. Well, that is something that I do not know anything about.

Q. You do not know whether Leidig surrendered voluntarily his right there, or whether they purchased his right? A. I know nothing about it. All I know is that the building is down. I know nothing about their transaction at all.

Q. You do not know they obtained the right to tear down that house? A. No.

Q. Do you know what became of that house? A. No, sir; of course, only from hearsay; I do not know anything about it.

Q. I understand you to say you do not consider that the tearing down of that house, you do not look on that in the light of destruction of private property? A. No, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Do you think that any one would attempt to run a second class hotel in the Yosemite Valley at less rates than can be obtained in the hotels already there? A. No, sir; I do not.

MR. TULLY: The third question is, "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." What do you know about that, if anything? A. Well, I went into Yosemite the first time in 1859, in July, and I commenced running my stage in 1866. Of course I have been in there every season since then; a great many times through the year; there may be some trees that are cut down there that was unnecessary; but, as for the great number of trees that have been destroyed, I do not see it.

Q. What is your estimate? Have there been ten of those trees, one hundred, or fifty, or two hundred; any considerable number? A. I do not think there has been any great number of those trees. Of course, there have been some cut down that it would have been better to have left; but for any one to have started in and go out and destroy a large amount of timber, I fail to see it. There are some small trees that are cut down, and my idea has been that this finding fault with the destruction of timber there, it is more to be policy than anything else. It is policy to find fault with all watering places.

Q. That is a little streak of cussedness that runs through human nature? A. Yes, sir; that is exactly what it is. I think that there has been a great deal written and stated about the timber that was destroyed about the Stoneman House. Why, a few years ago, we had a cyclone that tore down trees that were four or five feet through; broke them off like pipe-stems; broke them around and threw them off a long distance.

Q. That was between the Barnard hotel and the Harris place? A. It is very near the Stoneman House; rather too near to make it safe for that building.

Q. But that was not since the Stoneman House was erected? A. No; before it was erected. Of course, there were trees that were cut down there that, had it not been for the Stoneman House, it would have been better to have left them standing, and I know there were a few oak trees that should have remained; that is, it is my opinion that they should have remained, and I think it was a mistake that they cut them down. I think the Commissioners saw it at the time that they were cut down, and really did not intend to order them cut down.

Q. Then it is your opinion that there has been, to some extent, a greater or less extent, an unnecessary destruction of some of those trees, some timber? A. Well, there have been very few; very few.

Q. Have there been any cottonwoods? Any number of those cottonwoods cut down? A. There have been some, but there is a grove left there now. I do not think it marred the beauty of Yosemite at all from those trees that have been cut down among them.

Q. The undergrowth there, the young growth there, has there been any of that cut? A. There has been some of it cut out and there ought to be more.

Q. What was the object of cutting that out? A. It has grown up in thickets too much.

Q. Do you know to what use it was put—that which was cut? A. This last year there has been some cut to clear it up.

Q. To what use was it devoted after it was cut down? A. They would use it for firewood, some of it, and others they would get the brush together and burn it up.

Q. Was that cut down to benefit the State? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they utilize any of that wood in the shape of cutting it up and selling it, or anything of that kind? A. Of course there was wood cut up, but I cannot state what use it was put to; whether it was given away, or whether they went to work and cut it up and sold it, I could not tell you. I know some of it was given away to parties that would go and get it—cut it up themselves; but whether the Guardian had the wood sawed up and then sold to parties, I could not tell you.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would like to ask the witness if he does not know that some half dozen trees about the Stoneman House were cut in opposition to the wish of the Commission; in other words, cut by the contractors that built the hotel? A. That is what I have understood—that there were oak trees there which should not have been cut; and it was not the intention of the Commission to have them cut.

MR. TULLY: They were cut down by the contractors without consulting the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir. I know there was a mistake made there and some trees taken down that the Commissioners knew nothing about, and intended they should remain standing.

Q. The fourth question here is, "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land." Do you know anything in regard to that charge; that is a broad question? A. Well, I leased there the El Capitan meadow of the first Board of Commissioners that was in the valley; Professor Ashburner was Secretary; and I went to work and cleared up the meadow, and I fenced it, and I do not think that I hurt it at all myself.

Q. You cleared it of what? A. Of brush; some underbrush.

Q. Did you cut down any trees? A. No, sir; I was not allowed to cut any trees down.

Q. You inclosed it and plowed it up? Did you sow it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For hay or barley? A. Yes, sir; for hay.

Q. About how much did you plow up? A. How much land I plowed?

Q. Yes? A. Perhaps twenty-five acres.

Q. That was within an inclosure, I understand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what kind of an inclosure was that? Was it barbed wire fence, stakes, or poles? A. No; I fenced it with rails; put the poles down and mortised places in for the rails to go.

Q. It was a post and rail fence? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any portion of the valley being plowed up there? A. Yes, sir; the Harris ranch.

Q. Besides what you plowed? A. Yes, sir; the Harris ranch was plowed up.

Q. When was that plowed up? A. I could not tell you; well—

Q. Was it during the lease of it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has it ever been plowed subsequently, and if so, by whom? A. By Coffman & Kenney.

Q. Who are Coffman & Kenney? A. The men that have the saddle train there.

Q. How much did they plow, approximately? A. I should suppose about sixty acres; but not including that Harris farm, though. This past year—there was some that was plowed up and they put it in—I think it was plowed near the Stoneman House; at any rate, they took a crop off from there this year.

Q. They leased the premises, I understand, from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; that is, they leased the Harris farm.

Q. Do you know of any other portion of the valley that is plowed up besides what Kenney & Coffman plowed up? The Harris place and the one you speak of? A. Only the garden spots.

Q. Well, altogether, about what portions, or how many acres altogether? You have been there; you ought to have an approximate idea. How many acres are there plowed up in that valley, usually? A. Now?

Q. Yes, or has there been at any time? A. Well, I don't think it would exceed one hundred acres at any time.

Q. The fifth question is: "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley." That question, I presume, Mr. Washburn, refers to fencing, or any other barrier that may have been erected there under the direction of the Commissioners, or otherwise, by their lessees. A. Well, I think there is too much of it under fence. I think if there should be some fences removed, it would be advantageous to the valley.

Q. Do you know what the area of the valley is there; that portion of it that is called the floor of the valley? That is, not including the broken part? A. You mean land that would do for cultivation?

Q. I mean what is called the meadow land there? A. As I understand meadow land, it is that that remains moist, isn't it? That is, that would grow grass without irrigation?

Q. That which would grow a natural growth without irrigation? A. Well, now, there is very little of it. I do not believe that of all meadow land there now, that there is to exceed two hundred acres in that valley that would grow grass; what I term meadow land. It would fall short of two hundred acres.

Q. What proportion of the floor of the valley—what proportion does the rest of the floor of the valley bear to the meadow land? A. Well, it don't produce much grass. Some of it does.

Q. What proportion in area? A. That is grass?

Q. Yes, sir; that would produce grass; perhaps not abundantly, but perhaps what you might call second class land? A. I do not know the number of acres in the valley. Of course, there is a great deal of it that produces grass, that gets in among the rocks and brush; but, as to the number of acres, I could not estimate it.

Q. Do you know what the area of the floor of the valley is? A. The entire floor of the valley?

Q. Taking what is below the hotels and up towards Mirror Lake, or up towards Snow's and down below; how much of that is there that would be called the floor of the valley? I understand there are two surveys? A. There might be seven hundred acres, besides the meadow land.

Q. What portion of that has been plowed up and inclosed? How much inclosed and how much plowed up? A. The El Capitan meadow had about twenty-five acres plowed up; I do not think to exceed that; and that is the only place—well, yes, the Leidig meadow was plowed this year. I do not think there is over that amount. Of course, this is guess work with me; I have not measured it; but the Leidig meadow was fifty acres; and what Coffinan & Kenney plowed up was sixty acres.

Q. It would be about one hundred and ten acres? A. One hundred and ten acres.

Q. And the Harris farm has been plowed, hasn't it? A. I have included that. There is a portion of that farm that would grow grass—timothy—and another portion of it that would not if it was sown. There is not moisture enough to do it.

Q. There are about one hundred and ten acres of those seven hundred that comprise the floor of the valley; there are about one hundred and ten acres, according to your estimate, that have been plowed up? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What portion of that valley is fenced up? A. Well, I cannot tell you that. Of course, there are fences running around there.

Q. Of the seven hundred acres, give us an approximate, whether there is one quarter of it, or one third of it, or half of it, or three quarters. We do not presume you have measured it, but you could form something like an approximate idea? A. It is three hundred and fifty acres inclosed; may be four hundred acres, perhaps.

Q. You think four hundred acres out of the seven hundred? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be a little over half? A. There are seven hundred acres besides the meadow land.

Q. It is about one half of the floor of the valley that is inclosed? A. No; I do not think there is one half that is inclosed. No; there is not one half inclosed.

Q. What proportion; one third of it? A. Well, not over one third.

Q. What is the character of those inclosures; what kind of fences are they; wire—barbed wire? A. Some of them.

Q. Pickets, poles? A. There is wire and poles that are used.

Q. Barbed wire? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What effect have those inclosures, those fences, that fencing, upon a tourist who goes there, as it affects a person who would desire to have access to all the different parts of the valley? Does it act as a barrier or an obstacle to the free ingress and egress of a tourist or visitor there? A. I think it would be better to remove some of the fences, and give the campers an opportunity to use, perhaps, all the meadows, some of them.

Q. The question is: "Debarring the public from joint and legal use of the valley." Do you think it acts as a barrier, which would at least inconvenience a tourist or somebody else from having free access to the valley, or portions of it? A. I do not know that it has acted that way up to this time. They have always had camping ground for them.

Q. And suppose a tourist would come there and camp somewhere, or put up at the hotels, and there would be a company of them, eight or ten persons, and they would want to take a stroll, go into the little hills and nooks and corners, as many a person would like to do, and gather ferns and get down among those rocks—would this operate as a barrier to their free ingress and egress to such parts of the valley as they wanted to visit? Would they have to climb those fences or crawl under them? A. No; unless they would go on the floor of the valley, and there is not many of them want to do it.

Q. I am not asking you what portion want to do it, but I am asking what effect it would have upon those that did want to? A. They would have to climb over the fences, but there are gates they can get into.

Q. Are there any gates or turnstiles by which they can get anybody out? A. They did have them going from Barnard's down to Cook's to go through. I think that fence ought to be removed now.

Q. Do you not think it is really a very serious embarrassment to a tourist; for instance, a gentleman with a bevy of ladies with him, who wanted to go in there? A. I think I can answer this question in this way: I have always held the idea that fencing the valley too much was not good. I believe in inclosing sufficient ground there to accommodate the cows that are required for the hotels, and some little stock besides, and to have a garden spot; that has been my idea of it. They should not have arranged it so it would prevent tourists from going wherever they pleased.

Q. As a matter of fact, the fences that are there are largely in excess of what you think is necessary? A. Yes, sir; there is more fencing than I think I would have.

Q. Do you consider that those fences add anything to the beauty of the valley? A. No, sir.

Q. Anything to its attractiveness to a tourist? A. No, sir; I do not think there is any beauty in it.

MR. McCORD: What would be the effect if there were no fences in the valley in regard to the interest of the camping people? A. I suppose they would be allowed to occupy the ground that is not fenced.

Q. Supposing there were no fences, that the valley had not a fence in it, and the camping people were there, would they not be compelled to tie their horses? A. That is just what I did when I first went in there; I staked my horse out.

Q. Is the grass sufficient for that? A. It was when I went there in 1859.

Q. Do you not think there is danger at all times in staking horses out by camping people? A. Well, I do not know. I do not think that if a party drives a team in there from those mountain roads that he has got any business to turn his stock out any way. He should take them up and feed them with hay and grain.

Q. That would be working a hardship upon the camping people? A. No; I think it is working a hardship upon the horses, myself. I think if they treat them right after traveling over those roads they should take and feed them.

MR. TULLY: You think the interest of the camper would suggest the propriety of keeping his horses up and feeding them? A. I think a person should study the interest of the beast, the horse that he drives in there. I should keep stock, of course, from running at large as much as possible; let them feed for hay.

MR. McCORD: If the fences were taken away, would not people be compelled to go to stables, and would not it be working an injury upon camping people? A. They should have hay in there, so they can buy it.

Q. It would be compelling them to buy it, if you take away their pasturage? A. I do not think parties ought to stake a horse out, or turn him into a field after he has driven him from Oakland to Yosemite, or Fresno City, or Merced City, or Tulare, and Visalia; that any party has any business to turn a horse out. I think they can feed them. They can buy hay there by the bale and feed those horses; and what they would gain by turning their horses out—if they were allowed to turn them out and let them run and feed—they would lose in horse flesh.

DR. McLEAN: They could have mixed feed—the campers could have mixed feed. They could have some grass and buy hay and grain besides?

A. Certainly.

Q. That would be less expensive to campers, and the valley would be open for people to go where they choose: and this could be done, I suppose, under proper regulations by the Commissioners, through their Guardian, so that good order could be preserved while the valley was open this way, and campers could use the natural grass that would grow in the valley, couldn't they? A. Well, as I said before, there would be times when it could be used, but, as a general thing, I think they ought to feed their stock. I have to feed my horses when I run them over the road. I would not consider it treating my team right, if I drove them and then turned them anywhere, after leaving the plains, especially if they were not accustomed to the mountains, to take them up there and turn them out.

MR. GARDNER: Even if they did feed them grass there, they would need to stake them out? They could not let them run loose? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because they would tear all the campers' effects to pieces, and eat the flowers and everything that was around, if they were running loose? A. Of course, the feed that grows there could be used in different ways, by saddle horses in the valley, or by campers, if they wished to stake them out.

MR. TULLY: Do you not think, Mr. Washburn, that if campers were allowed the free use of the greater portion of the valley that it would be more satisfactory to them? And do you not think that it would enable many of those campers, inasmuch as they would have to bring in feed to keep their horses, to a considerable extent necessarily, their own interests would suggest that, in view of the fact that they could use their own horses for traveling up and down and around about, to see the valley, it would be more satisfactory to tourists to be allowed those privileges? A. My experience has been this: I have been there a good many years, and I have taken notice. I do not believe in letting them camp, as you say, all over the valley. For instance, at the Bridal Veil, and a hundred different places through the valley, unless you have a police force established there, and it would take about fifty men to look after them. Then you have cause to complain of destruction of timber, because they will cut down the trees. They will mark their names on them. They should have some place to camp—one or two places—and be looked after. I find that even at the Big Tree Grove parties going up there, especially with their private teams, that we have to watch them; and with all our watching and care they will get out and take their knives and hatchets and cut into a tree and take bark. They do it here in the Yosemite Valley; that is, they mar the trees by cutting their names on them.

Q. One of the duties entailed upon the Guardian, or the person who is directing the affairs there, is to see that they do not do it? A. All this talk about taking stock up there and turning them out, I don't go anything on it. I do not think a man ought to go to Yosemite unless he can feed his horses as they ought to be fed. I mean, to go to the Bridal Veil, and then to the upper end of the valley, and then in the center, and allow camping parties there, and the Guardian is up at the upper portion of the valley—he cannot be all around; and I know that there is fires liable to get out while they are camping; and then they cut into the trees in that way—mark their names. I think that parties who have been in there have noticed that; I know I have.

MR. CRAWFORD: Do you know whether or not, by the order of the Commissioners, the Grizzly Point trail was ever closed up? A. Well, I know this; that it was closed up, and I was informed by one of the Commissioners that it was through no authority whatever of the Board of Commissioners, or the executive committee.

Q. Do you know by whose authority it was done? A. It was done, but I do not believe that it was through any authority of the Commissioners. Therefore, I would like to have that investigated. I would like to know by whose authority it was closed up. It is a public highway; it was. I went to the expense of building a trail through there to Glacier Point, from what we call the Eleven-Mile Station; and the Glacier Point trail, at the time it was fenced up, was a toll trail. Mr. McCauley, at the time, held a lease of it and was collecting toll on it, and I was prohibited from sending parties in that way on horseback, and I was notified when I went out there—I had two ladies with me; they were nieces of T. H. Goodman. We stopped there at Glacier Point over night, and when I was there, about eleven o'clock at night, my brother that was agent in the valley, came up and called me up—I had not gone to bed—and told me that Hutchings had sent him up there to notify me not to come down into the valley; and I told him to go back in the morning and start his stages out, and if he saw Hutchings, to tell him that I was coming down, and for him to come out there and stop me. He sent word that he should stop me, if it took all the force in the valley; but I started down, and in the morning I met Hutchings coming up. He asked me if I had not received word about not coming down. I told him that I had, and thought that I would go. He made no effort at all to stop me, and I went along.

Q. Had you been notified before you went up there not to go; that the trail was closed? A. No, sir; not to my recollection. Now, whether this was before the trail was closed or afterwards—well, I know it was before. Afterwards, right after that, he went out and took some men out there and fenced the trail up; that is, he went off on the side of the ground and felled trees across the trail; made a fence; and there was a party that were going in there, and they had to go around that fence to get in on to the trail and go down; and as soon as I learned that it was fenced up, I sent a party out there, and told them to set fire to it. I think it was a criminal action. They had no more right to fence that trail than they have to go out here and fence one of these streets up; not a bit; it was a public highway, and had been, and I had been taking tourists through there.

Q. You do not know anything about at whose request it was done? A. No; that is what I want to find out. I would like to see whether Mr. Hutchings had to fence it up. I would like to know whether it was from the executive committee, or from the Board of Commissioners, or by whose authority, because I have understood that the Commissioners did not give any such order, nor the executive committee.

Q. Mr. Hutchings was then acting as Guardian of the valley? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: You say Hutchings was then Guardian of the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, you do not think it was by the authority of the Commissioners?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know that it was without the authority of the Commissioners? A. I do not know it, only by what I was informed by one of the Commissioners. I was led to believe that they had nothing to do with it.

Q. What makes you think there was no relationship between the two; between the Commissioners and the Guardian? A. Because I had a talk with one of the Commissioners about it.

Q. And did he tell you so? A. I inferred from what he said that it was so.

Q. Was it an inference, or was it a knowledge? A. Well, it was an inference.

Q. And that is your only reason for believing that there was no authority for the destruction; merely what the Commissioners told you, or what you inferred, rather? A. No, sir; that is not. I had other reasons.

Q. Had you other grounds? A. Yes, sir; I had other grounds.

Q. Were they positive means of knowing? A. Well, I had other grounds for that, from a letter that I received from Rev. Dr. Briggs. At that time, there was exclusive right given to the saddle train.

Q. Well, then, it was a mere opinion you had in the matter, and no knowledge at all? Is it an opinion you have in the matter, or is it knowledge? A. It is the knowledge that I have. I am as sure as I am sitting here that there was no order of that Board of Commissioners through the executive committee, or the full Board, that gave him power or authorized him to go there and fence it up.

Q. Did you have thorough and adequate means of knowing that to be true, of finding it out? Did you have adequate means of knowing that there was no authority? A. Well, the Commissioner that I was talking with, I took it from what he said, that there was no order given, but to come out and state positively, he did not, but he said enough to give me to understand it was not so.

Q. He did not positively state so, did he, in express terms? A. I was just as confident as though I saw the minutes of their meetings, their books, and I think if they are examined, you will find that I am correct. As I said before, from the letter that I received from the Rev. Dr. Briggs, he did not write it as an official letter of the executive committee, but he wrote it in regard to taking parties that way, and it was using authority that they had no right to use.

MR. TULLY: The seventh charge here is: "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley." What do you know about that, if anything? A. Well, I do not know of any exclusive privileges that they have had—that is, until—I think it was in 1881 since the exclusive privileges were out. Since then, it has been claimed that there are no exclusive rights given. I do not know anything about the leases; I have not seen them.

Q. You say since 1880, was it? A. 1881.

Q. Have there been granted privileges there which you consider exclusive privileges? A. No, I do not consider them.

Q. Well, at any time in the valley within your own knowledge, since you have been acquainted with it, have there been granted rights there or privileges that, in their nature, are exclusive? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state about them? A. I should think that there was. That was the reason why I was notified not to come down to Glacier Point, was on account of an exclusive right.

Q. Who had the exclusive right? A. Coffman & Kenney.

Q. That was before there was an Act passed by the Legislature? A. There was an Act passed prohibiting that. It was prior to that, but it was at the time that this trail was fenced up. They were going to put a stop to my running my saddle train in that way. Of course, there is a good deal in connection with this, the fencing of the trail up, which I could tell you if you wanted to hear it.

Q. Anything that bears upon the violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges at any time in the valley, privileges of any kind which in their nature tended to exclude or operated as an exclusive privilege—make any statement that will throw any light upon that subject?

A. Well, there was an exclusive right. They claimed that there was an exclusive right, and at that time I was notified not to come down, and Hutchings came out and fenced the trail up. That was to prevent me running my passengers that way; that I should not enter that way with saddle horses in the valley; that I should not stop at Glacier Point, or should not use that trail at all. And I thought at the time, and was well satisfied from what I have learned of this Commissioner, and the letter that I have from the Rev. Dr. Briggs, and other things in connection with the Yosemite Valley and business transactions, that it was done through Hutchings, without any authority, any legal authority, to fence that trail up. Now, from 1866 until I got the wagon road in, I run saddle horses. Hutchings had a saddle train. We were in competition all this time; and when we run our stages he also was interested in a stage line, and there was strong opposition. When they were running from Merced he was interested in that line, and at one time he acted as agent in San Francisco for the travel, and we had our fares down as low as $7 50. Of course, he felt a desire to run me out, and when the new Board of Commissioners came into power—the old Board was removed and the new Board was appointed—I came up here to see Governor Perkins and asked him not to appoint men that were interested in any business that was competing with my own. I did not think it was proper that they should act as Commissioners, and I named over some that were on that Board that I thought were going to be appointed. One was Senator Meany, who was interested in the stage line that run from Merced; and Mr. Priest, who was interested in a hotel on the other side; and also Mr. Sperry, from the Calaveras trees. He owned the Calaveras trees in opposition to the grove that is owned by the stage. And they were all appointed; Hutchings got in as Guardian, which I think was entirely wrong to place him there, provided they wanted to keep down the feeling that had been going on there among the people in the valley. I think he used his office to injure me.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I deny it.

THE WITNESS: You may deny it; I am talking here now; that is my opinion; not only that, but I learned, from a good authority, that he solicited travel that I brought in on my stages, when he was Guardian there, to go out on the Oak Flat road.

MR. HUTCHINGS: It is false.

THE WITNESS: And that parties that were ticketed around, that he would get hold of them and talk to them, and influence them to go out the other way.

MR. HUTCHINGS: It is not true.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Hutchings, you will keep silence.

THE WITNESS: I ask you to protect me, or I shall protect myself. I am here under oath; I have had parties tell me that I was taken into the valley—

MR. TULLY: This that you have been stating was with regard to Hutchings' privileges? A. And I do not think it was a proper thing to do, to place him in as Guardian, with the competition he had had there before.

Q. Who placed him there? A. I suppose the Commissioners did.

Q. Then if there was an error in that, it was an error of the Commissioners in doing so. Do you know of any other privileges that have been granted there in the shape or nature of leases, or anything else to do business, that tend to exclude others from enjoying the free use of privileges there? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do Messrs. Coffman & Kenney lease their privileges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Their fields and barn, etc.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the privilege that they have secured there operate to the exclusion of competition in their line of business, or to deter others from going in there? Are the conditions of things such there that they control business at present, or that they have those leases, that it gives them such control of the valley as operates to exclude others from the same privileges? A. That is, the saddle train, do you mean?

Q. Well, whatever business they are engaged in there? A. That rests with the Commissioners. They can have a dozen in there if they wish to.

Q. It rests with the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; it rests with the Commissioners.

Q. Have they granted to these parties a privilege there under those leases, the operation of which tends to exclude and crush out opposition from competition there? I understand they have the power to grant those privileges to a dozen, but have they done so, or do they lease to those parties and refuse to lease to others? A. As long as there is one party there, there certainly cannot be competition. I could not answer and say that there was competition. There could not be competition unless you have got actually the competition that exists. There is nothing that exists there as a competition. They have the right, and they use it, to regulate the prices of those saddle trains. You cannot regulate it by competition. You cannot go in and offer better horses. No one can go in there and drive up a band of horses to a hotel and lease those horses to the tourists.

Q. Why can they not? A. Because they have no lease.

Q. Well, that is just what I am trying to get at. Then the lease operates absolutely as a barrier to any competition with those gentlemen who hold that lease? A. Of course, as I said, it would be impossible. There is certainly no one party can go in there and have saddle trains, as you know, such as are there now, and have competition.

Q. The reason they cannot have it is that the terms of their lease are such that others are deterred from going in there? A. Certainly. If they would give the lease, they would have opposition.

Q. They do not give that lease? A. I do not know anything about their action.

Q. Do you know of any others who hold privileges there? A. I have understood that Mr. Clark did.

Q. This should operate independently of these other parties there? A. He has done it. He has run there and taken passengers around; did last year. He was working with them, I believe.

Q. Do you know whether he has leased that privilege from the Commissioners? A. He has leased the privilege.

Q. He obtained the privilege? A. Yes, sir; there is two of them for that privilege by leasing it.

Q. Is it, or is it not, a fact that they are jointly interested in that privilege? A. No, sir; I do not think they are jointly interested.

Q. What kind of privilege do you consider that, taking its operation; does it operate as an exclusive privilege or not? You understand what an exclusive privilege means, and its effect. The charge here is: "Exclusive privilege." Now, if there are any privileges granted to any one individual there that, in the conditions of that contract or the effect of it, is to exclude others from competing with those same parties there? A. Well, of course, in that way it is exclusive.

Q. That is one of those privileges that have been termed a single privilege by some of the witnesses who have testified here. They do not call it an exclusive privilege, but a single privilege? A. Well, the contract they hold is not an exclusive privilege. If you give it to one party, it is an exclusive privilege; if there are two parties there, it is not an exclusive privilege. If they do not run opposition, I do not know that the—

Q. Is it, or is it not true that those privileges are let out at stated periods, and that when one party has secured a privilege of that kind, nobody else can get that privilege, or a similar privilege? That is what I want to get at? A. Mr. Clark has the privilege, has the lease, and Coffman & Kenney have a lease. Now, I do not know whether anybody else could get one or not; and it is not an exclusive lease.

MR. GARDNER: Is there any competition in that business? A. Well, I do not know that there is any competition there. The price is regulated by the Commissioners. If there is any one charged too much, it is the fault of the Commissioners. There has been no complaint to amount to anything.

MR. TULLOCH: What prevents there being competition by those parties? A. They have agreed not to cut on the rates, I suppose.

Q. What prevents Jones, or Brown, or Williams, from going in there and running opposition trains? A. They do not get a lease.

Q. Then they are exclusive privileges? A. As I say, they do not write the leases exclusive.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of your own knowledge, or have you good reasons to believe, that Clark and Kenney & Coffman have pooled their issues and are running in that sense, that they come to an agreement between themselves and regulate the prices accordingly, within the limits and control of the Commissioners? A. I have no knowledge of their pooling their issues. The Commissioners, of course, always said, that to bring any competition there and let the rates be cut down, that they could not support a saddle train. We used to have competition, though, before the roads were built in there, but it is different now from what it was then, because the horses were taken from a long distance from the valley.

Q. Are there any conveniences in that valley for parties who might want to compete there; any conveniences for storing away hay and grain, and such necessities as they would require in order to run a competing team there, if they desire to do so? A. I think there is. I think they could get now a stable for that purpose. I think there could be stable room got for that purpose.

Q. You simply think so; do you know? A. Well, there are stables there. I do not know, of course; I cannot say that the Commissioners would lease the stable; I do not know anything about that. They have got the stables there, and they could lease them, if they chose to do so, to other parties.

Q. Do you know whether they have ever leased them to other parties other than those who are running the stages? A. No; I never asked for an exclusive privilege to run a saddle train or anything else.

MR. COFFMAN: I understood you to say that, at the time that Hutchings obstructed the road, that Coffman & Kenney had the exclusive privilege; is that what I understood you to say? A. That is the way I understood it at the time.

Q. If you will just remember, tax your memory, and see whether Stegeman & Harris did not run about an equal number of horses with me and Kenney? A. That was so. Harris & Stegeman had an equal number of horses that were there.

MR. TULLOCH: How long did that competition continue; how long did they continue to run an equal number of horses? A. Well, I could not tell you.

Q. Did the competition continue long? A. I do not know that there was any competition. They might have had separate leases, and then go together.

Q. Did they continue along, each one running a train? A. No, not a great while; but the way it has been here, even if there were privileges, if there would be two, or three, or four that had the privilege of running, they would go in together, and pool anyway. What I mean is this: that if you leased any other two, three, or four men the privilege of running saddle trains, they have got to pool if they live; they have got to come to that; they have got to pool, or else some of them are going to get broken up; one or the other.

MR. CHAPMAN: Isn't it a matter of fact that before the passage of this law requiring that the Commissioners should not lease any exclusive privileges, isn't it a matter of fact that the saddle trains did pool? A. They did pool; they were virtually one.

Q. Isn't it a fact that in order to secure the services of competent men and horses during the early and very late seasons, that some protection must be extended to the service? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, during the rush of the season, an outsider would go in with some thirty or forty horses, and take off the cream of the business, and when the travel got slack he would go out of the valley and leave the other men destitute? A. You could not keep up the saddle horses by having competition in that way; that is, if you would start in and give out two or three leases there to parties to run saddle horses, or four. If anybody was allowed to go in there as they used to and rent out horses, why, you could not keep a sufficient number of horses there to accommodate the tourists.

MR. GARDNER: They have got to be protected? A. They have got to be protected and the horses' feed taken care of. The length of the season that the travel is going there won't justify a party to go in there and take opposition, competition.

MR. CHAPMAN: Then, if the Commission did not protect the man in business, in the legitimate business there, they would be open to very much graver censure in not having horses to accommodate the early and late travel, than they are probably subject to? A. They would now, but there was a time when they would not. Before those roads were built in, then competition came in, but after the roads were built in there, you could not put any competition there and keep up horses to accommodate the tourists. And that should be regulated by the Commissioners—the price of those horses, and whether the horse is fitted for the purpose or not—and if he is not, he should be taken out of the valley; and that is the custom there with the Guardian.

Q. Well, do you not know for a fact that the Commission have sought to ascertain from the very best authority prices; in fixing the prices for the use of these horses on the different routes about the valley they have made research to enable them to determine upon the proper price to be fixed upon those routes, so that the charge of excessive charges might not be lodged against them? A. I do not know of any one complaining of excessive charges in there. That is the best way to get at it, if they do not complain—the traveling public; and I do not think that the prices are out of the way.

Q. Well, then, the question of lack of competition, when the prices are not excessive, is really not a very grave fault, is it? When there is no excessive charge, the lack of competition does not seem to be a very grave matter? A. No; of course the travel comes in there in the months of May and June—sometimes it will commence on the first of April—and by the first of July there is two thirds of the travel that goes into the Yosemite Valley in all the season; that is, April, May, and June. Now you have got two thirds of it. Now you have got to carry in July, August, September, and October (four months), with one third of the travel, that stock that is required to accommodate that travel for the early season up to July. Some seasons we do not go in there until the first of May. You have got to keep that ten months in the year for the sake of using it two.

MR. GARDNER: I do not think the question is whether these exclusive privileges are justifiable or not, but whether there are exclusive privileges. Whether there is actually exclusive privileges; not whether they are justifiable or not.

THE WITNESS: What do you understand by exclusive privileges?

MR. GARDNER: Giving one man the right to carry on business there that is denied to all others. A. Well, then, there is two there who have got the privilege, as I understand it. There is parties got two leases now, and they have the privilege of running there. Now, if it is written "exclusive" in the contract, it has exclusive rights; but if you let half a dozen have the privilege of running saddle horses, and did not put in the word "exclusive," there is nothing to prevent those half dozen people getting together and pooling it, and running it as an exclusive privilege. If they don't they won't run their saddle trains, because they cannot keep their expenses up and do it.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would like to ask the witness: About what expense would the State be put to in order to properly equip some four or five or half a dozen saddle trains, in the way of building corrals, barns, etc.? A. There is no end to that; that is, if you wanted to go in with four or five horses and get accommodations, they would want a barn and corral, and you would have most of your valley built up with that kind of buildings.

MR. TULLY: About how many horses, Mr. Washburn, does it require during the busy season there; about how many horses does it require to do that work? A. There are times there when we have the hotels filled up; there are times when there would be one hundred and fifty.

Q. That is, during the very busy time? A. Yes, sir; and you have got to keep horses to accommodate that travel in the busy time. When there is but one passenger a week, you have got to keep the same number of horses, and you do two thirds of your business from the first of April to the first of July, and you have to keep all your horses ten months in the year.

Q. Do those parties who run those saddle trains keep their horses up all the year, or do they send them out of the valley? A. They are sent out of the valley, some of them, before the travel is over with.

Q. Then it is not an absolute necessity, and they practically do not keep their horses on hand all the year, but only during the busy time? They bring in horses, provide a sufficient number, according to the amount of travel that is expected and anticipated in the valley. They provide beforehand? A. They have to keep them the year round, and it is all perishable property they have got.

Q. They do not keep them in the valley? A. They do not keep them in the valley; they are taken out and pastured at an expense, through the winter. To get good pasture it will cost you $2 a month. We have got to have parties there that are ready to furnish those horses in the spring and make sure for the travel that comes.

MR. TULLOCH: Who have got to have horses in the spring? A. The parties that hold the leases.

Q. Who are the parties holding the leases whom you have reference to?
A. Coffman & Kenney.

Q. Do they cooperate with the stage line? Do they have any work with the stage line? A. No, sir; there is one thing here that was published: that is, that Mr. Chapman was interested in the stage line. He has no interest in it at all; he never was interested in the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company.

Q. Were you not, at one time, interested with Coffman & Kenney in the saddle train? A. No; I never got a lease together with them.

Q. Did you ever have any business relationship with them—any partnership of any kind? A. I furnished them horses. I furnished horses for their saddle train.

Q. You are not a silent partner now with them? A. I furnish them horses now; yes, sir. At the time they got their lease, I asked a lease from the Commissioners, and I did not get it. After they got their lease, they came to me and wanted some saddle horses. They did not have a sufficient amount; and they have had the saddle horses, and paid me for them.

MR. TULLY: Do you know what Coffman & Kenney pay for that privilege, for that lease? What does their lease cost them a year? A. I do not know what they do pay for that. They have the ranch there and the saddle train; they pay so much, but what they pay I do not know anything about. I do not pay any attention to their business. Coffman attends to it, and I do not know anything about it.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you ever receive any percentage at any time for furnishing horses to those parties; any percentage from Coffman & Kenney? A. I never received one single dollar, unless I gave them value received for it.

MR. HARRIS: Have I a right to ask Mr. Washburn a question?

MR. CHAIRMAN: If you want to ask a similar question, all right.

MR. HARRIS: Do you remember, six or seven years ago, I do not know which, that I went before the Commissioners and told you that you received 10 per cent of every dollar? A. I recollect it distinctly, and I also know that you then swore to that that was false.

MR. HARRIS: I tell you, Mr. Washburn, if we had the books here, I would prove it to you that you received every year—

THE WITNESS: I do not deny that I did receive it; I did receive it; but you have got value received for every dollar that was paid. There is one thing that I would like to state, and that is this: about the improvements about the valley. Now I have a lease of a road going down into the valley and the privilege of collecting toll from parties going in, outside of the grant, and I want to state this: that the amount of money that I have expended inside of the limits of the grant—now from Snow's around to Glacier Point, I built the trail at an expense of $2,000, a distance of about six miles; and I have also built the road from Glacier Point, I should judge about two miles of it, at an expense of $2,000, so that we run our stages out there. I have no right to collect any toll over that; but, nevertheless, I paid money for the building of it; and down into the valley, from the line of the grant, from the boundary to Leidig's hotel, which I commenced work on in 1874, April eighteenth, and completed it on the twenty-second of June, 1875, and expended $16,000 on that. So that altogether I have expended $20,000 inside of the limits of the grant, and in all that time I have leased the El Capitan meadow for $150 a year. I held it for a few years. I gave it up because it would not pay; I did not make anything out of it; and since then, the only lease I have held has been for a stable to keep my horses in. I have seen it stated in the papers that I had all the privileges, that is, that I had the cinch on the public, and I could collect whatever I pleased, and do about as I pleased. I never have run one season since I commenced business in 1866, but what I have had competition.

Q. That road you spoke of having leased—I understand that is outside of the valley? A. No; that is inside of the grant, but I hold a lease of it, and can collect toll outside if they pass over it.

Q. Collect your tolls on the outside? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you collect those tolls upon the road that you have leased from the Commissioners? A. I built inside; it is inside of the grant.

Q. You leased that road from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; from the Commissioners; that is, they gave me a lease.

Q. You do not collect any toll within the limits of the grant? A. No.

Q. But you do collect toll on the outside for the road you have leased, from parties going in? A. Yes, sir; I can collect if they come in over the road, outside of the limits; I can collect, but not inside of the grant.

Q. Parties passing over the road from the outside and wanting to get into the valley, before they get into the valley, they pay you toll? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Pay you toll for the road you made inside of the grant? A. Inside of the grant I do not collect it; very seldom that I have collected any toll. I do not suppose, in all the time that I have had the road, that I have collected to exceed $350, and it has cost me, on an average, $500 a year to keep it in repair.

MR. TULLY: The next charge is: "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income." Do you know anything about that? A. Well, as I stated before, I think the rents have been too high. In regard to the ranch, in ranching in there, I farmed this year two thousand acres; some years I have had in three thousand acres. I have been farming considerably; I have some knowledge of it, and I know you cannot go into the Yosemite Valley, and buy your seed, and do your plowing, and pay the rent of $535, that Harris paid, and make any profit off of the ranch at that. You have got to have outside business, if you do.

MR. CHAPMAN: Did I understand you to say that Mr. Harris paid $535? A. That is what I understand; I think that is what he swore to—that he did pay it.

MR. CHAPMAN: Let me correct you. He never paid as much as that. $450 was the greatest sum ever paid by Harris. A. It might have been that. I saw it in the paper. I got it in my mind that that was what he paid.

MR. TULLY: That is, did you know about that charge of reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State; you know about those rentals, but you do not express any opinion, except that you think they are too high? A. I think they are too high. I think that all the rents that they have had in there—the hotels have been too high. Barnard, I think, was at one time paying $1,000; Cook was paying $700 at one time, and they were actually paying $1 for every passenger they got.

Q. Do you consider that the reduction of rentals is to the best interest of the State, or are high rentals prejudicial to the best interests of the State? A. I look at this this way: I believe in low rents there, and I believe in setting the figure on those different points as low as possible; that is, with the saddle horses, rating it down as much as you can, and also having as low rates as can be kept at the hotels and accommodate the people, and I think it would have a tendency to increase the travel.

Q. You think the reduction of rentals would enable the hotels to reduce their tariff, their charges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that all reductions made in that direction conduce to the best interests of the valley and the people? A. Yes, sir; I do not think it should be a question as to the money that the State should get out of those parties running there. I believe the interests of tourists that go in there should be looked at, and that by reducing the rents it gets in a larger number into the valley; it brings more tourists to this country. They do not leave the money right in the Yosemite Valley, but they stop all over the State, and bring their money here and spend it, and the lower you can make the rates in the valley, the better it is.

Q. You do not think in the management that the best interests of the State require that those rates should be speculative, but reduced to a minimum consistent with the carrying on of business there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think the present rentals are too high? A. I do; yes, sir, I do. They are too high. I think if the rents that Coffman & Kenney are paying, and also Mr. Clark, were reduced down, and the price of carriage higher, saddle horses also could be reduced some; it would be much better.

MR. TULLOCH: Tolls, too? A. Yes, sir; tolls.

MR. TULLY: As a matter of fact, I assume, and presume I am correct in that, that tourists who come to this country, with a view to looking at our country, and especially at the Yosemite Valley, the proportion of money that they spend in the valley is really a very small proportion of what the State gets out of them in coming here? A. Yes, sir; a very small proportion.

Q. And, if there are greater inducements to come here, the State will be amply compensated for the reduction of rentals by the additional attractions to the tourists to come and see the country, and leave their money in it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The State would not lose anything by reducing those rentals to a minimum? That is what I understand, that your opinion tends to establish that fact? A. Yes, sir; I have always claimed that the rents were too high.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts." The failure of the Commissioners to recognize their own contracts. If you know of any instance in which they have contracted to do a certain thing and have failed to do it, state it? A. Well, of course, I know of only one instance, of my own knowledge, that I know positively, and that is in taking President Hayes into the valley; President Hayes out. I made arrangements, at the time that President Hayes was out here, the Commissioners wanted to take him into Yosemite Valley, his party, extend to him the privilege of coming into Yosemite, and there was a letter that was written by Colonel Jackson of invitation to the President, signed by him, and also by W. H. Mills, and given to Sam Miller, to hand to the President. But I will state before that, that at the time this letter was given, Colonel Jackson came to the office and said that he wanted to extend the courtesy of a pass into the valley for the party, and wanted to know what arrangements he could make. He said he did not like to be personally responsible. I told him that if he wanted to do it we would take them in and it could be allowed on the rent. Says he, "If you will do that it is all right." So he gave this letter; he signed it; and when Miller took it and brought it up to Sacramento W. H. Mills signed it. It was taken on, I think, to Colfax, by Miller and handed to the President. He accepted the invitation, and they went in by the way of Madera, and the Commissioners sent their Secretary along; that was Rev. Dr. Briggs; there was thirteen, I believe, in the party. I think the bill amounted to $585; it was an unlucky number thirteen; we did not kill any of them, though; but we took them in and they were well satisfied with everything. Well, we paid all the expenses; and on their return I presented the bill, shortly after that, probably a month or two afterwards. The bill came in, though, from the Commissioners for the stable that I had rented in the valley. Then I had this bill made out and presented it to the executive committee, or Mr. Miller did, and they wrote their names on this bill, and approved it, each one.

Q. The executive committee? A. The executive committee. That was Raymond, Jackson, and Mills; and the next meeting that they had of the full Board of Commissioners, they all voted against it, except Colonel Jackson, and they got the wind of it, and I paid the bill.

Q. Was there not some competition for that job of taking those tourists in, the President and his coterie? A. Not to my knowledge; at that time there was no competition.

Q. Were not there some competition between two lines, and one party proposed to take them in for nothing, and the other party said they would do it? A. I know no more about it than I have heard since. At that time I am positive we would have got the money and got the pay out of them; that they would have paid us for going in. General Grant paid his party in there; General Sherman paid for his, and I do not know why President Hayes would have not done it.

MR. GARDNER: Did not the Commissioners ever pay you? A. I was going to tell you. They afterwards had a meeting, and they paid $45. That was the Secretary that indorsed on the back of the bill. I do not recollect the year that he was here, but at any rate it was brought up the last time by Commissioner Griffith, and there was so much rent—I think it was $150—that was behind, and it was outlawed, and also the bill, and I did not pay that $150 (rent for the stable), and the balance of the bill stands unpaid.

MR. TULLY: That is, the charges for taking that party in? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did you state the amount of that was? A. It was $585. I think that is what it was. It was $45 apiece.

MR. GARDNER: You got $195 out of that? A. I took the advantage of the Limitation Act on the $150.

MR. TULLY: Who plead the limitation? You? A. Well, he pleaded on the bill, and I did on the rent. We did not have much trouble about it.

Q. Do you know of any other instance in which they have failed to recognize their contracts? Have they made contracts with laborers, or anything else? A. They claimed at the time that it was illegal. I know at the time that they had voted against it. If they had come and said: "Why, we find that it is illegal; we cannot pay this; we will pay it out of our pockets," I would not have said a word, but they turned around and voted against it, some of them, after putting their signature to it. I asked Mills at the time if that was the way he did business. I showed him his signature, and says I: "Do you do business that way?" He had his reason—told the reason why he did it.

Q. There was no agreement between the competitors for that job? A. There was no understanding that one party had agreed or proposed to take them in for nothing, and that another of the competitors said: "If you take them in for nothing, I will take them in also?" I never heard a word of it until afterwards that was brought up.

Q. You know nothing of your own knowledge about any agreement of that kind? A. No, sir. Of course they no doubt were after them, and all that, and they might and might not have gotten them, if we had to take them back. I do not know anything about that. There was no understanding about it, and nothing of the kind.

Q. That is the only instance you know of their going back on their contract, if there was such a contract? A. No; there is no other contract that I recollect of now.

Q. Contract for labor or anything else? A. No. We find them, as far as I am concerned, all right to do business with.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would like to ask Mr. Washburn if that is this Commission or some other Commission? A. Oh, no; not the present Commission.

MR. CHAPMAN: Are we to be charged with this violation of the contract?

THE CHAIRMAN: Certainly not; it is in evidence that you were not connected with the Commission at that time.

MR. CHAPMAN: Is it not a matter of fact that there is but one member, and possibly not one member of the present Commission, that was then a member of that Commission?

MR. TULLY: This committee, as I understand, is sitting here for the purpose of eliciting facts with regard to the management of that valley. We are not here for the purpose of trying, or putting upon trial, any member of that committee, or any special portion of any committee that has been there; but we want to elicit such facts as bear upon the management, upon whomsoever it may have been. We are examining the management, not of any particular individual, or any particular number of Commissioners, but the management of the valley.

THE WITNESS: I was making no complaint about it at all. I saw in the paper that we got $600; that they paid $600. So I think it was a mistake.

MR. CHAPMAN: Do you know of any violation of contract on the part of the present Commission? A. No.

MR. TULLY: "Withholding from citizens concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State and illegally leasing the same?" A. I do not know anything about that at all.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, I do not think there is anything in that. I think there are children enough there to have a school. I have been asked within a few days here—well, yesterday—to give a pass for a teacher to be up there on the first of April.

Q. Do you know of any instance in which there was a school, which was subsequently discontinued for want of scholars to attend it? A. That is, to pass a teacher to go up there over our stages. What is the question?

Q. I ask you if you know that there has ever been a district school there, and if so, whether it was discontinued at any time for want of scholars, and if that discontinuance was attributable to any act of the Commissioners? A. I never heard of it, if there was.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. Well, I saw an account in the paper about the roads being out of order, and I was in the valley about that time; it was only a few days afterwards, and I was not in for the purpose of inspecting the roads. I had business there; and I drove around the valley, and my attention was called to the roads. I could not find any fault with them.

Q. Did you go over the trails at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the condition of the trails? A. I think the trails were kept in good repair. There are times there when you have showers, that the trails will get out of order; but I think the trails and roads have been kept in as good repair this last season, as any time. So that I am perfectly satisfied, and with the teams running. Some days I was running four and five stages one way.

Q. Do you think they have been allowed to get into a bad condition, owing to the neglect of the Commissioners to look after them properly? A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Because the charge is the neglect of the Commissioners? A. I do not know where it is. I have not seen it.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties?" A. I do not know anything about it.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." That is a very broad question? A. Well, I will tell you. I think it would be pretty difficult to find—I think that Christ himself could not go in and manage it without complaint, if it was possible for him to be there.

Q. That is a broad question, and very indefinite; still if you know of any instance which, in your judgment, in fact, tends to show that they have failed to properly manage it, state it? A. My knowledge of Yosemite Valley has been for twenty-two years, and in all that time, there has always been somebody finding fault, complaining about something; about mismanagement, bad treatment, and all that, but as a general thing, I have not a fault to find with the Commissioners.

Q. Only those constitutional growls that the public are very prone to indulge in? A. Yes, sir; and I have been interested there more than any other party; that is, I have taken in more tourists than any other line. Last summer I had the pleasure of taking Mr. Whitcomb, of the firm of Raymond & Whitcomb, that sends us more excursion travel than any other. I took him from Raymond into Yosemite and the Big Tree Grove and back again, and he said the roads were much finer than he expected; a different country altogether from what he expected to see. He did not think there was so much mountain travel, and he said that before he went to Yosemite, that he had thought that the prices we were charging were high, but he told me that he did not think we charged enough, and that the hotel fare, too, was cheap; cheaper than at other watering places; and I consider him a competent judge.

MR. GARDNER: As a general thing, did the tourists complain of the prices and the usage they had of the valley? A. No, sir.

Q. They were satisfied with the accommodations; satisfied with the prices that was charged for accommodation, and the fare that they got? A. The complaint has not come from the tourists. There has been but very little complaint. It would be very singular if there were not some that complained in taking passengers in there. But it is from parties that have been in the valley, that have been residing there, or come in there to do business—get five or six saddle horses, and go in and start to do business, and then they would have to go out.

Q. And the most of the tourists did not complain at the prices that they paid? A. No, sir.

Q. Or the accommodations they had? A. They do not mind $4 a day, if they have good accommodations.

Q. You thought they got the worth of their money there? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Are the accommodations that tourists generally get there, as a general thing, satisfactory to tourists, as far as your observation goes; the accommodations in every way; because this can reverse the whole thing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The facilities for traveling and getting over the mountains, furnishing guides, and the table, and their lodgings and horses? A. Perfectly satisfied.

Q. You think, as a general thing, it is satisfactory to the general public? A. Yes, sir; of course, you might find a few that would complain. I had one complaint last year, from a man by the name of Chadburne, from Minneapolis, a banker. He complained about the excessive charge of toll, $22. I was styled as the toll robber. I collected the $22 because I had a just and legal right to collect it; tolls established by the Supervisors of the county and by the Commissioners. He stated there that he had made his trip, after paying this excessive toll of $22, for $110 less than it would have cost him, if he had gone by stage, with a party of five. Now, he could have made the trip from San Francisco into Yosemite for $175, his party of five. Well, to my knowledge now—I will say first, that if he had made it for $110 less than it would cost him to go by stage, with a private conveyance from San Francisco—that was the way it was worded in the article—he then should have gone for $65 with a party of five. Now, he paid $22 toll on our road, $5 on the Coulterville road, $6 horse feed in the valley, $6 horse feed at Wawona, $1 50 for his driver, and $42 50 railroad fare from San Francisco to Merced; making $83. I think that is correct.

Q. How many were in that party? A. Five. So it is rather crooked figuring.

Q. How much toll do you say he paid? A. He paid $22 over our route and $5 over the Coulterville road; $27 toll. I do not know what they are allowed by law to collect on the Coulterville road, but there was a time before the State bought out that toll road, that Dr. McLean could have charged toll over that portion of the road over the grant; which I think at that time was $1.

DR. McLEAN: I can explain the matter after you get through, about this toll matter.

MR. TULLY: That $22 toll, where was it collected; how many times were they taxed with tolls? A. The toll road leading into the grant we had a right to collect $1 a passenger. Then there is a toll road from the line of the grant to Wawona, a distance of about nineteen miles. Then there is a toll road leading from Wawona to the Big Tree Grove, up to the line of the grant. They are separate charges. And then there is a toll road leading from Wawona called the Mariposa road. One is called the Madera, and the other the Mariposa, and the other is Yosemite, as we term it; and also a toll bridge over the South Fork of the Merced. In those roads we have expended over $100,000 in the construction of them, and for the last eight years we have collected thirty and four tenths of the amount that we have expended on them in toll, and that is not including the toll of the stage company, but the interest certainly ought to pay that.

Q. By whom are those tolls regulated? A. By the Supervisors of the county.

Q. The Supervisors have fixed the toll, and every person passing over them from one section to another pays the different tolls? A. The toll roads all center right there at Wawona; that is the center of three toll roads.

DR. McLEAN: Except that portion of the road which goes over the grant? A. Of course; to go over that you have to go to Wawona. In going to the valley, or coming from it, you have to pass over that.

MR. TULLY: That would amount to a little over $5 on each one of those five individuals to get into the valley? A. Well, the reason why we charged it, we do not charge it to parties. It was a competing line. The agent in San Francisco had his office there, and was soliciting travel against us.

That is the reason we charged them that amount of toll. We do not pretend to make any such charge with parties that are coming over with their own private teams, that are not competing lines. We have spent our money there, and we certainly should protect ourselves and collect every dollar that the law allows, against any competing line.

Q. What are your usual charges when not influenced by those competing lines? A. Well, we always collect one fare into the valley, one rate, and to come out half rate.

Q. What do you call a fare? A. That is, we collect toll one way and half toll coming out.

Q. What is the aggregate? A. When there are large parties, we make a great discount to them on it. It is not to our interest for parties that are coming in with private teams, to run them off from high rates of toll.

Q. What is the aggregate to an outsider? When you cannot get the business of this competition, what would be the average toll to a party, say, of five or ten coming in there? A. If they were going in there with four horses, it would be $13 50 to go in and come out.

Q. To the individual or to the five? A. We would take in eleven passengers; eleven passengers could go in for that.

Q. How much would be the aggregate? A. $13 50 to go into Yosemite and return over the toll road.

Q. That would be a little over $1 apiece for eleven passengers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A party going over there from the outside—say, with a four-horse team—do you charge for the individual—so much for the individual—and then charge him in addition to that for the team going over? A. We do not charge by the passenger at all; in fact, I have always understood we had no legal right to charge by the passenger; that the Supervisors had no right to levy that toll on passengers.

Q. I ask these questions, because you are aware of the fact that there is a very general complaint about the amount of toll? A. I am giving this. It is outside of the grant; it is our business.

MR. GARDNER: The Commissioners have nothing to do with it? A. No.

MR. TULLY: The State has really something to do with it, because it might be to the interest of the State to stop that toll collecting by acquiring the right, or in other words, buying out those roads? A. That is what should be done, and a free road made into Yosemite.

Q. It is to the interest of the State to that extent? State whether the interest of the State would not be better subserved by purchasing those privileges, and making those roads free? A. This road has been built through a mountainous country; a great deal of rock to contend with, and large trees to grub up, and has been a very expensive road to build, and an expensive road to keep in repair, and it is operated only a few months in the year.

MR. TULLOCH: What improvements in the way of roads have been made by other parties in the valley? A. There is the Oak Flat road.

Q. Where is that, and where does it go to? A. That leads on the north side of the valley from the El Capitan rock up to what used to be called Jentry's, upon the line of the grant. That was a very expensive road to build, although it has a very fine grade.

A. Who built it; who are the parties owning it? A. I really cannot tell whether it is separate from the stage company or not.

MR. SPRAGUE: The Big Oak Flat and Yosemite Turnpike Company.

THE WITNESS: Those roads are all built on good grade, and they are located right.

MR. TULLOCH: It is a good road, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Kept in good condition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would it not be as well for the State to buy that as well as the other? A. The State ought to own all the roads inside of the grant, and it would be better to own them outside; that is, to make them free. In an older country it would be done, or a macadamized road in the Yosemite.

MR. TULLY: I think there is no question about the fact that whenever the State can afford to do it, she had better put a stop to all that toll business; that the best interests of the State would be subserved; probably it would be too much of a job to undertake it just now, because these roads would cost money; they have cost money, and it would cost money to obtain them.

THE WITNESS: There is one thing I would like to state here; in speaking of the saddle horses in there, the pooling of it, and the exclusive rights and all this; that parties would be obliged to pay more by pooling than they would if there was competition there. Now, I will say this: that I do not think such is the case. In 1888, we have pooled with the great Sierra Stage Company—that is, the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company—and did business, and the average fare of the parties that we have taken from Raymond into the Yosemite Valley in the year 1888, not including the trees, was $26 30. That includes the fare both ways. Including the Mariposa trees, it was $31 30.

MR. McCORD: There is an impression left with the committee that I wish to correct. I understood Mr. Washburn to say that the average cost to a laboring man was $2 a day for board. Did you not, Mr. Washburn? A. A laboring man $2?

MR. McCORD: Yes? A. I meant by that that probably he could go there and board himself for that. A laboring man would not want to turn in and cook his own meals.

Q. Is not it a fact that Cook and Barnard board them for $25 and $30? A. They have for the past eighteen months boarded them at their hotels.

Q. Mr. Barnard boarded them for $27 50? A. That may be.

MR. McCORD: It is also a fact that men board themselves for from $12 to $15 a month; is it not a fact? A. In speaking of that, I do not consider $5 a day any too much for a man that is a good hand in working rock, blasting, and who can lay wall.

Q. Is it not a fact that the stage wages are only $2 50 a day for eight hours? A. I do not know what their price is; I am not posted on that.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you mean to say that a laboring man can board at the hotel for $25 or $30 a month? A. That is all they pay there.

Q. Why is it that they charge tourists $4 a day? A. Well, there are two dining-rooms.

Q. Why should there be such a great difference? A. There is a difference in supplying your table for tourists and laborers.

Q. They live under the same physiological conditions, and what would sustain life in one would sustain it in the other? A. Of course, but you must recollect that the party who boards for $25 or $30 a month does not have a room furnished him at the price he pays, and there is not the service on the table.

MR. GARDNER: They do not get the same grub? A. They do not get the same grub.

MR. TULLY: They keep a laboring man's table and a tourist's table; they keep a table to satisfy a laboring man and to satisfy tourists? A. Yes, sir; as I was saying before—talking about second class hotels—parties go in there very often, and go into that dining-room, and they charge them 50 cents a meal. That is all they charge.

J. J. COOK.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside, Mr. Cook? Answer—In the Yosemite Valley.

Q. I believe about all we shall expect to question you in regard to is in regard to the leasing of the Stoneman House. Do you know anything about anything connected with that? A. I have leased the Stoneman House for ten years.

Q. You leased it for ten years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you obtain the lease? A. From the Commissioners.

Q. How was that lease let—by advertisement for proposals to take it, or was it open to competition? A. It was advertised in the "San Francisco Bulletin."

Q. For bids to take it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you bid for it? A. I bid for it.

Q. Do you know whether there were any other bidders beside yourself?

A. Well, I understood that there were other bids; I didn't see any others.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge that there were? A. No, sir.

Q. You got the lease of it? A. I got the lease of the Stoneman House for ten years; from the first day of January, 1888.

Q. What were the terms for which you got it? A. $1,200 a year.

Q. You don't know, of your own knowledge, that there were any other competing parties for the lease? A. I saw no other applications or bids, sir. I understood it, but then I didn't see them.

Q. Were there any conditions imposed in the granting of that lease? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the nature of that lease; just state generally? A. I couldn't tell you; I presume the Commissioners have a copy of it; mine is in Yosemite. I am subject to the order and the will of the Commissioners to keep it open at all times, unless permitted to close it, by them; and they are to regulate charges, and so forth. They have the full charge of it; in fact I have to run it and pay the bills. I also have a permit from them for a garden, pasturage, and merchandise privileges.

Q. Well, state anything that you know in connection with that? A. It was $350 a year—

[Examination temporarily suspended.]

I. CHOYNSKI.

Being recalled, testified as follows:

MR. CHAPMAN: When did you arrive in Sacramento from San Francisco, after having been summoned to appear here? Answer—When did I arrive in Sacramento?

Q. Yes? A. Last Monday.

J. J. COOK.

Recalled.

MR. TULLY: Now, Mr. Cook, in making your lease, was there any competition at that time; were there any other bids? Answer—I didn't see any other bids. There were other parties there who I supposed put in bids, and I understood so. I didn't see them. I was talking, and told this gentleman just on the stand——

Q. Were your bids made in accordance with the advertisement in the "Bulletin" for bids? A. I made them from that; yes, sir.

Q. Was the lease you got predicated on that, or were there any terms and conditions made in the lease that you got that were not included in that advertisement in the "Bulletin?" A. Well, the lease is stronger than I supposed it would be; more binding.

Q. Stronger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what particular does it differ from what you expected to get, bidding under that advertisement? A. Well, I didn't suppose the Commissioners would compel me to keep the hotel open unless there was travel there.

Q. Well, does your lease require you to keep it open all the year? A. All the year, unless I get permission from the Commissioners to close it, which I have not done. It is open now.

MR. CHAPMAN: As a matter of fact did you not include privileges in your lease that were not considered in the advertisement? A. In my first application for the lease?

Q. Yes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not make requirements that were out of the province of the Commission to allow or grant? A. Yes; I remember one specification was that there should be but one other hotel allowed in the valley. It was going to cost a great deal of money to furnish the new hotel, and I didn't want to go into that business unless I could get a little protection in that way; but they refused to grant any, even in the least. They have a perfect right to open a dozen more if they see fit. I offered to Mr. Choynski, in case he succeeded in getting the new hotel, that I would sell him the goods, wares, merchandise, furniture, etc., that I had in the hotel that I was then occupying; also the unexpired lease, which of course would have to go by consent of the Commissioners.

Q. To whom did you offer that; this last gentleman? A. Yes, sir; for $6,000. The newspaper reports rather insinuated that I offered to bleed him to the amount of $6,000, and not give him value received. That was not the fact. I offered him all that I possessed in Yosemite for that sum of money if he got the new hotel. I was satisfied that the old hotel would not pay to run if the new one was open.

MR. CHAPMAN: Together with your unexpired lease? A. For your years; four years longer the old lease had to run.

MR. TULLY: Were you connected with any other parties at that time in business there? A. In Yosemite?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir; I was stage agent and have an interest——

Q. From what was read I understood there was some arrangement, or something that you agreed to do so far as you were concerned, but that you could not bind your partners, or that there were others concerned for whom you could not speak; that some one asked you if you would agree to protect him to some extent, and guarantee that anything further would not be exacted from him, and that you said you could only speak for yourself, that you would not speak for the others; leaving the impression that there was somebody associated with you, or somebody connected with the business that might come in and require that he should pay a little more, in order to enjoy the privileges that you propose to concede him? A. There was no one else connected with the business, and no one else connected with my hotel business, and I consulted no one as to what I should do. I had been in business for myself twenty-five or thirty years, and always paid 100 cents, and considered myself capable of doing my own business.

MR. GARDNER: When you asked that $6,000 from him, didn't he say he was willing to give it to you if you would secure him against your partners coming on him for as much more, and you said you couldn't reach them; you could only speak for yourself; that was what he swore to? A. Well, he swore to a good many things that were not true, and I wouldn't say about that, for the reason that this was a preliminary talk. He had not yet rented the Stoneman House, and therefore was not in a position to buy anything from me. I had nothing to sell until he had rented it. It was a preliminary talk.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you afterwards talk? A. No. After I leased it he came to me several times to know what I would take; but the impression got out in some way that the Commissioners didn't consider him a suitable man to run a respectable hotel, and, therefore, not to complicate the Commissioners, I avoided any conversation with him as to that matter.

MR. GARDNER: Then this conversation did not occur; not as he stated it? A. No, sir; evidence of collusion, he charges, and all that sort of business. There is nothing in it whatever. None of the Commissioners knew how much I was going to bid until my bid went in there and it was opened. It went in sealed. I never consulted them regarding it. In the other room he made charges; I suppose they don't come up here. He claimed that his first bid was $3,000 more than mine. That is not true.

MR. CHAPMAN: As a matter of fact, Mr. Cook, are you not paying more for your business in the valley than his original bid? As I understood it in his testimony there, he says his bid was $15,000? A. Yes; I am paying at the rate of $15,500 for ten years. I am paying $1,200 for the hotel, and $350 per annum for the other privileges.

MR. TULLOCH: But are the conditions identical—are the privileges identical with his bid? A. Yes, sir; he claims that he only bid $100 for what I bid $350 per annum for. That is what he states.

Q. Were all the privileges that were incorporated in your bid, the same as the privileges incorporated in his bid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Identical? A. Yes, sir. The hotel rent was fixed by the Commissioners at $12,000 for the ten years; $1,200 a year.

MR. CHAPMAN: Was it not fixed by the Legislature? Did they not require 3 per cent on $40,000? A. Yes, sir; that is the way the bill read by which they obtained the appropriation, that it should be 3 per cent on $40,000. The other privileges were identical. We all bid on them. I say, "We bid." I didn't see the bids, but I understood so, and he tells us now that he bid $100 a year for the outside privileges.

MR. TULLY: How do you know what his bid contained? Did you ever see his bid? A. No, sir; but I say the information from which we made our bids was given to us all at one sitting, by the Commissioners. They stated to us for what privileges they would receive bids.

Q. And they were all identical? A. Yes, sir; all identical; all made at one time, by one person, to the bidders. Mr. Choynski, being an irresponsible party, he makes these charges. He knows they are false. He has made a good deal of capital out of it; newspaper capital.

MR. CHAPMAN: Was it not a fact at the time these bids were put in, that Mr. Choynski was just then in the throes of a very disastrous hotel failure in San Francisco? A. I was told that he had made a failure; told before and since that he had made a failure of the house that he had been keeping—the Windsor Hotel, at the corner of Fifth and Market.

MR. TULLY: I understand that he offered every guarantee that was required by the Commissioners as to his financial ability? A. I hear him say so. That wouldn't go far with me.

MR. GARDNER: Didn't Mr. Goucher vouch for his financial ability? A. I didn't hear it.

MR. TULLOCH: Didn't Creed Haymond vouch for it? A. I never saw Creed Haymond.

MR. CHOYNSKI: Mr. Mills? A. No, sir; not to me.

MR. TULLY: Do you know whether or not, in determining his bid, they were influenced by any supposed inability, after he had offered the guarantees that he did? A. Well, I had heard the Commissioners say so since we have been here.

Q. You have heard the Commissioners themselves say so? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Didn't the Kreling Brothers vouch for his financial standing and ability? A. I saw no paper of any kind, and never saw the Kreling Brothers. I didn't hear them say anything. I don't know what they said.

MR. CHOYNSKI: The Commissioners got the written guarantee from Kreling Brothers that they would put up $50,000 if I got the lease. They had the writing.

THE WITNESS: The Commissioners are the people who know that. I don't know that. Now, as to the hotel rates in the valley. There has been a good deal said about that, and I would like to explain that the charges vary. The limit is $4 per day. Excursion people get theirs for $3 per day. These people that are brought out from the East—for instance, the Raymond & Whitcomb people, that Mr. Washburn was talking about. He brings from three hundred to four hundred people, Raymond & Whitcomb excursionists, into the valley every year. They come for $3 a day, and the teachers get less than that. There were about five hundred teachers up there last summer, and any one who wishes to go into the second dining-room, can go in there and get a meal for 50 cents—a good substantial meal, too; if he wants it by the week or month, it will be less.

MR. TULLY: Can an outsider that doesn't come over these stage lines, through the agency of Raymond, or those parties who bring parties in there and get reduced rates, could an outsider under similar circumstances obtain the same rates? Is this reduction of rates not a concession made to those parties who bring the tourists, and one that is not enjoyed by the general public? A. There are different qualities of rooms, as there are in all hotels.

Q. Supposing that Raymond & Co. bring over a certain class of tourists there; they come over their line; they are sent to a hotel, and they go there and inquire what the rates are. The rates are made with Raymond & Co., perhaps; when they get there they have a certain rate fixed for the party; and then another party, coming from the outside, who didn't come over that line, can they get the same accommodations as though they had come over that line? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: At the same rates? A. That is a little different.

MR. TULLY: I mean the same accommodations at the same rates? Then there would be a difference for a person that didn't come over those lines, in their accommodations—different from those brought over that line? A. Not if they come in the same number; but I would contract to take a hundred or five hundred cheaper than I would one. It wouldn't make any difference whose excursionists they were—whether it was a party gotten up among themselves, or some other party.

Q. If the numbers were equal they would find equal accommodations?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Equal rates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As those that came over the lines? A. Yes, sir. Even some of them come in there and rent rooms, and bring their food along, or buy it at the stores in there.

Q. And stop in the hotel? A. Yes, sir. It is for the interest of all in Yosemite to satisfy all who come there. Because, if they are satisfied, they go back and send their friends.

Q. We understand that as a general principle of business? A. Certainly. And in connection with that, I own a few shares of the stage stock, and of course I have a double interest in pleasing everybody, and generally succeed.

MR. TULLOCH: What class of people do you charge $4 a day? A. Well, I would charge this investigating committee $4 a day, if they came there and had the best in the house.

Q. Would you charge tourists $3 or $4 a day? A. Well, as I have just been telling, we charge them $3, and $4, and $2 50. And if they go in the second dining-room—

• MR. GARDNER: If they get the best rooms and the best board, the best of everything, you charge them $4 a day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the most that you do charge? A. Yes, sir. If they are satisfied with poorer accommodations and not such a fine table, and eat at the second table, the second dining-room, we charge them less; or even the first dining-room and a poorer room.

MR. TULLOCH: Do tourists generally take poorer accommodations than excursion parties and pay $4 a day? A. The teachers, who visited the valley to the number of about five hundred, wanted lower prices than any other body who had ever been in there; and, as I say, we made them rates for $2 50, and some of them only had a room, and supplied their own provisions; and I remember one gentleman who came there from Washington; a teacher; he had himself and wife and two daughters; and he told me that he could not afford to pay the rates, and wanted to eat in the second dining-room. I said to him: "The second dining-room is hardly fit for the ladies, and you go into my first dining-room, and when you go away I will charge you the same rate as you would pay in the other dining-room." He did so. Of course the second dining-room does not get the service, and the food is not so nice—so many delicacies. It is hardly a fit place for ladies to go.

MR. GARDNER: You manage to give pretty general satisfaction? A. Yes, sir. Last summer I had about two thousand two hundred guests.

Q. How long will the season continue? A. I left there on the twentieth of November. The hotel is open now.

Q. It generally commences when? A. It commences as early as the roads will permit; about the first of April.

Q. The business don't amount to much after the Fourth of July, does it?
A. No, sir; of course, last year was rather an exception, because the teachers came in August. But after the first of September until the time I closed, I ran behind $1,000, and it will be another $1,000 before I get there—the first of April.

MR. TULLOCH: What do you think is the general average into the valley of tourists, parties coming in there? A. Well, there were about three thousand by stages last year, besides the campers. I suppose there were six hundred campers, perhaps, more or less. Campers sometimes came in and get meals; some of them 4-bit meals and some $1 meals, and some 6 bits.

E. W. CHAPMAN.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE WITNESS: I don't desire to say anything further than in reference to the leasing of the hotel; nothing that occurs to me at present. We advertised, as I supposed according to law in Mariposa and Tuolumne Counties, and also in San Francisco. I think we used due diligence to bring this matter of leasing the hotel to the attention of every man, or any man that wished to lease hotels; and on the day appointed for opening the bids, we had but three, in two of which there were conditions imposed that the Commissioners thought they were not masters—not able to regulate. Consequently, they were no bids at all, in our judgment. And we had unlimited means at our disposal—our traveling expenses were exhausted. I believe the State owes each of the Commissioners—well, varying in sums; some $30 or $40 to myself for expenses that year. We could not return home again and readvertise, and appear again unless we did it at our own expense. We had no money in the fund for that business; so we counseled with the three bidders who were present, and asked them to amend their bids, and present them the next day, which they did. In the meantime this gentleman, this person that has been before you, was a total stranger to the entire committee. We had never seen him before or heard of him, and very naturally made some inquiry in reference to him, and I don't feel that it becomes necessary to say that we didn't feel—we felt that we could not very well entertain a bid from him. Besides, his second bid was very much lower than Mr. Cook's, who was the only other bidder that we had on the next day. And in due course, the lease was made out to Mr. Cook. One other reason for asking these parties to amend their bids was, that the law appropriating this money for the construction of the hotel, asked that it pay 3 per cent on $40,000, and be deposited in the State Treasury. Now, we had to lease, in connection with the hotel, certain ground privileges, etc., that belonged in the Yosemite fund. If we made the lease under the bid to the party it was putting the same moneys that belonged properly in the Yosemite fund in the State Treasury. That was lost to us at that time; and that was one other consideration for asking them to amend their bids, and present them the second day.

MR. TULLY: Well, were those propositions submitted to all the parties?
A. All the parties; they were all present.

Q. This gentleman who testified here the other evening? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same condition precisely as to all the parties? A. Precisely the same condition to all the three parties, who consented to it and retired from the room, and again appeared the next day, two of them presenting bids, the third one having withdrawn his entirely—presented no bid.

Q. The conditions of those bids had been changed somewhat from those that were advertised in the paper? A. Certainly.

Q. But those other conditions were offered the same? A. Exactly.

Q. To all the bidders? A. For my part there was no prejudice. This person was a stranger to me, and I knew absolutely nothing about him; and while he refers to Mr. Mills as authority for his financial standing, I want to say to the committee that Mr. Mills was the authority for this committee that this man had no financial standing. He had consulted Bradstreet and some other sources.

Q. Bradstreet's commercial agency? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Mills was authority before the committee on the second day that this man had really no financial standing.

Q. Was he made aware of the fact that there were some doubts of his ability to comply with his contract? A. He was, to his satisfaction; and he stated his authority to the committee, and it seemed to be entirely satisfactory to the committee that they could not, in justice to themselves, consider the proposition; even, mind you, if it had been better than the one presented by Mr. Cook. But Mr. Cook's second proposition was very much the better one.

Q. Well, what guarantee did he offer to give? A. He offered no guarantee, at least—

Q. From a financial standpoint? A. He presented no document to guarantee showing us that he was able to give any guarantee whatever. He made a statement, I believe, that Kreling Bros. would back him in the operation; but it was not backed up by documentary evidence.

Q. You had nothing but his statement? A. That was all, sir.

Q. Did you get any statement from Mr. Goucher? A. Mr. Goucher made no remarks whatever about this gentleman before the committee.

Q. Then you had simply his statement? A. That was all. He was a total stranger to me, and I made no effort to make any inquiries about him, having charged that matter on some other members of the committee.

Q. Well, these changes, or the change that was made in the conditions of that letting? Those suggestions that brought it about, did they originate entirely with the Commissioners, or were they suggested from anybody outside? A. The changes in the requirements from the bidders?

Q. Yes; from whomever should lease it? A. Well, the facts were just as I stated; we were compelled to pay into the State Treasury $1,200 of the rent from that hotel; $1,200 a year; and if we rented in connection with the hotel certain ground privileges, store and otherwise, you know, from which the Yosemite fund should naturally derive some $200 or $300 or $400, if we rented the whole together, it would be somewhat difficult to satisfy the State officers that the whole sum should not go into the State Treasury; and consequently we segregated the interests and so instructed the bidders, that they should bid on the segregated interests; the hotel for so much money and the privileges for so much; and then they would go into their respective funds. That was the cause of the amending of the bids. Now, we discussed the propriety of advertising these facts, but, as I say, we had absolutely no funds to travel upon. If we had to return home and come back again in some fifteen or thirty days, we must do it at our own private expense; we had no fund to draw upon, and we had already been drawing on our private purses to defray our expenses of the June meeting preceding this October meeting; so we being in the habit of getting no glory from the position and a very considerable outlay, it was a little monotonous, you know, on a fellow.

Q. Like Mark Twain's cow falling through the top of his house? A. Somewhat; yes, sir.

Q. Then I understand the proposition is, that although those bids were changed, the terms of the lease were changed—the conditions imposed upon the person who should lease it; that those conditions were suggested by the Commissioners, and not from outsiders; and that all of the competitors for that lease were fully apprised of those at the same time? A. Entirely so, sir; so that no honorable gentleman could have for one moment taken exceptions to it.

Q. With regard to the hotel and other privileges? A. They were fully instructed, the three bidders, exactly why this amendment of the bids was asked, and why they could not have further time for consideration. They were in possession of all the facts, just as I tell them, and much more plainly, because Mr. Mills has a very fine way of putting things, you know, and he was really the spokesman of the committee. And the Secretary, Mr. Griffith, was in this room this evening, but it is so late that he has retired; I would be very glad to have him corroborate me. There was no reason why any honorable gentleman bidding for the hotel on the first occasion should find any exceptions to the proceedings of the hotel committee in placing before that committee his second bid.

MR. GARDNER: Were the Commissioners in the habit of holding meetings with closed doors, having the doors locked? A. I have been a Commissioner, I believe now for five years; I think five years; and I have no hesitation in saying that I have never met in a Commission room with locked doors. During the June meeting of 1885, the Commission went into a caucus for about one hour, having thrown the doors wide open to everybody up to that time; that was about lunch time, I think. We went into caucus for about one hour, and again opened the building to everybody to present any complaints.

Q. With that exception? A. With that exception it has been always with open doors. And I believe that was the first meeting after the passage of the Act; and the occasion for that was that there was a change of Secretaries at that meeting, and some little confusion in the meeting brought about this caucus, you know.

MR. TULLOCH: What was the nature of the caucus? A. Well, it was a purely private matter. We had nothing of public importance under consideration; that is, we were not considering petitions or complaints, or anything of that kind.

MR. GARDNER: The other meetings were not with closed doors? A. Never, sir; and that was not entirely private. Let me correct. Dr. May and the "Bulletin" man, Fitch, were present.

MR. TULLOCH: Didn't Mr. Goucher have some trouble in getting in, and didn't he complain that they would not even allow the attorney of the Commissioners a right to come in? A. I never heard of it, sir; never heard of it; that Mr. Goucher had trouble getting in?

Q. Yes? A. I never heard of it, sir.

MR. GARDNER: You say it was only on that one occasion that they had it? A. That was all; and then that was not private, in fact, because these two gentlemen were with us. In the meantime, during this meeting, Mr. May was made Secretary.

MR. COOK: I have been told by some of the Commissioners that San Francisco merchants appeared before the Commissioners, at the time they leased the Stoneman House, and warned them against letting it to Choynski. Does Mr. Chapman know of such a fact? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Was that party who appeared and gave you warning in any way interested in the letting of that house, or connected with persons who had bids there? A. Not at all, sir. I don't know that I have ever seen him since.

MR. COOK: I don't know who it was, but I was told the other day, here in town, that such was the fact.

THE WITNESS: We were in possession of ample evidence, as I said; enough to satisfy anybody.

MR. TULLY: Were you in possession of no evidence, on the other side, of his rectitude and capability of conducting the business, if he was awarded the lease? A. We didn't seek, after receiving the information—

Q. Very true; but did nobody come to his aid or rescue, and recommend him, or agree to stand sponsor for him? A. Not a soul, sir.

I. CHOYNSKI.

Recalled, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: Mr. Choynski, what parties recommended you, if any, to the Commission, as a responsible party, and a party who could carry on the business? Answer—My references upon the bid were Governor Bartlett, Senator Hearst, Dr. William J. Bryan, Railroad Commissioner P. J. White, and William Kreling, besides some others.

Q. Did Mr. Goucher mention you? A. I will tell you how this was. First of all, I desire to make a statement; that I never failed in the hotel business. That is untrue. A hotel which I have kept failed in the hands of other parties.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is not material. A. It has been stated here, and might prejudice the minds of the committee.

MR. CHAPMAN: If I made the statement, I did not make it from knowledge. A. I never failed in the hotel business. The statement was made that I failed in the hotel business, and was on the verge of bankruptcy. I never failed in the hotel business. At the meeting, when the bids were opened, William Kreling was at my side for fully two hours while the Commissioners were transacting business. When Commissioner Mills—I won't be positive whether it was Commissioner Mills—but the question was asked whether I was prepared with the means to furnish the hotel to the extent as stated it would require. I told the Commissioners that I was ready with an amount of $50,000. They wanted to know whether I could verify that, or give them proof, as they didn't know me. Mr. Kreling had just left me then; I looked for him in the corridor, and couldn't find him; and Mr. Goucher arose in the meeting and made the statement to the Commissioners, saying that he was reliably informed that the means were at my command, and Mr. Mills corroborated his statement; said that he had the same information.

MR. TULLY: These references that you gave, Hearst and those others, did you obtain permission from them to give their names as references? A. Well, I can tell this much, that a number of them made it their business to go and speak to some of the Commissioners. They went to see Senator Goucher and to see Mr. Mills, or sent to Commissioners through friends of theirs. Some of the references made it their business to go right there to the room before the meeting opened. One of them even called Mr. Mills out just before the meeting opened, and I met Dr. Bryan there myself. I didn't know that he was coming, but I met him accidentally. He came there in my behalf to tell these gentlemen that I was not only the most competent man in the State to keep a first class hotel, but that I had all the means at my command that were requisite for that business.

MR. TULLOCH: Who said that? A. Some of the gentlemen to whom I referred; among them Mr. Kreling, Mr. White, and Dr. Bryan. I don't know who else. I mentioned Kreling.

Q. You gave the Commissioners ample and reliable evidence of your capability to receive the lease and receive the business? A. When one of the Commissioners asked the question, after Kreling had gone, whether I could give him that in writing, as Kreling was absent at the time, I brought Kreling's guarantee the following morning, in which he said that he would supply me with all the means that were requisite. They asked me whether I was prepared with bonds, and I spoke that day to some of the wealthiest merchants of San Francisco, friends of mine. Not only were they willing to go upon the bond, but two among them offered to furnish an additional bondsman, so as to have some one on the bond with them that was congenial to them.

MR. CHAPMAN; I have no remarks to make, I believe, excepting he states when he came the second day—when he came the second day we had no bid to consider. We had then a bid which was a very much better bid to consider, and I disclaim all this. There was nobody to vouch for him, to my knowledge.

THE WITNESS: I came to the conclusion that I couldn't get that hotel on any reasonable terms, and that I would risk my money in a foolish manner, and I filled in that amount for the privileges at a ridiculously low figure. I had offered $3,000 more, exclusive of the privileges, originally.

ALLEN KELLY.

Affirmed and testified as follows:

MR. CHAPMAN: You had Mr. Choynski summoned here, did you, to appear here, or at your instance he was summoned? Answer—No. I furnished his name at the request of the Senate Committee; not here.

Q. You met him in San Francisco just before coming up here? A. Yes, sir; his name had already been given. A summons had been issued for him and he had not appeared.

THE CHAIRMAN: I summoned Mr. Choynski.

MR. CHAPMAN: You met this man, and he told you he was broke; he didn't know whether he could get up here or not, didn't he? A. What has that got to do with Yosemite?

Q. That is all right. This man is a capitalist. In his evidence he says that he is a capitalist. A. I asked Mr. Choynski if he was coming up, and he said he couldn't come then because he didn't have the money.

MR. TULLOCH: How long ago was that? A. The day I came up, Monday.

Q. How long ago was this matter which you mentioned some time ago about the hotel? How long ago was it that this hotel was leased? A. I don't know what the date of the leasing of the hotel was. I have no knowledge on that matter at all. My impression is that it was some time more than a year ago.

Q. A man might be rich two years ago, and not have a cent to-day? A. Yes, sir.

MR. CHOYSKI: A man might not want to spend any money to volunteer any information.

MR. CHAPMAN: When did Mr. Choynski come up to Sacramento? A. I don't know what day he came up. I suppose it was the day he testified before the Senate Committee; yesterday, or the day before; I don't know.

Q. He has a brother, hasn't he? A. I have heard so.

Q. And his brother was summoned here by mistake? A. So I understand. There was another Choynski here anyway. He was not the man who was intended to be summoned.

Q. And his brother returned to San Francisco and this man appeared? A. I don't know whether his brother returned or not.

ALBERT SNOW.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: You live right at the foot of the hill, right where you start up to the Vernal Falls? Answer—Yes, sir; I live betwixt the two Falls.

Q. Well, what do you know about that trail; if you know anything about it, tell us what it is? A. I built the trail.

MR. CHAIRMAN: State what you know about it, Mr. Snow; and with regard to the condition of it? A. As far as the condition of it, I kept it in repair for eleven years, or a little over—for twelve years—and since that it has been in the hands of the Commissioners; and it was my business—it was left with me—any time I see the trail out of order, to notify them, and I do so. Every week I go over it; but, of course, it is like this with that trail, there is bound to be—say, after July, we get heavy rains, and they have to have logs across to keep the water from running down, and the dirt will get out of the way, and there was no way to prevent it.

MR. GARDNER: It will get washed out? A. Yes, sir; and as far as any other way the trails have been in very good condition the last two, or three, or four years. It won't do for it to go more than two weeks; I don't suppose there has been any time in the season that it has gone over two weeks without cleaning the rocks out, but at the end of that two weeks it gets pretty bad, along late in the fall; it don't do that way in the spring of the year.

THE CHAIRMAN: Which trail do you speak of now? A. I speak of the one from the foot of the fall here; to the foot of Nevada Fall.

Q. You don't refer to the trail from Glacier Peak around to your house? A. No, sir. I have not been out in two years; that is, as far as the trail is concerned. I could tell you anything about the other matters. As far as the saddle trains, I may state about that, when they make the trip it costs them no more to make a trip in two days than it does in one. If they take one day they have $6 to pay. If they make it two, and stop at my house over night, they only pay, for the two days, $5 to make the trip.

Q. That is for a horse and guide? A. That is for a horse and guide.

MR. TULLOCH: How much was that for a horse and guide? A. If they make it in two days, they pay $5; if they make it in two days, they pay $2 50 a day, and the party has to pay for the guide; but if they make it in one day, they have $6 to pay.

MR. GARDNER: For the horse? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then pay for the guide besides? A. Yes, sir; they have to pay for the guide for the $6, the same as they do for the $5; just the same; and the reason that the only charge the $5 is, they would rather they would be two days making it than to make it in one day.

Q. It is better for the horse? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLOCH: What saddle train is this? A. Kenney & Coffman.

Q. In case they make two trips in one day—that is, start early and make two trips—how much do they charge then? A. Well—

Q. I believe there is a distance of twelve or fourteen miles that makes a round trip, or they can make it twice in that distance? A. They can't make it in one day; that is, make two trips in one day; they can't do it. You can't get a horse—you can't hardly get a horse in the world that can make two trips in one day.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does your house stand within the limits of the grant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have a lease from the Commissioners? A. I have a permit.

Q. For what length of time do they give you that permit? A. For a year.

Q. Did you ever apply to them for a lease for more than one year? A. Well, when I first commenced I didn't have no lease.

Q. Since you commenced taking the lease from them, have you ever applied to them for more than one year at a time? A. I don't know that I have.

[Further hearing continued until to-morrow evening, February 15, 1889.]

FRIDAY EVENING, February 15, 1889.

WILLIAM F. COFFMAN.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you reside? Answer—I reside in Mariposa County; seven months of the year in the Yosemite Valley, and five months in Mariposa town.

Q. I presume you are pretty well posted with regard to the object of this investigation? A. Well, from one standpoint, yes, sir.

Q. Certain charges have been preferred here. It is the mission of the committee to try to obtain a little light upon that subject, and the proceedings here have been introduced to interrogatories on the different charges that have been made. The first charge here is "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." Are you acquainted, Mr. Coffman, pretty generally with the management of that valley? A. Yes; I am as much so as any one, I guess.

Q. This charge is "Misapplying by the Commissioners." A. Of public money?

Q. Yes? Without any reference to any particular Commissioner or any set of Commissioners, but for the general management of the Yosemite Valley? A. I take it that that charge would imply, in using public money, a criminal intent, under that charge.

Q. No; it does not necessarily mean applying it with a criminal intent. A. I think there may have been possibly an error of judgment at times, but certainly no criminal intent, that I think that could imply; it would, in my judgment.

Q. Money may be applied without any criminal intent, and applied to a bad purpose? A. Very true; if a cashier of a bank steals a couple of thousand dollars, and gets away with it, he may say he misapplies it, without any criminal intent. I take it to be the same in that case. I think in a certain case—the road that was spoken of last night.

Q. This is very plain language: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." A. I don't know anything of that kind, according to my way of thinking.

Q. You have no knowledge of any spending of money, or the use of money in that valley that would come under the head of misapplying it? A. No, sir; I don't think they did it.

Q. Are you pretty well acquainted with the expenditures of money that have been made in that valley? A. Yes, sir; with all of them.

Q. Moneys at the disposal of the Commission? A. I have been a resident of the valley for fourteen years nearly.

Q. Have you pretty generally an accurate knowledge of what use the moneys have been put to? A. Yes, sir; I have a knowledge of all the moneys that have been spent in there. All the improvements that have been done have been paid for by the State, and as a matter of course I would know what the improvements were.

Q. Have improvements been made there by the Commissioners, or under their orders, that in your judgment, amounted to a misapplication of the money? A. No, sir; as I said before, I couldn't call it by a harsher term than an error of judgment. I don't believe it was a misapplication of funds, because it would imply something else, and I couldn't say so, because I don't think it would be true.

Q. Have there not been moneys spent there in that valley that, in your judgment, might have been appropriated or applied to a better purpose? A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. Upon what do you predicate your ideas that it might have been applied to a better purpose? A. Well, the very trail that was spoken of last night. I think if that money had been applied in some other parts of the valley, it would have been very much better—the trail that Washburn was testifying to. This appropriation of funds, I think, as I said before, that it was not intentional on their part. I think it was wrong judgment; an error of judgment.

Q. We are not questioning their judgment, but simply the fact whether moneys have been applied there, in any particular instance, in which, it was not, in your judgment, to the best advantage, not the best means; the best application of the money at their disposal. You cite that trail. Give us some reason why you think that was an injudicious expenditure of money, if you think so? A. It was an error of judgment, in the first place, as I take it, that the Commissioners allowed the man to take the contract. They took the man's judgment that took the contract. I have had some experience in building roads, and did so by contract. Now, when a man would come to me and say, "Well, I will build you that five miles of road, for say $5,000," why, if I thought it would cost me more than that, I would say, "Will you take the contract?" I won't say, "You will not do it for that, I will give you $10,000." That would not be a business transaction. In this case the man worked up the job himself, to put the trail there. I don't think the Commissioners broached the subject to him. He wanted a job, and he worked it up, and said, "I will do that for $1,500." If the Commissioners had had the judgment that the man ought to have had that did the work, they would have said to him, "You can't do it, we won't give you that contract, because we know that you can't do it for that money." But I don't think that they knew that. They thought if the man could do it for $1,500, it would be a cheap job, and so it would, and they contracted with him for $1,500. Well, of course, it was a failure.

Q. Are not those Commissioners supposed to be men of ordinary business capacity and intelligence? A. Yes, sir; I would suppose them to have been such. However, when that transaction occurred, I don't know how many Commissioners that is on this Board was there then. I don't know whether there is any except Madden.

Q. It does not apply to any particular Commissioner, or any particular set of Commissioners?

MR. HOOK: What year did that happen in? A. That the trail was built?

Q. Yes? A. Well, I couldn't tell you the exact year, but I think it was six or seven years ago.

MR. HUTCHINGS: In 1882 or 1883? A. I know it was six or seven years ago.

MR. HOOK: You don't think there was any of the present Commission on there except Madden? A. I believe not.

MR. TULLY: Well, do you consider yourself an expert or better capable of judging whether the man would be able to do that work for that amount of money? A. I am not an expert in any such business as that; no. I am not testifying as an expert.

Q. Do you consider that you are better calculated to judge of whether or not that was a judicious operation? A. It was my judgment that the man could not do the work for that money, if that is what you mean; my judgment was that he couldn't do the work for that money.

Q. You don't claim to be an expert? A. No.

Q. In your opinion, were not those Commissioners just about as well calculated to judge of that matter as you were? A. It was an error of judgment with the Commission. I could not give it another name.

Q. I am not talking about that, but as to the fact; if you had had the letting of that contract? A. I would let it to him for $1,500, and I would have made him build it, or I would not have paid him a cent. That is what I would have done. I would have let him take it. I would have made him give me a bond, or build it; or I would not have paid him.

MR. HOOK: Did he not build the trail? A. No, he didn't get anywhere with it. He got it started; certainly.

Q. Did they pay the money? A. I have no knowledge, whether they did or not. I have understood that they did, but I don't know that of my own knowledge. I know he did not build the trail. I know that of my own knowledge.

Q. How much of the trail did he complete? A. For the $1,500?

Q. No; how much did he complete of the bargain? A. He has built, I should say, something over a mile.

Q. How long a distance was the trail? A. If he had completed it?

Q. Yes? A. He built more than a mile; I guess, probably, a mile and a half.

Q. How long was the trail? A. What trail do you mean?

MR. TULLY: The trail that he contracted to build? A. Well, he would have had to have went about three or four hundred yards further; that was all. He would have had to have built about three or four hundred yards further, but it would have cost him—well, he couldn't do it, I don't think, for $5,000 or $6,000, or $8,000. It just bluffed right up against a bank of solid granite. I don't know what the height is; probably seventy-five or eighty feet. and there was no other way in the world but to go right through it. It would have been all blasting, and it was very hard rock, and I wouldn't know what to estimate.

MR. HOOK: You have no knowledge as to whether he was paid anything on the contract? A. No; I don't know anything about that. I never saw any of the books; never saw him receive a cent of money, and he never told me anything about the matter.

MR. TULLY: Was that trail subsequently finished? A. No, sir; and never will be, in my judgment.

Q. Was there any work done on that trail by the contractor after his contract expired? A. I have understood there was; but of my own knowledge, I know nothing about it. I have understood there was.

Q. You don't know whether he ever worked there by the day on that contract? A. No, sir; I do not. I have heard he did, but I don't know whether it is so or not.

Q. You don't know whether he ever received any money or not? A. No, sir; I never knew positively of my own knowledge of his ever receiving a cent.

MR. HOOK: Do you think then in building that trail, it was just a difference of judgment between you and the Commissioners? A. I think it was an error of judgment in the Commissioners letting him go any further after the contract expired. For instance, when he contracted to build the trail clear through for $1,500—understand me now—when he had expended his first $1,500, if they paid him (I don't know whether they did or not), and they found he only got so far, and did so small an amount of work, it seems to me to let him have another contract for $1,500, was an error of judgment; that is, it was not right.

Q. Did they let him have another contract? A. That is what I have heard; I don't know; I have heard so. I know he worked there; I saw him at work there.

Q. What is your business there? A. I am in the livery business.

Q. Are you one of the firm of Coffman & Kenney? A. Yes, sir; I am one of the firm.

MR. TULLY: You had ample opportunities, had you not, to judge of the character of the work that was to be done there, and that was contracted for with that gentleman? A. Yes, sir; if I had been a Commissioner, and he would have offered to have done the work for me for $1,500, I would have contracted with him at once; I wouldn't have hesitated a minute.

MR. HOOK: But you would not have been willing to pay him unless he finished his contract? A. No.

Q. You do not know whether the Commissioners ever paid him anything? A. I don't know whether they paid him or not.

MR. TULLY: Have you ever estimated, or have you any knowledge, from personal inspection, of what the value of the work that he did would be worth? A. No; I wouldn't form an idea; I wouldn't undertake it; wouldn't attempt to make an estimate, or anything of the kind; I couldn't do it.

MR. TULLOCH: After the contract was over, did Anderson do any further work for the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; I have so stated.

Q. Do you know how many days he worked? A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it.

Q. Do you know whether he was paid for it? A. No, sir; I know he worked there, because I saw him working there myself. I have just stated that.

MR. HOOK: He had a right to work there, if the Commissioners had not paid him for the other work, hadn't he? A. If they had not paid him?

Q. Yes? A. Well, I don't know; I don't understand the question.

Q. The question is this: If he was paid for the other work, it looked like they had paid him for something he didn't complete? A. And that he was willing to go on with it.

Q. Is that the same trail he worked on? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Afterwards? A. Yes, sir; he worked right on the same one.

MR. TULLY: The second charge here is, "The destruction of private and public property in Yosemite Valley." A. Well, as to the destruction of private property, I don't see how it would be possible for the Commissioners to destroy private property, from the fact that the property there belongs to the State, and would be considered, in my mind, public property. I tell you that for the first part of it.

Q. Has there been any property at all destroyed there? A. There has been some buildings torn down; yes, sir; several of them.

Q. Do you know to whom they belonged at the time they were destroyed? A. They belonged to the State, I suppose.

Q. Do you know that, of your own knowledge, that they belonged to the State; in other words, that the State had acquired the title? A. Well, I don't know. I have been in the valley for a good many years. I never owned any property there. I always leased mine from the State.

Q. Who had possession of that property prior to its destruction? A. Possession of which?

Q. Well, what was the character of any of the property, if you know of any property? A. I know what was known as the old Cook hotel has been torn down, and the lumber that was in it that was good for anything has been worked into other buildings, and the debris that was left burned up. It was so with the Leidig hotel. And it was also the case with this man Anderson, that had the contract of the trail. He had a little shanty for boarding the men, and changing their mining clothes, and so on, and sleeping and living. That was torn down and the lumber removed.

Q. The Leidig hotel was torn down? A. Yes, sir; I spoke of that before. That was the little house I am talking about now, up where this man was building the trail. That was torn down, and there was a building torn down that used to be a photograph gallery, a small building. I don't know for what reason that was done. I was not there when it was torn down. It was done in the winter, when I was out. I know of those four buildings having been torn down.

Q. Have you any means of knowing whether there was any of that property belonging to or was claimed by private persons at the time of its destruction? A. I have understood that Anderson claimed the building up at his place, and it seems to me that somebody has told me that there was a claim on the old photograph gallery, but I couldn't tell who it was.

Q. Was there a claim to the Leidig hotel property? A. Well, Leidig claims that too, I believe.

Q. And then what was the name of the other? A. Cook. No, there was no claim for that, because it was all paid for. The State paid $16,000 for it.

Q. What was the character of that property for which they paid the $16,000? A. Well, when they bought it it was all right, but when they tore it down, if they had left it another year, they would not have had anything to tear down. It would have fallen down itself. Part of it fell down last winter.

Q. How long after they bought it before it was torn down? A. I can't tell. The statutes will show what year. The State appropriated $60,000. Mr. Hutchings, you can give me the date. By the way, you sold yours at the same time. What date was it that you received your money for your place?

MR. HUTCHINGS: 1874.

THE WITNESS: 1874.

MR. HOOK: Wasn't the payment of those buildings sort of a settlement of claims that people had against the State? A. As I understand it, before the valley was ceded to California by the United States Government, there was parties that went in there and settled on it as they do on public lands, as a possessory right; they claimed there one hundred and sixty acres, just as farmers do on the outside, and there was a contest. After it was ceded to the State—Hutchings was one and Lemmon was another, and I believe Black had some claims, and some other parties that claimed that they had a right to it, and that they should be paid for the improvements, and it was in litigation for several years; I don't know, eight or ten possibly. Mr.

Hutchings can testify to that matter, as he was the principal one, and it was finally decided in favor of the State, and the Legislature, as an act of justice, passed an appropriation of $60,000 to be divided among the parties in there, and sent a commission up expressly to do that business, and they did so.

Q. This division of this $60,000 was not an act of the Commission at all. It was an act of the State to move those parties from that ground? A. Yes, sir; and the property then, as I understand it, came to the State as an entirety. Everything that was there afterwards was considered State property. There were claims put in at that time.

Q. This $60,000 that the State appropriated to buying these different claimants out, it couldn't be charged that they paid that much for the buildings, could it? A. It couldn't be charged as payment for the buildings?

Q. Yes? A. What could it have been paid for? They had nothing else.

Q. They had a certain claim—one hundred and sixty acres? A. As I understood it, it was only to pay them for the improvements. The Government claimed the land, and could take it from them by force of law, but as an act of justice they did that. They were not compelled to do it; the State was not compelled to do that. I believe the Courts so decided.

Q. They thought it was a matter of justice to those parties to pay them? A. Yes, sir; that is the way I understood it.

Q. They thought they had certain rights that the State ought to observe? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: They had equitable rights? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was to extinguish their equitable rights? A. That is the way I understand it.

Q. To extinguish their claim, whether it was land or anything? A. Everything included. It was their entire interest and right, and everything.

Q. The object of this appropriation was to extinguish their rights, whether legal or equitable, to the claims that they were setting up against the State? A. That is my judgment.

MR. HOOK: Do you know whether these parties after they received this money from the State, still insisted on having claims in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For instance, the Leidig hotel and this Anderson claim? A. The Leidig hotel didn't cut any figure. It was not built then—yes, it was built; but there was nothing allowed for that. I don't know how that was either. But there was nothing paid there, not a cent.

Q. But there were other parties that still had claims there? A. Yes, sir; next spring Mr. Hutchings was paid $24,000 to extinguish his rights. He received his money, and afterwards went up and took possession of his property, and there was some trouble. They had to send to Mariposa, the county seat, to get the Sheriff to put him out.

Q. What year was that? A. 1885; I was there myself.

MR. TULLY: Then the Leidig property was not one of the properties the rights of which were in controversy? A. No, sir; I don't think he got $1.

MR. HOOK: Do you know why he didn't get anything? A. No; I can't remember at this time why it was; what the reason of it was.

Q. Didn't he have as much justice in getting something as the rest? A. Well, it would appear so, certainly. I will tell you—no, I think he had not been there so long. Let me get that as I understand it. When he went there he rented the Black premises, what is known now as the Cook hotel, and Black put him out by some means; I don't know whether it was by law or force; but at all events, he got him out; and then he went about four hundred yards below, and built this house.

Q. Did he build this house under the sanction of the Commission? A. That I can't tell you; I can't tell you; I couldn't say.

Q. Had he any right to build that on the State property, without? A. No; he had no right to do it without.

Q. If he did build it, was it his property, or the State's property? A. That would be a fine point of law. The State owns that land. If I owned one hundred and sixty acres of ground, and a man builds his house on it, and I give him legal notice and time to take it off, and he don't take it off, I claim that it is my house. That is my judgment.

Q. I was asking whether you thought he had still a right? A. I have understood—I don't know how true that is—but some of the Commissioners are here; they have the records, and they can testify to that matter.

MR. TULLY: Do you know whether or not at the time Leidig went down and built the other hotel, whether he still persisted, and set up any rights as against the State, and claimed the right to do it? A. That is a long matter to go into, and it will take time, if you will give me my own way of telling it. Leidig didn't put any more money in that house than a certain other man. He got the house started. He was running a whip-saw, and had some men working for him, and he got short, and got stopped. He got where he couldn't get any credit for his provisions, or means of any kind to get along with, and he went to Mariposa, to a friend of mine by the name of Deveney, and he borrowed $1,600, and sold him half the premises and half of the business. Well, old man Deveney went up with him, and they went along about two years together, and it seems that they couldn't agree, and Deveney gave him a proposition: "I will either buy you out or you buy me out;" and the result was that he sold out to Leidig, and he sold out for his same $1,600, and took a note and mortgage at that time, and the interest has run on. I was talking to the old man, and he told me that it amounted to some $3,300, and he never got a nickel. He put in as much of the building as Leidig. He owned half of the whole thing, and he has never made any kind of a demand on the Commissioners for anything, that I know of.

MR. TULLY: Do you know whether Leidig had any lease of the property; a right of lease or permission? A. A lease from the Commissioners, do you mean?

Q. Yes; to build that house? A. I don't know. At the time he built it I didn't know anything about it. I was in the valley off and on while he was building it too, but I couldn't tell you what right he had.

Q. You don't know whether he was there as a squatter, or claiming some right of his own, or whether he went there under a lease from the Commissioners? A. No. I have been told—the records will show that in the Commissioner's office—that he went to them, and in consideration of a ten years' lease, free without pay, that he would deed the house to them. I believe that is a fact.

MR. HOOK: You don't know that of your own knowledge? A. Of my own knowledge; I never saw the paper. I have heard him testify in the Senate the other day that he did do it himself.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I have a copy of the deed.

THE WITNESS: Then it is a matter of fact that he did that, isn't it?

MR. HUTCHINGS: Yes, sir.

THE WITNESS: I thought he did. I have heard it was so; but of right he didn't have but half of it to deed away really, but he had the possession.

MR. HOOK: You stated awhile ago that you considered that they erred in judgment in tearing down those buildings? A. No, sir; I did not. I don't think there was any error. In that Cook hotel it was just simply between tearing it down and letting it fall down itself; that was all.

Q. In that part that they tore down, didn't they use the timber to build other buildings? A. Yes, sir; in the Leidig house there was some good timber.

Q. Did the building of the Stoneman House necessitate their tearing those buildings down? A. No; I don't see why it would.

Q. Could they have rented those buildings? A. Possibly. I think likely they could; no, not one of them; well, you could have rented it as long as it stood up.

Q. I mean the leading hotel particularly. That was in pretty good condition, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir; the front part was in fairly good condition. The upstairs part of the building, I don't think I have been in it for several years. I don't know anything about it. The stairway goes up on the outside, on the east end of the building. Of course it is exposed to the storms and the elements, both hot and cold, or wet, and the stairway was rickety; I noticed that, but the Commissioners, I think, had repaired them to a certain extent, and laid a new floor, some year or two ago.

Q. If the Commissioners removed them, it was simply a matter of judgment with them in removing the buildings, tearing them down? A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. For the best advantage and best interest of the State? A. I think that is what they did it for. I don't see why they could have any other motive.

MR. TULLY: Was Leidig running that hotel? A. No; he had not been there for four or five months. There was nobody in it. One of his sons was there fishing around the valley and he slept in it; that was all; two of his sons; two of his boys. The household furniture had been sold, and he and his family had been gone to Los Angeles four or five months before it was torn down.

MR. HOOK: Could this Leidig hotel have been fitted up as a cheap hotel for the accommodation of campers in the valley? A. It could, but not within two miles of where the camping ground is at present.

MR. TULLOCH: You spoke awhile ago about the claims of certain parties having been founded in equity and that they were extinguished, finally bought or extinguished. Well, now— A. I didn't say anything as to their being equitable. I said I supposed that was the view that the Legislature took of it. I don't know the opinion myself.

Q. Wasn't Liedig's claim, in your opinion, just as equitable as the balance? A. I have stated twice that I didn't know anything about it. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Then his were not extinguished then? A. No. I stated to the committee that whilst these others were extinguished at the time the Leidig building was either in course of erection or had been built, it was not in this, and I don't know for what reason.

Q. While the balance were extinguished, his were not extinguished? A. Not to my knowledge.

MR. HOOK: Did Leidig ever have any claims? A. He claimed his building when he first built it, of course.

Q. Did he present any claim officially? A. I couldn't tell you. I don't know of my own knowledge.

THE CHAIRMAN: Was any protest entered by Leidig against the destruction of that building? A. I have understood there was. I didn't see it. I think the windows were nailed down and the doors were locked, and when they went to tear it down the Guardian opened the door. I don't know of my own knowledge. I have been told.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge? A. I don't. I was not within a quarter of a mile of it. I heard that was so.

MR. TULLY: Have you ever heard from Leidig that they broke it open? A. I heard Leidig say so on the street, the other day, but he was further off than I was. He was in Los Angeles; I was within four hundred yards of it. He heard of it the same as I did.

MR. TULLOCH: You were within four hundred yards of it when it was done? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it was done? A. I say I was told it was done; I didn't see it. I think that nobody will question that it was done.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know of your own knowledge that they entered the premises forcibly? A. No, sir; I do not. I am saying that I do not. I have only been told these things.

MR. TULLY: Wasn't it a matter of general repute in the valley that they did take possession of that house forcibly? A. Well, as I understand it, yes, sir; that would be the term to use; that when they went down to do it, the boy, his son, forbid him from going in the house, and they said: "That is all right; that is a point of law. You have that on your side, but we are going in." That is the way it was told to me, and I don't know whether it is true.

MR. HOOK: It was simply told to you; you don't know it of your own knowledge? A. No; I say that I don't know it of my own knowledge; I have been told so.

MR. TULLY: Wasn't that the general understanding in the valley there, so far as you know? A. I think so.

Q. "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." What do you know about that? A. I don't know that there has been any unnecessary destruction of timber. Now, there is some witnesses here, I have heard them testify about the cutting down of these young pines that grew up, that you can't go through a foot, is a destruction of timber. I want to say that I consider it is only the very thing that they ought to do; and they ought to cut down ten times as many of them.

Q. Has there been much timber cut down? A. I was going to say that I think myself that there has been some large trees cut down that ought to have been left.

Q. Why do you think they ought? A. Probably half a dozen of them. Well, there were some large trees cut down across the river, near the old Hutchings cabin—I don't know whether you would use that term, the old Hutchings cabin or Hutchings' old cabin—it amounts to the same thing—Hutchings' cabin.

MR. HOOK: Who cut those down? A. I don't know. I didn't see anybody cut them. I know they are down.

Q. How long since they were cut down? A. Three or four years.

Q. Was that cut to open up a vista or better view of the Falls? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it give a better view of the Falls? A. It gave a full view; you couldn't see it at all before; where the Falls came over, you could see apparently four or six feet, and now you can see right down to the bottom. The cut looks about the width of this room from the hotel.

Q. Who was the Guardian at the time they were cut down? A. I am under the impression it was Dennison; Mr. Dennison.

MR. TULLY: You say that some trees have been cut down there that you think it was not necessary to cut down? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many? A. Well, those big oaks, there are three or four of them. I don't think there was any trees that was of any mark or any notoriety, or added to the beauty of the valley at all, and possibly these oaks did not; but when you got close to them, and wanted their shade or anything of that kind, they were very nice trees.

MR. HOOK: Where were those cut down? A. It was to open that vista. There have been some trees cut around the Stoneman House, and I am under the impression that the most of that timber that was cut around there, especially that was close to it, was to keep it from endangering the house. I know as a matter of fact that the trees that were cut up at the barn that the State built for me this summer—they cut down five pine trees, and three of them were dead at the time, for twenty or thirty feet down, and two of them were alive all the way up, and they were nice tall trees, but they were leaning, and at any time that a rainstorm came, if they blew down at all, they would blow on the premises; and they were cut down, I think very properly.

Q. Were those oak trees you speak of in the way of a good view of the hotel? A. They were right in front; you couldn't see at all; and after they were cut around, you could see right through.

Q. Does it or not give a better view of the Falls after they are cut out? A. Yes, sir; certainly; you couldn't see the Falls before at all; now you can see them complete all the way down.

MR. TULLY: A better view from where? A. From the hotel; not only from the hotel, but up and down the street up one side of the hotel above and below; but it is only within a range of one hundred and fifty or two hundred yards, I think, that you can look into that cut, but from the hotel especially.

Q. This vista that they wanted to have there was intended to give a vista from the hotel and immediately around it? A. I think it was, as much as anything else; that was where the visitors go. At that time, there were as many visitors there as any other part of the valley. I think that was the intention.

MR. HOOK: In the year 1875, could you see any of the lower part of the Yosemite Falls from the growth of timber and shrubbery? A. I couldn't remember back that far that I took any notice of it. I didn't take any notice of the matter at all until I was told they were about to be cut; then I remember of taking a look at it before and then afterwards.

Q. You were in the valley in 1875? A. I was in the valley in 1864 first, and have been in the valley every year, except 1877, since.

Q. I was in the valley in 1875. Don't you know there was quite a jungle; that it was almost impossible to see any part of the Lower Yosemite Falls? A. Yes, sir; and it was just the same until it was cut out; it was just the same, only it got greater, until this was cut out.

Q. I would like to ask you in regard to the cutting out of some timber in front of the Bridal Veil Fall. What is your opinion there; did it give a better view of those falls? A. Yes, sir; but there were only two or three old trees cut that didn't amount to anything, not worth thinking of; not to exceed three, I think, as I remember now.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Only two? A. I think it was two or three.

MR. HOOK: Are there any places in the valley where there are a great many old stumps still left where the trees were cut down? A. Yes, sir. When you cut those young pines they never sprout, and in a couple of years it is a very easy matter to pull them over; and there is two or three acres there that have been cut of those pines, where they stand close together; they were cut off about two feet high, and the debris and stuff that was gathered around them put in piles and burned, and in another year they can go in there and hitch a horse to them and pull them out, and it leaves a nice meadow. It saves grubbing and is less expensive.

Q. You think the Commissioners did that on account of saving the expense? A. Cutting them that way?

Q. Yes? A. I don't know that they did; I never had any consultation with the Commissioners in regard to it; but if I had been doing it myself, I would have done it in the same way; I have the same experience on my ranch, down at Mariposa, and I have done it that way for years.

MR. TULLY: The next charge is: "Clearing up and plowing valley meadow land." A. Yes, there is some of that done. There has not been any of it done though, with the exception of about a fifteen-acre lot next to the Stoneman House, for their use. I don't think there has been a bit of meadow land cleared up or plowed that has not been plowed before for twelve years.

Q. How much land is there that has been plowed at any time? A. There has been, I should say—possibly at one time there were one hundred acres plowed, and now there are not over eighty.

MR. HOOK: How many acres are inclosed in fence? A. Well, that I couldn't tell you; I couldn't even guess; couldn't approximate.

MR. TULLY: You think then that there are only eighty acres of it in cultivation now? A. There are not one hundred acres; there are not to exceed eighty acres.

Q. Is that all the land that has been plowed up in the valley at any time? A. No. I told you there had been one hundred acres the stage company had, fifteen years ago; what was known as the El Capitan meadows; and they plowed about twenty acres and couldn't make it pay, and let the lease go and didn't plow any more.

Q. Who did it? A. Washburn & McCready.

Q. Had they the land leased? A. Yes, sir; leased it from the State and fenced it at their own expense. I plowed up this year what has been known heretofore as the Leidig meadow, that contains about eighteen acres. That has been plowed twice and sown. A year ago now I sowed it to timothy. I harrowed it and tried to get it in timothy, and this year I put it in wheat. There are about eighteen acres in that; and in what is known as the Harris ranch, there are forty acres. I plowed and put in forty acres. I have got about fifty-eight acres.

Q. What did you put that to? A. I put it to grain.

MR. HOOK: Was it a necessity of having this ground plowed up by the people that had leased it? A. Was it a necessity?

Q. Yes? A. I look upon it as a necessity to raise all the hay that a man can get.

Q. In the valley? A. Yes, sir; it is impossible almost to get hay in the valley at a reasonable price, and unless there is some hay raised in the valley to regulate the price, there is no telling where you would get off. In 1875 and 1876 I didn't get a ton of hay in the valley for less than $60 a ton, and it came down to $55 and $50; and year before last I didn't buy any hay that I didn't pay $47 50 for, and then couldn't get really enough to do me. I got two bales at a time, and had to turn out some carriage horses to grass. If you take ninety or one hundred head of horses in there, and keep them for seven months, you can figure how much hay it will take; and I undertake to say right here that it is impossible to get that amount of hay from the outside; and you stop raising a little hay in the valley to govern the price, to make a little stand-off with them, and the farmers on the outside, knowing that that hay has to be used, they will pool it as well as any others, railroads or any others, and say, "Here, you can't have our hay for less than $55 or $60 a ton," and I should have to pay it. Now, hay forty-five miles—that is, where you have to haul it—forty-five miles from the valley, will sell at home for $20. They don't make anything by hauling that hay in and selling it at $45. Hay forty-five miles from the valley is worth $20. Ten months in the year it is worth $20. A four-horse team can't haul but a ton, and a six-horse team will haul a ton and a half. I had two six-horse teams running nearly all summer, and thirty hundred was the most hauled by a six-horse team. A man coming with a ton and a half, it takes him a week to make the trip—six days—he pays toll over and back. His hay is worth $30 at home—a ton and a half—and when he gets into the valley, where does he get off, after paying freight and expenses? You can see, yourself, that it would be impossible to get it at any price. They don't raise, even then, at the price they would put it at, there is not enough raised within forty-five miles to do the business.

Q. Do you consider the raising or the lowering of the price of hay for campers is influenced there by people raising it? A. I think it has a tendency to keep the price down; yes, sir. Now there has been a good deal, in this matter, said about selling hay to campers for $60 a ton. Whilst we have the privilege of doing that, under our lease, we are perfectly willing for anybody to come in and take that off of our hands that wants to. If I have to buy my hay from the outside, now, I tell you, right now, on the stand, that it will cost me $47 50 a ton, if I don't have an opportunity to raise any. I can't buy it for that price; I am putting it now at what I pay with the competition in the valley; with hay raised there it was $47 50. I want to say right here, that I have bought a few loads of hay for $40—the lowest price that a ton of hay was sold in the valley for, and that is when a man wants to pay his taxes, or somebody is pushing him on a note, he will pick up a load of hay and run it in the valley, to get money to pay his taxes. Those are the facts in the case. But you go to where this camping ground is, and put a couple of tons in there, and you won't sell more than two tons in a month. I have sold as little as ten pounds to a single man, or fifteen, or twenty-five, or thirty, and forty. You keep a man to peddle it out at $60, and where do you get off?

Q. There are sometimes you have to hold this hay over a season if you don't sell it? A. Yes, sir; I am glad to hold it over. I am always glad to have all I can to stock with in the spring. I am glad of it; but that is where the profit would be.

Q. Do the campers ever take any of your hay when you are not looking? A. Well, yes; I have had that done. I had that experience last summer. I lost about twelve hundred pounds. But that matter don't cut any figure here.

Q. Is the most of the hay raised there barley hay? A. No; there is about ten acres of timothy; twelve acres, possibly. I never measured it. It won't exceed twelve and I think ten, and the balance in grain—wheat.

MR. TULLY: The fifth charge here is, "Debarring the general public from joint and legal use of the valley." A. I don't know anything of that; I never heard of it before.

Q. Well, I understand that that would have reference to anything that had been done in the valley that tended to interrupt the free ingress and egress to the different parts of the valley, such as fencing and inclosures, and all that kind of thing? A. There is not anything. There is not a point of interest in the valley, that I know of, that a man can't go to if he wishes. Where these inclosures are that are needed around the valley there is either turnstiles or gates. You can turn it and go through.

MR. HOOK: Is it or is it not a fact that the hay is removed before most of the campers get into the valley? A. No, sir; the campers begin to come in before you commence harvesting. Harvesting is very late in the valley. You don't cut until July.

Q. Can people get through that hay? A. There is not any camper in the world or anybody else that would want to go through that field. There is nothing there for anybody to go through. I will show you how it is. We will say the river runs down this side. The main drive or avenue, carriage drive, runs on that side, and the field is right between, and it is about the width of say, five acres across. It is more than four hundred feet; it is possibly two hundred and fifty yards. Lengthways it is longer than that, but it is about two hundred and fifty yards wide. On the lower side there is a trail goes through. It is fenced on what is called campers' ground. And there is turnstiles to go through. Anybody can walk up that side or drive up this side. There is not anybody that cares—I never heard of anybody caring to go through the field. If they wished to, and the grain was taken off, there are opportunities to go in.

Q. The object of my question is, simply to find out whether any of the freedom of the valley was curtailed by these fences? A. Not there.

MR. TULLY: How much fencing is there done there? A. You asked me just now if I knew, and I can't tell you; I wouldn't know how to make an estimate of it. There is possibly—well, I can go by my own fields and put the others in.

Q. You spoke awhile ago about what is cultivated? A. Cultivated and everything else.

Q. Cultivated and everything that is inclosed there with a fence of any kind, in the valley? A. Well, there was more land fenced in the valley some years ago than now; Bridal Veil was fenced, and now it has gone to decay and is down.

Q. How many hundred of acres? A. There are possibly five hundred acres under fence, and possibly more.

Q. Is that principally in the floor of the valley? A. Yes, sir; right in the floor of the valley.

Q. What proportion does the inclosed ground bear to the entire area of what is considered the floor of the valley? A. From one end to the other?

Q. Yes? A. Well, it don't cut much figure. The level portion of the valley?

Q. Yes; not from wall to wall, but what is considered the meadow portion or the level portion? A. Well, there is a good deal of the land that is fenced that is not exactly meadow land. In the pasture that I have fenced, the part that is next to the drive, below the Yosemite Creek, there is almost one half of that that is not meadow. Right next to the road there are big oak trees, pines, and ferns. There are not a hundred pounds of grass on an acre of it, or two acres of it.

Q. It is within the valley, what is called the floor of the valley? A. It is what we call the floor; certainly; I call it the floor of the valley. The drive runs right by the fence.

Q. What is the character of those fences; what are they built of? A. They are not very respectable fences, really. They are built of wire. Some of them are very new; some of them have been built for fifteen years, and they were built of old split pines, and put up with pine poles, and, of course, they have decayed and fallen down, and they have been propped up, and so on. You can imagine just how that would be.

Q. Any wire fences? A. Yes, sir; that and wire is all the fences there are.

MR. HOOK: Were those fences put up by the order of the Commissioners? A. Part of them were and part of them were not. Part of them were built there before there were any Commissioners in the valley. Part of Mr. Hutchings' fences are there yet, that he put up when he first went into the valley or soon afterwards. He had a meadow fenced in; well, it is on both sides of the drive that is there. He has got an orchard. I wouldn't know how many acres there is; probably one hundred acres altogether. I should say about one hundred acres, including everything that he had.

MR. HUTCHINGS: About eighty or eighty-five?

THE WITNESS: Yes, since the other was taken off.

MR. HOOK: The object of my question was this: to see whether these fences were authorized by the Commissioners to be put there or not? A. Hutchings put his up of his own motion; and on the other side of the river, below at the other hotel, there is one almost equally as large, or possibly not so large, that was put up by private parties before the Commissioners had any control of the valley at all, and they are there yet. Those two fences are almost equivalent to two thirds of it. They were put up by parties without the Commissioners having anything to say about it at all; in fact, before they had control of the valley. That was part of the premises bought when the Commissioners bought them out.

MR. TULLY: Do you consider those fences as a barrier to the free ingress and egress to the various parts of that valley that a tourist or a visitor there would like to go and see? A. I never heard of tourists complaining that they couldn't get to any part of the valley that they wanted to go to. I never heard of any such complaint.

MR. TULLOCH: Did you ever hear the campers complain? A. I have never had anything to do at the camping ground. My business has always been two miles from there.

MR. TULLY: In your judgment do you or do you not consider that those fences do operate as a barrier to the free ingress and egress to parties who might want to go and look in the hills and cañons? A. For instance the fences on the south side of the river; I should think advisable to pull them out.

Q. What I want to get at is this: whether or not those fences are not in the way and act as an obstacle to the free access and ingress and egress to all points? A. Just as I tell you, I think the fences on the south side of the valley do cut a figure of that character, to some extent.

Q. A wire fence, for instance? A. But on the other side of the river, I can't conceive where a tourist would want to go, that those fences would keep him out. When you cross the river at the Barnard hotel, you go as I just now showed you, on the trail that goes clear up to the camp ground, and there is a walk and a turnstile for you to go through. You turn to the left, where there has been so much talk about the Commissioners cutting those pines out, there are places where you can go to the Yosemite Creek. I don't believe there is any place in the valley that a tourist would want to go that is fenced; that a tourist would want to go. I never heard anybody wish to go there.

Q. If anybody wanted to go, those fences would be an obstacle? A. No; there are bars and gates to all of them. You can go to any of them.

Q. How many bars and gates and turnstiles? A. There's seven, including two gates.

Q. Are there any trails leading to those and leading to the various parts; walks? A. Yes; as I just explained to you, it turns off to the right one way and the left on the other, on the north side of the river, and goes right through them.

MR. HOOK: Has there ever been any complaint to the Commissioners that these fences were in the way to the free enjoyment of the beauties of the valley? A. It would appear so from the testimony in this case. I didn't hear of it in the valley.

Q. Have you ever heard anything of the kind? A. Not in the valley, about any parties wanting to take the fences down, except the parties testifying.

Q. Did you ever hear of any notice being given to the Commissioners to tear those fences down? A. No; I will tell you. There was a fence put up about three years ago. I think it was not a good plan to put it up; in fact, it ought to be taken down. That is the one that is right immediately at the town, what is known as the town that runs down in front of that Italian's store. That was objectionable, and has been to all the citizens in the valley; there is no question about that; but that is the only one that ever I heard any complaint about.

Q. Was there any complaint ever sent in to the Commissioners about it? A. I don't know; but it was talked of in the valley, and I talked about it as much as anybody; just as much.

Q. If there was such a complaint, do you think the Commissioners would take it under consideration and tear the fence down? A. That I wouldn't like to say. I wouldn't like to say what a man would do, because I don't know.

Q. I mean from your knowledge of the Commissioners? A. Well, I am under the impression that the Commissioners knew that that was objectionable to the people and they didn't tear it down. That is as far as I would go.

Q. How many miles of fence do you think there are there? A. I couldn't say.

Q. Could you make an estimate—approximate? A. I wouldn't undertake to do it, because I would be as likely to get half as I would to get it all.

Q. You are not much of a farmer? A. No; although I have been farming for fifteen years, but I don't do any of it myself.

Q. You farm by proxy? A. Yes, sir; I never plowed an acre of ground in the valley myself until last summer. That is my first season breaking up a foot of ground.

Q. How much of that valley is dedicated to the use of campers? A. Well, I guess all of it, with the exception of what is fenced, and there is ample room for twice as many as comes. What we call the camp ground is at the upper end of the valley—from what is known as the Royal Arch farm to Mirror Lake, probably a distance of a mile and a half; that is known as the camp ground, but I have seen them camp from Bridal Veil Fall clear up.

MR. HOOK: About how many acres are there in that? A. I couldn't say; there is a whole lot of it; there is a mile and a half long, and it would probably be—well, some places it is not over two hundred yards wide, and some places wider; as you get near Mirror Lake it will get narrow.

Q. Plenty of ground for all the camping facilities they want? A. Yes, sir; plenty of good shade, and everything of that kind.

Q. There has no objection been made to the campers being placed in that position? A. No, not a bit of objection; in fact, they are invited to go there.

MR. TULLY: Are there not hundreds of acres in that valley to which they have not access? A. I just now stated that there was four hundred or five hundred acres under fence; they don't have access to that; certainly, I say that; they have not got it at all; they have got all that is not fenced.

Q. Don't you think that from that part which is inclosed and under fence visitors and tourists are virtually excluded, so far as camping purposes are concerned? The portion that is inclosed virtually excludes—practically and in fact excludes campers there from camping upon the lands that are so inclosed? A. Why, certainly.

Q. And you think there are some seven hundred or eight hundred acres there? A. No, sir; I didn't say so; I wouldn't put it over five hundred.

Q. You think there are five hundred acres in the valley from which campers are excluded by reason of these fences? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: How many acres are there in the floor of the valley? A. I couldn't tell you. I never thought of such a thing—never thought to make an estimate. I couldn't even make a guess. I have heard it testified by parties that know, but I don't know.

Q. That has been testified to here? A. I have heard it testified to twice since I have been here, but I don't know myself of my own knowledge.

Q. You stated, awhile ago, that there were quite a number of acres of land that was fenced before the Commissioners ever had any charge of the valley? A. Well, Hutchings fenced his before the Commissioners had anything to do with the valley. Mr. Black had the old hotel below; he fenced his all before the Commissioners had anything to do with the valley, and the same fences are there yet.

Q. How many acres do you think were inclosed by those fences? A. By those two parties? And the Lemmon place was so. The fences that was there before the Commissioners ever had anything to do with that valley would be at least two thirds.

Q. That is under fence at present? A. Yes, sir; it would be two thirds of it.

Q. You never heard of any protest to remove those fences? A. No.

Q. That the freedom of campers or tourists in the valley was interfered with? A. No; not either of those places. Neither Hutchings or Harris or Black's have I ever heard anybody complain that they ought to take them down.

MR. TULLY: Who built the other fences? A. The State fenced them. The only fencing I did was just to make a kind of a place to catch my horses in. The river forms one side. I run from the Yosemite Creek—oh, Leidig's—there was another piece that I had not put in. That was there before the Commissioners, too.

Q. What piece was that? A. The Leidig meadow. The only place I have got is fenced since the Commissioners got control of the valley. This place was given to me. There was a string of wire fences running from the Yosemite Creek, a distance of probably six hundred yards: that is all.

MR. HOOK: Are all these places under fence leased out by the Commission? A. No, sir. The Commissioners have some for their own use, private use, to keep their stock in.

Q. What proportion of the five hundred acres is leased out by the Commissioners? A. Well, I don't know what proportion would be leased out. The Commissioners themselves only occupy one place, with, say, eight or ten acres. I don't think that the Commissioners reserve over twenty-five or thirty acres for their own use. That is the case now. But that is only now, this year. Last year it was leased. This year the Commissioners have had the Black fence that I spoke of. That has all reverted to the Commissioners. It is not leased to anybody. In fact the fence is half down.

Q. How much of it in the valley is leased? A. Well, I don't know how to answer the question. It is all leased except what the Commissioners have for their own use; it is all leased except that.

Q. I understood you to say there were some parts that were not leased? A. No.

MR. TULLY: Have you not leased a portion of that valley from the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that inclosed? A. All this land that I have been telling you about that I have, I leased from the Commissioners.

Q. Who controls now, and who leases, if it is leased, the lands that are now inclosed, outside of what the Commissioners themselves use? A. Well, Mr. Cook has a place at his place for his cows; fifteen acres, I think, there is in it, probably sixteen. Mr. Barnard has a place for his cows. He has got between eighty and one hundred acres. Mr. Leidig has a place for his. I don't know how many acres there was in it. Of course, that is abandoned now, and the fences all down. Mr. Cook, when he was down at his other hotel, had a place there with, say fifty or sixty acres in. That is abandoned now; it is not leased to any one. The Leidig place is not leased to any one.

Q. Have you not a portion leased yourself? A. Yes, sir; I am telling you who the parties are who lease. Then I have the Royal Arch farm, or the old Harris place and the Leidig meadow, on the north side of the river. That is all the leased land that I know of. No, the butcher has a place leased.

MR. HOOK: Do you know how the Commissioners act in regard to the leases; do they take the most favorable terms that they can receive, or do they consider the character of the man? A. I will tell you just how I get my leases. I go in just as a competitor. I never have had anything that I didn't have to bid for, and do it in writing, and if I didn't bid the highest bid I didn't get anything. I have always had to bid for it.

Q. You have always had to bid the highest? A. Yes, sir; the Commissioners have never done me a favor outside of or more than they would you. You could put in a bid just the same as anybody else. I always had competition. I never went in and bid for the saddle train or anything else that there was not bids against me, and I believe it is not possible for anybody to go and say they bid more than me. I think I bid higher than any of them, every time, and the records will show I am paying the Commissioners now $1,500 a year; $1,200 for the privilege of running the saddle train and $300 for the Harris ranch.

Q. Was your lease cut down on a part of your property? A. Yes, sir. They didn't give me the orchard, which contained about eight or ten acres; a very nice orchard, too. You can pick one hundred barrels of apples a year out of it. They took that out of the Harris privilege, and the house burned down, and I lost a great deal of stuff in it; I don't know how much. I lost a lot of grain, and rope for baling hay, and tools, etc.; I don't know; household furniture. I bought all the household furniture just as it stood. He didn't take anything away but his clothing. That was all in the house, and it was all burned up together, and, in that view of the matter, they reduced it for this year and the next, and at the expiration of that time it goes at $1,750, instead of $1,500. It has also been testified to by a number of witnesses that I am only paying $250 for it. It is not true. I am paying $300 for it. The record shows it.

Q. In reducing that rent, was it or was it not an act of friendship to you, an act of special privilege? Was it keeping anybody else out? A. No; it was a simple act of justice; that is what it was, a simple act of justice—the same as an Assessor comes around and finds you on your ranch, with your house and furniture, and he assesses you for it; when it comes to paying taxes, you can go before the Board of Supervisors and tell them that you have been burned out, and show them that that is the case, and they will take the taxes off; and it is a similar thing up there. They will remit your taxes. They do it every year.

Q. You considered it a greater benefit when the houses were there than afterwards when they were burned off? A. As a matter of course. You can't live without a house. They didn't do it through any act of friendship or kindness or anything of that kind; they did it as a matter of justice.

MR. TULLY: You get your lease through competition; that is, they are put up to the highest bidder? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those are written leases? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything in those leases in the nature of an exclusive privilege? A. No. I never had one in my life.

Q. Are there any terms in there by which you are enabled to bar out or prevent others from competing in there for the business of the valley? A. In my lease?

Q. Yes? A. No, sir; there is not a word of it. If I had known this thing would have occurred, I would have brought my lease.

Q. There is no condition in your lease that gives you an advantage over an outsider? A. No, sir.

Q. Except the fact that it gives you control of the property? A. No; it gives me a privilege to do business in the valley.

MR. HOOK: You would not have any more privilege, getting a lease, than an outsider? A. The Commissioners have a perfect right to meet to-morrow and give somebody a privilege in there. They can do that if they wish. I have no way to help myself.

Q. You said that you had to make the highest bid, or else anybody on the outside of the valley could come in and get one of those leases as quick as you? A. I did. Up to the last two years there were three or four of us doing business there, and when there was competition that way we would bid for the lease, and we would run it up to where we had to give $1,000; and finally, one year we bid $300 apiece, and put in bids separately. It was just the same thing. We run right together just as soon as we got the bids. We paid $300 apiece, and every one pooled it. That has been done always in the valley, when there was competition there; we had quite an experience in that way. You have no doubt crossed the ferry down here at the foot of Market Street, and went out to get in a car. There was one year there it was just a fac simile. They would meet the stages, the runners would, at Bridal Veil; that is three miles below; they would stop there to water their horses, and they would climb in and out, pulling and hauling at the passengers. When they would drive to the hotel it was the same thing, and when they would go into lunch. Of course the hotel men stopped that after awhile; they would not allow them to talk to them at lunch, and bother the guests; but it was a perfect pandemonium; each one trying to get as much as he could. I have let horses in the valley for 50 cents a day. You can see where men would get off at that business; and I have known parties to do it for 2 bits, but it would be for only a few weeks, and they would go home—somebody would get mad, and it was disagreeable to every one. People are better satisfied now, and I will tell you why I know that that is the case. The Commissioners have a schedule of prices, and the rules and regulations are printed in a nice shape and framed; and they are put up at every hotel, and covered with a glass, and one can read just what he wants exactly; as the Commissioners have stated themselves. We have nothing to do with that. And when any one wants to go anywhere, they can go right there and see the prices, and we can't charge a cent more; if we do, we forfeit our lease; we can't take any more than that. But to show that the plan now is better than the other, three years ago—if the Guardian is here, he was here last night, I don't know whether he is here now or not; he will testify before this committee that there were not less than fifteen or twenty regularly written complaints put in from the different parties, that they didn't get fairly treated. Since the business has been running as it is now, the Guardian will tell you there is not a single one in the two years. There has not been a single complaint made at the office in two years against us. We have not met with an accident. We have kept the kind of stock that is safe. We have supervised the business ourselves, and looked after it, and we never have any complaints.

MR. CHAPMAN: Is it not a matter of fact that fully three fourths of all the fencing in the valley was put there before the Commissioners had any control of the valley? A. I have just stated that, exactly. I said more than two thirds.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you have now between twenty-five and thirty miles of roadway, with seven crossings of the river in the valley? A. Yes, sir; that is a fact. One can go almost any place they wish. You can get into a carriage, and ride through the valley a distance of twenty-five miles, and cross the river in seven different places, and never come in contact with a fence.

MR. TULLY: You have carriages to hire there in the valley, have you not; to let? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The more carriage driving is done there, and the less pedestrian exercise, the better it is for the man who has the carriages, is it not? A. It would be, provided they would ride in carriages; yes, sir. That would be natural, the same as it would be in San Francisco.

Q. Don't you think a tourist there would naturally prefer to go in a carriage and go on your drive, rather than to go and climb through those fences? A. He can walk without climbing the fences. The carriage drive does not climb any. He can do the same that the carriage drive does, without coming in contact with a fence anywhere.

MR. CHAPMAN: Walking is not very good there, is it? A. It is sandy.

MR. TULLY: That is what I am trying to get at, whether there ought not to be more walking or more facilities for walking? A. The Commissioners don't prohibit walking. Of course there isn't trails made all through the valley for that purpose.

Q. Is it not a fact that there are more carriage drives than foot trails? A. There is simply a carriage drive around the valley.

Q. There are more facilities for seeing the valley in carriages than on foot? A. As long as I have been a resident of the valley, if you were to send me up there to make a foot path I wouldn't know where to make one that would be interesting to visitors, except the ones that are made. I wouldn't know where to make a new one. I don't know where there is one now that would be considered a matter of necessity or benefit.

MR. CHAPMAN: Hasn't that been a matter of some consideration in the matter of placing turnstiles and hand-gates? A. Yes, sir. I said there were seven of them already.

MR. HOOK: If these fences were removed, do you think that pedestrians would walk through these inclosures? A. I don't believe they would walk a bit further than they do now; not a particle. I don't believe the fences keep them from going anywhere they want to.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that there is a great deal of undergrowth, and weeds, and grass, and at the time that most tourists come into the valley it is damp a great deal of the day, this grass? A. It is a fact that there is undergrowth there for miles that ought not to be there—these young pines. Anybody that has been in California any number of years knows very well that these young pines will thicket a country, if allowed to do so.

Q. I didn't mean so much about the pines as about the grass and ferns? A. There isn't any grass to keep anybody away from anything, but there is plenty of ferns and briers and young pines. In 1864, when I went to the valley first, you could stand on one side and look clear across to the wall on the other side in twenty places where you can't see it now; and these growths of cottonwoods that have been spoken about being cut down, there wasn't any trace of them at all, and you could look right across the river and along the banks of the river. Now they have grown up with cottonwood and willows until they are all obstructed, and if that place belonged to you the very first thing you would do with it, as a business man, you would put the axe in there and clean it up. I am sure of it, I would if it were mine.

MR. TULLY: Don't you think if that undergrowth was trimmed out and a little more money expended there in cleaning it out and removing this undergrowth that is in the way of tourists or pedestrians, don't you think it would offer them much greater inducement to go over portions of the valley that they don't go over now? A. I don't think at all; I know that as a fact. It is a positive fact.

Q. Don't you think that if it was nicely and handsomely trimmed out, that there would be a great many persons who might desire to go there who still would find these fences an obstacle—supposing it was all opened up and cleared out nicely underneath, opening up free access to it? A. About the fences being an obstacle, it is just this way, and I can explain it by going from here to the hotel that you are stopping at. For instance, if that block was not built up with buildings, you could go catacorner across and save that much distance; whereas you have to go up to the corner; and it is the same way with the fences. Instead of going through them you would have to go on to the corner. A public road generally runs on the section line; you can't go through a man's fields. I don't see that the fences on the north side of the river obstruct anything. I never heard of any tourists that came into the valley in the last twelve years ever complain that the fences on the north side of the valley was in their way one particle. On the south side, as I said before—

Q. That city is not laid out in squares and blocks, and as a park it is supposed generally to be open, and that the proper use of it is to make it accessible from all parts and to all parts. That is the difference between that and going catacornered across the street? A. I don't consider that the fences on the north side of the river are in anybody's way.

Q. Those on any other side? A. On the south side, as I testified a half an hour or an hour ago, it would be my judgment, if it was mine, I would take the old fence down there at the Black hotel; I would have it taken down. In fact, it is half taken down now—decayed.

Q. Do you think that old decayed fence adds anything to the beauty and attractiveness of the valley? A. No; that detracts from the beauties of the valley.

Q. Would you consider, if you were there as a Commissioner, that it was best to remove those unsightly fences? A. I think it would be a good idea; certainly.

Q. The duties devolving upon this commission are not simply to inquire about what has been done, but to suggest, from the information that we gather from those who are acquainted with the valley, what would be the better plan to suggest in the future; and I ask many of these questions with a view to that fact; not to convict anybody of anything? A. As I said before, I think the fences on the south side of the valley—

Q. We want to suggest anything that would tend to better the management, or the convenience of tourists? A. The fences on the north side of the valley are not in anybody's way. All the business houses are on the south side of the valley. They are not exactly an ornament.

Q. It may be possible that we will want to recommend the removal of all those fences. My questions are not directed for the purpose of criminalizing anybody, but it is simply to enable us to suggest anything? A. It would work a hardship to remove all the fences in that valley. As a matter of fact, there cannot anybody go in there and let horses for what they are letting them now and have to haul in their feed. It is an impossibility to do it at a low rate. But that is another matter.

Q. Is it not a fact that there is not a park in the world but what they have fences and barriers in, some way or other; to keep them from traveling— A. I have never been in one yet but what they had walks—places for people to go—and they would have their notices up: "You must keep off the grass," and "Don't touch the trees." There isn't anything of that kind in the valley. You can go and touch anything that you like.

MR. TULLY: Is it not a fact that those notices are placed in front of nice swards and flowers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not in front of a thicket? A. There isn't any notice of that kind in the valley, that I ever saw, and they can go anywhere they please.

MR. HOOK: Do you think the Commissioners, if they had a sufficient amount of money appropriated, would remove all this shrubbery and undergrowth out of the valley? A. I believe they would. They have been trying to do it, and they have done some of it. They have commenced now, and in several cases they have been at work and it has been criticised by some parties—some parties that I heard testifying criticised it more than anybody else. Most of the residents of the valley think that it is a proper thing to do, and it is necessary. They went to work in there on the camp ground and cleared up four or five acres. The only trouble is, they have not cut out enough. The young pines grow up very thick. They ought to go and cut out every third tree.

Q. The question is this: if there was a sufficient amount of money appropriated by the Legislature, don't you think they would remove all this undergrowth? A. That is what I am telling you.

Q. Burn the bark and dead limbs? A. In answer to that, I said yes, I thought they would, and that they had commenced it already. That was my answer; that they had commenced it already. If they had the means I think that they would do it all. I think it would be a very proper thing to do. In my judgment, it would.

MR. TULLY: "Holding annual meetings with closed doors, in violation of State law." A. Well, I remember once that the Commissioners—in the first place, when the Commissioners met there in the spring, the first day that they met, the doors were open. The time I speak of, they had closed doors once for an hour and a half, and everybody that wanted to put in an application, or had a grievance, or anything of that kind, they insisted on it being put in writing. Everybody who wants anything, goes in there and hands their papers to the Guardian or Secretary, and that matter will take up until the dinner hour. And on that day that has been spoken of, that they held their secret session, I think as a matter of fact, they went in the back room and sat there for an hour and a half, probably, before they came out in the front room. I am not sure but what the front doors were closed up and the parties sat there on the porch until it was opened; but I never remember of it being done but once. Whether they were in session or not, I couldn't tell you. I couldn't swear that they were in session, but they were in there.

Q. When was that? A. Some years ago.

Q. There is any amount of evidence that it was but once. I want to identify it if it is the same instance? A. It was four or five years ago. I couldn't say just what year it was.

Q. Do you know of any other instance? A. No; I don't remember any other time; never when I was there. They may have had it when I was not there. That was the only time that I remember. I happened to go there that day and there was several parties on the porch waiting, and I sat there and waited myself until the doors were opened. But whether they were holding a meeting in reference to Yosemite matters or not I couldn't tell you; they were in there.

Mr. Hook: Do you think that that time that they held that secret meeting, or that meeting in there, that it was with any object of shutting anybody out? A. Oh, no; I think not; I never heard of anything of the kind.

Q. It was not done as a star chamber proceeding? A. No; and it was not considered so then; not by the parties who were in there; not that I ever heard of. I was as much interested in it as anybody and I took no exception to it. There was four or five of us bidding for the same business that I was bidding for at that same meeting; at least four.

Q. Was it or not their object to keep the doors closed, to keep the people from interfering with their business? A. As a matter of fact, when this committee gets through taking this evidence, you are not going to throw your doors open and invite everybody in while you are consulting on the matter and taking a vote.

Mr. TULLY: I understand that they were in executive session? A. It was just the same exactly as when you get through taking the evidence in this case and you want to take a vote on the result, you won't throw the doors open and invite Sacramento to come in and hear you. When the meeting met in the morning, they took in these papers, and everybody could come in and did do it. I went in with a paper myself, and they talked it over among themselves, I presume. I think it was proper.

Mr. TULLY: The evidence on that head is cumulative, if it has reference to the same case.

Mr. Hook: I want to find out whether it was any star-chamber proceeding? A. No, sir; I never heard anything like that. It just happened as I tell you. It was just the same as you will act in this case, when you get through; precisely.

Mr. TULLY: "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley?" A. I don't know anything of the kind.

Q. You don't know of any exclusive privileges? A. I don't believe there is a man in the valley that ever had an exclusive privilege of any kind or description.

Q. What is the manner of granting those privileges? You have answered that once, but it was not in answer to this question. What is the manner of letting out any privilege? A. Well, you bid for it and they grant it by a vote of the Commission, and they issue a lease. That is all I know about it. I have got mine.

Q. They advertise for bids? A. No, sir; they don't advertise. It is understood by all the parties that has been in the valley for any length of time and the outsiders, any that want it. I don't know but what they have been advertising lately; I won't be sure about that. I think they advertised, didn't they?

Q. When they do lease those privileges, whatever they are—the leasing of a privilege to carry on a business there, for instance, yours, to run a saddle train—they are first offered to competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the highest bidder gets it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have asked you whether they were exclusive privileges in terms, and you have answered they are not? A. They are not.

Q. Do those privileges, such as they are, in their operation, do they operate to exclude—the effect of granting those privileges to certain parties, does it exclude the granting of similar privileges to other parties? A. No. I answered that before. It is the same thing.

MR. HOOK: Is it or is it not a fact that they advertise their June meeting in Mariposa, Tuolumne, and several other papers? A. I had that impression, and I think that I have seen the advertisement in the paper, but I am not sure of it. I think they did. I think that I have seen it in the Mariposa paper, that the June meeting—when they would meet. I am under the impression I saw it there, but I am not positive.

Q. If they don't advertise, it is generally known when they will come? A. Yes, sir; I never heard any complaint.

Q. It is generally known that they will come in there in June and hold a meeting? A. Yes, sir.

MR. CHAPMAN: Isn't it a State law that we are compelled to meet there on the first Wednesday in June? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Everybody must know it, that the Commissioners meet on the first Wednesday in June? A. There has never been complaints, to my knowledge, of anybody not knowing it. I never heard of anything.

MR. TULLY: "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. Well, I presume that is intended to apply to the reduction of the rent on my place, and I explained that matter. I don't know of anything of that kind.

Q. You have testified that there was a reduction in your case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Given the reasons why? A. I gave the reasons why; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other reductions having been made? A. No. Oh, I know in some years past—yes, certainly; the rent for the hotels was reduced at one or two different times, but that was some years ago. I don't know how much or how little. I have been told that they were reduced five, or six, or eight years ago.

Q. Were they reduced in favor of any particular party to the detriment of other parties who held similar leases for similar purposes? A. No; I think not.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. I never heard of it.

Q. Did you ever hear of any instance in which parties had worked or made contracts with them to do work in which they had refused to pay for the work after it was performed? A. I have never heard anything, except what I have heard in testimony, by sitting and listening to the testimony. I have heard parties testify to such things, but of my own knowledge I know nothing of it.

Q. Did you ever hear that this man Anderson had worked on that trail, and that he was refused compensation for his labor? A. I have heard it testified here two or three times, but of my own knowledge I don't know anything about it.

Q. Do you know anything about it of your own knowledge? A. Nothing at all.

Q. You don't? A. No, sir.

Q. Don't know of any other instance where rentals have been reduced?

A. No; I don't believe I do, except my own.

Q. Did you ever hear anything about this man Robinson, the artist? A. Oh, well, that was only a matter of $20. Yes, they reduced him from $20 to $1 this last June. I had forgotten that. His rental was $20, and they reduced it to $1.

MR. TULLOCH: When did they do that? A. Last June.

Q. Did they do it before that? A. They did it last June; that is the only time I know of their having done it. I was present when that was done; I know that was done.

MR. TULLY: Do you consider that the reduction of that rental was to the prejudice of the State's income? A. Well, if any of it was that was.

MR. WASHBURN: Didn't Mr. Hill build his house, and didn't Mr. Robinson have his house built for him? A. That matter of the artist's studio, Mr. Hill, some five or six or eight years ago—I don't know just how long it was—made an application to the Commissioners for the privilege of the ground to put a studio on, and he put it on at his own expense. They granted him the privilege at a rental of $1, just to make the matter legal, for the papers, and he got his equipments from San Francisco or Oakland, and he put him up a studio that cost him $800, and he occupied it a part of two seasons. He has not been in the valley—he has not been inside of that house, I don't think—for four years. I pass it four or five times a day every day in my life, when I am in the valley. He built it at his own expense; the first cost was $800. It is right in the track of where the wind comes, more than any other place; it has been blown off the foundation three times; it has been blown off three winters—off the underpinning; it is shoved forward between three and four feet. It is not high up from the ground, and it blows over, and he goes to work and screws it up with a jackscrew, and gets it all lifted up, and the next spring it is down again. It broke his windows and racked it considerable the last time, but the State was not at a dollar's expense in that.

MR. HOOK: Did Robinson put up his own studio? A. No, sir.

Q. Was he occupying the State's property? A. Yes, sir.

Q. This other property belonged to Mr. Hill? A. Yes, sir; individually.

Q. Did Mr. Hill turn this property over to the State? A. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Did he not do it last June? A. I think the understanding with him, when he got his permission to put it on the ground, was that he would occupy it as a studio while he wanted to, and it would revert to the State when he didn't want it.

Q. What is the reason Mr. Hill has not been in the valley for four years? A. I don't know. He has been in. He comes in there, but he has not been doing any business in there.

Q. Do you know why he does not occupy the building? A. No; I do not.

MR. TULLY: Do you know whether the State has control of that building; whether he turned it over to the State or not? A. I don't know; it is my impression, however, that the understanding was with the Commission, that when he got through using the building he would turn it over to the State then, as State property. I don't think he claims the building, to sell it to anybody, or anything of that kind. It is only for his own use.

MR. TRUMAN: He surrendered it? A. I didn't know that. I understood that that was the contract; that he would.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would ask Mr. Coffman if he has not been in a position to hear of any complaints of failure on the part of Commissioners to keep their contracts, if such was the case? A. Well, I have been in the valley, as I said before, for thirteen or fourteen years, and I have failed to hear of anything that the Commissioners didn't keep their contract with.

MR. TULLY: We asked you with regard to Anderson, and the building of that trail? A. As I told you before, of my own knowledge, I don't know anything about it. I have heard several people speaking about the matter say the Commissioners promised to do so and so, and they didn't do it. I can hear those kind of stories on the street every day about other people; but of my own knowledge, I don't know anything about it. If I don't know it, I can't tell it.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State, and illegally leasing the same." A. Well, now, I was present in San Francisco when that thing was done, and I pledge you my word I couldn't tell you what the bids of any parties were. I don't know to-day what Cook's first bid was. I know what his last was, from the fact that it was just $1,200, to cover the State part of it for the hotel; but the first day's bids I couldn't tell you what either of them was.

Q. $1,200, to cover the interest on the capital? A. Yes, sir; they couldn't do it for any less; but what the bid was I couldn't tell you; but that is a matter of record, and that would be the proper place to get it; I couldn't tell you; I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether Judge Grant put in two bids? A. He put in one bid; and put in another one with a dummy; this was the same man bidding for him.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge whether his bids were higher than the others or not? A. No, I don't; I have heard a good deal of talk about it, but I couldn't tell you now, candidly, how much the bids were at the first meeting.

Q. Do you know anything of your own knowledge? A. I saw it in print and read it, but I can't remember what it was.

Q. You don't know anything about those bids of your own knowledge? A. No.

Q. You simply heard those statements? A. I have heard. I read in the paper the next morning the proceedings, but it has slipped my memory; I can't remember; I know there was a good deal of talk about it; I was in the city at the time the thing was let.

Q. Are there any facts connected with that transaction that you of your knowledge can say that you know have been withheld from the public? A. No, sir; not of my own knowledge I don't know of a thing.

Q. That is what this question relates to: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State and illegally leasing the same?" A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, I don't understand what that implies.

Q. By some act of theirs, that they have done something or omitted to do something they should have done, the result of which was the breaking up of the school? A. I understand that is not true in any respect. The school has run right along. There has never been anything of the kind. The school teacher was born and raised in my town. I know her just as well as any one. She has taught in there for three years, and last fall she had a bid to go to Los Angeles, some educational institution that she could get a situation in, and if she didn't go then, she would lose it, and I think she left about ten or twelve days before the time was up; but there is a teacher employed now, which I know for a fact, to go in and commence in April.

Q. Was her leaving attributable to anything the Commissioners did or did not do? A. No, sir; and the school census—she took them herself; and it only takes sixteen scholars there, I believe, to equip a school district, and I think she had twenty-two. I know it has been stated that because Harris took his children out and Leidig took his out, that the school had to close, and the Commissioners were the fault of that; but it is not true.

Q. Harris had a number of children at the school, and he moved out of the valley and took his children out? A. Yes, sir; he had three or four.

Q. Do you know whether he was ordered out of the valley? A. No; I have heard him say myself many a time that he would like to get out, and was desirous and anxious even to go.

Q. You have never heard that he was expelled from the valley by the Commissioners? A. No.

Q. Or that any act of the Commissioners tended directly or indirectly to drive him out? A. No. In fact, I know he was not.

MR. HOOK: You think there was no effort made by the Commissioners to shut up the public school? A. No. I would as soon think the Commissioners would do any other act of meanness in the world as they would to do that. I don't think they ever thought of such a thing until they saw it in these charges. I am sure that nobody in the valley ever thought of it.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. I know of no such thing being so.

Q. Have you seen the roads there since you have been driving at any time in the condition— A. It is just like any other roads. Now and then there will be a bad place in the road, and the same way on the trails; and when my carriages were running, the Guardian always told me—Hutchings told me the same when he was Guardian, and Dennison, and McCord—that when my drivers reported that the roads were bad, to come and report at the office and they will have them fixed; and for my guides to do the same, and in every case they have gone and attended to it. I have no fault to find with them, so far as I am individually concerned. I don't know that anybody else complained of it.

Q. You have every opportunity for knowing that fact if it were so? A. Yes, sir; it is done just as I tell you. Whenever any of my guides or drivers report to the stable, at the office, that there is anything the matter with a trail or road, I go to the Guardian's office and tell him where it is, and he sends men up and has it fixed, whether it is on the trail or road.

Q. Do you know of any case in which, after such information, they have neglected to do what was their duty? A. I don't know any instance of it.

Q. Do you know any instance on the trails? A. Some years ago I thought the snow didn't get out of Glacier Point as soon as it ought to; but it was let by contract to McCauley, and it was McCauley's fault; and they were so late afterwards—it was across a stream, and the snow had been very severe that winter, and, of course, the stream came down and washed out a tunnel underneath it, probably twenty feet across, and as many feet high, and the snow had gone over. He cleaned out the trail in a good many places; but I was afraid to put my horses over it, and insisted I wouldn't do it, and I wanted them to throw it out, and we were later that year than ever. It was not the Commissioners' fault, but McCauley's.

He had contracted for $300 to take care of the trail. I believe we didn't get that out until late in the season.

Q. Was it not the duty of the Commissioners to see that McCauley did it? A. I spoke to Hutchings—I think he was Guardian—and I spoke to him about the matter, and my recollection is that Hutchings told me it would be perfectly safe to go over the snow, but I was afraid of it.

Q. Was that on one of the roads or trails? A. That was on the trail to Glacier Point.

Q. Do you know of any other instance? A. No, I don't. I don't speak of that as being of any consequence. I only speak of it as being a matter of fact. I didn't speak of it to make any point in this case.

Q. It has been stated here, Mr. Coffman, that on those trails leading up and down the mountains there that there have been poles laid across the road, which would occasion some embarrassment or inconvenience in going up or down? State what you know about that? A. They do that in the winter to turn the water. The trails in places are very steep, and they will get a pole and put it across. If they don't the water will run right down the trail. They have to do something of that kind. The water on the upper side will come down. We have rains pretty late in the season. I think some of those poles has been left in longer than was necessary, but I don't see anything to find fault with such a small matter. I would not want to testify about such a small matter. I have told them about that myself, and they would go and take them out.

Q. Did it occasion any serious embarrassment or inconvenience? A. Oh, no; there was some of them, as I tell you, that was in the way. Now, in going to the Cascades, there was three or four of them one season. I think Dennison was Guardian then, and I spoke to him three or four times before I got them out. But such matters as that are such small matters that I didn't think about noticing it. Yes, sir; that is a fact. It was not willful neglect though.

MR. HOOK: In neglecting to take those poles out, or anything of that kind, or in fixing the road, the Commissioners, if they were notified, would remove the Guardian? A. They would order it done at once. I have not a doubt of that.

MR. TULLY: It was a neglect—if it was a neglect—rather of the Guardian than the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir; because there was not any Commissioners present to know anything about it.

MR. HOOK: I would like to ask how often do the Commissioners come to the valley? A. Once a year; that is to say, they have one regular meeting. Sometimes they come up again in the fall. Some of them were up three times last year, or year before last. Some of them were up twice last year, and I think they were up twice before.

Q. All complaints must be made to the office in San Francisco? A. No; you can go to the Guardian's office, and it will go to San Francisco as quick as the stage can go.

Q. Any complaint is made to the Guardian, and that is forwarded to the Commissioners? A. I think they do; I think that is the rule; I think he does; isn't that so?

MR. TRUMAN: If it involves any expense; if not, he is clothed with greater power himself to repair such things himself.

MR. TULLY: How often does the executive committee meet there? A. They don't meet at all there; the executive committee meets in San Francisco.

Q. Then they transact their business, so far as the valley is concerned—the valley proper—they transact that through the Guardian? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Guardian is responsible to the Commission for his position there? A. Yes, sir; they can remove him at a minute's notice.

Q. Do you know of any complaints that have ever been lodged against any of those Guardians for neglect of duty that were not properly attended to by the Commission; lodged with the Commissioners, with regard to the neglect of duty of the Guardian, that was not attended to? A. No; I don't know anything of the kind.

Q. Do you know of any complaints at all having been lodged with the Commissioners with regard to neglect of duty on the part of the Guardian? A. I don't know that there were; not to my knowledge.

MR. TRUMAN: May I make one statement? The executive committee cannot remove the Guardian; it must be the Board of Commissioners.

MR. TULLY: I asked if it would be reported to the Commissioners and not to the executive committee? A. I don't know that.

MR. TRUMAN: They have all other power, but they can't remove a Guardian. They can censure him every day, if they want to.

MR. TULLY: My question was, if there had been any complaint lodged with the Commission and not with the executive committee? A. No; I don't know of any.

Q. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." Do you know any instance of that kind, where labor paid for by the State——? A. I don't know of a single instance of the kind, but if the committee will allow me, I will explain what I think that was intended to cover. That thing was gotten up—I know how that was gotten up—it was intended to apply to the building that the State put up for me. Now then, I will show this committee that what they did for me was a matter of necessity, and that I couldn't do it myself under any circumstances, because it was State property, and I couldn't build on it, and that somebody had to build. I am paying them $1,500 a year rent, more than anybody else in the valley, and I was entitled to some consideration; and I had a little bit of a pig pen barn that would hold about twenty-two horses; that is all I have ever had there; and after the Stoneman House was opened and these other buildings torn down, I was over two miles from the hotel, two full miles. The result was that when the stage would come in past my door and go two miles up the valley to the hotel, I would have to send an agent along after them to inquire of passengers if they wanted anything; say, for instance, they wanted to go to Glacier Point, the agent would have to come back to the stable, and I have to travel four miles to get them. Then I saddle my horses and take them up there to the hotel and take them back. Then the horses have gone four miles before they start to Glacier Point, which is still below me. As a matter of fact, any man that has got any business tact or intelligence will see at once that a livery business can not be run two miles from where you are doing it. It was a matter of necessity. I take the ground that it was just as much a matter of necessity for the Commissioners to look after the tourist, for his livery, as it is for his staging and board; but such a thing has not been the case. The hotel people think, when they furnish him his grub and bed, he don't need anything else; but it is a mistake. I contend that that was a necessary work and that it was not a private individual. I am not a private individual any more than the hotel men are; but I did need that stable up there, and I couldn't do the business without it. Now, that causes that charge there. As a matter of fact they did build me a stable adjacent or close to the Stoneman House, and that is where they came from. I don't know of any work having been done for a private individual. I pay them $1,500 a year.

Q. You were one of the lessees, and they did it at your suggestion? A.

Yes, sir; they had promised me for three years to build that barn, as soon as they were financially able, and it seems that it was the case this year, and they saw the disadvantage I was working under, and they built it. I have been eight years there with my carriages. I come in in the month of April, the first of April. Of course, when I go out in the spring, I take my wagons apart, and pack them in; seven wagons. Well, I can't get in but five; I put two in an old shed, and take one with me. In April I have to take them in. I put the wagons out, and they get the snow and sleet, and sunshine and rain, until the first of November. They built me a little wagon shed, and that is all there is about it.

Q. They built that for you as one of the lessees? A. Yes, sir. It is State property; it does not belong to me.

Q. The building that they put there didn't belong to private individuals? A. No. I have no more interest in it than you have, or any other taxpayer.

Q. They belong to the State? A. Yes, sir. There has been no work done by them for private individuals that I know of. That is what that was intended to cover. If there is any man on the committee that thinks a livery business can be run two miles from the business, I don't see how it can be done.

Q. That is the only instance that you know of? A. That is the only one. That is what that is intended to cover. I don't know of any other.

Q. They built that barn there as a convenience to you to enable you to carry on the business for which you had leased the property? A. Yes, sir. I assisted the Commissioners to a very great extent to get them to do that too, and whilst it will all be State property, and not a cent will come to me, I hauled the lumber. I filled up the stable to the level at my own expense. The stable is built so it fronted on a kind of an arroyo or a ravine, and I graded that up and filled it in, and I built my own saddle house, forty feet by ten, and put up my own gates. I must have spent $400 or $500. But that is my own affair. It belongs to the State, but I did it.

Q. It was an accessory to your business? A. Yes, sir; I couldn't do business without it.

MR. CHAPMAN: As a matter of fact, Mr. Coffman, were you not told that they only had about so much money, and any assistance that you might render would be very much appreciated? A. Yes, sir. I have just stated that I did stand in and help; yes, sir.

Q. And in laying down the water pipe. You have heard something of water pipe since you have been here? A. The water pipe was not laid exclusively for me.

Q. I was going to ask you if we did not put a hydrant in the campers' ground in order to accommodate the campers? A. Certainly; right in the center of the campers' ground there is a hydrant comes up, the same as it does at my place. I didn't get the benefit of that any more than did the campers.

MR. TRUMAN: Didn't I write to the Guardian and tell him to inform you that if you did spend any money you would not get it back? A. Yes, sir; he told me if I did it I would do it at my own expense. It was all right, and I did do what I have explained. I put up my own house, a building forty feet by ten, and I filled up the stable from eight inches to fifteen inches deep, and I graded all the street in front, and put up my own gates and everything at my own expense.

MR. TULLY: Does the State get the benefit of it? A. Yes, sir; I am paying $1,500 to use the property; but I was satisfied; I would rather do that than be two miles away. It was to get up where I could do the business.

MR. HOOK: Is this stable situated an equal distance between the Barnard House and the Stoneman House? A. I am about as close to the Barnard House as I was before.

Q. It puts you nearer to business both ways? A. It puts me where I ought to be to do the business.

Q. Could you have afforded to lease that and keep the saddle trains up where they were? A. Nobody could do it. It was an impossibility to do it. We will say for instance a man wanted to go to the Bridal Veil in the afternoon—and I very often have to take one single person to Bridal Veil for $1. I go to the hotel with a two-horse vehicle, carriage, and there is one person; I have got to take one or four; it don't make any difference who is to go, I take them. I leave my barn and drive two miles to the hotel to get a passenger, and he comes down; that is four miles to get to the stable, and I go three miles more to Bridal Veil, and when I come back to the stable I have got to go two miles up to the hotel to take him back, and then come back to the stable. That makes eight miles to get the horses home.

Q. Do you charge the same price? A. $1. Those are all regulated by the State.

MR. TRUMAN: Didn't we lower the rate half a dollar on a drive or two this year? A. Yes, sir; you lowered it on the Cascades, and it ought to be put back, too. I am glad that you mentioned it.

MR. TRUMAN: It never will be. A. It ought to be; you lowered it 75 cents.

MR. TULLOCH: About how much land in the valley do you think is under fence? A. Well, I will tell you; I have done my best to answer that question three or four times. I can't answer the question.

Q. You have stated something about there being a certain quantity on the north side of the river under fence, and you have spoken about there being a certain quantity of land on the south side under fence, and I want to know something about those fences. Haven't you got an approximate idea about how much land is inclosed; about the length of the fences? A. I said I supposed there would be about five hundred acres, at a guess. I don't believe there is more land under fence than five hundred acres, if you include everything in the valley. I think I am high enough, and the question is, am I not too much?

Q. What is the character of the fences? A. Some pickets, some wire, and some posts and rails put together this way and mortised.

Q. Are they in good condition? A. No, sir.

Q. They are not in good condition? A. No, sir; I don't know of a fence there that is in good condition; I don't know of a single one that is in good condition.

Q. In all the length of those fences, how many gates or openings are there, do you think? A. I made a statement that there were seven gates and turnstiles.

Q. Now, then, don't you think the public interest would be better and more largely subserved if there were a great many more gates, or a large number of gates, and a large number in excess of those? And don't you think thereby they would be enabled to go through the field at any point, and get views, if they so desired? A. No; I don't believe if there could be a gate put in one of those fences to-day that it would make the matter a particle better. I can understand very well from the questions some of you ask me that if you could have seen the valley and know it as I do, that you would know for yourselves that I am making a square statement. On the north side of the valley, where the fences are, I don't know of a place that you could put a gate that would make it any better for anybody—either people that live in the valley or those that come in.

Q. There being only seven openings, it is very evident that if a person don't happen to be at one opening, he has to climb over? A. All the fences on the right hand, above the Barnard hotel, there is a walk through and turnstiles to go through. You can go right along the bank of the river, all the way up. On the other side of the fence you can come down with the carriage drive. It is a slip that runs right up between, and on the lower side there is a turnstile that goes out through the pasture and over a bridge across Yosemite Creek. You can't cross Yosemite Creek anywhere else except by that bridge, and these trails take you straight across the creek by that bridge. There is a strip of fence below that, but I never heard of anybody wanting to go into it. If they do there is a pair of bars that they can go in. I don't believe that it is in the way of any individual that goes there; and I am not saying that because I have any objection to its being torn down, because I have not the least in the world. They can tear them every one down if they want to, but as a matter of fact they are not in anybody's way on the north side of the river.

Q. Are they on the south side? A. On the south side; I have said two or three times they ought to be taken away. Next summer, if we have any snowstorms, there won't be any, except up by the Guardian's office, the five or six acres, but the balance of it was all falling down before I came out. It has been there fifteen or twenty years, and every summer you will see them propping it up, and in the spring it is all down again. It is neither ornamental nor useful, and I think the Commissioners would just as leave take it down as not. It had been leased heretofore, but now the lease has expired, and I think they intend to take it away. I don't know anything about that.

MR. TULLY: "Failure of the Board to properly manage the valley, in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States?" A. That is a general question to include the whole thing?

Q. That covers the whole? A. Well, I don't know that I could say anything against them in that respect. It is a very hard matter for a committee or a commission of a number of men—say, from five to nine—to please everybody. But, as a general rule in the valley, I think the Commissioners have done, in their judgment, what they saw and thought was best; that is my impression; and I don't believe that they have done a thing that was intended to be arbitrary, or intended to be mean or wrong. I don't believe anything of that kind; I don't believe that they ever have, to my knowledge. I know nothing.

Q. Do you know any particular act of any one of those Commissioners that tends to create an impression in your mind that they were influenced in their action by any motive other than the public good? A. I don't believe that they were ever influenced by anything else. No, sir; I don't believe.

Q. There is no instance that you could cite of any act of any of the Commissioners, that you think— A. That would lead me to believe that they would do it for gain or otherwise?

Q. Yes, sir; that they were actuated by motives? A. No, sir; I don't think that the Commission is composed of that kind of stock. No, sir. I think that it is composed of gentlemen, and a gentleman won't do that kind of business.

MR. HOOK: Do you think that if the State made a larger appropriation of money for the Yosemite Valley that the Commission would handle it with more satisfaction to the public? A. With more satisfaction than when; than heretofore?

Q. Yes, sir, than they do at present? A. It is questionable if you could find three or four men that doesn't cost the State more than this Commission does.

Q. I mean with regard to the appropriation made for the valley? A. I have never known the Commissioners to throw away anything that I considered willful in the valley; as I stated to start with in my testimony—

Q. You don't catch my question. The question is this: If there was a larger appropriation made by the Legislature, couldn't the Commissioners improve these trails and roads, and clean out this underbrush, etc., to facilitate traveling? A. Yes, sir; there is lots of room for that, and I think that they would do it if they had the means. Why, as a matter of course, I think that if they had the means that they would. And from the start they have made this summer, I am perfectly satisfied that if they had the means to go on and do something that they would do it, and do it well. That is my idea.

Q. Are there not many thousands of dollars received from people coming to this State on account of people visiting the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir; what they leave in Yosemite Valley is a very small amount of what they leave in the State.

Q. Then you think it would be for the best interests of the State? A. I will show that to the committee, after I am through with these questions, if they will allow me to make a statement of two minutes; I will show you that Yosemite Valley does not get all the money that tourists do spend in the State.

MR. TULLY: With regard to the general system there of rentals and renting out privileges, etc. Do you, or do you not believe that it would be conducive to the best interests of the State to reduce all rentals there to a minimum, that is, to as small a rate as it could be done to cover the actual needs and requirements of the valley? A. Yes, sir; to do that. And then I would be in favor of reducing the rates; that is, reduce the prices for tourists correspondingly.

Q. Don't you think the reduction of rentals generally there would tend to draw or attract more tourists, and that the State would be benefited by it, and it would more than compensate for the reduction of rentals? A. Yes, sir; the increase of travel would.

Q. The increase of travel? A. Yes, sir; but at the same time, if you do that, the Legislature must make an appropriation to give them the chance to keep the valley in repair, and attend to it, because they depend, to a great extent, on the revenue they get from the valley to do that thing with now.

Q. What I was going to get at was this— A. If the Legislature would make an appropriation—

Q. I ask that question with a view to getting such information as to enable us to recommend what ought to be done in the future. For instance—now, I will assume that if it were known to tourists that rentals, and even hotel fares, and all kinds of charges for animals, and everything of that kind, were reduced to a minimum—in other words, considerably reduced from what they are there—that the additional number of tourists that would come to this country would more than compensate the State, even if the State made an appropriation to keep the valley up? A. I think so.

Q. Do you think it would be a wise and judicious process? A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. To contribute more money from the State, and make the accommodation of tourists easier, and thereby attract a greater number, and that the money they would leave in the State, even outside of the valley—which is a great deal more than they leave in it—the State would be compensated in the additional amount of money that tourists would leave in the State at large, for any reduction of rentals? A. I think it would be a good plan to reduce the rents, as you say, to a low price, and reduce the business that is done under those leases in proportion, proportionately. I would be perfectly willing to do that, and I think the travel will increase. A man that wouldn't take but one horse now would take two next time, and it would work up in that way.

Q. Say that you have three thousand tourists there, and you rent three thousand horses for them; you get $1 for each one of them, or whatever you get; if the amount was increased so that there would be ten or fifteen or twenty thousand a year come into the valley, you could better afford to supply them with facilities for going over the valley at a rate considerably below what you now charge; than you do now? A. Yes, sir. That is the view I have taken of it for years.

Q. That the best policy of the State is subserved by reducing the rentals there to a minimum? A. Yes, sir; and cut down the business in proportion. But they can't do that unless the State appropriates money.

Q. I am assuming that the State would have, as a matter of course, to put out a little more money, which she would ultimately get back; that it would be a good investment on the part of the State to do that; it would be a good investment, financially speaking? A. Yes, sir; that has been my idea for years.

MR. HOOK: You said that those rents, and leases, and one thing and another, couldn't be reduced without the State making a larger appropriation? A. I don't see how it could. It wouldn't leave them anything to do anything with. They rely on that, I think, to a certain extent—in fact, it is the only thing they have got sure to do anything in the valley with, unless an appropriation is made.

Q. You don't think the State should make the Yosemite a self-sustaining park, but that the State should contribute sufficient money to make it a place of resort and pleasure? A. Of course they will have to do it that way or else they won't do it at all. The revenue that is derived in Yosemite from permits to do business and transact business, won't more than keep the roads in repair; the roads and trails.

MR. TULLY: You think that the State's policy should not be speculative; that it should not use the valley for speculative purposes; that it ought to do its duty by the valley and put out the money necessary to do it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any special view to whether the valley itself was paying back the interest on the money; that they ought to look to the State at large for some benefit? A. I think the Legislature ought to make an appropriation for the valley at every session, and I think if it is spent judiciously they will see after awhile the benefit derived from it.

MR. HOOK: You consider it the fault of the State that the valley is not in a better condition than it is now? A. I think that would be a very good way to put it; yes, sir. I desire to make just a little statement here for about a minute. I read in the San Francisco "Examiner," some three or four months ago, in an article that was furnished them by a man—I don't know who it was. I think the "Examiner" has a reputation, or did at that time, at least, too good a reputation to have published such a thing as that of their own motion, and consequently I am under the impression that the man who furnished the basis for that article must have been a liar by occupation. I think he must have attempted to make a living by it. He stated that the receipts of the saddle train were $250,000 a year; that the receipts daily were from $500 to $600; and that the net income for the year was $40,000. Now, gentlemen, I want to say: I just want six months—I don't want a full year at $40,000—give me six months, half a year, and I will quit. I will state to you here, as a matter of fact, that I have been in that business in the valley for thirteen years. I know that the "Examiner" would never have published it if they had known the facts in the case. The fact is that I have been in the valley thirteen years, and been in a position to know what they have taken in in that saddle train business; that is to say, the livery business in there. I have kept the books part of the time myself; $250,000 have not been taken in the gross receipts in the thirteen years; the gross receipts for thirteen or fourteen years have not been $250,000. There never was in the valley but once in that thirteen years that the receipts in any one day was $300. Now, these are facts. One witness here, Harris, has just gone away in time not to hear me. He testified before your committee—I read it in print next morning—that he had been there; that is true. That is the only part of it that was true. He testified, "I have been there." He says, in relation to the saddle train business, that "it runs from $150 to $250 a day; and I know what I am saying, because I have been there." He had been there; that part is true; and the other part is as false as a man could speak; and he knew when he was saying it that it was untrue. He intended to leave the impression on this committee that $150 was the lowest that was taken in, and that $250 was the highest. I want to say that whilst he was connected with the business—he was connected in the business for five years—and he knew when he testified to that that it was untrue. My books will show in the month of last October that I run nine days and didn't take a nickel in; not one nickel; and the other days was not $25, the gross receipts; and it was just the same when he was there, and it is so every year. He said $250. That was true to this extent: it just happened once, one year, and that is the only time he got a divy out of $250; and it was just one time; and we never forget the day; we have spoken of it a great many times. Now, Mr. Hutchings has been in the saddle business, and he knows the statement that I am making; and he knows when Harris said, "from $250 to $300," that he lied, and did so willfully and intentionally. I want to make that statement, and I was in hopes he would stay here when I made it; and I do know it, and I know that it can't be done. It is not quite as bad as the "Examiner's" statement, but it is pretty near it. I wanted to state that matter because I knew he had been before the committee and would leave a false impression. Here is a fact, too: Every kind of business done within the limits of that valley—hotels, livery, butcher—don't come to $65,000 a year gross. I testify to that, that the entire gross receipts of that entire valley don't come to $65,000 a year. Now, how does that sound for $250,000 for a livery business that never went to $18,000 in a year yet? Of course, that is not testimony in this case, but I just wished to make that statement.

MR. TULLY: It is testimony in the nature of rebuttal.

MR. HOOK: Did Mr. Washburn spend $20,000 on roads and trails within the grant? A. He did; him and his associates; yes, sir; I think they did.

Q. Did he ever get any of that money back from the State? A. No; not to my knowledge.

Q. They did that for the accommodation of travel and promoting the business? A. Yes, sir; and I helped to build part of those roads myself.

In 1875 we built the road that comes from Wawona into the valley; a stage road. I was interested with Washburn at that time. I never got a cent for it.

Q. Who keeps it in repair? A. The Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company. It belongs to them now.

Q. That is all for the benefit of the State, is it? A. It is for the purpose of carrying tourists into the valley.

Q. It is certainly a benefit to the State? A. I should say so; the same as anything else that was connected with the valley. It would cut the same figure as any other improvement that would add to the people that would come in there; facilities for their coming.

Q. Was the Big Oak Flat road equally as expensive to build? A. Yes, sir; I don't know but more.

Q. That was built by private parties? A. That was built over a worse country.

Q. Built by private parties? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who keeps that in order? A. Why, the company does, I presume. I don't know whether it is the company or whether it is owned by individuals. I don't know whether the turnpike company or individuals own it. I know several men that are interested in the road. Priest is one; Sprague is one; Mr. Drew is one. I don't know but what there may be some others. I don't know. I know they are.

Q. Do you consider the tolls on those roads excessive? A. Within the limits of the valley?

Q. Outside the limits of the valley? A. No; I don't know that they are.

Q. Going to the valley? A. Well, of course there ought not to be any on it. They are excessive if they are only a dime a head. The roads within the limits of the valley ought to be free.

MR. TULLY: I was going to ask you that question. Whether or not it would not be conducive to the best interests of the valley for the State to extinguish the title—

A. Exactly. That is more of an eyesore and bugbear than anything else. Dr. McLean found it so with his road; when he collected tolls everybody would growl about it. That was generally the case, and nine out of ten of them went over without paying him anything, but it was at his expense, and he had to keep his road in repair, and he did finally sell it to the State.

Q. Does this road of Dr. McLean's belong to the State? A. Yes, sir; they bought it, and paid him for it.

DR. McLEAN: That is, the part within the grant. A. Yes, sir; the part within the grant. Outside of that the Commissioners would have nothing to do with it. That is controlled by the Boards of Supervisors. No, sir; those roads ought to belong to the State within the limits of the grant, and the State ought to keep them in repair.

MR. TULLY: Shouldn't they outside the limits of the grant? A. Outside the companies will keep them themselves.

Q. Don't you think the State ought to extinguish these toll roads? A. To do that, the counties would have to buy the roads. The county we are living in is too poor to do it; they can't do it.

Q. Do you think that it would be good policy for the State to take that matter in consideration and help the counties? A. Well, I don't think it would be good policy for the State to do that. I think within the limits of the grant would be enough for the State to handle. I think it would be well enough to allow the part outside of the grant to belong to the parties and let them keep it in repair themselves; but within the limits of the grant the State ought to own it, but outside I think the parties ought to own it. The Board of Supervisors set the toll, and if there is any complaint they can complain before the Board, and they can attend to that; have it lowered if it is necessary to have it lowered.

MR. TULLOCH: How many horses do you generally have and keep up? A. I had two years ago an even hundred, and when I cleaned up in the fall I had ninety-two, and I came in late last year, I think, with ninety-seven, and I went out with eighty-seven, I think. That is my recollection. We count up every time we take out. We lose from twelve to fifteen every year. They will get a broken leg, or a broken back, or something of that kind, and we have to kill them, and some die without being killed.

Q. Do you keep that many daily on hand all the time? A. No; when I come in on the first of April I take in about thirty head, and that will last me through the month of April, and the first of May I bring the balance in and keep them there until I go out—not until I go out, because sometimes it will be stormy, and I will send them out two or three weeks before; send them out in the month of October.

MR. KENNEY: I understand there has been a statement here by Mr. Harris wherein he says the Commissioners took all his improvements without paying him anything for it. That is in testimony here, I believe?

MR. GARDNER: Yes, sir.

MR. KENNEY: I would like to be sworn on that particular point.

GEORGE W. KENNEY.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

THE WITNESS: I want to make this statement: Mr. Brightman and myself got the lease from the Commissioners; we secured the lease of Ashburner, Raymond, and Madden—a ten years' lease. We run that place one year, and we assigned it to Harris as security for some money borrowed from him. He was to hold the place one year simply, and he was to return it to us in as good order as he got it, provided the place paid him his money; if not, why he should keep the place until such time as it did. The amount of the indebtedness was $1,349; $200 due Harris on store account; there was $749 due Clark, as administrator of the Lemmon estate; and there was $400 that would be due the Board of Commissioners the following January. At that time, the rents were all paid at the end of each year; now they are paid in advance. The sum total was $1,349. In Harris' statement, he said he owed the Lemmon estate, or that we did, $1,349, which is utterly false. We owed the Lemmon estate $749, which Mr. Clark would have substantiated my evidence, if he had been questioned. He makes a statement that we were in debt to the Commissioners $800, which is utterly false. We couldn't have been indebted that much, because we only had the place one year and our rent was not up until the following January. At the end of this one year that he was to have this place as security for his money—the place paid him his money back—he turned around then and brought in a bill of $1,000 for his wages as superintendent of the ranch; $3 a day during the winter months. That lease read in this way: for the consideration of $1 paid in hand, all the improvements that I had or might have during that ten years, were to revert to the Commission at their pleasure. They were to cancel their lease at will whenever they chose to do it. Now, he claims his improvements. He has no more right to it than I have to ask any of you gentlemen. That was the statement of the lease. He had improvements there, but he accepted that lease on the same conditions that Brightman & Kenney had. It was the same lease that we had with an assignment drawn up, made by Mr. Clark, who was Guardian at that time.

Q. Was this the property that he claimed was taken away from him and he was thrown out of the valley? A. That is the identical property, and that is the lease he had. He had the old Brightman & Kenney lease, with a simple assignment.

Q. He had no real claim? A. He had no claim at all. The leases were all made in that way. For the consideration of $1, you sold all the improvements that you had or might have during your time of lease.

Q. Then do you not consider that the Commission did drive him from the valley? A. They did not drive him, and are not entitled to pay him $1. If they will bring his lease, they will see it. The copy of the lease was with the old Board of Commissioners, and those papers never were secured by this Board. On the old original Board were Ashburner, Raymond, and Madden; years and years ago; among the first Boards.

Q. How long has Harris been in the valley? A. He took the lease of the property in 1876.

Q. When did he leave? A. He left in 1887, I think; 1886 or 1887; 1887, I guess it was. That is all I have to say. If there are any questions you have to ask, I am willing to answer.

J. M. HUTCHINGS.

Being duly sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Where do you live? Answer—I reside now in San Francisco.

Q. You have resided in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long? A. Twenty odd years.

Q. You are pretty well acquainted with what has transpired there during that time? A. Pretty well; yes, sir.

Q. Did you live there almost all the time, continuously, or only at intervals? A. For a great many years, continuously, winter and summer; of later years I have spent the summer, in part in the valley, and out of it in the winter.

Q. You understand the nature of this investigation; do you not? A. I have tried to understand it.

Q. Certain specific charges are preferred against the management of the valley. The charges are not against any individual members, but against the management, which would embrace all the time since the valley has been under the control of the Commissioners, since it passed into the hands of the State? A. That is the way that I understand it.

Q. The object of the investigation is to get at the truth or falsity of these charges. The first charge here is that of misapplying public moneys and appropriations. If you know anything about that—any instance that came within your knowledge, by those that had the valley in charge, in the handling, or investing, or applying of State moneys, where they had misapplied it—why, you will please state to the committee what you know about it? A. With the consent of the Chairman, before I do that, I would like to say a few words in reference to the valley.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hour is pretty late. I think if you will confine yourself to the questions that Mr. Tully asks, we will get along more rapidly. A. All right; what is the question?

MR. TULLY: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations?" A. Let me, before I even begin with this testimony, say that I wish it distinctly understood that I have nothing personal whatever against any of the Commissioners, and all the men connected with the valley—Kenney & Coffman and the hotels—have all been as kind to me as they could, and it goes against the grain, I assure you upon honor, to say a word that will in any manner implicate them—even implicate their judgment. But I would say this: that, in my judgment, it was not a wise thing, that is not a judicious thing to do, to spend a number of thousands of dollars on the Anderson trail. I understand, however, that that was not the action of the Board, but the action of the executive committee. And it has been the habit of the executive committee, in a great many instances, to do what it thought best, and frequently not to carry out the instructions of the Board. The Board, as I understand it, should devise plans and agree upon something, and the executive committee should be to carry out the instructions of the Board mainly; the details. Now, I know that Dr. Briggs was mainly instrumental in inducing George Anderson to commence the building of that trail, called the Anderson trail. I think Anderson wanted the work, wanted to do the work, and he commenced it; he made a contract to do it for $1,500, from the Tissack Avenue bridge up to Snow's hotel, on the north side of the Merced River. That money was all expended before he arrived—when he arrived at the base of Grizzly Peak, just a little beyond the base of Grizzly Peak; not one fourth of the way; not one fifth of the way. I ought to say this; not being a man of capital or means, the Commission, through Dr. Briggs, kept supplying him with money to pay his men and pay for his supplies. When the $1,500 had been expended, the trail had to stop there. Well, then another contract was made by the executive committee—not by the Board, as there had been no meeting of the Board, with Mr. Anderson, to complete it. He said that he could complete it, he thought as he got around Grizzly Peak, he could now complete it for another $1,500. So, as they had expended $1,500, they thought it would be better to expend $1,500 more, than to lose the $1,500 that had been put in. So a new contract was made, as I understand it, with Mr. Anderson, to finish the trail for the next $1,500. But that only took him so far; and then, as he had expended the other $1,500, making $3,000, Dr. Briggs made an agreement with him—I presume authorized by the executive committee—to continue work upon the trail, and agreed to pay him, or rather to pay all of the bills that he might fairly create, for wages, supplies, tools, and everything of that kind. Well, he went on. I have understood—Mr. Anderson told me that Dr. Briggs said that he would pay him well for that service; and he said he thought he would get from $4 to $5 per day for his services; but he would like to see the trail completed. So, under the superintendence of Anderson, quite a number of men were employed, and they went on for some time with the trail, but their accounts got a little mixed some way, so that they could not quite get at the way the orders were drawn, as Mr. Anderson was treated with independently of the Guardian, myself. But at this juncture—that was commenced in August, 1882—that is, my taking account. I was instructed to receive the time, as given in by Mr. Anderson, and to make out the orders for the payment of the workmen, to be countersigned by Anderson, as belonging to his department. That was done, and they continued work all through the fall of the year and through the winter even, because he said that he could get it done by the spring if they worked all winter. In April, 1883, I was instructed to examine the trail and to report upon it. I therefore took a man with me, and we chained every bit, and I reported every rod, or half rod, or chain, where it had been completed, how much was incomplete, and in what condition it was at that particular spot, giving the distance by chains. Then, after that was done—and I examined the work thoroughly—I reported, and there still was a wall eleven hundred feet in length; a wall of solid mountain, that stands at an angle of about 68 or 70 degrees, that had scarcely been touched. The trail had to be constructed right in this solid rock, and it had scarcely been touched. The upper end had had a little bit blasted out; and I reported all this, and also that I had conferred with mining men concerning it, and that it would take at least from $12,000 to $16,000 to blast that solid wall, so as to complete the trail. And after I had reported this, the order came for a suspension of the work; and it remained just as Anderson left it until a year or two ago—two years, or perhaps three years ago—yes, three years ago—a part of the trail was utilized, at my suggestion; first, to build a bridge across the main Merced River, and utilize the Anderson trail, so that it could arrive at Register Rock and connect with the other trail, the old Snow trail. Now, the number of days that Anderson was working on that I don't know; that is outside of this; but I think it was such a lack of judgment to begin with—and Dr. Briggs was a clergyman, and for him to go right into that, and without knowing anything about it, contract with Mr. Anderson for $1,500 when it would take at least $20,000; it looked so ridiculous, that so little business thought should have been given to it. Therefore I think that that was a misapplication. I think that the intention was good. I don't question the motive of a single member of the committee, not in the least; and I want that understood distinctly.

Q. You think his judgment was bad? A. I think the judgment of each one of those who had a hand in that was far different from what it should be.

MR. HOOK: Was it the judgment of the committee or just the doctor? Was it the judgment of the whole Commission or just the judgment of one Commissioner? A. The whole Commission had determined not to undertake it.

MR. GARDNER: How many of the present Commissioners were then on the Board? A. I think Mr. Madden was the only one. Hold on, please, excuse me; no, I will take that all back. There was John O'Brien, of Stockton; there was Mr. Raymond.

DR. McLEAN: He is dead. The question is whether any of the present Commission were members? A. I think nearly all except Major Truman and Mr. Taber, and Governor Waterman.

DR. McLEAN: Were on the Commission at that time? A. Nearly all of them.

DR. McLEAN: Why, no; Chapman was not on the Commission? A. No; that is so.

DR. McLEAN: I don't think that there was anybody on the Commission that is on now except Madden. A. I can tell you exactly, if you will excuse me a moment, and perhaps that will be better.

MR. CHAPMAN: There was only Mills and O'Brien. Madden was not a member.

DR. McLEAN: I don't know whether Mills was on. A. Mr. Mills was on.

MR. TRUMAN: Not Madden at that time, because I was up in the valley at that time, and he was not a Commissioner then, when they were building that trail.

THE WITNESS: [Examining book.] I will tell you exactly; at least I believe I can.

MR. HOOK: Name those over who are on the present Commission that were then there.

MR. TULLY: I understand the question goes to who were the Commissioners at that time.

MR. GARDNER: I asked how many of the present Commissioners were then on the Board, when the Anderson trail was begun? A. Wm. H. Mills, John H. O'Brien; I think those are all.

MR. HOOK: Mr. Mills is not on the Commission at present, is he? A. Yes, sir; I believe he is on.

MR. GARDNER: He was last year; he was until lately? A. Yes, sir; he was until lately, and may be yet for all I know of, my own knowledge.

MR. HOOK: Was the contract originally for $1,500? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that $1,500 paid by the Commission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they contracted further for $1,500 more? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was paid? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was still further compensation allowed Anderson for building that trail? A. No; no compensation allowed Anderson. He never received a cent.

Q. Not in the first place? A. Oh, yes; he received the $3,000, but when he went on superintending the work—

MR. GARDNER: Working by the day? A. By the day. He received not a dollar that I know of.

MR. HOOK: Was it the whole Commission that made a contract with him for this work? A. I think not, sir. I think it was the executive committee.

Q. Had they any authority to contract with Mr. Anderson to build that trail, without a full Commission, under the law? A. No.

Q. Had they, or had they not? A. No, sir; I should say not. As I explained it, I think, in my judgment, the executive committee should be to carry out the instructions of the Board in detail, and not to run—it has been the tail wagging the dog instead of the dog wagging the tail; I mean in a great many instances.

Q. The Commissioners have to make all contracts in full session, do they not? A. I don't know. I think they have not gone upon that rule. I think the executive committee has made any number of contracts.

MR. HOOK: As I understood it, the executive committee were powerless unless the whole Board acted? A. They generally indorsed the action of the executive committee, and they have done it ever since. Whatever the executive committee has done it has been allowed to go, I think, in most cases; scarcely without an exception.

MR. TULLY: Do you know how long Anderson worked there after he received the $3,000? A. Yes, sir; I can tell you. It was from August until April. No; he worked longer than that. I think he worked on just upon his own ticket awhile, as I say; that is, he superintended the work and paid the hands and all that sort of thing—that is, made out their orders—until some time after, and then it was turned over to me: I think perhaps two months or two and a half months.

Q. So that he never received anything for that labor—I am speaking now of the work that he did after he had been paid on the $3,000 work? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Had he men hired when he was working by the day? Had he hired men? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They never got their pay, either? A. Yes, sir, they all got their pay.

Q. Who paid them? A. I paid them; that is, I was instructed by the executive committee, or rather by Dr. Briggs, and I supposed he was the mouthpiece of the executive committee—he was Secretary and Treasurer; I was instructed to receive the time from Anderson, keep an account of all their time, just as I did the men that I employed, and make out orders just the same as I did for the other men, only that he—only with the countersign of Anderson, so as to keep the two separate.

MR. HOOK: You were Guardian of the valley at that time, were you?
A. Yes, sir.

MR. TRUMAN: You were the Guardian of the valley during the building of the Anderson trail, were you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not make out the accounts and verify them as correct? A. No, sir; that is, not to verify them as correct; at least, I don't remember doing it.

Q. Didn't you send the vouchers to Dr. Briggs? A. I sent the vouchers, and I have kept a copy.

Q. Could you send a voucher without verifying it as correct; could you do that? A. George Anderson signed them as correct.

Q. Didn't they go through you at last; weren't you the man who sent them to the Secretary? A. Yes, sir; I kept an account of all the vouchers, and I turned over the vouchers with my account—with my statement.

Q. Did you state in any of those vouchers or letters accompanying them that the money was misapplied? A. No, sir; that was not my business. I acted under instructions.

Q. You think now that it was misapplied? A. I do.

Q. But you didn't state so as Guardian? A. I had nothing to do with that. It was not for me to question those who employed me.

Q. We make the Guardian now do it. He has to verify all accounts. A. Yes; but it was not for me to question those who employed me as to any matters of that kind.

Q. How many years were you Guardian? A. Something over four years.

Q. Didn't you receive your instructions from the executive committee during that time? A. I received instructions from Dr. Briggs as Secretary of the executive committee.

Q. He is the one that does the writing. In all the executive committees there is some man who writes all the letters? A. Certainly. I received all my instructions from Dr. Briggs.

Q. You say that the Board generally ratifies what the executive committee does? Don't the Board generally leave most everything to the executive committee? A. I should think not, except the details or any little matters that had to be attended to between. I think it is usurping the authority of the Commissioners to do all sorts of things without being instructed. That is my individual opinion. I don't know what your by-laws may be.

Q. Well, we go by the law, don't we? A. I don't know what you go by.

Q. Didn't you go by the law when you were there? A. I went by my instructions. What are you putting those technical questions for? Do you want to get at anything particular?

Q. I am trying to do it as plainly and as respectfully as I can? A. That is all right, Major.

Q. You say the tail wags the dog? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the executive committee— A. That is, in a great many cases.

Q. The executive committee have the power, and they give the Guardian instructions. While you were Guardian and all other Guardians have to make the vouchers and send them to the executive committee? A. Certainly; or send them to the Secretary.

Q. And you have to verify that the accounts are correct? A. Certainly; as given to me. They were given to me by Mr. Anderson, and to the best of my knowledge and ability I would judge that they are correct.

Q. And you made no interposition then, you made no complaint, that there was any money misapplied at that time? A. No; it was not my business to question the acts of those who employed me, as I said before.

MR. HOOK: You were a public officer at the time, were you not? A. I was Guardian.

Q. You were a public officer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you consider it the duty of every public officer, if you see anything that is going wrong, to notify the whole Commission that there is something going wrong? A. Not about their own acts. I think it would be an impertinence.

Q. Hadn't you a higher authority than the Commission—the people of the State of California? A. I did not so understand it. I was an employé. How can I be higher than the employer?

Q. Don't you consider that every man who has a position of public trust is higher than a Commission that employs him; that you owe certainly something to the people? A. I don't know how to answer that.

Q. If you were employed in a government position, and your superior instructed you to do wrong, would you do wrong simply because your superiors instructed you to do wrong? A. I think it would be my duty, if I were employed by you or any one else, to obey my instructions. I don't propose to look for any higher law than that.

MR. GARDNER: When you were Guardian at that time and you saw and knew that this money was being misapplied and put in the work on this trail that Anderson was building, was it not your duty to stop Anderson, or see that he was stopped, or take some steps to do it? A. I wrote to Dr. Briggs, and I conversed with Dr. Briggs about it, and with Colonel Jackson.

Q. And he would not agree with you? A. He knew all about it; he knew what he was doing.

MR. HOOK: Did you ever lay this fact before the whole Commission as a Commission? A. No, sir.

MR. GARDNER: You corresponded with the executive committee? A. With the Secretary.

MR. TULLY: Is it not usual for the Guardian, in his transactions there, to take his instructions and obey the suggestions of the executive committee? Is not the executive committee the party to whom he looks for his instructions, when there is an instruction to be given? A. It is the general rule for the Guardian to receive his instructions through the Secretary.

MR. TRUMAN: Who is always a member of the executive committee, of course? A. He has not always been, Major. The gentleman that was in the office, on Pine Street, under Mr. Weller, was not a member.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any other instances, except that of the Anderson trail, in which public money has been misapplied? A. I will state a case, and then I will leave you to draw the inference. Perhaps that will be the better way of getting at it.

Q. State the facts, Mr. Hutchings? A. I was Guardian; Dr. Briggs was Secretary and Treasurer. He would each year send up young men from San Francisco that were incompetent for work. One year he sent five men. The first year he sent two. One of those men I had to discharge for brutally kicking one of the mules in the belly; we didn't think the poor mule would live; and when I discharged him, he said I could not discharge him; that Dr. Briggs had hired him, and that no one could discharge him but Dr. Briggs. I said, "I don't care if the Lord of Hosts engaged you, you can't drive the State's team any longer." And he said he would see about that; but, of course, I gave the team to another man. That was one man that I had to discharge. In the fall of the year, another of the two, when I lost my daughter, he took charge of the house. When my wife died six weeks afterwards, he wanted to know if I would not like him to take charge of the house again. I thanked him and said I thought of closing it while we took the dear one to the grave. Well, he said, "I will take good care of it." And while I was away he stole everything he could lay his hands on; even to the very ring that had united us in marriage. In the fall of the year, I found all the things, nearly, in his possession. I obtained a search warrant. Now, I think it was misappropriating public funds to send two men of that kind. Then the next year five came up; one was a very fair hand, another was middling, but the other three were utterly worthless; and I remonstrated with Dr. Briggs about doing such things, sending me men that could not work, and putting them alongside of the men that understood work and had the brawn and muscle to do the work; and my remonstrances had no effect, except to nettle him; and when I discharged those two pets of his that he had sent up, it angered him. I have heard of that several times since. Well, the next year he sent up two men again. And, by the way, the team had to go all the way from the Yosemite Valley down to Dr. Briggs' ranch in Santa Clara Valley, or in Santa Clara County, and every year the wagon would be loaded down with supplies for the sons, and others engaged by Dr. Briggs, members of his church, and so forth, down in San Francisco; so that those mules had to haul the provisions for Dr. Briggs' sons right up to the valley; so when they arrived, they were dead almost, worn out, taking such heavy loads; eight, or ten, or eleven days going up, when it could have been done in much less time, if they had not been so overloaded. Now, I consider that a misapplying of public funds. I found one of these young men that was sent up and the son feeding the mules very heavily; there was any quantity of nice hay, and I remonstrated against that, and he said in a very impertinent way, "I have charge of these mules." But I said, "I don't see how that comes in. I want you to know I have charge of the State's property. I am not here in the interest of the Briggs family, but I am employed by the State to watch over the property of the State, and to take care of it, and let me say that whoever engaged you, if you don't do as I request you, I shall have no need for your services, if you are Dr. Briggs' son." That nettled him, and he began to say all sorts of unkind things to me and belittle and defame me in every way and manner that he could. Finally, without a meeting of the Board, he wrote to this Commissioner and the other Commissioner, until he had succeeded in obtaining one majority against me. This was no action of the Board; I mean in public meeting; yet the law provides that a Guardian can be deposed at any public meeting—something of that kind. Still, that was not done, and I consider that the way that was done was a misapplying of public funds. That is, one of the Commissioners. I don't think that they should all be to blame for that. I think they knew nothing about it scarcely, except by what I mentioned. I talked with a number about its being done, and they didn't like that at all.

MR. HOOK: Didn't you notify the Commissioners that such things were being done? A. I did, several of them; spoke to several about it.

Q. Did the Commissioners as a body take any action on it? A. No.

Q. None at all? A. No.

Q. Then he, as a preacher, thought he had certain privileges, which they generally think they have, to use the team of the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any other instance? A. Well, I think it was a misappropriation of public funds to make that survey to Glacier Point, if, as I understand it, $1,000 was paid to the State Engineer for constructing that trail, and Major Truman can tell me whether that is correct or not.

MR. TRUMAN: If you will proceed with your testimony I will see if I can get the book. A. I have understood that $1,000 was paid for making a survey for a tramway up to Glacier Point. Now, to build a tramway to Glacier Point, it might be a very delightful thing in some respects, saving people from riding on horseback, but it would take about three miles of tramway about to be built. That would be my guess, and to say nothing of the dangerous thing. I was gathering ferns one day right underneath where that tramway was to run; here, we will say, was Glacier Point, and there was a bench upon which I was gathering ferns, and an immense boulder fell eighty or ninety feet beyond, and lots of pieces came all around about me. I was in great luck that I was as far off as I was. So that even if it could be constructed it would be a very unsafe thing. People would take their lives in their hands, and men who go into that without thinking—they go up on a nice little jaunt, and they know all about it; they see everything, and of course they know more than anybody who lives there or anything of the kind.

MR. TULLY: Knowing ones would probably suggest what a nice thing it would be to build that tramway? A. Yes, sir; from knowing so much.

MR. HOOK: That was just a difference of judgment; it was an error of judgment? A. I thought so.

Q. It was no criminal intent? A. No, indeed; I didn't impute the smallest criminal intent, or wanton intent.

MR. TULLY: You just think it was an injudicious—— A. An injudicious movement. It is the judgment of the people that I am questioning; I mean the action of the Board in doing such things.

Q. You are not questioning the interest of parties? A. Not one bit—not one iota.

Q. Are those the only instances you recollect of? A. I don't remember any others just now.

MR. HOOK: Do you know or not, Mr. Hutchings, whether the Board ever took action regarding the Anderson trail as a whole? A. I do not.

Q. You notified them of the fact, did you? A. I notified them.

Q. About the expenditure of that money as a body, while they were in session? A. No; not when they were in session. I conversed with a number of members, and they said they had nothing to do with it; that is, they had not authorized it.

Q. Should not they have authorized it in their annual meeting, or done something in that regard? A. It seems to me so. As they had decided not to build that trail in their annual meeting, and the executive committee, in defiance of that, built it, it would seem to me that that was a very high-handed thing to do.

Q. Was it the full executive committee that ordered this trail? A. I don't know. I only know that the Secretary, Dr. Briggs, made the agreement or contract with Mr. Anderson and then gave me orders afterwards.

Q. Do you know whether there was any fault attached to any of the executive committee or the Commissioners than Dr. Briggs regarding the building of the Anderson trail? A. I presume that Colonel Jackson and Dr. Briggs were somewhat in sympathy. I think that Colonel Jackson thought it would be a good thing, and I think he does yet.

Q. You met with the Commission when they met once a year, did you not, in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir; sometimes. Sometimes I would be delegated off to do certain things by them.

Q. At the time they were in session? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not, as the Guardian, generally supposed to be on hand at the time of their meetings? A. Sometimes Mr. Mills would send me away for something or other.

Q. Did you ever, in the meeting of the whole Commission, call their attention to the squandering or misapplication of money on the Anderson trail? A. No, sir; I mentioned it to the individual Commissioners.

MR. TRUMAN: Now I can answer that about the tramway. [Reading letter from Secretary of the Yosemite Commissioners to William Ham. Hall, stating that it was unanimously resolved not to receive his report upon the survey for cable railways in Yosemite Valley.]

THE CHAIRMAN: All that is done to establish the fact that there was $1,000 appropriated to survey that tramway.

MR. TRUMAN: Yes, sir; he sent in a lump sum. He hired a man to do it, and that man sold out his claim; and we had good proof from the valley—although I would not use that in law—that the men were there only a few days, and it might have been done for a few hundred dollars. We have not paid anything; we didn't receive the report at all; we would not receive it.

THE CHAIRMAN: There has been nothing paid on that contract?

MR. TRUMAN: Not a cent; because he didn't make out any vouchers, or receipt, or carry out anything whatever; we didn't propose to pay it.

THE WITNESS: Then that cannot be a misappropriation.

MR. HOOK: I ask that that be stricken out of the minutes.

THE CHAIRMAN: I don't think it cuts any figure in the investigation at all. If there has been no money paid, there has been no misappropriation.

MR. HOOK: Then, Mr. Hutchings, as far as you know, there was no misappropriation of public money under the present Commission, except the two that you named—O'Brien and Mills? A. Those are all, I think, of the present Board.

Q. You don't know of any misapplication of money by the present Board except those two members? A. Well, I think there was a misapplying of public money later on, in some things.

Q. Have you stated them? A. No; but when I come to it I will.

MR. TULLY: The next charge is: "The destruction of private and public property in Yosemite Valley." Do you know anything about that? A. Yes, sir; I know considerable about that. I know that the Anderson house, that Anderson built and paid for out of his own money, was torn down. It was put up for the convenience of his workmen. It was a boarding house and sleeping house of the men, while they were for the most part—while they were building the trail. Then there was another house put up by a man named Flores. It cost him some $400, he told me. That was pulled down. The photographer, Fagenstein, bought it for $100, I believe; but that was taken down without consulting Mr. Fagenstein at all. Then of course we all know that the Cook hotel has been demolished, and the Leidig hotel; and I know that— Mr. Mills gave testimony that they were unsightly buildings, and ought to be out of the way. Now I would like for the committee to look at one photograph that I have here, and see if that is a very unsightly building. [Showing photograph.]

THE CHAIRMAN: Was this the condition of the building at the time it was torn down? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: Do you want to put that in evidence? A. Yes, sir. I think that that hotel, instead of being torn down—that is according to the conviction of my judgment—there were three parties offered to lease it. Mr. Drew, who is present, I believe offered $300 per year for it. Mr. Priest made an offer for it, or he wanted to lease it, and to keep it as a second class hotel. And here let me say that a great number of people who come to the Yosemite Valley cannot afford to pay $4 a day, and they would rather put up with accommodations and board that were not so good, providing they could be boarded and lodged for a smaller sum, say $2 50 per day; and I think that that ought to have stood, to be a second class hotel in the valley. That is the conviction of my judgment. The Cook hotel, part of it, might have stood; and even if parts of the Leidig hotel had been decayed, it would have been a very easy matter to repair it, and to strengthen and brace it if it was needed for a second class hotel.

MR. HOOK: Then, in your judgment, would it not have been better, instead of constructing the Stoneman House, to have had a house of less dimensions, and then a cheaper house? A. No, sir: I think the Stoneman House—that is a nice, good hotel for those who want good accommodations. It is a splendid investment. But a four story house, where land is so abundant, and where people have to go up four stories, some of them—I don't think that was good judgment in the plan. I think it ought to have been a two-story house.

Q. Could they have rented the Stoneman House if there had been cheaper hotels, with the present income they get? A. It seems there were several applicants for it, willing to take all chances. They had no idea that the other—that was let before—I understand it that was let before the Leidig's even were driven out, or before the Leidig's sold out, I will say—not driven out.

Q. Wasn't it the general understanding that the Leidigs would not remain there but a certain length of time after the Stoneman House was opened? A. I was not aware of that. I had understood that it was between Mr. Barnard and Mr. Cook. They wanted Leidig out of the way, so that there would be no competing houses.

Q. What was the state of preservation of this Leidig house? A. It was generally good. One or two timbers could easily have been replaced for a few dollars.

Q. Did they apply all this lumber that was in the Leidig house to some other purpose to benefit the valley? A. I believe it was utilized, part of it, on an addition to Barnard's hotel—my old place.

Q. Has Barnard's hotel the same charges as the Stoneman House? A. They were, last year and the year before; they pooled their issues, as I understand it.

Q. What was the difference in the charges in the Leidig and the other hotels there: what was the difference in price under Leidig's management and the rest of those managements there, and the prices now at the Barnard or the Stoneman House? A. Well, they were generally a little less, I have understood.

Q. Much less? A. Not much, no: they liked Mrs. Leidig's cooking.

Q. Was there any time, since the valley has been opened, that the charges were much less than they are now, at the Stoneman or the Barnard House? A. No, sir: the charges were none too much.

Q. Could they keep a hotel there with reduced prices? A. I think a second class hotel could be kept at reduced prices.

Q. Would it pay? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think somebody would rent it? A. I think so; and it would be for the good of the traveling public, especially camping parties; but I was very glad last night to hear Mr. Cook's testimony that he did make a difference in the charge of persons. I had understood that $4 per day was the uniform price.

Q. Do you know what they charge for meals there now, if campers want to go to the Stoneman House or the Barnard House? A. I believe, according to Mr. Cook's testimony—

Q. Do you know from your own knowledge— A. I do not, sir. Then while we are upon that subject, I don't see—I will mention this fact: You all know, or have heard that Mrs. Glynn, a poor old widow, at one time was allowed to keep only two boarders; two workingmen. Now look at the narrow gauge of the men giving such order or instructions.

Q. How many is she allowed to keep now? A. She is allowed to keep, I believe, eight. Why should she be restricted? Why should not Barnard or Cook be restricted?

MR. TULLOCH: When was she allowed to keep eight? A. This last year, I believe; last July. But before she was only allowed to keep two.

MR. TULLY: By whom was she restricted? A. The Guardian. In instructions by the Guardian, I suppose; in instructions by the Board or executive committee; I don't know.

MR. HOOK: Who was the Guardian at that time? A. Mr. Dennison.

MR. GARDNER: As soon as this was brought to the notice of the Commissioners, didn't they give her the right to keep more? A. They did; this last summer, through Mr. Goucher's influence.

MR. TRUMAN: It was a unanimous vote though.

THE WITNESS: Yes; I am glad of that. And then again, about that stable letting; taking it away. The woman bought the building in good faith. I don't know whether this would come under that, would it?

MR. TULLY: Well, state the fact? A. The woman bought the building in good faith. She paid, I understand, $600 down.

MR. HOOK: Who was the lady? A. Mrs. Glynn. I knew of it about five days after she had done it. She came to me and she said: "Mr. Hutchings, Mr. Hedges is going away in a day or two, and I have bought his buildings." And I said: "What, Mrs. Glynn; you have bought the Hedges; and done it without consulting or asking permission of the Board of Commissioners? Why that is a strange proceeding. Oh, I think you have done very wrong, very wrong, Mrs. Glynn; I am very sorry to know that you have done it." Well, she says: "But I have done it, you know." I said: "That is just like a woman when she goes into business." Well, she said: "He is going to leave, and I have got nothing but a receipt for the money." Says I: "Didn't he give you a deed?" "No; he did not." Well, I said: "I should think whether he has anything to sell you or not if you pay him $600 you ought to have a deed of something that he is supposed to sell you;" and I said: "You better get some one to make a deed." And she hunted around, and she couldn't find anybody to make a deed, and wanted to know if I would not. Well, I didn't like to make the deed; first, because I was Guardian. It is true I was a Notary Public also, but I said: "Now, officially I would not think of making the deed, but to protect you I will do it unless you can find somebody else." And I did make the deed, and she had the deed, but it was given under those circumstances. I didn't know—and I am very particular in making this statement, because I have been accused of knowing, and of not advising Mrs. Glynn. I never knew that she ever thought of buying. I never heard of it until five or six days after she had made the purchase. I am particular in that in order to correct the wrong opinion, or wrong impression that has gone abroad. Now, to take that woman's things away without giving her something—she got $60, I believe, for the stable from the Oak Flat people, the Oak Flat Stage Company, and all those little things. They are run on a narrow gauge. They have been run so much on a narrow principle there.

MR. TULLY: Is that all she got for that property? A. She never got anything for that property.

Q. She paid $600? A. She paid $600 and she has never received a cent.

Q. Didn't you just state that she got something for the stable? A. Well, she received rental; but after Mr. Dennison had induced her to apply for a lease they took the stable away. They notified the Oak Flat people, the stage company, that they must pay the rent in to the Guardian, and not to Mrs. Glynn.

MR. GARDNER: How many years ago was that—when was that? A. That was about three years ago.

MR. HOOK: Were you Guardian three years ago? A. No, sir. Thank God, I didn't have anything to do with that.

MR. TRUMAN: Did you ever recommend the pulling down or tearing down of any of the buildings you have named as having been pulled or torn down? A. I think I may have done so; I think I may have recommended—no; I don't remember—some of the old Cook premises; what we call the Black hotel. It was not a very sightly place, in my judgment. I have no fault to find in taking that down. English gentlemen would come up to me when I kept the house and say, "By George, they stopped me at a bowling alley, you know." Because it was a long shed, a very unsightly looking place. It did look more like a bowling alley.

Q. Do you remember about the time you did recommend the pulling down or tearing down of some of those buildings—Black's, or any others; do you remember about the time? A. No, I do not.

Q. Were you Guardian at that time? A. I think I must have been; I think I was.

Q. Were you interested about that time in building a mill in any way; a sawmill, or anything? A. About that time, no.

Q. You don't remember saying in your letter that they were unsightly and ought to be pulled down; your letter to the executive committee? A. I don't know which building you mean.

Q. That there were rotten timbers in it, and that you could supply them with good timbers? A. No, sir; I never said anything of that kind.

Q. Did you not recommend that the Leidig hotel be pulled down once? A. No, sir; never.

Q. Never? A. Never, to the best of my knowledge and remembrance; never thought of such a thing.

Q. What proof have you that Cook and Barnard had an arrangement to charge $4 a day, or, to quote Mr. Kenney, that they pooled their issues? A. They told me so. I suppose that was good evidence.

Q. I should think so. A. That settles that as far as I am concerned.

MR. TULLY: "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley?" A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who got the rent of the stables when Hedges had the property? A. Mr. Hedges.

Q. Was it paid to Mrs. Glynn at any time after she bought it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was she deprived of the rent of the stable until Dennison had per-sueded her to ask the Commissioners for permission to rent the stable? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it before that; it was at that time? A. It was at that time.

Q. It was her requesting permission that brought in reply the letter that the rent was to be paid to the Commissioners? A. I so understood it.

THE CHAIRMAN: Now, about the timber. State what you know about unnecessary destruction of timber in the valley? A. I think that has been the most damaging wrong that has been done to the Yosemite Valley. For instance, these large oaks; there is a photograph of one; the smallest was three feet and nine inches, and the others—there were three of them—were nearly five feet in diameter. One of them stood by a beautiful avenue of trees; there it is; there is the avenue; there is the road; there is the tree that they cut down. [Showing photograph.] This is the tree that is cut down. You see where it stood; it stood right on this avenue.

Q. What does this represent? A. That represents the tree cut down; that is a fence; that is a part of a fence around Barnard's garden; and it has been said that it was done to make a view from Mr. Barnard's bar-room back door. Now, if that were a thing desirable to be accomplished, those trees certainly could have been spared and the view obtained by a judicious trimming. I have looked at that myself. Because Mr. Barnard wanted a view from that back door; but by moving a few steps you could obtain the view as good as they get now, or nearly; right from the steps of what we call the river cottage; you can see the beautiful vista right to the foot of the fall. Of late years it has grown up some with cottonwoods; but we cut out those cottonwoods, those that were in the way, and a view was obtained from that.

Q. Is there any other timber destroyed to amount to anything? A. Well, then, around about the Stoneman House; you can go and count these stumps, now, of large, nice oak trees, which would have been, if allowed to stand, delightful places for people to walk under and to sit down and read in the shade. Last summer it was like an immense woodpile; I would suppose it was more like a forest clearing in the west than the home of grandeur and beauty.

Q. You speak of the surroundings? A. Of the Cook hotel I am speaking now; I mean the piles of wood; firewood.

Q. That is the Stoneman House? A. That is what is called the Stoneman House.

Q. You think there has been an unnecessary destruction of timber? A. Oh, a most fearful destruction of timber there, in my judgment.

Q. In your judgment it was unnecessary? A. Yes, sir; altogether unnecessary to protect the houses.

Q. It is not a matter of judgment about the destruction; as a matter of fact you know that? A. As a matter of fact.

Q. In your judgment it was unnecessary? A. There is one tree, a magnificent yellow pine, which had all the characteristics of that grand tree, and it was at least one hundred yards from the nearest corner of the hotel. Now people don't want to see everything at that hotel. They want to have little walks around and obtain views. That you must see everything from the hotel is ridiculous, in my taste. Then you go down; there was a very beautiful live oak growing just below Leidig's; a noble tree, standing by a little waterway; that was cut down by order of Mr. Dennison. It is all very nice to have all these trees cut down for the hotel people, because they can get firewood without having to go far for hauling it. Now I know that in the early days we had to cut some trees down in order to make fencing, but I went where they could not be missed. I even hauled them from what we call Timber Cove, which was three quarters of a mile below Leidig's, and I presume—I know that it is supposed that I would consider it a piece of vandalism that I should cut down a piece in those days, but let me say it was forty-two miles to the nearest sawmill, and nothing but a trail. In those days you couldn't carry lumber forty-two miles on a narrow trail on the backs of mules. Well, when I first went to the valley to live, it had been made known to the public about nine years and made known by myself, for I took the first sketches of it ever taken, or wrote the first descriptive account of it ever published, and I have been working lovingly for the valley ever since. It is that that stirs my spirit when I see this what I consider vandalism going on. During the nine years after I had made it known to the public, six hundred and fifty-three persons entered the valley in nine years. When I went there to live, in 1864, the total number of visitors for the year was one hundred and forty-seven, and when an avalanche came down or a storm, or a notable personage came, I would send a little scrap down to the paper, and I treated people as well and as kindly as I could; and the next year we more than doubled upon it, and so we kept going. Here let me say that of course that which would accommodate one hundred and forty-seven would not accommodate three hundred and twenty or three hundred and thirty. We would have to keep building in some way or other or do something. Well, then, I went lecturing, and after ten years the number went up to two thousand seven hundred. That shows what can be accomplished by work. So many of these people that find fault with me, what have they done for the valley, but to gather what I have been driving—to pick up the game that I have been driving in their net. They may pick all sorts of faults with me, but what have they done themselves? I have done more than all of them put together, and the world knows it. Excuse me, I am not going to branch out any further on that, Mr. Tully, but of course we had to do something with this constant increase of travel. In the old house that I bought there was not a window or a door or a partition. Of course those had to be attended to and cared for. Then I imported some cloth from Mariposa. I could pack cloth in if I couldn't lumber, and I made rooms in the upper story of the hotel. That was not convenient. You would see all sorts of shadow pictures. There was a great deal of fun in the arrangement, because all sorts of shadow pictures would be dancing upon the wall or upon the canvas.

Q. Whispering in each other's ears? A. When they were just going to sleep and were just beginning to snore, somebody would break out in a regular guffaw at some shadow they had seen. The next year I tried to improve upon that. I sent two men trying to whip-saw some lumber. There was any number of trees down; I didn't have to cut them down. There were plenty of pines down, but very few cedars for rails and such things. Well, then, during the entire winter they cut one thousand four hundred and eighty-seven feet. Then I began to consider how many thousand years, more or less, it would take me to get lumber enough to make any decent kind of improvements, and concluded that I should never live long enough. I went down and got some irons for a sawmill, and then I employed a man who knew all about putting up sawmills, he said, but when the mill was up the thing wouldn't run, so I had a sawmill but no lumber; but in the fall of the year I went over to look at it and see what was the matter. I took my tools and tore it out; I saw it was not constructed right.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did this all happen before the valley was ceded to the State? A. The valley was ceded to the State.

Q. At that time? A. Yes, sir; the valley was ceded to the State really six weeks after I entered it, but the news did not come until August ninth; that was the first I knew of it.

MR. HOOK: What year was that? A. 1864.

DR. McLEAN: The sawmill was built several years after that? A. Yes, sir; the sawmill was built several years after the deeding; but I presumed that the preëmption laws were a sacred compact between the Government and the citizen; and I went on making my improvements, and then I was notified by Mr. Ashburner, who is now dead—I was notified that I must take a lease from the Board of Commissioners on or before a certain date, failing to do which my house should be leased to somebody else during the winter.

THE CHAIRMAN: We will come to that after awhile. Just tell about the timber; we will come to that by and by? A. What I wanted to get at was that I didn't use much timber; and if Mr. Brightman is here he can testify that he hauled the logs from trees that were down, so that I was not a very great vandal in that. Then there are immense patches of stumps where young trees have been cut down. Now I do think that judicious trimming is a very desirable thing, but to mow them down indiscriminately—big patches—why, if the little groups were left—

MR. TULLY: Has any such mowing down as that occurred? A. Oh, I should say so; yes, in several places, and especially as you go over toward the Fall. And then again—well, we will get through with that first; these young trees were cut down, all of them, for a certain space, from the Barnard fence right to the Yosemite Creek; I mean, all of the pines. I was so desirous, while I was Guardian, and while I was living there, that nothing should be done except under the direction of a skillful landscape gardener. I thought that Mr. Olmstead—I knew that he had written a report upon it, and made it a special study, and that he or some one else—Ham. Hall—would be employed to lay these out, and to have any trees cut down that might be wanted, but to leave the others standing; not to mow them down as they have been doing, and then to make way for this view from the Barnard back porch, a whole swath has been mowed about as wide as this room, right up to the Fall; may be not quite as wide as this room—three fourths of the width of this room. And now I think that is a very great wrong. It is true you get a fine view from Barnard's back porch, but how delightful that place would have been. There are five creeks, and if there had been rustic bridges and walks constructed in the shadows of these beautiful trees while going to the Falls, how much better than to go right out in the blazing sun with their umbrellas, as they now have to do.

MR. HOOK: Could you see the lower part of the Fall at all with these trees there? A. Yes, you could by going a few steps, as I say, to what are called the steps of the river cottage; by going a few steps you can get a splendid view of the lower Fall. Of late years some of them have grown up, probably, but a little thinning out of the cottonwoods, not one of those trees needed to be cut down; not one.

THE CHAIRMAN: Tell the committee the character of the ground where those trees stood; was it such that passengers could go in and out—walk? A. Where the swath was?

Q. Yes? A. Oh, yes, it was fine and open. It is true there were ferns growing there, eagle ferns, and some bunches of willow, but it was not a thicket, as we understand a thicket. There was a certain amount of clearing to be done, but that is another matter. It was one of my plans, if I ever had the opportunity, to make a delightful walk from the iron bridge across the meadow, instead of being covered with dust, as you now are when you go to the Fall. There is a little path across the meadow, and some turnstiles have been made within the last year or so; but nature made it.

MR. HOOK: You think it was an error of judgment in the Commission cutting these trees down? A. Yes, sir; it was a terrible error; an infamous error. No, I wouldn't say infamous.

Q. You don't think they did it with any spirit of vandalism? A. Oh, bless you, no.

Q. It was just a difference of judgment between you? A. Between the Commissioners and myself; yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: As a matter of fact, they were cut down? A. They were cut down; and I think we ought to preserve the beauty, especially when I know and think it will be perfectly—

Q. You think it was an unnecessary destruction of those trees? A. I do; and I think every beauty should be preserved.

Q. You think it detracted from the beauties of the valley? A. Indeed I do.

MR. CHAPMAN: I understood you, Mr. Hutchings, to say that this opened a view from Barnard's back door, from his back room? A. Yes, sir; the barroom back door, porch.

Q. Isn't it a matter of fact that there is a veranda right above that barroom and that back porch? A. Why, certainly.

Q. And isn't it a fact that the tourists are very fond of gathering on those back verandas? A. Yes, sir; why certainly they are.

Q. Don't you suppose that there has been many thousands of regrets offered that they couldn't see the Fall from those verandas? A. I never heard them; because you could walk a little distance to another veranda of the river cottage, and you had a fine view.

MR. TRUMAN: You say that Dennison did the most of this cutting? A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Who succeeded you as Guardian of the valley? A. Mr. Dennison.

Q. Did you recognize him as your successor? A. After awhile I did.

Q. Did you immediately? Did you treat him courteously? A. I tried to treat him courteously; yes, sir; but I disputed the document that he brought. I wanted the Governor's signature, and as soon as that came I turned over everything immediately.

Q. Did you make any remarks about the Commissioners at that time? A. I did about Commissioner Briggs, because I think that underhand way of doing and dealing with me was not gentlemanly; it was not honorable; therefore, I may have made some remarks about Mr. Briggs, who was at the bottom of it all.

Q. Not about the Commissioners who voted against you? A. No; I am not aware that I did.

Q. Was it the same Board that put in Mr. Dennison that had previously put you in; that is, the last time you were elected? A. I think there had been one or two changes.

Q. You were elected Guardian unanimously, were you not? A. I don't remember. No, sir; I think not. I think not. I think there were five out of eight; five out of eight, or five out of seven, I think Mr. Meany told me.

Q. Do you remember the vote taken upon your dismissal as Guardian? A. I believe it was five. That is what I understood. There was no vote except by letter; letters written by Dr. Briggs from his standpoint, with all this bitterness in his soul, from my treatment of his sons because I didn't want them to draw pay when they were not doing work; not earning it; and because they were impertinent.

MR. HOOK: Did you ever feel any animosity at being removed by the Commission? A. Well, I don't know. Is that a proper question to put?

THE CHAIRMAN: It is hardly pertinent to this investigation.

MR. HOOK: It is to draw out whether he still feels sore towards all the Commissioners that have ever been in the valley.

THE WITNESS: I certainly do not. Who would not feel, after Mr. Briggs had done what he had done and imposed upon me men that were utterly worthless?

MR. TULLY: The next charge is: "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land." What do you know about that? A. Well, I don't know that I do know much of that being done of late; only by hearsay. Mr. Harris told me to-night.

Q. State what you know? A. I don't know much of that, but I think it would be a very erroneous piece of judgment to plow up those flowers. I think it would be a good thing to remove a great many willows and bushes, but not the azalia and other evergreens and beautiful plants.

Q. "Debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley." Do you know anything in the management there or anything that has been done, the tendency of which is to debar the general public from the free use of that valley as visitors and tourists? A. Well, it has been unnecessarily and I think very wrongly fenced, too much, a great deal too much. I think all of the fences in that valley should be enough to keep the cows necessary for the hotels, for the orchard, and a garden for each hotel. Then I think that the butcher, if the butcher is allowed to be in the valley, must have some place to keep his stock, but with that exception that it should be free and open, and that wire fence which is by the store, where it takes in that little piece of meadow, I think that is a great wrong to the public. Now, whenever a man came in there and went to get his dinner, he would picket his horse out; there was a nice little patch of grass, and it seemed to be always green, and to put that fence up and just shut it out. Now, teamsters coming in would stop their teams just on the edge of it there, they would rest and wait while they went to get their money, for the goods that they hauled or something of that kind, and their dinner, and it was a very great convenience to any one, and I think it was a great wrong that that was ever put there; besides Mr. Cavagnero testified—well, I know of my own knowledge that it goes nearly up to the big oak tree in front, whereas if the fence were out of the way you could drive around the oak tree if you wanted. There was a passage way between the Cavagnero place and the Hedges place, now the Glynn place as we call it.

MR. HOOK: When were those fences constructed? A. They were constructed about three years ago by Mr. Dennison.

Q. Was the majority of the fields that were fenced in now, fenced in years ago? A. Some were fenced in; a good deal of fencing was done years ago—a good deal of it.

Q. Was the majority that is under inclosure now—was the majority of the fencing done years ago?

MR. TULLY: I think it covers the case if we ask if it was done since the State has acquired a right, and during the time the Commissioners have had charge of the valley. That will cover the entire time, from its inception up to date.

MR. HOOK: Whether it was done or not before this present Commission went in? A. It is not the present Commission particularly, I don't think. It is the management of the valley from A to Z.

MR. TULLY: We are not here to examine into the acts of any special Commissioner. We are to examine into what the Commission have done as managers of the valley, from the time that there has been a Commission, up to date, and not criminate any particular Commission, or to discriminate between them. We simply want to know what has been done in the valley during the administration of the Commissioners; not any particular Commissioner.

Q. How much of this fencing that you speak of has been done since the valley came under the management of Commissioners? A. I think just about half.

Q. About half of it? A. Yes, sir; including—

Q. Including all the fences, since it has been in the hands of the Commissions? A. I would say at least three fifths of it, since it has been in the hands of Commissioners.

Q. Do those fences operate as a barrier to the free ingress and locomotion of tourists and visitors who go there to the valley? Are they an obstacle to the free use of the valley? A. Most emphatically they are; and then if it were not for those fences people could go and camp. Now they have a ridiculous notion that everybody—I believe it is one of their orders, if not one of their by-laws—that every one wanting to camp must apply to the Guardian. A nice thing to go up to the Guardian when a team arrives in there tired out. Why can't he go and camp under a tree, if he does no harm? Camp anywhere.

Q. They are not allowed to do that, are they? A. No, sir; that is what I understand.

MR. HOOK: You don't know that for a fact, do you? A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. As a fact? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: They have to get a permit to camp, and some place is assigned to them where they may camp? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if it were not for those fences there would be a great deal of open commons upon which, if it were not for this permit system, they might, without consulting anybody, go and camp there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand, campers are always subject to the usual rules and regulations, so far as the preservation of the valley is concerned? A. Now they cannot go in, because it is all fenced, and that is considered private property; that is, it is leased property, and therefore private to those who have the lease.

MR. HOOK: How much of that fencing did you put up? A. I think I fenced about—there was five or six acres in the garden. I should think I fenced about fifty or sixty acres.

MR. TRUMAN: In regard to campers, I will read rule thirteen, of rules and regulations: "The Guardian shall always direct campers to the ground set apart for their use while within the grant, and shall see to it that they are comfortable, and establish such rules as will contribute to their comfort."

THE WITNESS: They shall be conducted there. That is a nice word. That is what I object to.

Q. You are objecting to the law, then? A. To your law; yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: The question is to get the facts, and if there is any rule, it may be suggested that the rule be changed.

MR. HOOK: If they go in one part of the valley and camp, will the campers not be allowed to stay there without asking the Guardian? A. It is implied, I think.

Q. Has the Guardian ever objected to the right of campers to camp any place they pleased in the valley? A. I don't know that, of my own knowledge.

Q. Did you, while you were Guardian, ever object to any persons camping where they pleased? A. I had no such ironclad instructions; they were unknown in my day, thank God! I always took pains and pleasure to show them to different parts where I thought—the camping ground at one season is very good, but a month later you can not occupy it.

MR. TULLY: Is it or is it not true that such grounds as campers would like to have is very much restricted on account of these fences? A. Yes, sir; the camping places—you see, there is what is called the camping ground.

Q. I mean such portions of the valley as a camper would like to go to? A. Of course, it is very much restricted, very much.

Q. On account of these fences and inclosures; on account of those fences? A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State laws." A. Yes, sir; that was done in the Cosmopolitan saloon—well, we call it the Guardian's office now; it was done when the new hotel was leased; in the office on Pine street; I was there, and I know.

Q. It was an annual meeting of the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they meet there for the purpose of transacting business? A. No, it was not an annual meeting; it was a special meeting.

Q. Was it a regular meeting for business purposes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that meeting held with closed doors? A. It was called: "We meet this afternoon"—I heard Mr. Griffith announce it—"we meet this afternoon in executive session," at such a time. I knew what executive session meant; that it was for the Commissioners only, or such persons as they thought proper to call before them,

Q. When was that, Mr. Hutchings? A. I think it was year before last; just before the Stoneman House was quite finished; expected to be finished that fall.

Q. Do you know of any other instance? A. Well, down at the church they had it, but that was before the law was enacted. Therefore I think that does not apply.

Q. This last instance was since the law was enacted? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other? A. No; I do not.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know whether at that executive session the Commissioners called any outside person before them? A. I don't know; I think they did.

MR. HOOK: Had they received any person before that executive session—consulted with anybody? Were there any leases or privileges given during that session, whether it was a business session or not, so people could apply?

MR. TULLY: How does he know, if they were in executive session and he was not in?

MR. HOOK: If he went there he must have gone there to ask for a privilege? A. I was not there; I had no business there. It was an executive session; therefore that said "You keep out" to me, and I suppose it did to every one except those specially invited or requested, for purposes known best to the Commission.

Q. Was that a session when they should open bids for privileges? A. That was the time when they were to open bids, I believe.

Q. Have they refused at any time to receive any and all bids? A. I don't know anything at all about that.

MR. TULLY: Do you know of any other instance? A. No, I do not; I don't remember any.

MR. CHAPMAN: Do you know of your own knowledge, Mr. Hutchings, that that was a meeting of the Yosemite Commission? A. Supposed to be.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would state to the committee that that was a meeting of the hotel committee, and not a meeting of the Commission. The Commission was not invited to be present. There was a hotel committee appointed, and this was a hotel committee meeting only.

MR. TULLY: Who composed that hotel committee?

MR. CHAPMAN: There were five there.

THE WITNESS: There was nearly the whole Board.

MR. CHAPMAN: There were five.

MR. TULLY: Five Commissioners?

MR. CHAPMAN: Yes, sir. There was the executive committee and two of the advisory committee on hotels.

MR. TULLY: They were parts of the Commission.

MR. CHAPMAN: It was a committee meeting only. The Commissioners were not called at all. There was no notice sent out to them. This was simply a meeting of the committee.

MR. TULLY: This hotel committee was a part of the Commission?

MR. CHAPMAN: Certainly.

THE WITNESS: And nearly all the other parts of the Commission were represented. Whether they all formed the hotel committee or not I don't know.

MR. CHAPMAN: The Governor was not present, Dr. May was not present, Mr. O'Brien was not present. There were five present.

THE WITNESS: That would leave six.

MR. TULLY: "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. Well, I don't know that I know much about that. I think rents at reasonable rates should be, as some have expressed it, as low as possible to cheapen—

Q. That question involves a fact and an assumption, or an opinion first, whether there was any reduction, and second, whether it was to the prejudice of the State. It might be assumed that reductions were to the benefit of the State. All we want to know is as to the fact whether rentals were reduced, if you know? A. No; I don't know of any that amounted to anything.

Q. You don't know enough about it to form any opinion whether it was for the benefit or to the prejudice of the State's income? A. No; I do not.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. Well, I presume that alludes or applies to some timbers that were authorized to be gotten out by George Anderson. It would seem that the Commissioners had decided to build a new bridge near Barnard's, my old place at that time, and they made a contract with George Anderson to get out those timbers—that is, Mr. Galen Clark made a contract with George Anderson to get out those timbers for a new bridge, and he employed a number of men, and they worked for several weeks on those timbers; and while this was being done, it would seem that they had changed their minds, and they concluded to put up an iron bridge. Some of the timbers were used, but not many of them in the iron bridge, because it was an iron bridge and few timbers only wanted; and there the rest were lying for years, and George Anderson told me he never got a cent for them.

Q. He told you himself? A. He told me himself.

Q. Have you any idea how long he worked there, and what he lost in that transaction, if he lost anything? A. Well, it must have been somewhere in the neighborhood, more or less, of $100.

MR. HOOK: Is he the same man that contracted to build the trail? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they trying to get even on him for getting the best of them on the trail? A. This was before the trail was built.

Q. Then, after they broke faith with him, he still went in a contract to construct the trail? A. Well, it would seem so; certainly he did. George was a curious man, but one of the best men that the Yosemite Valley ever had; one of the most useful. It was his daring that first fastened the rope up to the summit of the Half Dome.

Q. You don't know of any other instance, do you? A. No, I do not. I believe the Commissioners have generally acted honorably in all such matters.

MR. CHAPMAN: You don't know that of your own knowledge? A. I know it from what George Anderson told me; that is the knowledge and the only knowledge.

MR. TRUMAN: Were you Guardian at that time? A. No; Galen Clark was Guardian.

Q. He didn't tell you officially, did he? A. No; he didn't tell me officially, but he told me eight or ten times, and swore pretty lustily some times at "that damned preacher"—

MR. CHAPMAN: You don't know that he ever made any complaints to the Board about not having been paid? A. I think he must have done it.

Q. You think so? A. I think so. I don't know whether he officially notified them. I think he did, and through Mr. Goucher. I think Mr. Goucher was to have charge of his matters and get what he could for those timbers; I think so; I am not positive about that; and to get what he could for the trail—the back wages of Anderson.

Q. That was after he was deceased? A. Yes, sir. That was given by his brother after his decease; yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State and illegally leasing the same?"

A. I know nothing about that.

Q. Nothing at all? A. Nothing whatever.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley." A. Well, it requires sixteen children to have a school in the Yosemite Valley. I know of but three there now that can go to school; those belong to Mr. Kenney—oh, there will be two more from Barnard's. That would make five; the Harris family going out, and the Leidig family going out.

Q. Was the going out, or the breaking up of that school, attributable directly to any wrongful act of any of the Commissioners or the Commission? A. I think it was a great misfortune to the public when Mr. Harris left that valley.

Q. Was that misfortune attributable to any act of the Commission? A. They leased his premises to somebody else; therefore, they took away his livelihood, and he had to go; and yet that man lived there fourteen years, and there never was a more obliging man, and you can see his book, his journal, or record book, the register, and it is full of thanks for the kindness with which he has administered to their wants. You cannot get eggs now or milk.

Q. You think then in so far as the acts of the Commission contributed to deprive Harris of his home there, you think that that far they were responsible for the diminution in the number of children? A. I think so, as far as the Harris family is concerned. I think the Leidig matter, however, was brought about from other causes. Cook and Barnard pooled their issues—

MR. HOOK: You don't think the Commissioners took into consideration whether or not Harris had any children, in making the leases to him, do you? A. Well, he had a large family, and it was like turning him out of doors, and he did nothing to be turned out. He paid his rent, always.

MR. TRUMAN: Who, Leidig? A. Mr. Harris.

MR. TULLY: In your opinion, it was an act of injustice? A. Well, it was an uncalled for act, and one of great detriment, in my judgment, to the campers who generally were around his house or in the camping ground. The Harris house and place was near to the camping ground—to the regular campers ground—and on wet days, the cook stove was always at the service of the ladies to bake their bread. There could not be a more obliging man.

MR. TULLY: In the leasing of this property, was it offered to the highest bidder? Was it put up like other leases there, and somebody overbid Harris, or made a better bid, to the exclusion or detriment of Harris' bid? A. I believe the bid of Harris—I know that Harris, because I collected his rent many times—paid $450 for the premises there and the orchard; and Coffman & Kenney offered $550, and they leased it to Coffman & Kenney; evidently not considering the best interests of the camping public.

Q. As a matter of fact, Coffman & Kenney were the better bidders; that is, they bid a higher price, and Mr. Harris' bid was not accepted for that reason, I presume? A. No; he would have paid a higher price, but he had been paying that price, and he supposed that they would at least give him a chance, but there was no chance left, so he said to me. But that has nothing to do with it; I know that afterwards it was reduced on account of a fire that was mentioned, to $300 last year and for this.

Q. The parties who then rented it for $500, now have it for a lesser sum than Harris offered? A. Yes, sir; Harris paid $450—that is, for that and the orchard, and they paid $300 for those premises, without the orchard.

MR. HOOK: Was the house that Harris lived in burned up? A. Yes, sir; it was burned up after he left; burned up during the winter. I presume they left a log or something carelessly.

MR. TULLY: "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. Well, if you ever saw a dusty place, it is that Yosemite Valley, and I can assure you that in the drive up and around the valley, you get more dusty than you do riding the twenty-four miles, if you go at any rate of speed; the dust is thick, deep. Now, this will give a little idea [showing photograph]. This is only a little distance of it. Now, for instance, there is not a walk to go between the two hotels, Barnard's and Cook's. There is no walk. You have to take that dusty road, no matter what teams go past; and ladies go visiting each other, and gentlemen, too, of course, from Cook's hotel down to Barnard's, or from Barnard's up to Cook's, and they have to trudge through that dust, and if anybody passes, then they have to be covered all over with dust, and it is so with the dust across the road there, the narrow way that they have made across the meadow.

Q. In any other respect are the roads neglected to such an extent as to jeopardize travel? A. I have never seen the roads in any dangerous condition; I don't know of any chuck-holes that have been spoken of.

Q. Do you know the condition of those trails that have been spoken about? A. I know last summer I went up to Clouds Rest, and there were drops down from one rock to another of at least a foot, in four or five places on that trail. Now, if that is a safe trail, I will give it up. Now, when you have got beyond the little Yosemite, the entire road up to Clouds Rest, or nearly all the way, is over an old morass, and cobblestones are right in the way; in places there are benches, and when you go up one of these benches full of cobblestones in the trough, as it were, you can ride very nicely; then you come to another bench; you have to go up that.

Those were full of bowlders: a half hour's work would have thrown out quite a number. I am speaking of what I saw last summer. The other trails where the timbers have been laid across in order to turn the water, and not taken out, there were drops down on those of six or eight inches, and when a heavy lady is going down on horseback, it is a very trying thing, especially if she is unaccustomed to the saddle. I should think if they had not taken out the timber that they should be kept pretty well filled up so as to avoid those steps, and that could be done easily with bark; bark of the cedar.

Q. Is that all? A. That is all I have to say.

MR. TRUMAN: I was going to remark that what he says about the dust is undoubtedly so; that I was up there in June, and these roads were very pretty, but along in July—and Mr. Chapman was greatly in favor of improving a watering cart, and we talked it over. But all California roads are dusty.

MR. CHAPMAN: I would like to ask the witness if he does not really think that if we had the money to do it, that we would sprinkle the valley roads and build a new trail to Clouds Rest? A. Yes; but look at the money spent in cutting down those trees. If the money was spent that was used in cutting down those trees, it would have gone a long ways towards making—you can get soil in that valley that will make very good roads.

MR. TULLY: "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties." Do you know of any instance in which State labor has been employed by the Commission, or by their order or instructions, for the benefit of private individuals? A. No; I do not. It seems that after Mr. Dennison removed Mr. Robinson's paint arrangements out of his studio, he converted it into a Post Office and Wells, Fargo & Company's Express office, and used State men to do it. Whether that is legitimate or not, or whether he did it under the instructions of the committee, I don't know. But I presume that alludes to that. I don't know anything else.

Q. Do you or do you not consider that the barn that has been referred to here—that was put up for Coffman & Kenney for their stable there—A. It may be; but then I would consider that a legitimate matter.

Q. You would not consider that as using public property for private individuals? A. No; I want to be fair.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States." A. Well, I think the facts that I have adduced already would go a very long way to prove that. Mind you, I impute no improper motive, but I think it is the poorest managed place, and I do it with respect, because I respect the gentlemen, and all of that; so it is out of no disrespect; but "I love Rome better than Cæsar; not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more." Those who go to the valley go to have a good time, and do have a good time, and I am glad they do have a good time; but after all, there is not much accomplished; what I consider studying out. You have got to have a man who understands it, who loves it and can study it out, to study out the wants; where roads could be made to advantage; where good walks—not mere trails and turnstiles through barbed wire fences, but where beautiful walks down by the river could be made; and if people want to go fishing, that they can turn around and go a fishing; and if they want to visit, say from Barnard's hotel up to the Stoneman House, that there should be a nice walk made for them; not have a dusty road; or if they want to visit the Yosemite Fall, a beautiful pathway should be cut so that they can walk leisurely over there, among the shade trees; and there is a beautiful place for it; a beautiful one.

MR. HOOK: While you were Guardian of the valley were any of these improvements undertaken—did you suggest them? A. You see, one thing had to be done at a time; and I was instructed to put all my energies on a road around the floor of the valley; those were my instructions, and I spent a great deal of time looking out picturesque openings where a road could be run here or there, or whether it would be better here or there or yonder.

Q. Did you ever find that the Commission were cramped with regard to the amount of money appropriated by the Legislature—that they had not sufficient money to carry on the necessary improvements? A. I have always thought that the people of California have been liberal enough, and would support that valley readily. Until I went in there as Guardian, they scarcely ever got anything. I got three appropriations, or I was instrumental; I was sent here by the Board of Commissioners, and I obtained three appropriations for the valley, of $25,000 each. That shows that they are willing to appropriate, but that it should be well expended. I have no fear about the Legislature appropriating everything; and it is of so vast importance. I wish to mention now one fact. Of course, when keeping hotel I was put into pleasant communion with my guests; and on one occasion one day I said to one gentleman, "If it is a fair question, how much has it cost you—in other words, how much have you had to spend in California?" I thought I would put it that way. Well, one gentleman told me that he had spent $350; another told me that he had expended $1,100 in blankets alone; that is, blankets at $50 a pair. He had erected a beautiful house East, and he wanted those blankets. He had expended $2,700; and another had expended $700, and another $400; and after I got thirty I added them up; I thought thirty would represent those I did not question. After I had added them up, it averaged $510 each, that each one had left in the State. Now, we have from two to three thousand; suppose you have a thousand, you can see there is half a million dollars. Last year there were three thousand went up to the valley; one year there were four thousand; you can see the wealth that is pouring into California; and then this valley should be preserved. That is why I am so anxious to preserve it, for the heritage of our children and the public that are coming, and coming with liberal purses.

MR. TRUMAN: I want to ask Mr. Hutchings if he has not had, generally, when he was Guardian, a great deal of trouble with the Commissioners who were over him? A. No, sir.

Q. You were paid $24,000 once for a claim, or for some right? A. Yes, sir; you mean the old Board? I should say I did have; I had a fight of ten years to keep them from stealing everything I had.

Q. After you accepted that $24,000 did they not have to dispossess you by process of law? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not afterwards put an advertisement in the newspapers in which you referred to them as so called Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Declaring that they had no rights whatever? A. No; I did not declare they had no rights.

Q. So called Commissioners? A. So called Commissioners; yes, sir.

Q. They were the Commissioners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it an actual fact that you declined to pay $100 that you had collected to the Commission? Don't you stand on the books as behind, as Guardian, $100? A. I am glad you mentioned that.

MR. TRUMAN: I have to mention it, because it is on the books. A. It will just as distinctly show the meanness of those on the executive committee—I mean Dr. Briggs, mainly. Now, to begin with, after he had worked, as I have testified, to get me out, Mr. Dennison did not arrive until the ninth of October. He did not, as I considered, bring the right document for me to deliver up, but when he did bring the right document, with the Governor's signature, then I turned over everything. We had to take stock; I had to make my report; I had to get up the time—make up the accounts of the time of the men up to date—and that took four fifths of a month. Now, those men, the Commissioners, had stopped my salary the first of the month, and as Dr. Briggs was Secretary and Treasurer, I thought I would have a good time whistling for that money from Dr. Briggs. I had enough money to pay myself, and I thought it was my duty to my family to pay myself out of that rather than whistle after it from Dr. Briggs, after he had proved himself such an utterly mean gentleman—man, I mean; I won't call him gentleman.

Q. Well, don't you know that you ought not to have done it? A. That may be; it may have been an error of judgment.

Q. The same as some of the cutting of trees? A. The same as some of the cutting of trees, perhaps.

Q. It is probably a greater error of judgment, because the by-laws expressly prohibit you from disbursing any funds to yourself or to anybody else or retaining any. It says the Guardian must send every cent to the Secretary? A. Those have been made since I was Guardian.

Q. But the law was in force, the same? A. No; there was no law in force to that effect, to my knowledge.

Q. Well, the books show so, and the books show that you were written to to pay that $100, and there were thirty other dollars that you had that you collected of Leidig, which you did pay? A. I paid everything except the $100, or four fifths of that month's wages that were due me, and I felt that I ought to pay myself, just the same as I would pay other men under the circumstances.

MR. TRUMAN: Still it would not look well in any Court or store in the world? A. That may be; but you can see the circumstances.

MR. TRUMAN: And to-day on the books you stand owing the State $100? A. Then in my account the State owes me $100.

MR. TRUMAN: Then you ought to get it in the proper way? A. That may be; it may be an error of judgment, but nothing dishonorable, thank God. I never did a dishonorable thing in my life, to my knowledge.

MR. TULLY: I understand the nature of that transaction, properly stated, would be that after you were discharged you rendered a service to the State there to the extent of four fifths of a month? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For which you deemed that you were entitled to pay? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, as a matter of fact, in your settlement you retained the amount of $100 as payment for the services you had rendered the State? A. That is it, sir.

Q. Did you attempt to evade the fact that you had retained that $100? A. Not in the least. In my letter I made a statement—my letter will show.

Q. Did you inform the Commissioners the reason why? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they ever make any legal demand on you? Did they ever take any legal steps to collect it or enforce its collection? A. No.

MR. TULLY: The Major asks you if you didn't understand that it was your duty to pay that money over? Now, I will ask the Major if he don't understand that if that money was due under the law, it was the duty of the Commission to bring a suit against Mr. Hutchings and collect the money, and was it not a neglect of duty on the part of the Commissioners not to do so?

MR. TRUMAN: I was not on the committee at the time; I think they would have a right to.

MR. TULLY: If their failure to institute process to compel the payment of that money was not a violation of the laws and a neglect of their duty?

MR. TRUMAN: I think if I had been a member of the executive committee I should have tried to get it either by law or some other way, except if we had put our heads together and said it would cost more than the amount involved; it only being $100. I don't like to evade anything. I like to be square. I have tried all my life to do the square thing by my colleagues. I don't like to say anything about my colleagues.

THE WITNESS: Let me say one thing. I want to say that I had a conversation with Dr. May upon that subject, and he said he had no doubt that the Commissioners would pay me if I would pay that; and I said: "Doctor, I would do it cheerfully, and if I have committed an error in that direction, and they are willing to do the fair and square thing by me, I will do it cheerfully." And then, before we close, you know that I had a contention; you know that I got $24,000. According to the testimony of the expert, I had expended $41,000. Therefore, as a business proposition for any business man, they certainly would not think that a very nice way of doing business, to spend $41,000 and only take $24,000. Therefore, as they were so exceedingly severe upon me, and pursued me all along, and I had a fight of ten years on my hands, and one of the members, the main instigator, said to me, after it had been going on—it was just being completed—said he, in a sneering sort of a way: "I suppose you are about tired of fighting us?" I said: "Mr. Ashburner, I am not aware of it. Have I shown any signs? I have only been at it ten years, and if I cannot stand it ten years' more, I will certainly sell out to some man who can."

[Adjourned to the call of the Chair.]

TUESDAY EVENING, February 19, 1889.

Present—Mr. Rundell, Chairman, and Messrs. Hook, Crawford, Tully, Gardner, and Tulloch.

Governor R. W. Waterman, in response to an invitation, met the committee at half-past seven o'clock P. M.

MR. TULLY: The Chairman of the committee has deemed it prudent, in view of the nature of the charges which we are assembled here to inquire into and examine, and as a matter of courtesy to yourself—thinking that perhaps you would like to say something with regard to the object of this investigation—to invite you here this evening. I will state that we are not here specially for the purpose of persecuting or prosecuting anybody; we are simply here for the purpose of investigating certain charges. You are aware of the nature of these?

THE GOVERNOR: Certainly; and I am very glad indeed.

MR. TULLY: For the purpose of obtaining any light that we may be able to get, for the purpose of guiding us in the discharge of the duties that may devolve upon us. What we want is for every one to have a fair hearing, and to get at the truth of those charges as far as we can. If you have any statement, Governor, that you would like to make—we don't propose to put you through a rigid process of cross-examination—but any statements which you have to make with regard to those matters, either concerning yourself or concerning the Commission or its management generally, we would be pleased to have you state them after your own manner, and as concisely as you can? Answer—Well, the first time that I was in the Yosemite was in June, 1884. I went there with my family, the most of my family. I had nine in my party. Stopped at Barnard's. We left the road at Merced. That was before there was any railroad in, and we started in stages, which were all first class; in fact, I have staged a great deal in my life; and they were the best stages that I ever rode in, and the best horses, and the most accommodating drivers, and one of the best roads that I ever traveled on. When we got into the mountains, the roads were particularly good. They seemed to have gangs of men along—I know we remarked that, long before I ever thought of being here, or having anything to do with the Yosemite Valley—they had gangs of men, and kept everything in perfect order. That was when we got into the mountains. Even the little rocks were kept out of the road; the ruts were kept filled up. My recollection is, that we stopped the first night at Wawona; Clark's, we called it. I speak of this thing particularly, finding everything so good, because I have lived on the frontier all my life, that is since I was twelve years old, and it seemed to me extraordinary that they should have everything so good and kept in such good order. At Clark's, everything was as good as we could ask. From there into the Yosemite we rode the next day. We all thought that it was one of the most delightful rides we ever took in our lives. We stopped at Barnard's. I think I mentioned that before. It was well kept; in fact, as good fare as I ever saw. It seemed extra good to us, for they gave us all the speckled trout we could eat, and it was at the time strawberries were ripe, and we had them every day. There was not a day that we missed trout, all that we wanted, and we had no fault to find with the hotel at all; and I paid him $4 a day, but I felt that it was cheap enough. I went on nearly every trail. I went up first the Yosemite trail, and went over to Eagle Point. We put up a flag there. Then I made the Glacier Point trail twice, and the trail up to Vernal Fall we made once or twice, and to Mirror Lake. We were there eight days and a half; and we were down to the Cascades, I think they call it; and we expected a little rougher time than we had, but I know we all came out thinking how nicely the valley was kept; how nicely the roads were kept. We were told that their means were limited; but as far as they went the valley seemed to be very well cared for. I was up several times to Mirror Lake. That was before the lake had filled up so, and before there was so many willows. Now it is badly filled up, and a great many willows growing. The next time I was there was, I think, in October of last year. I went in then as Governor to receive the Stoneman House. I was very much disappointed in the location of the house. It was intended for a good house, and is a good house, only some parts of it was not finished as well as they should be, for which we made a deduction from the contract price. We went over the valley a great deal. There was no water then; I think there was not a drop of water running over the Yosemite Falls, and very little over the Bridal Veil Fall. There was but very little if any water in Mirror Lake and in the river; there was but very little water there. I speak of this because there is a little plan, or a big plan, that I want carried out, to keep the water there. When I was there in 1884, and went up to the Yosemite Falls, there had been seemingly no sheep there. There were any amount of places there that the snow was up to my knees there in June; in fact, we were there the first of July; but since then there have been hundreds of thousands of sheep fed all over that country, so that—I have not been up to the Yosemite, but I am told that everything is eaten off. There is nothing there to hold the snow. As fast as a spear of grass or a leaf comes up, a sheep stands ready to eat it. It requires that to keep the snow. That is the reason why there is so little water; at least, that is the reason that I assign that there is so little water on the Falls. And the sheep up on the stream that feeds Mirror Lake have tramped it so that they have filled it in, and the lake is very much lower than it was. I went all over the valley a year ago last October, and advised a great deal about the trimming up and building of bridges and roads. There has been a good deal of timber cut around the Stoneman House that I didn't approve of, but that was cut and that was done with. I forbade then, as far as my power extended, their cutting another stick of timber, unless they asked permission. I forbade even the cutting of a tree that would give a better view of the Falls, and said: "If they want a better view, let them go further to one side or the other." I found everything in excellent order in October, for the fall of the year. We stopped at Leidig's hotel then. There was Leidig's, Cook's, and Barnard's.

Q. What year was that, Governor? A. That was in 1887—a year ago last October. I found the Stoneman House a very handsome house, very well proportioned. I felt then that it was in a very poor situation, but I believe they have decided since it is in a good one. When I was there last June I heard some one say, "What a lovely location for the house." I heard some one say, "I think so myself." You know how a person will. And being that we had the house there, I thought we might as well think so anyway, because we couldn't pick it up and carry it away. When I was there a year ago in June, we had several bridges to build, and I told the Guardian, in cutting trees, I went with him and showed him what trees to cut. They had this Douglas spruce. It is a very stiff, heavy timber, and not easy to rot, and I went with him and showed him what trees to cut, and not to cut them all in one place; but there is such a terrible growth of timber, you would not miss it. I don't know what the technical name of it is. I have always known it as the Douglas spruce. It is a very solid timber, and makes excellent stringers. I showed him all about where to go. I spent several days. I went to every part of the valley—every crook, and nook, and corner—to familiarize myself with it, and my taste runs that way. There is not a man in the world that hates to see a tree cut down worse than I do. Trees are my idols. At the Stoneman House, I went in there a year ago with the Commissioners, and took a portion of my family with me. I saw as fine a kept hotel as I ever expect to in my life; in fact, 100 per cent better than you would expect to find out there so far, where you have to haul everything on teams at the rate of 2 cents a pound. The rooms were as nicely furnished—the whole hotel was as nicely furnished as the Del Monte. I had a suite of rooms there—four or five rooms. I had my family with me, and I paid my bills, too; I would not take anything for nothing. I speak of this in particular because I have seen articles in the paper about Cook furnishing that hotel with old furniture from his old houses, in the different old houses. That is why I speak of this in particular. The furniture was nice oak and ash, light colored, and as good as I would want to put into a house if I was going to build one worth $100,000. The carpets were splendid. My wife has been an invalid for a good many years, and she didn't go out a great deal, and we used to speak of the furniture and the rooms, never knowing that there would be anything said about it in the papers. Cook came to me one day, and says: "I want you to see how this house is furnished." I told him I was satisfied how it was furnished. I went through with him in the three stories, and everything was in perfect order. Now, the furniture in the dining-room, the table furniture, was all as nice as you could ask, and we had poultry, chickens, and such things, as often as you would get them on the table in San Francisco; and they cost $1 apiece. I paid $4 a day for my fare; I paid $3 50 in San Francisco. In this hotel there are bath-rooms on every floor. Every person has the privilege of a bath; there is always plenty of hot water, and plenty of water-closets, and everything as nice and convenient as can be. Now, if you have any questions you want to ask me, I will answer them.

MR. TULLY: I want to ask you a few questions with regard to the Stoneman House. Is that a three or four-story house? A. It has three stories and a mansard roof.

Q. How many rooms are there in that house? A. That I couldn't tell you. There are somewhere about a hundred.

Q. How many exits? What are the facilities for ingress and egress to that hotel? A. Well, there is a wide front door—well, I can't tell you. I think there is one on the end, on the west end, I think, and I believe there is one from the parlor that opens out in the front; I can't tell you exactly.

Q. My object in asking the question, Governor, is that I have heard it said—it does not appear in any of these charges—I have heard it said that there is only one stairway and one way of egress, and that was by the front door, with the exception of a back door, which serves for a kind of a kitchen door, or a back door, which struck me at the time that for a three-story house, that might sometimes have three or four hundred guests or more in it, that it was a very dangerous building, or would be, in case of fire, unless it is fire-proof, or something of that kind. A. There is one very wide stairway that goes clear up. It is extra wide and very easy; and there are back stairs. I remember the back stairs; the different doors I don't remember.

Q. With regard to the general features of that valley, Governor, the fencing and the artificial barriers that have been erected there since the valley was passed to the State, are considerable, are they not? The artificial barriers in the shape of fences? A. I don't think there are; no, sir. There is what they call the ranch, over across is the Stoneman House on the north. How are the points of the compass up there?

MR. HUTCHINGS: The Stoneman House is east.

THE GOVERNOR: Which side are Yosemite Falls on?

MR. HUTCHINGS: That would be northwest.

THE GOVERNOR: On the northwest side of the river there, there is—well, I don't know how much; well, eighty or one hundred acres; may be more, what they call the farm. There has been a farm there.

Q. Did it strike you, at the time you visited there at any time, that those fences marred the general appearance of the valley and would embarrass to some extent or any extent, tourists or visitors there? A. Not the least in the world. There are splendid roads around in every direction. There is a great deal that is opened and that is so dense that you cannot get in. The Indians, I am told, used to burn it out. If you have ever had any experience in a brushy country, you know how fast it grows. I have had a great deal. It grows beyond all accounts. Now, the bridges are very nice. These new bridges that they built this year, of course, I haven't seen. I expect to see them in June. In regard to water, there is one of the finest springs I ever saw in my life. You may class it as one of the finest in the world; the one that supplies the Stoneman House with water. I don't know what the fall is, but it is enough to throw it all over the house. It is the clearest water—why, it was four or five feet deep, and you could have seen a needle in the bottom of it, it was so clear and beautiful; and no nicer water in the world. That supplies the house with water.

Q. I understand that notwithstanding you are at the head of the Commission, that you don't give your personal attention to the details of the management of the valley? A. No.

Q. You simply have a general supervisory care of it; the business is done pretty much by an executive committee? A. There are men there that have been there many years, and such good careful steady men that I would just as leave put my own business in their hands. Take a man like Mr. Madden; I would trust him with any of my own business, I have such confidence in him. There are a great many improvements that should be made there. When I went in, in October, there was a very celebrated Englishman went in with me, or he went in as a tourist—himself and wife. He was Dr. Davies, who has charge of that great insane asylum outside of London. They were two of the highest cultured English people that I ever saw; the finest conversationalists you ever saw. He came over to the medical convention which was held in Washington, I think, at that time, and they gave him three months leave of absence. He came by the way of the Yellowstone, and then through here to the Yosemite. I was sitting on the stage with him when we stopped at Inspiration Point. He looked, and looked, and looked. He says, "This sight pays me for my trip from England and back—this very look;" and he made the remark that there is no country in the world advertised in England like California and the Yosemite. He said that in every English gentleman's and in every public gallery—picture gallery—you find a painting of Yosemite. He came back when I did. He said that while the Yellowstone was on a more extensive scale, that this was as far ahead of it as the heavens are above the earth in beauty of scenery.

Mr. Hook: Do you think that with the amount of money that is left in the State by tourists, there is sufficient money appropriated by the Legislature for the proper maintenance of the valley? A. It is on the increase all the time.

Q. Is there a sufficient amount appropriated by the Legislature to maintain the valley, considering the remuneration that we get in the State from the travel to Yosemite Valley? A. No, I don't think there is. I think there should be a larger sum appropriated.

Mr. TULLY: You think a greater expenditure of money, although it might be apparently thrown away, or at least that it is not particularly called for there, yet, if it added to the attractiveness of the valley to visitors, that the additional amount of money that would be left in the State by the increased number of visitors, would more than compensate for the outlay, in improving it and improving its appearance? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hook: Do you consider that the insufficiency of the appropriation has hampered the Commission in any way, in beautifying the valley or for the safety of the trees? A. Well, it has, in this way: They had to employ less men, and, of course, they did less work. There is a great deal of trimming and cleaning of land that should be done there; brush, and logs, and stumps, and things should be gotten out. They have improved one place by trimming up the evergreens. They trimmed it a little too high to suit me; I got out and showed them how to do it; that is one of my branches of business—trimming trees—and I understand how to do it. If they had more money they would employ more men, and beautify more ground in one season. They built some road there: they drew the gravel out of the river and made an elegant road, clear up. They drew the gravel out of the river and filled this up in some places two or three feet deep, which was a great improvement. In the height of the season I believe there should be a sprinkling cart, the roads should be sprinkled.

Q. To keep down the dust? A. Yes, sir; to keep down the dust in the height of the season.

Q. Wouldn't it benefit the State if a great deal of that jungle underneath those trees was removed, for the accommodation of tourists, and campers, and others in there, so they could have free access in and out under those trees? A. I think so; yes, sir. If it was mine, and I owned it privately, and had money to clean it up, that is what I would do; I would make a regular cleaning out.

Q. Don't you think it would be an advantage to the State to remove some of those old fences that are tumbling down, for the improvement and benefit of the valley? A. Well, I don't remember seeing a great deal of old fences, because there is a road to travel, and you can go afoot outside. It might look better if you had prettier fences, but you have got to have some fences to put your stock in. Now, these saddle animals are all turned loose at night, and they have pastures for those; and I guess some butchers there have pastures, maybe, for their beef cattle.

MR. TULLY: Speaking with regard to turning those horses loose; those men let the privilege of running that saddle train there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, suppose that those fences were all removed, and those saddle men were required to keep their animals up or else keep them at some convenient point outside of the valley, which would enable the Commissioners to remove the greater portion of those fences, except some small pastures that would be needed perhaps around the hotels to keep milk cows in, or something of that kind: don't you think it would be the better policy to require those lessees to keep their horses after that style than it would to devote so much of that valley to the use of the horses of those men who own those privileges, those saddle trains, and leave the valley more open to campers and visitors who visit the valley and would like to have such accommodations as they would find by finding more open pasture land? A. Well, it would be impossible for a man to keep a pack train there, even at the prices they charge now, and keep their animals up, if they have to pay 2 cents a pound for hauling stuff in. That would make the freight on hay $40 a ton; and barley costs them 2 cents to haul in; and say they got it for 1 cent, that would be 3 cents. A horse would nearly eat his head off every day; that is, he would eat the price off—$3 a day. When I was in there first I paid out just about $1,000 in the valley, and I thought in the first place that the charge was outrageous to pay $3 a day for a pony—a little mule—to ride over those trails; but after I had been there three or four days I made up my mind that it was not. I found them very sure-footed; hardly ever, if ever, an accident occurs, and they have got to have the pasture there. They can't take them out of the valley to pasture them, because it would take them all next day to get them back. People want to start very little after sunrise on these trails. I don't remember of so terrible much fencing there.

Q. It is in evidence that there is perhaps over half or two thirds, or between half and two thirds, of the area of the floor of the valley that is actually inclosed? A. Well, that I couldn't say.

Q. I don't mean from wall to wall. I mean what is called the meadow land of the valley? A. The meadow lands are most all inclosed, but they have not been cleaned out, and they had them at first so they could cut hay, but the brush has grown up so that they cut but very little hay. The animals can eat it out while they cannot cut it out. I never thought about those fences, and yet I know a fence annoys me terribly; but I never thought about that, and when I go in again I will give them a good looking over. I have heard a good deal about those old fences, and an old fence is a perfect eyesore to me. There is a piece of wet land there between Barnard's and where Cook's old hotel was, and the road runs right near the base of the mountain, and leaves this between that and the river, and we talked about changing the road and bringing it all up and moving the old dilapidated buildings. In fact, they have taken down Leidig's old building. That was an old rattletrap of a building; and Cook's hotel is taken down. They were built in an early day and built cheaply. In Leidig's hotel you could hear each other wink from one room to another, they were so loose—just a piece of canvas between; and down by the store and blacksmith's shop they talked some of making a cleaning out there, and have the shops that are necessary put out of the way somewhere, and in just as good a place for them, as where they are now. They have got chicken coops and everything of that kind, which is an eyesore. That is near Barnard's. I consider that is the prettiest spot there is for a hotel—where Barnard's hotel is.

MR. HOOK: Do you or do you not think it would be an advantage to the State if there was less charged for the privileges in the valley, and the State made a larger appropriation to maintain and carry on the Yosemite? A. Well, I don't think the charges are exorbitant there for what they have. I think they charge 3 per cent on the cost of the hotel.

Q. I mean the saddle trains and everything there in the valley? A. My idea is—I was coming to that. We ordered a survey, you understand, for a tramway, and they don't report very favorably, but I know a good tramroad can be built up those mountains, just as well as I want to know. There is no "can't" in it at all; it can be done. That will do away with those saddle trains. I had a survey made that would lead to Glacier Point and one up to Yosemite Falls. Now, you let any company go in there and build it, but restrict the charges to a certain point. Let them make the round trip for awhile for $1, to go up and back for $1. There is many a person that would go up twice or three times or oftener, and it would be a good investment for any company to put in those tramways. The height—what is the height there right against the Stoneman House?

MR. HUTCHINGS: It is three thousand two hundred and fifty-seven feet. A. So the tramway would be maybe three times as long.

MR. HUTCHINGS: It would be about three miles? A. No; it would not require that much.

MR. TULLY: What do you think of the propriety of the State building those tramways and leaving them free of toll? A. Well, I would rather a company would do it. It is almost impossible to do anything with public money but what there is a job in it.

Q. You are aware of the fact that if there is anything in the world that an American objects to more than he does death and taxes, it is to paying toll? A. Well, I guess they would rather pay toll on that road than to pay $3 to ride a mule up there. That is my idea of it.

MR. HOOK: My idea in asking the question is this: Whether by any reduction of the charges in the valley, if the State was to make a sufficient appropriation, it would not be better for the tourists going in the valley if the privileges were reduced? A. There are no tourists that go there—but very few if any—that object to the prices there. Sometimes you will find a class of folks that are trying to see how cheap they can travel. They want to see it all in a minute. You have seen that illustrated on the stage. I know that there is one play where a fellow visits Europe. He gets out and looks at the statuary, and away he goes; and he does Europe, and gets back in about a week. We had an illustration of that with that gentleman from Minnesota. He figured every way in the world to make the trip as cheap as possible. He hired a team at Merced, and got the fellow down to $10 a day, and he fed the team; and he cracked them through, he got into the Yosemite in the afternoon, and he looked around, and in the morning he hitched up and took a drive, and they had done Yosemite; and they were charged exorbitant prices for toll. He came up to the Capitol to see me. When I came to investigate, they had charged him $5 more than—not more than they had a right to—but they charged him on the road which runs into the valley, which they spent a great many thousands of dollars on; and that they refunded. I don't know but our Secretary tried to keep it, though, to buy stationery with. No; I feel anxious to have those tramways built, and I would rather a company would own them, and let the Commissioners of the valley hold them in hand, and keep them from charging exorbitant prices. If it can be done for four bits a round trip, I would put it at four bits; I don't know what it would cost.

MR. TULLY: Suppose the State built it and adopted the same plan that it has adopted with regard to the Stoneman House; that is, let the contract, let it out to competitors, and then regulating the tolls upon the payment of a certain interest upon the amount invested in those places, say 3 per cent on the investment—on the amount of money it would take to make the tramway—regulating the tolls upon the same basis that the letting of the Stoneman House is done; just enough to pay a certain percentage upon the money that the State had invested in building those tramways, and regulating the tolls accordingly upon the same principle? A. Well, you and I can go in there and build it good, first rate, and build it for nearly half what the State will build it for. If men work for the State they only work eight hours a day, and any hours they work over they have to have extra pay for.

Q. My proposition was to let it out at the minimum? A. You mean to let the contract?

Q. Let the contract out at the minimum. A. Not let it be known as State work, but contract with persons to build it for so much and deliver it to you?

Q. Yes. A. It might be done in that way.

Q. And then regulate the tolls so it would pay a certain interest? A. There is considerable wear and tear. You would have to put the per cent at a very high rate on that.

Q. The object of these questions is simply to get at the proposition whether or not it would not be better for the State to furnish those conveniences, by letting out the contracts where it was deemed to be the better policy, yet let the State hold control of them and regulate absolutely all charges to be made upon them, upon the basis of a certain interest upon the investment? A. No; I believe it would be better for a company to build them, and let the State control the company. There should not be any cut-throat process. Yet, it might be better. That thought never occurred to me. I am willing to do it either way; to have it done.

Q. You think it ought to be done? A. I think nothing in the world would be such an acquisition to that valley as those tramways. Don't you think so, Mr. Hutchings?

MR. HUTCHINGS: I have not thought that way; no.

THE GOVERNOR: You would rather a man would be two hours riding a mule than be fifteen minutes on a tramway?

MR. HUTCHINGS: No; I have not thought that. I have thought it would take so much of the poetry out of it. I don't mean the poetry of riding up, but the pausing by the wayside. A. That could be done on a tramway as well as on a mule. There is no poetry in riding a mule. They are adopting them in all countries in Europe; in the great places of resort, they have them.

MR. TULLY: Have you any further suggestions to make? A. I don't think of anything. I am willing for you to question me.

MR. TULLY: Anything you deem a matter of interest that you would like to say, either about yourself or the Commission with which you were associated; any suggestion from you would be agreeable? A. Yes, I could make a great many suggestions about what should be done there. I should want these tramways built; and if the committee think best for the State to build them, advertise and have it done so. Another suggestion I spoke of to one of the members of the Assembly to-day: we should have control of the land for twenty miles, at least, around the rim of the basin, to protect it ourselves.

Q. Outside of the grant? A. Yes, sir. And if we don't, there will be a time when there may be some trouble. Twenty miles will cover the watershed. That is enough. There is no good farming land in there, unless there is a little up on the stream that forms Mirror Lake. There is some farming land in there. I don't think there is anybody will have to be bought out; and I spoke to-day to some of the members of the Assembly about getting up a joint resolution and asking our members of Congress and our Senators to ask Congress to give us the complete control of that country. You know through there in the fall it is desolation itself. Just after the sheep have left there the sheep herders burn the entire country off. They do it so they will have good grass in the spring when they come back; and it made my heart ache, and it kept aching all the way through, to see the terrible destruction of young trees and timber. You would see large trees on fire. It is destruction of the worse kind. Eventually it will clear the timber out entirely. If we could get control of that entire watershed, we could then keep the sheep out of there, and the vegetations growing up would hold the snow, and the snow would last the summer through and keep the waterfalls supplied with water.

MR. HOOK: The destruction of timber causes less snow and rain to fall? A. No; it is not that.

Q. It does naturally? A. Yes, sir; but the altitude is so great that it will snow and rain there any way. Now I have just got news from my son, who is up at my mountain ranch in San Diego County; the snow is a foot deep there, and it is snowing there now. That is away up at an altitude of five thousand feet, I presume. It is so in the Yosemite, on the entire range of mountains, while in the valley we don't get it. If we can keep those vandals out of there, it will protect the timber so there will be a new growth; it will grow as thick as it can be.

MR. TULLY: Do you think the undergrowth would preserve the snow? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And keep those springs through the summer? A. Yes, sir; that is what it does; it keeps the falls supplied with water.

Q. The undergrowth you have reference to more than the trees? A. Well, the trees of course help, but the undergrowth, where it stands so thick, the snow is solidly packed underneath it, and clear up through it, and you take that vegetation all away, and the sun strikes it and melts it off, so that by July or August it is all gone; whereas, if the vegetation stands there, and the sun can't strike it only as it creeps through, it will remain there the season through. I hope your committee will do something about that to-morrow.

MR. HOOK: It is a scientific principle that the destruction of timber lessens the rainfall, and causes it to come irregularly in the season? A. Yes; I have always heard that. Now the Ohio River used to be a good navigable stream, and now it is almost impossible to navigate it.

MR. ROBINSON: Were you there in 1884? A. In 1884.

Q. Were you aware that that was one of the most remarkable seasons that they ever had in the mountains, say in twelve or thirteen years, so far as snow falling is concerned? A. No.

MR. ROBINSON: Yes; that was so. The valley was for the first time in my recollection of it, and the only time that I have ever been there—some meadows, the Cook meadow, for instance, was completely overflowed in June, with water standing from three and a half to four and a half feet deep.

MR. TULLY: Do you think it would be advisable to take those toll roads all in? A. I don't know how to answer that, sir. I presume there are some toll roads there they would like to sell. I know I would if I owned them.

Q. What do you think about the policy of the State getting possession of those rights; in other words, buying them out and making those roads free? Obliterating everything in the shape of toll roads leading into the valley? A. Well, it might be a good idea. As I understand, the Washburns hardly ever charge toll. That is nothing that should keep the people of our State from visiting the valley; but you won't find hardly one man in a hundred that has been to the Yosemite. It is too near to them. I don't know how much those toll roads are worth, or what they ask for them. If they could be bought, not for what they ask for them, but for what they are worth, it might be a good idea for the State to buy them. That railroad will be carried through as far as Clark's, and I never want to see a railroad go any nearer the valley than that. As Mr. Hutchings says: "That would spoil the poetry of it." There is no such road in the world as that road from Clark's to the valley. There should be a very little amount of money appropriated to care for the Mariposa trees. I spent some little time there the last time I was up. If a fire did get in there it would be a holy terror.

MR. TULLY: I understand there is room there for the investment of some money very judiciously? A. I would want to go over it with two or three men and give that a very thorough examination, to know how to protect it. It is just one mass of trees and logs and underbrush and dead limbs that have been dropping for years. It has been very well watched so far and the fire kept out, but it would be a terrible thing to have a fire; I think it would ruin the entire grove. Any amount of those trees have been badly burned years ago; we are well aware that the Indians burned everything.

Q. They burned them every year, and there was not an accumulation of brush and debris? A. I feel that there should be a very little appropriation made for the care of those big trees, for they are the wonder of the world. The idea of sitting on a stage, with fifteen or twenty passengers, and six horses, and driving through one of those trees! It is not many places in the world that you can do that.

C. D. ROBINSON.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: Mr. Robinson, you have resided some time in the Yosemite Valley, I believe, have you not? Answer—Yes, sir.

Q. Are you very well acquainted with the valley, and its surroundings? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you resided in the valley, at different times, more or less? A. I went there first in August, 1880; have been there—well, I have been there every season since.

Q. Are you acquainted, more or less, all over the valley, with its surroundings? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have had some business connection, more or less, with the Commissioners and their management, and have had some knowledge of the management of that valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you stand somewhat in the relation of a complaining witness? A. Yes, sir; I am so looked upon.

Q. You have read these charges here, I suppose; you have sworn to them? A. Yes, sir. Which charges have you got; the first or the last ones?

Q. I have the last ones. A. Yes, sir.

MR. HOOK: Are those similar to the ones you swore to first? A. Yes, sir; condensed.

MR. TULLY: The first charge here is: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." That applies, I presume, to the Commissioners who have had the management of that valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Robinson, if you know anything within your own knowledge of any instance in which moneys have been applied or appropriations squandered, please state to the committee, as concisely as you can, in what manner those funds were misapplied or misappropriated? A. Well, it will be necessary for me to make an additional statement, at the present time, to the testimony that I gave before the Senate committee.

Q. We have nothing in the world to do with what you said before the Senate committee. What you said there is a matter of record. What we desire is for you to state what you know, if anything, about the first charge of misapplying public moneys and appropriations? If that involves any statement you made elsewhere— A. Well, it does, to a certain extent.

Q. But it is an original statement here? A. I had granted to me by the Commissioners, in 1885, the privilege of building a studio in the Yosemite Valley. I have an official letter in my possession to that effect. That privilege I was never allowed to carry out. Mr. Mills raised objection to my being allowed to build for myself, upon the ground that it would lay the foundation for a future claim against the State. But he authorized, or he advocated, rather, that the Commission should build a studio for me, to the amount of money that it was decided or declared between Dr. May and myself that we thought the building would cost. I was officially granted, or at least the Commission officially took notice of my claim, and agreed to build for me, in June, 1887. The provisions were not carried out. In August they again gave this same permission, with orders to the executive committee to carry the work along. It was not carried out. In the meantime, after the first permission was given to me, my occupancy, my tenancy, was to have begun on the first day of January, 1886. I found that by some unquestionable hocus-pocus unknown to myself, my term of occupancy had lapsed, so Mr. Madden stated. I had never had any occupancy; had nothing to lapse. I sent a plan of the proposed building to the Board of Commissioners, and never heard of or never saw that claim until last year, in June. It was returned to me about that time by the Board, after they gave me permission to occupy the little building that I had formerly had. I had permission from Mr. Raymond, who was at that time Vice-President of the Commission, to occupy during the winter, during the time between—my permits commenced the first day of January and expired the first day of January following; a yearly lease. I had permission during the time that I was making application for the renewal of my permit, the season of 1886 and 1887, to allow my goods to remain in the little building that I occupied. I had reason to suspect that the Guardian of Yosemite Valley—

Q. Mr. Robinson, the charge is: "Misapplying public moneys and appropriations." A. I have a statement to make in refutation of a statement that was made by Mr. Dennison, before your committee, a short time ago. You will find in a few minutes in what way it is relevant. I had permission to occupy that building. Some time after the first day of January, 1886, that building was violently entered and all my stuff taken away. Mr. Dennison made the statement here that he had a key, and opened that building with that key, and obtained legal possession. If that is the case, I would like to have Mr. Dennison produce the key that will unlock that lock; another one that will unlock this lock. [Producing two padlocks.] I put two extra locks upon the door of that building to hold it. On the seventh day of January I locked the door and took those keys and put them in my pocket. These keys will unlock those locks. The first charge of misapplication of public funds comes in regard to this building. That building was removed by the orders of some one on the Board of Commissioners, so I am given to understand, from the place that it occupied when I left it in November, 1886, to the other side of the Cosmopolitan. That building, as I understand—I am told that the books of the Commission will show that over $400 were expended in fitting that up for the occupancy of Mr. Dennison as a Post Office. Now, I was paying the State of California $20 per season for the rental of that building. As I further understand, Mr. Dennison paid nothing. The State never spent one sou marquis, the Board of Commissioners never paid one cent out in improvements on the building when I occupied it, and it was in a most disreputable condition. As quick as Mr. Dennison obtained it, as I understand, the State spent over $400 in fitting that up for his use as a Post Office. I was not aware that the State of California was in the habit of building Post Offices for the general public. That is the first charge that I have of misapplication of public moneys. I understand, also, that $30 was paid for the construction of a common carpenter's tool chest out of the funds of Yosemite Valley by the Guardian at that time, Mr. Dennison. The next charge is in regard to the buildings that were erected for Coffman & Kenney on the farm.

Q. You say you understand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the ground upon which you base your statement? A. Common rumor. I have had no access to the books of the Commission, and never have demanded it. I think you better let that go as the first question.

MR. TULLY: I asked him upon what he predicates his knowledge of that fact? A. I would not testify to that as a fact, but I think that I received that from Mr. McCord himself. I think that Mr. McCord told me in the valley that he found on the books of the Commission $30, charged for the making of a common tool chest; carpenter's tool chest; paid in day's labor.

Q. Do you know of any other instance in which moneys have been misappropriated? A. Well, that would pass to the second. If this gentleman wishes to ask me any questions in regard to the first, let him do so. The second instance, I mean; the misapplication of funds.

Q. Do you know of any other instance outside of that; besides the two that you have mentioned. A. No; I don't know—I wish to state another instance, though. There was some trouble—I naturally made some fuss about my studio being entered and removed, and everything being taken from there, and I brought about the question, agitated the question again as to my being allowed to have a studio in the valley; building a studio. It was then that they agreed to appropriate this money for the building of a studio for me; that is, the Board approved of the building of such a studio, and gave the executive committee power to proceed with its construction. Those orders were never carried out, for reasons best known to themselves. So in October, when the Governor and other members of the Commission were in the Yosemite Valley for the purpose of accepting the Stoneman House, I presented the members of the executive committee, who were then present, a statement as to the cost—as I was required to do by the Board—a statement as to the cost of each separate piece of timber, almost, for the construction of that building, and a contract from a reliable, reputable carpenter in Big Oak Flat, to build the same. I presented that, or sent it in to those members of the Commission present, through the Guardian, Mr. McCord, and he brought to me a request from Mr. Griffith that I meet him on Leidig's hotel porch that evening with a view of settling the matter. I did so, and Mr. Griffith took me one side—it was quite dark; he took me one side and we sat down, and he says: "Mr. Robinson, I have conferred with the Governor"—he didn't mention any others—"I have conferred with the Governor upon this subject, and we have both decided that inasmuch as the law of the State in reference to Yosemite Valley—the laws of the valley—that all moneys derived from the lease of privileges shall be expended in the improvement and preservation of the roads leading to the valley, and the property therein contained, that it would not be legal for us to build a studio for you; that we have no right to appropriate one stick of the State's timber, or spend $1 of the State's money, in the construction of such a building for you." He says: "I therefore decline to have anything to do in the matter." Well, I asked him: "Mr. Griffith, isn't there a room or a building that I can occupy another season, around here?" He said he didn't know of any such. I asked him if I could be allowed to import a sectional building, and put it up upon any piece of ground, subject to the orders of the Commission for removal at any time; and he told me he didn't see how I could; that that was a matter that would have to be laid before the entire Board, and he could not pass upon that at all. In fact, I got nothing. I find afterwards that the Commission has spent, in building houses for Coffman & Kenney, certain sums that are laid down in their report for this year; and I certainly could not see how, if it were wrong for them to appropriate a single stick of the State's timber or a single dollar of the State's money to build a little house for me, how so much could be appropriated for the use of that saddle train plant. I have here photographs of the different buildings, if you would like to look at them, that were built for Coffman & Kenney.

Q. We will look at them after awhile? A. That is a portion of my testimony: the photos that I have.

Q. You can put them there? A. You can look at them at your leisure, whenever you choose.

Q. They will be put there as part of your testimony, if you desire it. These are the only instances you know of? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hook: That is all you know of the misapplication of or misappropriation of any public moneys? A. Yes, sir; that is all I know of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you consider that the removal of that building and taking charge of it by the State was a misapplication and misappropriation? A. I do, sir; most decidedly.

Q. And making it a Post Office? A. I do; most decidedly.

Q. Does not everything that comes under the Commissioners' control— isn't that State property? A. I am not aware that they have ever acquired that property by any legal means. That building belongs at this present time to Henry Washburn, if he chooses to claim it.

Q. Is there any property that belongs to private parties? A. There is a good deal that belongs to the Board by purchase. The rights of private parties have been recognized by the Commission, because they have been requested at sundry times, to either take down their buildings or the Commission would do it for them.

Q. The charge is the misapplication of moneys and appropriations? A. Yes, sir; that is the charge.

Q. Do you consider that these statements that you have made are misapplications of public money? A. I certainly do. If it is a misapplication of funds, and if it is against the laws of the land for them to appropriate or spend $300 for my use, it is certainly a misapplication of funds for them to spend three times that amount of money in the erection of buildings for the use of other private individuals. I don't see anything in the condition of Yosemite Valley that demanded the erection of those buildings for the exclusive use of Coffman & Kenney, unless it was simply to move their plant nearer to the Stoneman House. Besides, you must remember that I had permission from the Vice-President of the Commission, Mr. Raymond, to occupy the building during the winter. I was told by him that if the Commission desired to use that building they certainly would do so; that my property would be well taken care of, but that I should be notified by the Board before any action was taken to open the that building, to open it or remove it, or anything of that kind, so that if I had any other place where I wished to store my goods I could do so.

Q. Have you any such authority in the shape of a lease? A. No; that was verbal authority given to me to occupy that building by Mr. Raymond, in the presence of Dr. May and Mr. Madden. The entire executive committee was present when that permission was given.

Q. When did this take place? A. This took place some time in April, 1886, I think. I never saw Colonel Raymond but once afterwards.

Q. Were all the present Commissioners sitting then as Commissioners? A. No.

Q. How many of the present Commissioners were there? A. I will have to get a book and have to hunt up the names, one by one. I can't remember. Mr. Goucher was not on the Commission at that time. Mr. Truman was not on the Commission.

MR. TULLY: It doesn't make any difference, so far as this matter is concerned, who were on? A. The reason I bring that charge against the Board is this: That was properly a private grievance between Mr. Dennison and myself, and I don't like to bring that up, on the ground that it would look as though I was trying to vent my spite on Dennison; but inasmuch as the action of the Commission sustained Dennison in taking that building away from me, I am obliged to bring it up as a charge of misapplication of funds against them. That building is worth $50; that building was offered to me for $50; Mr. Washburn agreed to assign all his title and claim to me for $50, and I certainly think it is a misapplication of funds to spend $400 of the State's money in fitting up a shell that really is not worth over $30 to-day. The building is twelve by eighteen feet in size. I don't assert of own knowledge that the Board of Commissioners did spend $400 on that building, for I have not seen the records of the Commission to show that they did or they did not; but it was common rumor all through the valley.

MR. HOOK: You don't know whether they spent a dollar or not, so far as your own knowledge is concerned? A. I suppose the building might have taken wings and got there, and built itself on its own foundation. I didn't see them do that thing. I don't know that they opened it.

MR. TULLY: "The destruction of public and private property in the Yosemite Valley." To what does that charge refer? A. Well, in the first place, it refers to the tearing down of George Anderson's cabin, built with his own lumber, hauled from the outside of the valley; built with the permission of the Board. That cabin was taken down. The lumber was taken charge of by the Board of Commissioners, and Charlie Anderson told me, when he was here a little while ago, that he never received a cent for that in any way, shape, or manner. I asked him if he had ever made any demand for any money. He said he never had. He said Mr. Goucher had all his papers, and he left the matter entirely to him.

Q. What was the condition of Anderson's house when it was removed? A. Well, certain parties have testified that it was in very bad condition; I testify that it was in as good condition as any other building of the kind in the valley. I was in the cabin I think perhaps a month before it was taken down, and I saw no trouble with it at all.

Q. What would you estimate its value to be? A. I am no judge of values of that kind and could not possibly estimate.

Q. Couldn't you estimate whether it was worth $500 or $20? A. No; I could not. I have no more idea than a child four years old.

Q. You don't know, in destroying that building, from a pecuniary standpoint, how much was destroyed, if it was destroyed at all? A. That is a question you will have to ask an expert; I couldn't tell.

Q. Do you know what became of the material of which that house was composed? A. I heard that all the material was carefully piled and numbered, and each stick, as it was used by the Board of Commissioners, was accounted for. That is all I know about it. I never saw anything of the cabin.

Q. That was a destruction of private property. Have you any other instance? A. Yes, sir.

Q. State it to the committee as concisely as you can? A. There was a cabin that belonged to Lembert, a little bit of an out-of-the-way, good-for-nothing concern, torn down in the valley, on the ground, I believe, on the part of Dennison, that it was an eyesore and in the way. It was not an eyesore unless you hunted it out; and there are certainly places in the Yosemite Valley that are inhabited at the present time by the Italian laborers, that are more deplorable to the eyesight than even a blacksmith shop, that are not torn down. Lembert resented it very much, because he sometimes would like to go in there and lie down for three or four weeks, in the fall of the year. A letter was sent to him, directed to Lembert at Soda Springs, care of Mr. Sinning. There was no possible way for him to receive the communication at all. It was returned to Dennison. The superscription upon it was, "Returned to the writer."

Q. Do you know what the value of that was? A. It was not worth over $2 50, I guess.

Q. Was there any other private or public property that you know of? A. Yes, sir; Mr. Fagenstein had a little house in Yosemite Valley that he claims he paid $100 in cash for, that a certain woman who was regarded as a disreputable character in Yosemite Valley occupied, and sold photographs for Fagenstein. After she left the cabin was locked up; everything was taken out. I believe Fagenstein had been notified not to employ her for the following year. In the winter, when Fagenstein was gone, Dennison removed that place and piled the lumber up back of Fagenstein's house. Mr. Fagenstein was very mad and very wrathful about it, but he refused to do anything about the matter.

Q. Any other instance? A. No; not of tearing down. I know of an attempt of that kind that was frustrated. I know that Mr. Dennison notified Mr. Cavagnero, according to Cavagnero's statement, that he wanted to use the building that Cavagnero occupied at the present time as a store-house.

Q. That notice did not constitute a destruction of property? A. No; it was an attempt at destruction, that was all. That is all of the private property that I know of.

Q. Do you know of the destruction of any public property? A. That would refer to tearing up the wood walk, in the first place, that went from the Cook hotel up to Barnard's. It was very much out of repair, but not by any means dangerous. It could have been put into complete repair, and was a very popular place, especially for a stroll in the evening; and was torn down in 1885, I think it was; the summer of 1885.

Q. Torn up? A. Torn up; used up; burned up, I believe. The State laid claim to that. I suppose that it was there.

Q. Have you any idea of the amount of damage from a pecuniary standpoint? A. No; I have not. I think that perhaps Mr. Hutchings, if you interviewed him, could tell you better than I can; but I know that in the following season—1886—during the high water, the river backs up in several channels, and fills in spaces in that meadow, and it was impossible to cross that meadow, to make a short crossing between Barnard's hotel and Cook's hotel for upwards of two months. In 1884 it would have been impossible to have crossed the meadow for nearly all the season, on account of the high water; tourists and all were obliged to go through the roads, around under the rocks, making the distance nearly one third longer, and traveling in dust all the way from five to eight inches deep in places. It was a very great inconvenience in the valley, to tourists, as well as people that lived in the valley.

Q. We are talking about the destruction of it now. Do you know of any other instance? A. Yes, sir; the tearing down of the Folsom property; the tearing down of the Black property.

Q. Of what did they consist? A. The Folsom property was a building that was down at Cook's old hotel, formerly the Black property, and was used some time for extra rooms when the house was crowded. Rooms were used I think occasionally for tourists in times of great rush. There was also a bath-room attached to the house, and there had been a Postmaster's room and Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express office contained therein.

Q. Were they public buildings belonging to the State? A. Yes, sir; that belonged to the State. Portions of the building were in good repair. Portions of that building have been used in the Coffman & Kenney building.

Q. What has been done with the materials? A. Certain portions were used for Coffman & Kenney's building; the balance, I don't know what was done with it. In fact, when I left Yosemite Valley it lay upon the ground, a good share of it.

Q. Have you any idea of the value of that? A. No; the original value can be easily ascertained.

Q. I ask you if you know? A. No; I don't know what it was worth when it was torn down.

Q. Is there any other besides those? A. Yes, sir; the tearing down of the Cook hotel, the Black property. That was another building. I believe that the State originally paid $12,000 for that property. It was regarded as worthless and unsafe, and all that sort of thing. It is my opinion that if the Stoneman House hadn't been erected some means would have been found to make that place habitable. That is the condition the year before it was torn down, when it was inhabited by Cook. [Showing photograph.]

Q. That is called the Black property? A. That is the Black hotel property; and there it is after demolition. [Showing photograph.]

MR. GOUCHER: I will call your attention to the fact that that has been referred to, in the testimony of the other witnesses, as the Cook hotel—by all the witnesses that I have heard? A. I call it the Cook hotel; the old Black property.

MR. TULLY: What does this photograph represent? A. That represents the Cook hotel after it was demolished.

Q. You offer these in evidence, do you, Mr. Robinson? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does this represent? A. That is the final destruction of the property; burning it up; the loose material; of course, after it was torn down, it was not worth much of anything.

Q. Do you know whether any use was made of any portion of that? A. I don't know. I don't think there was. I am not aware of it if there was.

Q. Have you any idea of the cash value of it? A. I believe that the property originally cost the State $12,000.

MR. HUTCHINGS: $13,000.

MR. TULLY: How long before its destruction was it purchased by the State? A. I believe that those buildings were purchased in 1874, were they not?

MR. HUTCHINGS: Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: How long after that before it was destroyed? A. It was destroyed last fall, 1888; fourteen years.

Q. Has it been inhabited and used in the meanwhile? A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom? A. When I first went to the Yosemite Valley, Mr. Black was in possession of the property.

Q. To what use was it put? A. The next season that I went in there it was run by parties by the name of Wright and Cook. They failed, and Mr. Cook was obliged to take the lease out of their hands, and from that time up to early in the season of 1888 Mr. Cook used it as a hotel.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you know what rent the State was receiving for that hotel? A. I don't know, sir; I have heard it stated that they were getting from Cook $550. Whether that is so or not I don't know. I wish to speak of another case, the Leidig hotel. There is the destruction of the Leidig hotel property. That piece of property was, in my estimation, very good. That has been—nearly all of it has been utilized in the construction of an addition to Barnard's hotel, and also on the buildings that are occupied by Coffman & Kenney, the buildings of the Royal Arch farm.

Q. Is the title to the Barnard property and the Coffman & Kenney stable in private individuals or is the title in the State? A. The title is in the State.

Q. Was it so at the time of the destruction of this property? A. Yes, sir; it was, I believe. That is the Leidig hotel [showing photograph]. I think that photograph was taken some four or five years ago, by Mr. Fiske, when it was quite a new hotel. Here is a photograph taken of it just prior to its destruction; here it is in the first stage.

MR. TULLOCH: How long prior to its destruction? A. I should judge, by what Mr. Fiske told me, perhaps a month, may be not so long; that is the condition of the hotel when they first commenced to take it apart. Here it is further along. I was permitted by the Guardian to use some of the posts, and beams, and scantlings, pieces of them, in the construction of stages when I frescoed the chapel in the Yosemite Valley, this fall, and I found those sticks of timber just as new and as sound as any new timber I ever saw cut—those pieces.

Q. That is the property you say was utilized in fixing up? A. Coffman & Kenney's building and the Barnard hotel. I think that Barnard got the windows and doors.

Q. Do you know whether or not at the time this property was taken down, when the Leidig hotel was demolished, whether the title was in private parties, or whether it was in the State? A. In the State, I believe. I believe the State owned the property.

Q. They had extinguished Mr. Leidig's title, if he had any? A. So I understand. Of my own knowledge I don't know anything about that.

Q. How did they extinguish it? A. That I don't know, sir.

Q. Do you know that they did extinguish it? A. I do not; I suppose it to be so: it is so commonly understood.

MR. TULLY: Is there any other instance you know of the destruction of public or private property? A. Yes, sir; there was the destruction of the private property of Mr. Coffman, at the time that Mr. Dennison took possession of what was known as the Cosmopolitan saloon for a residence and Guardian's office. He cut the bath-room pipes all to pieces; the pipes leading to the bath-rooms, cut them up, so Mr. Coffman told me at the time, so they were utterly valueless; removed the property from the inside; tore down the windmill and overturned the boiler—well, stove things up generally. Mr. Coffman, I believe, was going to make some considerable trouble about it, but I suppose he had reasons for not doing so.

Q. Was the title at that time in the State or in individuals? A. I believe that the State owned the property; at least it was so understood that it was State property. It was rented to Captain E. S. Utter, the son-in-law of Mr. Coffman; but all of the interior fittings were claimed as the private property of Mr. Coffman. Mr. Coffman claimed it as his private property. I was told by him that by orders of some of the members of the Board, he was refused admittance even to his own safe, to get at his own private business papers, by Mr. Dennison.

Q. Do you know whether he set up any claim, or presented any claim for damages? A. Not that I am aware of. I have heard that the way he was compensated was by giving him the exclusive privilege thereafter to run a saddle train in the Yosemite Valley for $1,200 a year. That was the common report and rumor.

Q. You don't know it to be a fact? A. No; Mr. Coffman never so stated to me.

Q. Is there any other instance that you know of? A. No, sir.

Q. The next charge is: "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." What do you know about that? A. Well, that, in my mind, is one of the most serious of all the charges that I allege. I think that there has been a most wanton waste of timber in the Yosemite Valley. I don't suppose that the Commission did it wantonly, though; but I think that the destruction and the havoc has been very great.

Q. Give us what the facts are with regard to it? A. In the little meadow adjoining Fagenstein's gallery there were some of the prettiest cottonwood trees. There was one of the prettiest fringes that I ever saw on a river bank. That was trimmed out and cut out in the Summer of 1887, until the trees that are left standing look more like a row of gigantic hop poles than anything else. There is not the first particle of anything that would indicate a desire to do anything in my mind, but to turn the whole of that place into a sort of a clearing or ranch. It looks to me more like an attempt to clear land than to benefit or to help a public park in any way, shape, or manner.

Q. How much timber was destroyed? A. I couldn't tell you as to that. The tree cutting was going on all summer long—pretty near all summer long.

Q. One hundred trees, or five hundred, or one hundred and twenty-five? A. No; I think, perhaps, large and small, or all kinds together, there might possibly have been one hundred trees cut out in that one particular spot. Then directly opposite, across the river, there was a grove of cottonwoods; a beautiful little grove—a beautiful little shady grove—and at one time—well, say in July or August—it was quite a resort for camping parties, before that public road was fenced up. They used to camp in there to get out of the heat; the summer heat. That was entirely obliterated. Barnard had a man by the name of Laf. Barnes at work for him over two months, working that grove of cottonwood up into stovewood for his own use. That is the way it looked after they commenced to saw the logs up [showing photograph]. Cottonwood trees were cut down out of that grove at least from thirty-six to forty inches in diameter. The stumps are standing, or were standing there when I left in November, and could attest the truth for themselves. I don't know what the area of that timber was, or how many trees it contains, but I should think there must have been an acre and a half, or two acres, that was completely destroyed. Then over at the further side of the same meadow there was an entire group of young pines cut away; stumps left standing, say thirty inches from the ground. I think there must have been cut out in that place—Oh, there must have been cut out in that place, over two thousand trees, right there. Many of them were so little—the little trees—that I think you could pull them up.

Q. Saplings? A. Yes, sir; and some of them, well, say up to six inches in diameter. Here is a view of a portion of that little grove. Now there are similar clearings to that further down the valley, in what is known as the slaughter-house pasture, slaughter-house meadow, and below that again. Some of those have been obliterated since by fire. But I know that I took Mr. Hendricks with me around the valley the same season that those were cut out, and he expressed himself to the effect that he thought it was rather a tough looking sight to see trees like that cut out of the Yosemite Valley; that it seemed to be so utterly useless; there didn't seem to be any object gained by so doing; simply seemed to be opening a greater area of meadow land, but no practical object gained thereby; there were no views opened up.

Q. You consider it unnecessary? A. Entirely.

Q. Did you consider it a wanton destruction? A. Well, no, I don't, exactly. A wanton destruction, in my mind, would be the fact that the Commissioners would go to work and clear that timber out just simply for the sake of so doing; for the fun of seeing it fall. I have an idea in my mind that it was a misjudgment; bad judgment on the part of the Commissioners.

Q. Do you know of any object being assigned at the time of cutting it down? A. It was popular rumor there that they were cut down to let in the sunlight, and afterwards plow them up and make more hay acreage; that was all. Here is a view across the river near where that little grove stood, showing the way those trees stand up now, one after another; no undergrowth, and nothing to relieve them at all. If that is a benefit to Yosemite Valley, then of course I have nothing further to say.

MR. GOUCHER: What place does this represent? A. That is right alongside of the road, just by the Hutchings cabin, just across the other side of the road.

Q. Did I understand you to say this was cut away to open any view? A. No; not that I know of. If it was, it has failed of its object. The idea has been that in cutting down a good many trees lower down, you might see lower down upon the walls. The perspective is so slight, the view is so slight that you would get from any distance, that you could not see possibly over twenty or twenty-five feet lower down, your eyes would rest on another range of trees, and before you would get done, you would cut them all out. Then there was cut out a straight line, a lane of trees, to give a view of the lower Yosemite Falls from the back of Barnard's hotel. There is a lane thirty or forty feet wide cut away, and around the base of the Fall an enormous amount of timber, little and big, of all kinds, were taken away, and some of the most remarkable trees were removed at that time that I ever saw anywhere. That was done for the purpose of giving a view of the Fall, or the lower jump of the Fall. The Fall comes down about three hundred feet, and strikes a ledge and makes a bound of about two hundred feet more and strikes a pool at its base. You could see all but about, perhaps, seventy-five feet—the lower portion of that Fall—when this lane was cut through. Well, now, that was cut out to give a view of that Fall, say for four weeks. After that time, at the end of that four weeks, it would have been utterly useless, because the water begins to get so low that there is no view obtained from there that would compensate for the destruction of the timber. It used to be, with a certain class of tourists, a very prominent walk over to the base of that Fall, and sometimes, by following the wall up a little, you could get up near the Fall itself and look back. Well, now the open portion in front of the Fall is at least twice as big as it was. It makes a poor spectacle now, compared to what it was formerly. Around the Stoneman House, in the immediate vicinity of the Stoneman House, it was undoubtedly necessary to cut down a good many trees. But as the Governor himself testified before you to-night, he expressed himself as put out, very indignant at the way timber had been slaughtered around the Stoneman House. Mr. Cook told me himself, some time early last year, that it was a matter of serious concern to him, the way they had cut out timber; that it let the heat in on the house. The house stands in what is naturally a warm place, anyway, in the summer time, and it made it so open that the house is very warm. Now, that meadow has been cleared up in front of the Stoneman House, I should think, down towards Barnard's, fully half a mile. Here is one view in front of the house. That is quite a distance down, at the lower end, looking up towards the house. Here is another view. Mr. Fiske took several negatives. Here is a view looking down the valley several years ago, taken in winter time. That will give you some idea of the quantity of brush, the way the brush grows in the Yosemite Valley. There are the roads; there are the branches stripped of their leaves. Now, you can see from that. I should judge that there was no timber to spare in the Yosemite; very little timber that needs to be cut out. It only requires a change of a few feet to get almost any view you want in Yosemite. There are several places trimmed up, and cut out a little mite, but in my opinion the Board is not justified in cutting out timber in the way they have done. Here are certain groves that are trimmed up. Here are more [showing photographs]. Here again. If views of that character improve Yosemite Valley, I have nothing to say. Now, sir, here are some natural views of Yosemite, where no cutting out or trimming has been attempted; some of the natural tree groupings. Here is a group of cedars.

Q. Do you desire to submit all these? A. I should like to have them returned to me. Here are some more cottonwoods that have been taken away. Here is one particular, peculiarly beautiful place, over near the foot of the lower Yosemite Fall, that was utterly obliterated. There is nothing left at all.

Q. Not even of these trees? A. No, sir; not one. Here are some trees that are cut out. There is a sample of some of the beautiful trees that are cut out because the decay has entered them. There are but very few oaks in the Yosemite Valley that do not show the marks of decay. If all are to be removed because there are dead portions upon them, you would have to take out all the oaks in the valley. There are some ferns and brakes that have been removed. Here is a little road view that fortunately is left in Yosemite. It strikes me that that is a beautiful drive. I think that people come from all over the world to see that sort of thing. Here is another very remarkable grouping of dead trees. That was removed the first winter of Mr. Dennison's guardianship. Here is another one. Now, these pictures, many of them, were taken by Mr. Fiske, because parties who came into the valley and saw those—many of these trees were right alongside of the road—asked him so to do.

Q. Has that tree been destroyed? A. Yes, sir. Here is another one. That is one of the most peculiar trees that I ever saw in my life. Here is another one, showing the attempt of the pine trees, if wind breaks off their tops, showing the way they attempt to get their original height again. Here is a group of oaks that stands in front of the old Cook hotel. Those are all intact as yet, as far as I know. In opening that view of the foot of the lower Yosemite Fall, there is an oak that was removed. Here is some timber that was felled to protect the new barns and out-buildings erected for Coffman & Kenney. Now, on the other hand, there is a place that might be opened up with advantage. It is in my estimation one of the finest views in the Yosemite Valley, if those trees were removed so that you could have an unobstructed view of El Capitan and Bridal Veil Fall. I asked Mr. McCord this season, as long as they were cutting out so much, why they didn't cut out some brush by the Bridal Veil, and he told me the Commission was so busy improving around the Stoneman House, that they would not have an opportunity to do that. That is an oak tree that was felled; that one that you have in your hand that I submit would be worth, in almost any gentleman's private park, in any eastern city, probably $10,000 or $15,000.

MR. TULLOCH: What was the diameter of that tree, four feet? A. Well, yes, I should think so; over that. It is perfectly sound. Another one just as near Barnard's hotel, not quite so large as that but equally sound, was cut down. They were worked up into firewood. Those were cut down out of Barnard's pasture. I noted that there were some pleasantries exchanged between parties at Barnard's hotel. Barnard inquired of Dennison, in regard to this tree cutting—Barnard wanted to know when Dennison would finish up cutting that lane of trees to the foot of the fall. He said that he intended to go to work the next day if Robinson and Hutchings would let him. I think that we two were perhaps regarded as the cranks on trees and tree cutting in the valley.

MR. TRUMAN: As I understand it you would be in favor of cutting these trees in this picture? A. Yes, sir; by all manner of means.

Q. Now in the estimation of many wouldn't that add to the general vandalism alleged? A. I don't think so, because it would open up one of the finest views that there is in the Yosemite Valley by all odds.

MR. TRUMAN: I judge that is the cause alleged for the cutting down of trees generally? A. That I suppose; but there is no way that you can get either to the right or the left and see that view. It is impossible. I tried to make sketches there several times, but it is an impossible thing, because there are trees in so many directions. Then again right from the river bank looking up the valley, there is all that brush needs to be cut out because the Bridal Veil Fall is half covered up by it.

MR. TULLY: Does that cover the extent of your knowledge with regard to the supposed unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley? A. Yes, sir; that covers all the material ground that I know of.

MR. GOUCHER: When was this grove opposite Barnard's cut? A. That, I believe, was cut in the spring of 1887, at the same time that the Fagenstein meadows was cleared out.

Q. Are you sure it was in 1887? A. I am quite sure it was in 1887; yes, sir.

Q. Who was the Guardian at the time? A. Mr. Dennison. I think that was cut in June.

Q. You spoke of a grove of cottonwoods in connection with the cutting of Fagenstein's; a grove covering about an acre or an acre and a half? A. That is the one I have reference to.

Q. That is the one you allude to now? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That and the wood cut opposite Barnard's was all cut in the spring of 1887? A. Yes, sir. Then I noticed, when I went into the valley in the spring, that away down below there had been considerable timber cut out; and during the whole summer—it made very little difference where you would go around the valley—you heard the ax, clear down as low as the iron bridge.

Q. What was done with the timber? A. I suppose it was worked up into wood, the most of it; that that was large enough to be of any worth. Some, I understand, was trimmed up and piled, and used for fence railing; some little timber.

Q. This view opening the lower Yosemite Falls, when was that timber cut? A. That was cut in 1887.

Q. That was cut after the June meeting of the Commissioners? A. I believe so; I believe that was cut just after the Commissioners adjourned.

Q. Do you remember when the timber around the Stoneman House was cut? A. Of course a good deal of it was cut before they put in the foundations for the house. That must have been in 1886, some of it.

Q. Now, that which was cut before they put in the foundation for the house, was that necessarily cut? A. Well, some of it was. There was a lot of timber up above the house, alongside of the orchard, young trees, young pines—an entire swath cut out—completely opened, and piles of pine poles laid there on the ground that high. [Indicating.]

Q. Was that cutting necessary? A. No, I don't think it was.

Q. You can see that the trees that were taken from the ground on which the foundation stands were necessarily taken out? A. Yes, sir; there is no doubt of that.

Q. After the house was substantially completed—not entirely completed, but the frame all up? A. Yes, sir; there were a good many trees that were necessarily taken out.

Q. Do you know why they were taken out? A. I think they were taken out to keep them from falling on the house; I think very wisely, too—many of them; though it really hurt me to see some of the trees go. I have got some photographs of some of the trees. There was one cedar, in particular, that was a very peculiar and wonderful tree, that had to come out; I remember when it fell. But I don't think the clearing up of the meadow, away beyond and below the Stoneman House, was of any use or any avail. There are trees standing there now, in front of the Stoneman House, pine trees—I have two in my mind at the present time—must be at least one hundred and twenty-five feet high, with the branches lopped off forty or fifty feet above the ground. They present an awful appearance.

Q. Do you know what the object was? A. I suppose one so that you could see under them, and another to keep the branches from falling; though I don't understand how that was necessary.

Q. In the case of pine trees in the mountains, don't you know the lower branches are very often brittle and liable to fall? A. Yes, sir, if they die; yellow pines, especially; but at the same time it seems to me it would be better to remove the tree entirely than to disfigure it in that way; it always looks to me like a mutilated person; it is no longer, in a place of that kind, a fit tree.

Q. It would be better to take the tree out entirely than to cut off the dead limbs? A. Yes, sir; if those limbs of those trees are dangerous, if they are liable to fall on anybody, it would be better. Now, in regard to that, you know where the first cyclone was?

Q. Yes. A. Then you know, up above here, two winters ago, you know there was another one struck, just above George Anderson's cabin, and took out a whole lot of sound Douglas spruce. You remember right below that there was a bunch of dead trees, some of them over two hundred feet high.

Q. I know there was a bunch of dead trees. A. About half a mile this side of that bunch of dead trees there was an oak tree standing, with a limb, I should think, at least fully sixteen inches through, that reached clear across the road—overhung the road; and for three years, during the entire term of Dennison's incumbency, there rested upon that limb, touching it only on two spots, a dead oak branch that was at least thirteen inches through, and in any sort of a gale or any sort of a breeze, there was nothing on earth to stop that from dropping on anybody that passed underneath. Not being on very good terms with Mr. Dennison, I told several parties, among others Mr. Barnard, to ask Mr. Dennison to remove that limb, because it was dangerous. It got so that people in the valley who knew those trees were afraid to drive up by those trees. The very minute Mr. McCord came into power, I requested Mr. Barnard to speak to him about the same thing. Mr. McCord very wisely went up and removed that stuff; he saw how necessary it was to take it away.

MR. TULLY: The next charge here is: "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land?" A. Well, outside of the farm—that was plowed up and was used before I went to the valley; I think, myself, that all of that sort of business in Yosemite is very unfortunate; very unfortunate indeed. It is getting the valley so that I have no hesitation in saying that there is not in the valley bed at the present time the first vestige of a resemblance to a public park. In fact, Mr. Mills made the remark to me, at the close of the June meeting this year, he says: "I might just as well vote with the rest of the Board, Mr. Robinson. They are determined to turn this place into a cow pasture as quick as they can, and the quicker they do it and get it done the better."

Q. Then you think generally the clearing and plowing up of that valley is an injury to it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The valley meadow land? A. I think it is an irreparable injury, too. I have heard it expressed here that there was no design or desire—

Q. What proportion does that plowed up valley meadow land bear? A. The acreage I couldn't give you, possibly; impossible to arrive at any just idea of how much land is plowed up, or cleared, or fenced, by asking anybody to give the proportion. The whole valley is substantially fenced, where you can go about, and a good portion of that, at the present time, I suppose, is plowed up. The entire Leidig field, as I understand it, is plowed up.

Q. Do you know who plows it up? A. Coffman & Kenney, I believe. I know that a gang-plow was brought into the Yosemite Valley last fall for the purpose of clearing land. I heard Mr. Coffman one night talking to Mr. McCord, and he was telling him where he proposed to commence to break up the next day. He seemed to regard it as simply a ranch.

Q. Your objections in that charge refer generally to the clearing up and plowing up of that land? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can't give us an estimate of what proportion? A. No, sir; I couldn't give you an estimate of how much is plowed up. There is a view of the upper end of the valley; that will show you what open ground there is when snow is on the ground. This is a view of the lower end looking around the other direction. You can see how much ground is open there naturally. You can see by that there is a very big amount of the bed of the valley that can be plowed up if so desired.

Q. "Debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley." To what does that refer in particular? A. That refers particularly to the fencing up of the valley and the appropriations that have been made heretofore for campers' use. Here is some fencing [showing photograph].

Q. That is the wire fence and picket fence? A. That is some of the fencing. Here is some more.

Q. What falls are those? A. Yosemite Falls. That also is the Yosemite Fall from a different point. Here, again, that is near Barnard's hotel. It shows how the fences cross in every direction. Here, again, away up in the upper end of the valley, near Mirror Lake, near the Lembert cabin. Here, again, about a mile below that place, crossing the valley at another point; and here is a very wide area—well, that must be right back of the Stoneman House—showing the fences all the way through, as far as you can see. Now, here is a view taken in the Cook meadow in 1884 that I found among my pictures. That will show you what kind of a sea of water there was in that meadow; and when that water was highest, at 12 o'clock at night, it was just level with the top of the wood walk, and that wood walk was probably on an average four feet. That is the character of fencing. Here is a portion of the new fence that was built to surround the Cook meadow. Here is the corner line of the fence. That is the east line of the fence looking down the road towards Barnard's hotel. This should properly come under the head of sanitation. That dead horse laid in Yosemite Valley in that condition, and is there now, or at least was on the fifth of November; nothing but bones left; and you can see that a barbed wire fence was built across his carcass by some men in the valley, and yet they did not bury him. That horse lay and went to pieces in that kind of shape, and exhaled all his odors for the benefit of the people in the valley, opposite Barnard's hotel, within three hundred yards—yes, within two hundred and fifty yards; and the stench that arose from that horse in the night you could pocket some of it and carry it away. It was almost solidified. Dennison was requested several times to bury the horse, but he didn't do it. Here are some more fences. This is the Leidig meadow under fence. This is looking up the valley again from another portion, showing the fence. Really, the whole valley bed is practically under fence.

Q. It looks to me as though the valley is pretty near all fenced? A. Yes, sir; the valley is pretty near all fenced; and the best way to find that out is to go and see for yourself.

MR. TULLOCH: How many miles of fencing would you judge there is in the valley? A. I have no idea; it is impossible for a person who is not accustomed to building fences to judge. I know that within a space of two miles, three years ago, I counted nine stretches of fence. If I had a large map I could show very easily. This fall, after the leaves disappeared from the trees, part way up the Glacier Point trail, I looked down upon the valley, and I was surprised to see ranges of fence near the river bank in different places, that I had never noticed before.

Q. That is what I understand that charge refers to. "Debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley." A. Yes, sir; that is what I refer particularly to. There are no decent provisions made for the use of campers in the valley. I had some photographs when I was here before showing the campers' ground.

Q. What effect does those fences and inclosures have upon the convenience of tourists and campers? A. Well, I can show you that at once, what effect those fences have and the restrictions under which campers are placed. Here are some photographs that were taken by Lieutenant Harris, of the First Artillery, in 1884. There is a portion of the campers' pasture. That is the First Regiment of Artillery in camp [showing photograph]. Here is another portion of the same meadow.

Q. What does this represent? Is that Mirror Lake? A. No; that is the Merced River; and here is another piece, and here is one that will show you the quality of the feed contained therein better than anything I can possibly show to you.

Q. What portion of the valley does that represent? A. That is up near the Harris place, what is known as the general campers' pasture.

MR. TULLOCH: Is that open to campers now? A. Yes, sir; these are some campers [showing their places there]. They were forced to go there to get into the shade. Every time a tree is cut out in that valley bed it opens more to the sun, and when people come there to camp it drives them further into the rocks; and as the average temperature in Yosemite Valley in the summer time, from observations—I kept the temperature there for two years—is about 80°, it gets pretty warm in the sun. It ranges all the way from 72° to 96°, and up as high sometimes as 104°; and down in that gulch, with no wind—of the last three or four years the breeze that we used to depend upon coming regularly at eleven in the morning seems to fail us, and we have that intolerable heat from about nine in the morning till about five at night. Here is another camp [showing photograph]. That is the way campers' horses get their pasturage, fastened to ropes, that way, and they have to buy their hay. There is another camp. This, I think, would tend to show one of the ways in which the public are debarred from the use of the valley. I know that a few notices of that kind sent to me I should consider was a debarment [showing a letter].

Q. You offer this in evidence? A. Yes, sir.

Q. These other pictures also? A. Yes, sir; I will say one thing: that I think the present Board, some of the newer members, have made up their minds that that sort of thing is a little mite too severe, and they have a notion to ameliorate their condition a little bit, and not be quite so hard on people who want to do business in Yosemite. That I offer also as evidence. I think Coffinan & Kenney have got the most of the valley under fence, at least they use most of the valley that is under fence, and have the privilege as well, to turn their stock upon the public domain outside, but I have to pay at that rate for two weeks for a horse. [Witness read following bill:]

C. D. Robinson, Yosemite: To Board of Commissioners to manage the Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove of Big Trees,
To fourteen days' pasturage, September and October, one animal75 cents.
Received payment.

W. E. DENNISON.

I imagine the State of California is in pretty small business when it goes into that sort of thing. Those other papers that you looked at were given to me by Mr. Drew himself. I think that Mr. Drew thought that it was pretty small business at the time; the man that was helping to bring the tourists to Yosemite Valley, to make him request permission to drive in and out of the valley.

Q. "Holding annual meeting with closed doors, in violation of State laws." What do you know about that? A. I know that in 1884, such a thing was done: in holding a meeting in the Sunday school chapel, the meeting was held with closed doors. I know that in 1885, after the passage of the law to the effect that all meetings should be at all times open to the public, that June meeting was held with closed doors. The entire public were kept outside for one afternoon and a portion of the next day, waiting for a verdict in their several cases.

Q. Was that a meeting of the entire Commission or of the executive? A. No, sir; that was a meeting of the entire Commission, a Board meeting.

Q. They met there for a regular meeting for the purpose of transacting business? A. Yes, sir; the law states that any and all meetings of the Board of Commissioners shall be at any and all times open to the public.

Q. I asked you if they were there in one of their regular meetings? A. They were there in one of their regular meetings; the only regular meeting they held in the valley during the year.

Q. They held their meeting there upon one evening with closed doors? A. One afternoon and a part of the next day, with closed doors.

MR. TULLOCH: Didn't Mr. Goucher, the attorney, on that occasion have to ask permission to come before the Board? A. That I couldn't say. Mr. Goucher could tell that better than I could.

MR. TULLY: Are those the only instances? A. Yes, sir; those are the only instances that I know of my own personal knowledge.

Q. Do you know of any persons applying at the doors at that time for admission? A. I do not. I know that at that time certain parties went to the door and tried it and it was found locked.

Q. Whilst they were in session? A. Supposed to be in session. It was the time appointed for session.

Q. Those are the only instances? A. Those are the only instances.

MR. TULLOCH: The pasturage of which you speak; was your horse pastured outside of the fences? A. No, sir; inside. The State pasture was occupied that year by Mr. Dennison, under lock and key; two brass padlocks. There was a brass padlock at the eastern entrance, and another brass padlock at the northern entrance to the gate. There were no turnstiles that year. You had to climb through or over the fence and go on foot. When Mr. McCord became Guardian, the very first thing that he did was to remove those padlocks—staples, bolts, and everything. I know that in order to take my horse out of that field I had to go to Mr. Dennison's office and go behind the door and take the key off from the nail; go out of my way to get the key to unlock the front gate, and after I had taken my horse up and put her in the barn I had to come back again and put it away. When I left the valley this fall the marks were still to be seen on the fence posts where the staples had been driven to hold the chain of that padlock.

MR. TULLY: "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley?" A. Well, the first instance of that kind that I know of, that I had recorded, was the refusal to grant to a man by the name of Anderson—we knew him as "Little Anderson" in the valley, J. A. Anderson—the privilege of conducting the business of selling woods and ferns and bulbs and such things. He had a tent, and he made application for the privilege of conducting that business. Mr. Sinning was conducting the wood workers' business, and Mr. Sinning told me that he requested the Board not to give Anderson the privilege of conducting that business; he didn't like him, and he would cut into his business and injure him. I find in my book here this letter:

YOSEMITE VALLEY AND MARIPOSA GROVE OF BIG TREES, }
GUARDIAN'S OFFICE, YOSEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA, October 27, 1885. }

MR. J. A. ANDERSON, Yosemite:

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the requirements of Rule 1, Rules and Regulations, it is the request of the Board of Commissioners that you make known, through this office, on or before November 1, 1885, your wishes with reference to permission to reside or transact business within the Yosemite Valley for the year 1886, when the issuance of permits will proceed as rapidly as practicable.

Yours truly,

W. E. DENNISON, Guardian.

Mr. Anderson made such request; made application for the privilege of conducting that business, and on the same date he received this letter:

GUARDIAN'S OFFICE, YOSEMITE VALLEY, October 27, 1885.

MR. J. A. ANDERSON, Yosemite:

DEAR SIR: Your request for the privilege to sell woods or art work for the same within Yosemite Valley has been refused by the Board of Commissioners.

Yours truly,

W. E. DENNISON, Guardian.

He told me they would not allow him to put up his tent. He gave his tent in charge of a man in the valley—Mr. Staples—and left; went to Australia, and died there within a few months.

Q. What other instances, if any, can you give? A. Well, there is Mrs. Glynn's case. She has testified to that herself. She was restricted to keeping two boarders, by which she could not live. I understood that the hotels complained that she kept boarders at a lower rate than they did, and that they paid big rents, and that she paid nothing. Her rent was arbitrarily reduced from $50 a year to $1, and then she was told that she couldn't keep boarders because she paid no rent. I know that she was restricted to the keeping of two boarders, and I have a letter to that effect here.

Q. Did she ask for the reduction of that rent? A. No, sir, she did not. She was officially notified, without any volition or will of her own, that her rent was reduced.

Q. You know those facts? A. Well, I will convince you of that in a minute. This is the way that I know that her rent was arbitrarily reduced:

GUARDIAN'S OFFICE, YOSEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA, June 9, 1885.

MRS. ELIZABETH GLYNN, Yosemite, California:

MADAME: Your communication to the Yosemite Commissioners was received with the following decision June —, 1885, at the regular annual meeting, namely, that the Board does not in any way whatsoever recognize or acknowledge your title to the residence or premises now occupied by you and known as the Hedges place. That your rent for residence and necessary ground about the same be and is hereby reduced to $1 per annum; and that the right to let the stables and corral is reserved by the Board, whereof notice has been given to those persons occupying same, with instructions that they do now and hereafter pay all rents to the Board or its agents.

Very respectfully,

THE COMMISSIONERS TO MANAGE THE YOSEMITE VALLEY AND MARIPOSA GROVE OF BIG TREES.

By W. E. DENNISON, Guardian.

That was written upon the official paper of the Board; the official heading. Shortly afterwards, I find, on a piece of the same paper, with the heading torn off—Mrs. Glynn handed me this communication:

YOSEMITE VALLEY, April 26, 1885.

MRS. E. GLYNN, Yosemite Valley:

DEAR MADAME: By the requirements of your permit, you will not be allowed to board or lodge any but two men laboring in the valley, and I sincerely trust that you will see at once that it is to your advantage to comply strictly with the terms of said permit in all points, and avoid giving cause for complaint.

Respectfully,

W. E. DENNISON, Guardian.

Mr. Fagenstein made the remark to me two seasons, one after the other. During the winter when he was away—he had a rockery, made out of pieces of granite, behind his photograph gallery or studio, that he used to pose parties upon who came for photographs; groups taken, with the Falls in the background, sitting on these rocks. That rock fence was removed by Mr. Dennison. I think that was during the winter of 1886 or 1887. Fagenstein complained very bitterly to Mr. Dennison about removing the same. He cleared the ground all off; left him no place to pose his subjects at all; and Mr. Dennison got out of patience finally, and told him: "Mr. Fagenstein, you must remember you have only got a permit for a year, and you better not make too much fuss about this matter." Fagenstein did make a fuss, and finally it was compromised by the Guardian putting up a rustic fence for him, made out of logs and bits of trees, which stands there now. But Fagenstein complained, and he has complained the last year to me, that it utterly ruined his posing point; that he had no place whatever to pose his subjects. I know that practically Mr. Hill has had the privilege of having the only artist's studio there was in the valley. He has had the only studio. I have been allowed to occupy by the year a little building, as I have told you, that was not fit for a man to occupy at all. There had been heretofore so much partiality shown in Mr. Hill's favor, that he himself felt as though he was obliged to ask certain members of the Board that they reduce my rent from $20 to $1, and put me on a footing with himself; Mr. Hill was ashamed of it himself, as I understand it. Mr. Hill tells me now that even though he has been granted the privilege to build, the same as I had—the privilege to move his studio and make improvements—that when it comes to the test point, and he undertakes to do it, somehow or other he can't do it. At the same time that I made application for a privilege to build a studio, Mr. Harlow asked me to make a plan for a new blacksmith's shop, and he applied for the privilege of putting up a blacksmith's shop. It was granted to him, and he put up the worst looking rattletrap that ever was built in Yosemite Valley, right alongside of the road. I was told by members of the Board, or a member of the Board, that that was only a temporary contrivance, and that he intended to put up a better shop. That temporary contrivance lasted two years. Mr. Harlow gave up his business in the Yosemite Valley and went away and left that temporary contrivance, and the following winter it caved down. My petition at that time was not considered, as I have understood since, because they didn't think the plan that I offered was sufficiently artistic for the use of the valley; though at the time I made the statement to members of the Board that that was only offered simply as a rude outline of what I intended to build. I intended to build a nice house.

Q. Do you know of any other instances? A. No; I don't know of anything that is worthy of consideration.

Q. Do you know anything in the nature of violating the State laws, regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley? A. No, sir; nor I don't know that it would be necessary to uphold that charge at all, because Mr. Mills has admitted it. That is acknowledged by a member of the Board.

Q. "Reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. The hotel rentals have been reduced one half. At the same time, when the leases of the small tenants expired, their rentals were increased one half. The small tenants in the Yosemite Valley are entirely dependent upon what comes to their share, or falls to their share from the hotels. If the hotels have a bad season, the other tenants have virtually nothing. If they happen to get at outs with any of the owners, or any members of the owners families of hotels in the Yosemite Valley, they are liable to turn around and advise tourists not to deal with those parties. They are entirely at the mercy of the hotels, and yet their rentals were increased. I know that I have here in my book notices that were served upon the photographers in Yosemite Valley, upon Fiske and Fagenstein, to the effect that their rents would be $20 per annum, for the privilege to take and vend photographs in the Yosemite Valley. But that referred to only each single privilege. For instance, if Fiske sold photographs at his own private residence, he would have to pay $20 a year for the privilege. If he sold photographs as well at Barnard's hotel, he would have to pay $20 a year for the privilege, and did have to pay it for one season, until finally he determined that he would not and resisted it, and it was given up; and it was the same with Fagenstein. I think that perhaps the clearest way would be to read one of the notes. It will explain itself better than I can:

GUARDIAN'S OFFICE, YOSEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA, September 9, 1885.

MR. GEORGE FISKE, Yosemite:

DEAR SIR: All interested parties will take notice that during the year 1886 the sum of $20 will be charged for the right to vend photographs at each several place, and that a permit to take or vend at one specific place will carry with it no right for another.

By order of the executive committee of the Board of Commissioners.

W. E. DENNISON, Guardian.

A similar notice, similarly worded, was served upon Gustave Fagenstein, also a photographer in the valley.

MR. TULLOCH: Did Mr. Hill receive a similar notice? A. Mr. Hill is not a photographer; he is a painter; no notices of the kind have ever been served on painters at all. Coffman & Kenney's rent was reduced from $500 to $250 a year. Coffman & Kenney rented the Harris property for $500 per annum. During the fall the old buildings were consumed by fire, and they lost sundry sacks of grain and some saddlery material, and one thing and another. They considered that the loss they sustained by that fire justified them in asking for a reduction of their rental for the year 1888; it was reduced at their request from $500 to $250 for the year 1888. Immediately another petition was put in before the Board, asking that the rent be reduced to $250 for the year 1889, which was also granted.

Q. It has been testified here something about an offer that Harris made for the same property; a much greater sum, I believe. Do you know of any offer made by Harris for that same property? A. I know that Harris stated to me that he made such an offer, and showed me at the same time the offer he made. He showed a copy of the same.

Q. What was that offer? A. I believe that offer was $1,750. And he agreed, furthermore, in contradiction I think, to the Governor's statement, that horses should not be kept up in the valley and let out for the rates that they now charge, $3 per day. Harris, in that offer, agreed to keep his horses up and feed them hay and grain, and see that they were groomed every night, so that they could be given to tourists in the morning in the ordinary condition that livery horses are in the city. I know at the present time, those horses are turned out in the night and allowed to grope around and get such food as they can, and they are brought up in the morning, and if they are cleaned, they never show any marks of it. If you take your hand and slap one of them on the side, it will come off all dirty and set the dust flying all over. Among my papers I have several newspaper clippings which would go to show that those horses are neither sure-footed or safe at all times.

Q. Were the privileges that were granted to Coffman & Kenney for that $500 the same privileges that were refused to Harris for $1,750? A. I think they were, sir. I think not only that, but I think that Coffman & Kenney have more privileges; that is, they have more acreage than ever Harris asked for. I am not aware that Harris asked for any other pasturage than what his farm would afford for his horses. I am not aware that he asked for any more ground.

Q. At what date was that? A. When Harris made that application?

Q. Yes, sir? A. I think that was for the year 1887. I am quite sure it was. I don't know for a certainty, but I am almost positive that it was the year 1887.

Q. Do you know that he made application at the same time, made this tender and offer at the same time that it was let to these other parties? Do you know that at the same time it was let to other parties that Harris had an offer pending? A. Only from Harris' statement.

Q. You conversed with Harris about it? A. Oh, yes; I conversed with him considerable.

Q. Do you know of any other instance? A. No, sir; excepting my own. I have heard members of the Board say that the only instance they know of the reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income was the reduction of my rent from $20 to $1.

Q. Coffman & Kenney then, in the first instance, were to pay $500? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on account of the burning up of some material they had there, it was reduced how much? A. Half; to $250.

Q. Is that the rental they pay now, as you understand it? A. That is the rental they pay now, I believe. That carries over until the first of January, 1890, I think—the year 1889.

Q. From your observation and knowledge there, they have more privileges and have a more advantageous position than Harris offered to take? A. Yes, sir; in fact I will tell you, I thought it was rather hard to restrict me. I was told that it would be foolish for me to apply for over thirty by fifty feet of ground for my studio; but I thought it was a little mite tough that Coffman & Kenney should be given nearly the whole valley bed to conduct their business. It seems to take nearly the entire valley to conduct Coffman & Kenney's business, with the single exception of the small inclosures that are claimed by the State as pastures, and the hotel pastures.

Q. "Failure to recognize their own contracts." A. Well, the first would go back some considerable time, in reference to George Anderson.

Q. Be as brief as you can. A. George Anderson was requested by Galen Clark to get out timbers for a new bridge to occupy the place of the iron bridge at Barnard's hotel now. He did so, supposing that he was acting under authority of the Board; but after he got the timbers out, he told me that he saw a newspaper notice that a contract to build two iron bridges in the Yosemite Valley—the one he got out timbers for and the corresponding one down the river—had been let to the Gorrill Company. He prepared a protest to the Board. He told me that he never received any satisfaction from the Board of Commissioners at all in regard to the matter, but that afterwards the Gorrill Company asked him to resaw, reheat his timber, certain sticks of timber, to certain dimensions, for their use, and he did so, and that was all he got out of it. I have his protest, also the letters from the Gorrill Company to him in regard to the matter, which were given by him to me about a month before he died.

Q. They contracted with him to get out timbers for the bridge? A. Yes, sir; they did contract through the Guardian, who was also a Commissioner.

Q. And under that he did so? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever learn what the value of that work was? A. No; he never told me what the value of that work was; in fact, I never thought to ask him.

Q. Do you know what time he was employed in getting them out? A. All winter; he lost his labor, except a few sticks of timber.

Q. All he got for it was what he could get out of those parties who had the contract for the iron bridge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They utilized his timbers in that? A. Yes, sir; no notice was sent to him by the Commissioners that they had let the contract to the Gorrill Company.

Q. What he got out of it was what he received from the parties to whom he sold his timbers? A. Yes, sir; the Gorrill Company bought a few sticks of timber.

Q. Do you know if he ever made a demand on the Commissioners? A. Nothing further than this letter protest. He made a demand through that letter. I can read it if you would like to hear it.

Q. I would like to hear it. [The witness read the following letter]:

YOSEMITE VALLEY, July, 1878.

To the honorable Commissioners of Yosemite and Big Tree Grove:

GENTLEMEN: Some time in October, 1877, Mr. Galen Clark, Guardian of the aforesaid grant, ordered me to go to work and get out timbers for the bridge to be placed across the Merced River near Barnard's. I proceeded to comply with Mr. Clark's request, and have been industriously engaged, with the assistance of two men and one horse, in completing the work required of me by said Guardian of the valley. Now, after I have faithfully complied with my agreement, to my utter astonishment I find the contract for building the bridge let to MESSRS. Gorrill & Co., and am politely informed that the timbers I have prepared for said bridges are not wanted. Now, I appeal to you, gentlemen, if I am to lose my time, work, and cost; those whom employed upon the positive agreement, request, and order of your legally and lawfully authorized agent, Galen Clark, whose acts and contracts have heretofore been recognized and sanctioned by your honorable body. I have in my possession written documents to show that there was and is a fair and legitimate understanding between Mr. Galen Clark and myself. Allow me to suggest that the honorable Board of Commissioners could not and cannot afford to make a fair contract with a citizen who has spent many years in this his adopted place of abode and ignore that agreement, in the face of all fair dealings in law and equity. In conclusion permit me to say that all I want is open-handed justice. I am in limited circumstances, and dislike to have a wrong perpetrated upon me in this manner, and lose my hard and honestly earned dues, besides involving others. That is more than I can consistently bear with. Therefore you will please answer this on receipt, and as I feel satisfied in my mind that you will do the fair thing, I remain,

Your most obedient servant,

GEORGE ANDERSON.

Mr. Anderson stated to me that no notice was taken of his letter, his petition, and he never received anything at all.

Q. He lost his work? A. Lost his work entirely. The history of the Anderson trail is by this time familiar to you all, so there is no need to testify. Here is the letter that he received from the Pacific Bridge Company.

[Reading letter from Pacific Bridge Company to George Anderson, dated San Francisco, July 14, 1878.]

Q. Did you ever hear from Anderson what proportion of that timber he really utilized or transformed into such shape that it subserved the uses of that bridge? A. Only that which this letter calls for.

Q. You stated that he was all winter getting those timbers out? A. So he stated to me.

Q. From that labor he only received what few pieces are called for there, that were utilized in the building of the bridge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other instance? A. I know that this year certain laborers told me that they were obliged to work ten hours in the Yosemite Valley, or not work at all. I have here a statement from a gentleman by the name of Charles V. Cross, attorney at law, Santa Fe, New Mexico. Mr. Cross was a gentleman out of health and out of money, and he went into Yosemite Valley and worked as a laborer, principally to obtain his health, and partially to obtain funds to get to Santa Fe. He told me he was obliged to work ten hours, or not work at all. The consequence was he didn't work a great while before he was laid up. Not being a laborer, he was not able to stand the work, and he told me that he figured up the matter in this way: that laborer's wages at the standard time, eight hours, were worth $31\frac{1}{4}$ cents; at ten hours they were only worth 30 cents; so they lost $1\frac{1}{4}$ cents on an hour every day, when they had to work ten hours. He didn't want to work ten hours. None of the laborers there wanted to work ten hours, as I understand from various sources.

Q. Was he paid for ten hours? A. He was paid by the hour for ten hours. I find here—I wrote down just what he said—"told me to go to work, and worked me ten hours." Those are his very words.

Q. What season of the year was that? A. This I think was—I think that he gave me this statement in July. Mr. Atkinson told me—I find it here that I took his conversation down—Charles Atkinson told me in September that men were working ten hours, per force; if they worked at all they had got to work ten hours, and it was at that time that Mr. Atkinson made the statement to me that he thought it was a shame to keep Italians and foreigners—men that were not citizens of the country, and Italians that were not of age—upon the work, and turn off good citizens; as he expressed it, good white men, Americans; and he gave me the names of certain ones that were to have been discharged Saturday night, which was within a couple of days of the statement he made to me; Hopkins, Miller, Tom Brown, and the two Moses, all those were discharged; all those were residents thereabout, and all voters, citizens, and taxpayers.

Q. They were discharged? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those Italians and foreigners were retained? A. Yes, sir; they were kept on, and are kept on at this time. The labor in the valley is mostly conducted by Italians.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do I understand you to say that all these men that worked ten hours a day were paid for ten hours labor? A. That is the way that I understand it, sir, that they were paid by the hour. I find here a very peculiar letter addressed to George Anderson by Dr. Briggs in reference to this trail business. I would like to make a statement in regard to it; it is getting very dim:

ALAMEDA, October 15, 1881.

GEORGE ANDERSON:

DEAR SIR: The executive committee yesterday passed an order to have the trail on the north side of the Merced from the upper bridge built to Snow's. As soon as a contract can be written I will forward it to you to sign with any bonds which Colonel Jackson may think best to exact. Probably there will not be any. We will advance you the powder and fuse and caps you may need. My advice to you is to say not a word to anybody about the contract, but go quietly at work and make the best trail ever made in those mountains. You understand that the price is to be $1,500. Do a first class job on this trail and we will give you plenty of other work to do. I think you ought to be building your cabin at once. If you wish to, I will send the contract very soon. Again let me advise you to keep your own counsel in this matter. Say not a word to anybody, but attend strictly to your own business. You will need to sign the contract in the presence of two witnesses, and select two judicious persons who will not talk about it. I am ambitious that you should do for yourself and the State the best job ever done in that valley.

Very truly,

M. C. BRIGGS.

P. S.—I will write you officially as soon as the contract is ready. This note is simply for your own information.

MR. TULLY: That has reference to that trail we have heard so much about? A. Yes, sir; that has reference to the trail. Anderson told me, just about the time that I left the valley, before he died, that he had been promised—I understood him to say $2 50 a day—that he had been promised $2 50 by Dr. Briggs on behalf of the Commission to complete that trail; and he says, "Old Briggs has lied to me systematically for the last two years. I am going to try and see if I cannot collect something from this Commission; but," he says, "Mr. Robinson, I will tell you one thing, it won't be a healthy thing for Dr. Briggs to come into this valley while I live here, for if he does I will lick him so bad that it will take a four-horse team to get him out of here with, and don't you forget it." And anybody that knows George Anderson, or did know him, knows whether he was able to carry out that threat or not. There is a granite boulder of about that diameter [indicating], Judge Tully, standing on a rock in front of Barnard's hotel. It formerly laid on the ground. George Anderson took that boulder up and laid it on that rock, and no man has ever been able to lift that boulder, except one, in the valley since; that is the man Louis that works there. He has been able to lift it. Anderson carried one of the sections of the lower iron bridge in his hands and laid it down on the ground, when they were building that bridge, and put it into place, where it was to stand. That weighed five hundred and twenty-five pounds, so I was told. This boulder—how much does it weigh?

MR. HUTCHINGS: Two hundred and thirty-four pounds.

THE WITNESS: It is not the great weight; it is the impossibility of taking hold of it. I don't think that that gentleman would have made more than one or two mouthfuls of Dr. Briggs.

MR. TULLY: This is the Anderson that died, I understand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The brother of the man who testified here that he had tried to collect it? A. Yes, sir; the same one. That man died from want and exposure, really brought on by want of wages that were justly due him for work on that trail. He died of pneumonia. George Anderson went to Mr. Sinning in the spring, when the sleet and snow was falling—a miserable harsh day; he says: “Mr. Sinning, I need money to buy food, and you will have to give me a job.” Well, Sinning told him: “I will give you a job. I want the front of my house washed off and cleaned off.” It so happened that he went to Sinning—I got a little ahead of my story. That was a pleasant day when he went to him. Sinning told him to go to work, and he went to work on the house, and this storm came up, and George kept to work during the rain, and sleet, and snow falling, and he was under the weather at that time, and Sinning begged him, he says: “George, don’t work any more; I will pay you just the same if you don’t work.” George said he had always earned his living, and he didn’t want charity from anybody; he would work for it. He was finally obliged to give up, and went in and sat down in Sinning’s house, and was taken with chills; and the building that I occupied for a studio he was using to do some wood work in the winter. He had permission from me. He went in that building and laid in his bunk, and they carried him away almost by force. Nobody in the valley except the Leidig’s seemed to care anything about the man. He laid there, and would have died without any care or any attention at all in the valley. When it was too late they took him down to Mr. Fiske’s house, I believe; took him down there, but it was too late, and he died from pneumonia, simply from want and exposure. He had nothing on earth wherewith to provide himself with the necessaries of life.

MR. TULLOCH: What were his initials? A. George G. Anderson. It was one of the greatest losses that Yosemite Valley ever sustained in the shape of a laborer or handy man. All that might be avoided if the Board of Commissioners ever saw fit to put a reputable physician into the Yosemite Valley. Mr. Hutchings has lost a wife and lost a daughter in Yosemite Valley; George Anderson has died. When I first went to the Yosemite Valley in 1880, there were only three or four graves in the graveyard; now that cemetery is pretty well filled up, and in nearly every one of those cases, as far as human foresight can look, a fatal termination might have been avoided if they had only a reputable, decent physician in the valley. To show how much it costs and how things of that kind are managed, there was a party hurt on the trail, I think during Mr. Hutchings’ incumbency. A lady was hurt; I think her arm was fractured. She was taken to the Glacier Point hotel, and it cost $300 for one visit of a doctor to her, in the Yosemite Valley. Two or three cases have happened of the same kind, where they have had to send fifty miles for a physician.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Sixty, I had to send.

THE WITNESS: Sixty miles; and it costs various sums, all the way from $150 to $300 to get one visit from a physician. When you stop and consider that some of the most valuable lives in the civilized world go into the Yosemite Valley and out again, they are at the mercy of any accident; they are bound to lie there and die for the want of proper care. There is no drug store; unless a person has a medicine chest, there is not anything. Casualties of a light or serious kind are likely to happen any time.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any rules by which the Commissioners are obliged to furnish a physician? A. No, sir; they were so requested.

MR. KELLY: There is a rule, isn’t there? A. I am not aware of it; if we had one of their little books we could tell at once. I know that after the death of Mr. Hutchings’ daughter and wife, that when I was in Sacramento I had a talk with Dr. Tyrrell in regard to the matter, and Dr. Tyrrell agreed with me that it was a proper thing to do; and he said the State Board of physicians would be only too glad to choose from their members a physician and have him stay two or three months, provided the stage companies would give them transit, and they would give their services; and Dr. Tyrrell directed a letter to Mr. Hutchings, to reach the Board of Commissioners. No action was taken in the matter. I don't know what became of the letter. So any one of the most eminent upon the staff of physicians of the State of California might be had, or might be had at the present time in the Yosemite, the whole season through, if sufficient attention was paid to the matter.

MR. TULLY: I will ask Mr. Hutchings a question. Did you ever present that matter to the Board?

MR. HUTCHINGS: I did, sir.

MR. TULLY: Was any action taken upon it?

MR. HUTCHINGS: No; like everything else, it went by default.

THE WITNESS: It has been stated to me by a member of the Board—I don't know but by two members of the Board—that they occasionally received from tourists who went into the valley, communications containing advice as to how they thought the valley should be treated, and one thing and another. I was told by this Commissioner that one such communication was offered to them, and they read a few pages of what seemed to them to be humbug and balderdash, and he says: "Gentlemen, haven't you heard enough of this thing?" They expressed it, those that were present, that they had heard enough, and the document was unceremoniously tossed into the waste basket.

Q. They wanted no suggestions from abroad? A. It would so seem. That happened several years ago.

Q. The next charge is: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State, and illegally leasing the same." A. Well, we can dispose of the illegal leasing at once. Mr. Choynski has testified to that. That is all I know about the illegal leasing of the Stoneman House; the statement that I received from Mr. Choynski. All that I know about the illegal leasing of the Stoneman House is the statements that I have received at various times from Mr. Choynski. I was unprepared to hear Mr. Choynski's testimony. It was a surprise to me.

MR. KELLY: Was that communication that you referred to, from the State Board of Health? A. The State Board of medical men; the State Board of physicians. They proposed to send one from their ranks every two months.

MR. TULLY: All they asked was a free passage in and out and their board? A. Free transit and free grub, that was all they asked from the Commissioners.

Q. And they would give their services gratuitously? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HUTCHINGS: The Board of Commissioners did write to me to say that they did not see how they could do anything in the matter.

MR. TULLY: Mr. Hutchings, do you know whether or not there is anything in the conditions imposed upon them as duties, that imposes upon them a duty to look after that branch of the business?

MR. HUTCHINGS: They are empowered to manage the entire valley.

MR. TULLY: I think that that would be included under the general powers to manage the valley.

THE WITNESS: I have forgotten about that.

Q. "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House?" A. In regard to that matter, I received a telegram from the "Examiner," requesting me to report four or five hundred lines by telegraph, in regard to the proceedings of the Board of Commissioners in the valley in October, at the time when they came there to receive them in the Stoneman House. In pursuance of that telegram, really being a member of the "Examiner's" staff, I went to the Stoneman House to take such notes as I could. Naturally, I followed the Governor and the balance of the Commissioners about to hear what strictures the Governor and the rest of the Board passed upon the house. I might say the whole valley was present. All that were curious were present, and wandering at will over the house; and I saw Mr. Griffith eye me several times very suspiciously. Finally I saw him—that was in the office of the hotel—I saw him step up to the Governor, and whisper in his ear. It is a thing, I presume, that had not struck the Governor before. He turned around, and he says, "Gentlemen, this is not a public viewing," or words to that effect. "This is not a public viewing of the hotel; this is a private inspection, and we would be obliged to all of you if you would vacate the premises." And they all proceeded to leave the house; and I asked the Governor, says I, "Governor, does that include members of the press also?" He says, "Most assuredly, sir; it includes everybody." And we all went out; all went away. I had an idea, and still have an idea, that the Governor was imposed on by Mr. Griffith in regard to the matter. I think that perhaps Mr. Griffith told him that I was there on purpose to make a carping criticism on the acceptance of the house.

Q. You were there for the purpose of taking items? A. I was there simply to collect items, that was all.

Q. During your stay there did you learn anything with regard to what was transacted, so far as it refers to this lease? A. No; nothing that refers to the lease. I learned, though, I saw, as the Governor stated this evening, he found some parts of the hotel were not to his satisfaction. I saw them test the floors in the office, and in some places they were nearly three inches out of line; and the Governor found considerable fault with various matters and things. In fact, it struck me that they were rather surprised to find that the Governor was so good a judge of buildings and the putting of them up as he was. He was inclined to be very rigid in the inspection and examination.

Q. "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley." Do you know anything about that? A. Well, I know that the necessary removal of Harris because he could not get the farm, and the necessary removal, also, of Leidig from the valley, has destroyed the district school; that is all. I am given to understand that it takes sixteen pupils to form a school district, and there were only six pupils that attended the school, to the best of my knowledge, all of this year, and I understand that they are not to hold any school this year.

Q. Those parties that were retired from the valley took away with them the children that were necessary to furnish the legal quota? A. Yes, sir. Barnard has two children, and Kenney has, I think, four, three or four, three who go to school; that is only five that I know of. I heard Mr. McCauley's name mentioned, but he lives five miles away from the school and three thousand two hundred feet above it.

MR. GARDNER: Still within the school district? A. Yes, sir; I suppose he is in the school district, and I suppose they can draw school money. I am given to understand they can draw school money for all the Indian children and half-breeds; that being the case, they can support a district school. But those children, of course, do not attend school.

MR. TULLY: Those are all the facts that you know? A. That is all that I know.

Q. "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant?" A. I know that the Eagle Point trail has been very seriously neglected. To such an extent has it been neglected within the last two years that the mountain men who come over it—Mr. Murphy, who lives at Lake Tenaya, that is his only means of ingress to Yosemite Valley and egress from it with animals—he complains very bitterly about its condition. I know that I counted—I have the number some place—I think it was one hundred and forty-seven cross pieces of wood and stone and logs, varying all the way from three inches to eight inches in diameter, crossing the trail at the corners. Those are used as water-ways, to turn the water. Those were first placed there by Dennison. Formerly that trail was ditched, the same as you would ditch a road; but that, I suppose, was found to be too much trouble, involved too much expense, and these logs were put in. Those logs have been left at each of those different turns. Now, the descent in the Eagle Point trail in places must be four feet in ten—very steep. You come down a zigzag and turn short the other way, right at the corner, the same as the turning or winding of a staircase. Right in the corner you find this log sunk down; on this side is a ditch worn by the water. A horse comes down and steps down on that log and bears his whole weight, and you find that it drops them all the way from eight inches to fourteen inches in places. I have measured some that were between thirteen and fourteen inches; a drop right at the corner at this place. If a horse in stepping down over one of those logs happens to stub his toe and bends his knee, he goes down, and if he goes down he goes over, and if there is a woman on his back she goes where she never gets up again in this world, because he rolls over. In places on that trail you will find places as steep as at an angle of 45 degrees, and you will roll over, and at the next zigzag of the trail keep rolling until you find a lodgment. A woman is fastened to the saddle by her clothes and by a miserable foot stirrup; she never could free herself; it would simply tear them all to pieces. I know that I am afraid to ride my own horse over that trail almost; in fact, I walk down the trail in preference to riding.

Q. Have any accidents ever happened that you know of? A. No; fortunately there has not. That trail is very little used by tourists.

Q. You consider it a very dangerous trail? A. I consider it a very dangerous trail. I consider it in a very lamentable want of repair.

Q. That has reference to that trail? A. That has reference to that trail. I was up on the Glacier Point trail some time in October, when I was at work frescoing the chapel at Yosemite. I walked up to a point of view of mine, up nine zigzags of the trail, and I found that trail, in my idea, in very bad condition. It had been all churned out, and the dust in the trail must have been eight or nine inches deep—granite sand and dust. It raised a suffocating cloud around you every time you stepped, and for every foot you would gain you would go back six inches; slip back. I have not been over that trail from base to summit in five years; in fact, this is the first time I have been on the trail in four years, since McCauley quit taking care of it, and I never saw that trail in the condition it was last fall. Mr. McCord testified that it was in good condition; he has only known that trail for a year; he don't know what its condition was four years ago. Mr. McCauley told me it was in the most wretched and deplorable condition that he ever saw the trail in his life; he has complained bitterly about it.

Q. Who is McCauley? A. The man who formerly owned the trail, and who keeps the Glacier Point hotel, at the summit. He built the trail and sold it to the State. There was built in the Yosemite, during the winter of 1886 and spring of 1887, a road that we call the Causeway. That was known in the valley that spring as the death trap. That road crossed from the Barnard bridge across the valley to near Hutchings' place. It is a little short belt that cuts across about a quarter of a mile. That road answers in Yosemite Valley the same purpose that Market Street answers in San Francisco. All the heavy travel in the valley has to pass over that road, to get to Mirror Lake; all the campers' travel. At that time all the stage travel and all the wagon travel from the lower valley and from Barnard's hotel had to go over that to go to or come from Mirror Lake; at any rate that was the chosen road. That causeway was built, and I measured it in six or seven different places, and it averaged fifteen feet and five inches in width. It was intended to be sixteen feet wide. Well, it was raised from the ground on either side probably four feet in the highest place. Now, it is impossible for any two wagons to pass each other in safety on a road of that width. When the Commissioners were there in June they were filling in the upper end of that same road, and Mr. Chapman's wife, with a team, got mired in the stuff they were putting in that road, and it was with great difficulty that her team and horses were pulled out by the workmen. The night before there was a four or six-horse team got stalled in the same place, and they had to take them out and leave that team in the place all the night. They were packing in mud to fill up that place. I think that was one of the reasons that made the Commissioners dissatisfied with Dennison's management. They saw with their own eyes what was going on at that time. After Mr. Dennison retired from the guardianship, Mr. McCord, who succeeded him, took that road in hand. The road runs north and south. The east wall had to be removed. The road was widened out an additional eight feet or more, I think. It was almost the same as making the State build an additional road. The road now is passably wide; not any too wide. In the condition it is in now, if people walking along that road meet a band of Coffman & Kenney's horses being driven to pasture in the afternoon, with whooping and hallooing, whoever is on that causeway has got to get down in the ditch or be trampled upon; one or the two.

Q. Is that the only road? A. That is the only road across that place. On either side are barbed wire fences.

Q. I understand the outer wall or edges of this causeway are perpendicular? A. Perpendicular; no slope. It is a dead drop-off; just the same as a drop-off of this table. I have among my photographs somewhere a photograph of that road.

Q. Well, describe it to us as well as you can. A. I have described it the best I can, already. You could see for yourself in an instant if I could get hold of the photograph. I have got so many hundreds of them that I cannot keep track of them all.

Q. I don't know that it would add anything to the knowledge of the committee. A. There was one among those photographs that I very much desired to show you, showing a portion of the road that was neglected this fall. There was a lot of holes in a piece of causeway; little pieces, in the shape of culverts. The rock and stone dropped out from that place and left a hole about a yard square; and, coming along that road in the night, a very dark night, anybody's horse would go right in it. That piece of road stood in that condition, I should think for three weeks or more, in the valley.

Q. Was that during the busy season in the year? A. Yes, sir. That was in September last. Now the condition of the bridge ends or abutments is a thing that, in my judgment, calls for remedy. The abutments rise up and they are sheer walls, and of course at the near bridge ends they are the same width as the bridge. Nearly all the bridge abutments are from eight to fourteen feet. There is only one bridge in the valley—only one end to the abutment of that bridge, that is walled. That was at the northern end of the Barnard bridge. That is walled up about eighteen inches. If any of Coffman & Kenney's horses happens to be feeding or browsing on the brushes below, and a man drives a spirited team along, and that horse lifts up its head, and jumps out, any horse is liable to jump off and throw the inmates of the carriage out and kill them. There is nothing to protect them, not in any bridge in the valley. In July of last year, one of the members of the Dewing firm went down to the Cascades. He chose to drive his own team; went very late in the night; went against the advice of all good judging people in the valley; didn't get home until between one and two in the morning. In fact, it got so dark he was obliged to get out of his team and light matches, and they followed him with the team, the ladies that he had. He pursued that course until his matches gave out; and near the Pohono bridge, where his horses took the road and drove themselves on to the bridge, in the morning his wheel tracks were found within three inches of the edge of the abutment, and if the team would have tipped off, they would have all gone down some fourteen or fifteen feet; that would have smashed them all up there. On the new trail going to Snow's—it was testified to by Mr. Jackson that that trail was nearly wide enough for a wagon road all the way—you go up hill towards the south from the valley. The trail is, to all intents and purposes, safe in most places. You immediately turn a sharp point, and you find the trail has been blasted out of the solid rock, and it is above the river bed at that place from fifty to seventy feet. It is a solid wall down. Nothing is left, but occasionally there is a bit of debris, talus, that has fallen down from the side, but mostly it is the blasting that has been thrown from the sides. That trail is, as near as I recollect, between four and five feet wide only. Here you have the solid wall; no railing, nothing on this side, and a solid drop-off down below. Now, if a rock starts to slide from above, or any noise frightens a horse and he makes a jump or plunge, they are sure to go off: sure to go right into the Merced River. There is nothing to protect people at all going up that place; and that piece of trail at that point must be, where it is dangerous, at least from one hundred and fifty to two hundred feet long. You follow around and turn this way and go around one zigzag and go up a considerable distance where it is absolutely dangerous for a person to travel over that trail. It needs an iron railing, a gas-pipe railing, at that place, to make that spot safe for a horse to go. Men on horseback are perfectly helpless in cases of that kind. I went down myself eighty feet; that is, down a slope; a horse of mine went down eighty feet, on the outskirts of the Yosemite Valley, in 1884. I went down fourteen feet myself, and I now know that it don't make any difference how rapid a person may be in getting on or off a horse, when a horse falls, you fall too. In regard to the dust in the road, during the years 1886 and 1887, 1887 particularly, that portion of the road which is traveled by the stages of the Oak Flat line, coming down from El Capitan, crossing the lower iron bridge, there was a piece of road in there that the ruts were worn out so deep and the dust was so deep, that myself and Mr. Sinning, in a two-wheeled cart the axle dragged on the top of the road, in the dust in the road. The large wheels dragged in the dust, and I had to get out in dust eighteen or twenty inches deep, solid flour dust, and lead the horse out. Mr. Hutchings and myself went down upon the same piece of road a day or two after this occurrence—this was in the rut where we found it so deep; and I asked Mr. Hutchings to sit in the cart and hold the horse; and I got out and with a little bit of a round box I collected some of the dust out of that road and measured the depth. Mr. Hutchings looked on and said,

"Are you crazy?" I told him yes. He asked me what I was doing. Says I, "I want you to be a witness that I am measuring the depth of the dust in this road and collecting samples." It measured from eight and one half to ten and one half and eleven inches deep, with a foot rule. You could run a foot rule down before you struck the bed of the road. We crossed the bridge and went over a road used by the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company. We found there dust varying from six and one half to eight and one half inches deep. That dust is so fine that you can't take the top off of one of those boxes without seeing a cloud rise. They requested me to shut them up in the Senate committee.

Q. That road is in the valley? A. Yes, sir; that is a portion of the regular drive around the valley, and some cross-roads.

Q. What distance of road is there, more or less? A. The road is more or less in dust varying from three and one half to eight inches deep all around the valley in the summer time.

Q. That is in the summer time? A. Yes, sir. I know last summer, when Coffman & Kenney's saddle train horses would be driven up the road to the hotels in the morning, a black cloud of dust would float over the northern end of the valley, and you could see it for an hour after the passage of those horses. just the same as the dust that comes from a slide; and when the stages went by Barnard's hotel the same dust was blowing in the same way, all the time; the air filled with it; you couldn't breathe anything but dust. The passage of the saddle train horses, though, would kick up the biggest dust, and that makes that portion of the valley, wherever they travel, makes it awful in the summer.

Q. Have there ever been any efforts to sprinkle the road? A. No; no efforts were made. During this year, when all this hauling of heavy timber for the new hotel was going on, no efforts were made to put the roads in the valley bed, over which those teams passed, in order; and it got so that along at the latter end of the season—September and October—those roads were virtually impassable. Wherever pedestrians go in the valley they have to walk through these roads; there are no foot paths for them whatever.

Q. They either take the woods or those dusty roads? A. Well, take to the rocks or take to those roads. I would like to make a statement in regard to the bed of the valley. The question has been asked in the Senate committee by Mr. Mills and others of various parties as to what the acreage of the valley was. Now, that is a question that scarcely anybody can answer. It was with a view of showing that the number of acres that are under fence are comparatively small to the number of acres that the valley contains. The talus of the Yosemite Valley comes down in places at an angle of forty-five degrees and nearly one third of the way across the valley, especially on the south side. There is then a little portion of meadow land. On the outside of this flat portion of meadow land this belt road is built; but the whole entire valley almost, with but very little exception—all that valley that is flat, that is worth anything at all, is fenced in. You can make your entire drive around the valley and never lose sight of fences.

MR. TULLOCH: Are there any openings or gates in those fences? A. Very few.

Q. Those gates that are there, have they locks to them or can they be opened? A. No; they have no locks on them now. Mr. McCord has removed them. The only locks that were placed upon gates were in the State pasture that I spoke of, but there was formerly a very beautiful road that led up through the center of the valley. That road—the bridges were removed from the road, and the road was abandoned, I think, during Mr. Hutchings' time. That road is fenced across, as I stated, within two miles in nine different places. That was one of the most beautiful drives in Yosemite Valley.

Q. Was that the drive where the road went on the north side of the river?

A. Yes, sir; that went up Mirror Lake. That road is completely fenced up; completely abandoned; that is, completely abandoned.

Q. Is there any road on that side of the valley at all? A. Yes, sir; to the north. Suppose that there was no river flowing through Yosemite Valley; there is no possible way that you can cross that valley on horseback except where these few cross-roads go across.

Q. To what use is the river portion of the valley, between the road that runs north of it and the river, to what purpose is that put? A. Pasturage, farming land, fenced in for the use of private individuals.

Q. How far up do those fences run in the direction of Mirror Lake? A. They run up as far as Harris' place; they run up a mile or a little over a mile, and then above that again the orchard is fenced in. The whole floor of the valley is taken in by fences. The truth of that statement can be easily ascertained.

MR. TULLY: Is that all there is on the subject of roads? A. Yes, sir; inasmuch as I cannot lay my hand on the photograph.

Q. We can go on to something else, and if you find it you can submit it. "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties?" A. My studio was fitted up by State labor for Mr. Dennison's use. He was Postmaster as well as Guardian of the valley.

Q. Any other instance? A. State labor was employed in front of Cook's hotel, the Stoneman House, in graveling and smoothing off the ground; making it free from dust. State labor was employed in grubbing the trees on his ground and preserves; that which is under lease to him, which I understand, but don't know, which I understand, according to the terms of the lease, he was to do himself. I don't know as to that.

Q. It was not on private lands; the building and the lands upon which that work was done belonged to the State? A. They belonged to the State, but they are under lease to him. That is all.

Q. This is the last question, and it is a very broad one: "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States?" A. Well, let me read a little. This is from a report of Ham. Hall: "The use of the valley itself, by the constant travel and the grazing of animals upon it, is beginning to tell upon the character and extent of its vegetable productions. The finer forage grasses are being thinned out; the coarser and more robust or hardy grasses and weeds, able to withstand the trampling and cropping, are taking their places; and the area of meadow is decreasing, while young thickets of forest or shrub growth are springing up instead. Members of your Board have observed this change. It is very marked, and it may be regarded as in a degree alarming, sufficiently so, at least, to prompt measures calculated to check it. The cause is alleged to be the abolition of the old practice of burning off the thickets, which practice formerly made new clearings almost every year for grass growth. Doubtless this clearing had its effect in this way, but another cause, and perhaps a more potent one, is to be found in the continued cropping of the grass and trampling of the ground by horses." [Reading from report of the Commissioners to Manage the Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Big Tree Grove, for the years 1885-86, page 16.]

Q. These are taken from Mr. Hall's report? A. Yes, sir.

Q. After personal inspection of the valley? A. Yes, sir. After personal inspection he was requested to report. He says: "No attempt should be made to improve the Yosemite Valley, in the sense we use the word speaking of a park. In this gem of topographical carving, with its sparkling setting of snow-clad peaks, polished granite knobs, and verdure-covered ridges, the Creator has provided a magnificent jewel; one transcendently attractive simply for the reason that it represents the grand and beautiful in nature, because it so far dwarfs all which man can accomplish, all else which the individuals of mankind generally can hope to look upon.

"Seriously to speak of its improvements would be presumptuous; but, if it is to be occupied and enjoyed, there arises a duty because it becomes a necessity, to preserve this property from defacement; for the influence of man's presence in such regions is destructive of their charms, and productive of effects which pain rather than please the beholder.

"Hence, I presume the object of your desires is to preserve and promote the enjoyment, on the part of the public, of this noble trust property; and with the view of assisting or sustaining you in such endeavors, I write this communication. And whenever the words "improve" or "improvement" are used herein, they are to hold as applying to works necessary for the preservation or promotion of the use of the valley—works, in themselves, that are by no means improvements to the valley, but necessary evils, which occupation and use bring in their train or force in their advance."

I find here, from the personal report of Mr. Chapman, on the work that he did in the Yosemite Valley this year, the following criticisms; he speaks of the danger of the trees and vegetation being consumed by fire in the dry season. He says: "In only one way can this rapidly increasing danger be removed. The work of meadow reclamation should be vigorously continued. The fern lands should be relieved of the dense covering of young pines, and the unsightly undergrowth in all places sufficiently removed to enable the districting of the valley floor by means of more foot paths and avenues to exercise fully its naturally preventive influence in arresting at once an incipient fire. The work of seeding the valley from wall to wall to useful grasses will materially aid the suppression of undergrowth, and at the same time restore the landscape to its original and well remembered beauty, but this can never be accomplished whilst the custom of running stock at large is permitted. To this alone is due the killing of grasses, and the lamentable signs of negligence that have followed. There is no longer any excuse for allowing tenants to run stock outside of the ample inclosures set aside for their use."

I read from a criticism on the report of Fred. Law Olmstead in regard to the reclamation of Niagara Falls.

Q. He was a landscape gardener? A. Yes, sir; he is considered the most eminent authority at the present time in America on this subject. On page 631 of the "Century" for August, 1887, I find that I have marked a few lines. I find that the State of New York has appropriated $1,000,000 for the use of the Board of Commissioners to manage and to improve Niagara Falls. It states here that "Entrance fees have already been abolished, and many eyesores and incumbrances in the shape of mills and fences and vulgar places of amusement have already been removed. But it will be easily understood that a great deal of further work—and of a constructive as well as of a destructive character—will be required if the reservation is to show that its owners appreciate its value and the responsibility which its possession lays upon them." I find this on page 632: "And they will be shown it as nearly as possible as nature made it, neither desecrated nor, in the cant sense, 'improved,' and under the beams of the sun and moon, but never again of colored calcium lights. Its beauty and its wonderfulness are to be given the freest chance to speak to our emotions, while the petty and discordant tones of humanity's creations are as much as possible to be suppressed." [Reading from the August, 1887, number of the "Century Magazine," page 632.] Then I find here, John Thorpe, another authority on landscape gardening. On page 637 of the same magazine he writes to the editor of the "Century," "Allow me to thank you for your 'Landscape Gardeners Needed for America,' in your 'Topics of the Time' for June.

"The so called landscape gardener is in many cases not as intelligent as an ordinary every day laborer; his object seems to be to have as many narrow and contorted walks as possible where they are not needed, to plant many trees and shrubs in the most inappropriate places, to make ridiculously-shaped beds, and to plant them with but one object—to use as many plants as possible without regard to suitability. It is surely worth the attention not only of those engaged in the business, but of gentlemen who have country houses, to consider at least the fundamental features of landscape work and landscape art. There can be no stereotyped plans for the embellishment of grounds; each domain calls for different treatment and different groupings.

"The natural surroundings should be the first consideration, instead of being, as now, often ignored. Unfortunately, we have but few good works which treat this important subject in a right manner; but, in spite of all this malpractice and ignorance, it is evident that we are progressing, though slowly."

I read these quotations to you to justify the accusation of neglect to carry out the provisions of the Government.

Q. The Government expected that something would be done there in the line there suggested? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that there has been nothing of the kind? A. Nothing. I claim that at the present time the bed of Yosemite has not the first shadow or substance of resemblance to anything like a public park.

Q. There are no walks, no alleyways, no beautiful turnings and windings through the shrubbery and trees, that ought to constitute, in your judgment, the prominent features of the park? A. Yes, sir. There is simply a belt road around the bed of that valley.

Q. Over which horses may exercise themselves hauling passengers around? A. Yes, sir. There are certain cross-roads that cross from one side to the other of the valley and strike that belt road at different places. The whole interval is used as pasture ground, or as hay meadows. There is no road running through the center of the valley. You cannot choose your location. The trees that are cut out in that valley, simply prove the truth and wisdom of Fred. Law Olmstead's report, that no natural object should be defaced where it can be let alone.

MR. KELLY: Didn't there used to be a road in the center of the valley? A. Yes, sir. That has been abandoned. The State has paid out a good deal of money at times on that. It is abandoned and fenced up entirely.

MR. TULLY: Do you not think that to the eye of the tourist or the visitor there—a person who is accustomed to visiting large parks, parks that are properly cared for as compared with this—does it not strike you that the object has been to afford accommodations, roads, and trails, and one thing and another, where saddle trains and saddle horses and hired teams may conduct the passengers around there, rather than to the enhancement of their convenience by these little by-ways, alley-ways? A. Yes, sir; most decidedly so.

Q. The work that has been done there apparently seems to have been directed to facilitate, as much as possible, the drives in the direction and over the places where horses and vehicles would have to be hired to take them? A. It always looked to me as though every inducement were used to make people spend money in the Yosemite.

Q. Give employment to the teams? A. Yes, sir; to make people spend more money with the livery teams—with the livery men. As a usual consequence, people, in the first place, ride eighty miles before they get to Yosemite—a hard jaunt. They get in there cross and all tired out and used up. The next day they are whooped up to Glacier Point or Vernal Falls. They take a ride that day that under no circumstances in the ordinary run of their lives could you get them to take any way; under no conditions would they take it. They go there as in duty bound. The next day they go perhaps to Glacier Point, another terrible ride. By that time there is nothing left of them. Getting through, they say: "Well, it is a beautiful place, and all that, but for God's sake let us get out; we want to get home." They get on the stage, and, until they get to the railroad, they are almost dead. The railroad ride begins to invigorate them, and they begin to think what they have seen. If there were pleasant footpaths. I have had, probably, in the last four years, four hundred English people in my studio, and the general remark is this: "How far do we have to go, Mr. Robinson, before we can see natural California? How far do we have to go before we can get rid of this farming and this fencing, and this tree cutting and trimming up? We don't come here to see this. We supposed we were going to see things in their natural light. It is so represented to us abroad. How far will we have to go?" I tell them: "You will have to go at least a day's journey in the mountains, and there you will find evidences of sheep and their smell everywhere. This same Mr. Davies, that the Governor referred to, told me, in Leidig's hotel—he says: "Mr. Robinson, this is very peculiar to me, this fencing in of this property; it looks awfully. I never saw anything like it in my life."

Q. More like a farm than a park? A. Yes, sir; he told me, "It looks more like a small Scotch farm than a park." He was there late in the fall, and it was cold; and it did resemble Scottish climate considerably. Another Englishman, a Mr. P. H. Bryant, one of the best known monopolists in England, having a monopoly of matches all over England—he is worth millions upon millions—he said, in a very laughing way, "Mr. Robinson, they are determined to make an English tea-garden out of this place." That is, similar, in England, on a more extended scale, to the Vienna Garden, or some Dutch beer-garden in San Francisco, where a few trees are stuck in the ground. Mr. Mills made the remark to me last spring at the close of the June meeting, as I said awhile ago: "Oh, Mr. Robinson, they are determined to turn this thing into a cow pasture, and I might just as well vote with them, because they are determined to do it."

MR. KELLY: Have you heard Mr. Mills' testimony about leasing the Stoneman House, before this committee? Were you present? A. I don't remember that I was; I might have been; but it has entirely escaped my memory.

Q. Did you hear Judge Grant's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard Judge Grant say that the reason they rejected his bid was that he made a condition that stages should stop at the Stoneman House? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That the Commissioners said that it was impossible for them to grant that condition; that they had no control over the stages? A. Yes, sir.

MR. KELLY: I find in Rules and Regulations, Rule 20: "Stages entering the valley shall stop at each hotel in the order of location, that passengers can exercise the right of location."

THE WITNESS: Yes, I know that that has been warded off in this way: they have put that in their rules and regulations, but they say that they have no right after all to enforce it. Mr. Washburn, as I said the other night, has always denied their right to control his stages within the valley limits. As I understand, he remarked to them once that they might run the valley as much as they pleased, but they couldn't run his stages. I look at the whole matter simply in this light: that the Yosemite Valley is the greatest attraction that California has got. I think that it is indirectly the means perhaps of people from all over the world dropping two or three millions a year into the coffers of the State. When you mention California to people from abroad, the first thing that occurs to them is tremendous snow-clad mountains, big trees, awful gorges, high waterfalls. They come to this country with the idea that they may see some of those things along the road, or that they will get to see Yosemite some time or other. Even though they don't get there, they may drop their money in Los Angeles, and San Francisco, and San Diego; put it into various things. That is one of the great incentives that brings them to this country. It seems to me that the State of California ought to do everything in its power to promote the pleasure of those people when they visit this greatest attraction we have; probably the greatest attraction that is open to the public world at this present time. It seems to me that anything that tourists complain of should be removed. It doesn't make any difference whether it is a few or a great number. I find that in the laws of the State the Board of Yosemite Commissioners are regarded—so stated—that they are mere agents of the State. It is not their duty, it seems to me, to interpret the laws to suit themselves, but to execute them simply as they find them. I don't see that they have done thus and so. It seems to me that they have interpreted the laws to suit themselves. But this thing would only resolve itself into a question of error of judgment. If those gentlemen have made errors of judgment of that kind, their places ought to be filled, because a few Commissions making errors of judgment, especially where those errors of judgment affect the trees, it would not take a long time for a few errors to destroy the trees.

Q. Do you remember telling me something about a conversation with some railroad man, in which he warned another person not to interfere with Cook, because they were interested in Cook? A. No; I don't know what you refer to.

Q. Some railroad man, I think. Towne or Goodman told somebody who was complaining about the monopoly. A. Are you sure I made that statement?

MR. KELLY: You told me something about it. A. It is all mixed up in my mind. I forgot to state one thing in regard to tree cutting. That when the contractors for the Stoneman House were cutting timber near or upon the grant, Galen Clark warned them that they had got marked the tree which marks the northwestern boundary of the grant. That was marked to fell. He warned them that that tree marked that boundary. Also warned Mr. Dennison that such was the case. Mr. Dennison warned them not to cut that tree, but it was felled. Mr. Clark, afterward, piled up a monument on the stump of that tree, to mark the survey of the grant.

J. M. HUTCHINGS.

Recalled.

THE WITNESS: There is a great oversight in considering the amusements and the comforts—I mean so far as the passage from here to there is concerned. Now, there was the Cosmopolitan, where people could go and have a game of billiards, or they could have a game of pins. It is true, one room was sometimes used for gambling, but that ought to be made a cause for the surrender of the lease, or the canceling of the lease; and they could go and they could have a glass of lemonade, and it was a regular rendezvous for people after they had been sight-seeing; and people do not want, all the time, to be upon the mountain tops and in the clouds. They want to come down to relaxations, and there are none of those provided. They abolished the Cosmopolitan saloon, and, as Mr. Priest testified, it was one of the worst things they could have done; and one queer sort of an arrangement was that when it had been decided to abolish it, one of the gentlemen composing the committee wanted one bath-room left, because when he went to the valley he wanted to take a bath, as though nobody else ever wanted to take a bath besides that one Commissioner; and everything has been to the neglect of the comforts, and so forth, of life. I meant to testify, the other night, that Switzerland derived two thirds of its support and all its expenses from the tourist travel that passed to witness its wonderful mountains; and that Bavaria, being left entirely out of the beaten track of tourist travel, first provided and prepared a beautiful garden; after that, erected buildings, and then after that, invited eminent artists of all nations to contribute to a picture gallery, or to send in pictures; and the result is now that three fourths of the revenue required by the State is derived from the tourists that now pass through Bavaria, mainly at Munich, to witness the pictures and the gardens, and so forth, that have been provided at the expense of millions of dollars.

[Further hearing continued until to-morrow evening, February 20, 1889.]

WEDNESDAY EVENING, February 20, 1889.

Present—Mr. Rundlell, Chairman, Messrs. Tully, Gardner, and Tulloch.

G. G. GOUCHER.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: I understand that Senator Goucher is not our witness; that is, we have not subpoenaed him; he is not here by citation from the committee. He is simply before us to make a statement, I understand, in the nature of a rebuttal, perhaps. You are aware of the nature of the charges? Answer—Yes, sir. In order to give the testimony I have to give in proper order, I would prefer you would read those questions in the same order, because it will bring to my mind the matters that I want to speak of.

Q. You are one of the Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley, are you not? A. Yes, sir. I desire to state to the committee that I was appointed by Governor Bartlett in February, 1887, to fill out the unexpired term of Commodore Raymond, deceased. That term expired on April 13, 1888, and, at that time, I was reappointed by the present Governor. I have attended, since I have been a Commissioner, two regular annual meetings; that is to say, the meeting of 1887, in June, a few months after my appointment: also the June meeting of the Commissioners in 1888, and one special meeting of the executive committee, but to which all the members of the Commission were invited, that was held in San Francisco in August, 1887, at which time the Stoneman House was leased. I merely mention that to show to what extent I have been connected with the Commission.

Q. Have you ever acted in the capacity of one of the members of the executive committee? A. I acted as a member of the executive committee—at least, I was elected a member of the executive committee in June, 1887, and served in that capacity until June, 1888, nominally, but the notices were always sent to me when they held a meeting—I lived in Fresno, and it generally happened that I was in some case, and therefore, I did not attend, I believe, but one meeting of the executive committee during the year.

Q. Are you pretty well acquainted with the transactions of that executive committee? A. Well, fairly well acquainted with them. Yes, sir; during that time.

Q. Since you have been connected with the Board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The first charge here is the charge of misapplying public moneys and appropriations. Now, you may state to the committee what you know about that charge? A. Well, sir; there has been no misapplication, as I understand that term, of public moneys or appropriations, since I have been a member. Prior to that time, of course, I am not well informed; misappropriation or misapplication might mean, as a matter of judgment, that the funds were applied with bad judgment. Do you construe it that way?

Q. Well, it is susceptible of that meaning, certainly? A. Of course, in that view of the case, I would simply be passing upon a judgment in which I had previously participated, believing it to be good. I do not say that I am a competent judge, but as to any wrongful appropriation, or application of moneys, there has been none, and I think—

Q. This does not state that it is a wrongful appropriation of money, and I understand it simply has reference to what has been done there in the way of disbursing moneys, and the inference to be drawn was that the money was badly spent; that it was not judiciously invested? A. Well, yes; I know that money has been injudiciously expended in the valley at different times, and during Mr. Dennison's tenure there as Guardian, particularly. The management of Yosemite Valley I consider to be bad, so far as his position as Guardian was concerned. I believe that he exceeded the authority conferred upon him by the Commissioners, in many instances, and so expressed myself, as an editor of a newspaper at that time, and I adhere to the opinion still. If you want any particulars I will give you some.

Q. Well, state, if you please? A. Well, for instance, he was directed by the Commissioners, or the executive committee—I won't say which—to build a road from near Barnard's hotel across the valley towards the wall on the north side of the valley, and of course that road had to be built at that point through what was a morass or swampy meadow, miry ground. He built it up of rock about three or four feet high in many places: it was at great expense, of course. The rock had to be hauled there, and in many places, it was not possible for two teams to pass. There was no guard on either side to protect persons who were riding horseback and who would happen to meet a wagon; there was nothing to protect the horses from shying off. It was a dangerous thing; it showed bad judgment, and I considered it a misapplication of public funds, but it was a matter of bad judgment on his part alone, so far as I know. I know that the Commissioners subsequently had to cause that to be widened in order to make it available. That is one instance. As to this matter which Mr. Robinson alluded to, the fact of the building where he had his studio, near the old Cosmopolitan building, and its being torn down by Mr. Dennison when Guardian, and being moved some distance, and being furnished as a Post Office at an expense of $400, I am satisfied that no such sum was used. I was not a member of the Commission then, and as to the particulars, the details of that I do not know anything. Of course, I know from Mr. Robinson's complaints to me at different times since that act was done; he considered it an outrage, and the way I understood it from all inquiry, was this: that Mr. Robinson really had no lease of this building at all; that Dennison received instructions from the executive committee to remove it and to put up another building for use as a Post Office.

Q. And this building was appropriated for that purpose, I understand?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Robinson's building? A. Yes, sir. I think Mr. Robinson had no more right—that is, as a matter of right, he had no more right to it than any of you gentlemen would have. It was simply optional with the Commissioners to let him have it or not, and they did not choose to do it.

Q. Did they build that building for him for his accommodation? A. No.

Q. Do you know who built it? A. Mr. Washburn built it.

Q. The building that Robinson was occupying formerly as a studio? A. The building that he was occupying as a studio, and which he mentioned last night as being the one from which Dennison removed him. That building was originally built by Henry Washburn, of the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company.

Q. Subsequently leased to Robinson? A. Robinson was subsequently allowed by the Commission to use it.

Q. Did not he pay rent for it? A. Yes, sir; I think he did.

Q. Do you know how much he paid? A. No, I do not know. I was not on the Commission then.

Q. That building was subsequently removed and dedicated to Post Office use? A. Yes, sir. It was used as a Post Office building, the materials of it. It was not reconstructed exactly on the plan.

Q. You do not know what the cost of the Post Office building was? A. No, sir; but it could not have been anywhere near $400. I think the books will show that it was not anything near that.

Q. You have no knowledge of your own? You do not know what it did cost? A. No, sir.

Q. How long did that road which you speak of there, built by Dennison, remain in that condition before it was repaired? A. It remained in that condition until the June meeting, 1887. That was the first meeting I attended as a member of the Commission; it had been constructed between the June meeting, 1886, and the June meeting, 1887, by Dennison. As soon as the Commissioners saw it and examined it, they unanimously condemned it as an exhibition of folly, and ordered it widened at once.

Q. Do you know what its present condition is? A. The present condition is good; it is wide enough.

Q. Is there any protection on the sides of it? A. No, sir.

Q. To prevent wagons, or horses, or anybody from going over? A. No; but as it was widened the oval was continued, so there is not the same pitch now.

Q. There is no pitch now? A. Not much; very slight; the danger in that way is removed.

Q. Mr. Robinson spoke something about the condition of the abutments or the approaches to the bridge being very precipitous at one place; there is one place where a wagon came very near falling off twelve or fourteen feet? A. I did not hear that part of his testimony. What bridge did that relate to?

Q. I think it was the same bridge you speak of, built by Dennison, that was subsequently widened? A. Well; and that road from the bridge through northward I considered a poor piece of work, but there is nothing there at present that is dangerous in any way.

Q. Then you think Dennison's expenditure of money there was a very injudicious expenditure of money? A. I think that the expenditure was injudicious, because when he got through with it the work was not completed, but had to be re-done, as you may say.

Q. Are those the only instances in which you know of anything that would tend, in your mind, to point towards a misapplication or appropriation of public moneys? A. That is the only one. There has been no misapplication, so far as my knowledge goes. It seems to be a matter of judgment. I have approved—at least, as a Commissioner, I have approved all the other expenditures, since I became a member.

MR. TRUMAN: I would like to ask my colleague one question: Did not the Commission, after becoming dissatisfied with Mr. Dennison, remove him? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TULLY: Do you know about what time he was removed? A. Yes, sir. The Commissioners did not remove him, in the strict sense of the term. I will explain that. There were some of the Commissioners who wanted to remove Dennison in June, 1887. That was the first meeting I attended. I will state that I had been making a fight against Dennison's continuance there as Guardian for two years before. I was not a member of the Commission, but I disapproved of his management there, and was endeavoring to have him removed. Of course, as soon as I became a Commissioner, I, with others, undertook to carry that out at the June meeting, 1887, and we failed, after balloting a number of times. Mr. Hutchings was a candidate, and other parties who were friends of mine, and Mr. Dennison; but the reason assigned by those who finally came together, who had been supporting other parties, who came together and constituted a majority, and in that way kept Dennison in. The reason given was this: that Dennison had been the Guardian while the construction of the Stoneman House had been in progress, and that it was still incomplete, and that he, being so familiar with all matters connected with the construction of the Stoneman House, that it would be to the advantage of the State to continue him in as Guardian, as the executive officer of the Commission, until the hotel was completed, and then the members of the Commission who were favoring Dennison, stated to me that they would be willing to remove him. When we met after the completion of the hotel, in August, I think, in San Francisco, Dennison resigned. I understood at the time that it was because he knew that the Commission would remove him.

Q. Do you know anything about that trail that was built called the Anderson trail? A. Yes, sir; I know something about it.

Q. Are you familiar with the circumstances surrounding the construction of that trail? A. No, sir.

Q. Was it done by order of the Commission? A. I can tell you all I know about the history of the trail. Of course I have been over the trail since. I knew George Anderson, the builder, very well. I knew him from the time I went to Mariposa County to live, in 1875. The first I knew about this, Mr. George Anderson came to Mariposa, to my office—the District Attorney's office of that county—and laid a complaint before me substantially to this effect: that he had taken a contract to construct the trail you refer to for $1,500; and he was to be permitted to draw supplies, food, and powder and tools and other supplies. He was to furnish the men with food, and also to furnish them with working implements and materials; that was to be charged up against the contract price; that he had expended the full sum of $1,500 in that way, and the trail was still far from complete. He thereupon communicated the facts, showing the situation to the executive committee, of which Rev. M. C. Briggs was the chief party. He was the Secretary, and, of course, took the correspondence. To that statement he received a reply signed by M. C. Briggs; signed "M. C. Briggs, Secretary." It was a letter in which Mr. Briggs stated, after acknowledging receipt of the contents and expressing sorrow, acknowledging receipt of Anderson's letter and expressing sorrow at his failure to make it a profitable job under the contract, stated that the executive committee had concluded to continue the work anyhow, and to go on with the work, and that the men employed by him, Anderson, would be paid; that orders would be given to the Guardian to still continue furnishing the supplies as before; and then this sentence occurred: "Your compensation is left to the executive committee." and it was signed "M. C. Briggs, Secretary." Now, that letter George Anderson put in my hands with a copy of the contract, or perhaps the contract may have been in duplicate. In fact, he gave me a statement taken from his book of the number of days that he had worked on this trail.

Q. That is, after the lapse of the contract? A. No; I think altogether; two hundred and twenty-two days was the amount; and he claimed that that kind of work was worth $5 a day. I agreed with him.

Q. Did he tell you whether or not he boarded himself during that time? A. Well, I think he got supplies from this store there, at the order of the Guardian.

Q. Was it not understood that those supplies were to be charged up against him? A. I do not know what the understanding was in that regard. I cannot say. Well, I agreed with Anderson that I would go before the Commission at the coming June meeting—that was in 1885, I think—at the June meeting, 1885, I would appear before the Commission and present his claim, and endeavor to get an allowance in his favor. Well, I did so. I presented and had filed as a part of the evidence, while I was making my statement to the Commissioners, as part of the proof, this contract; the original contract. I presented and had filed as a part of the case the statement of the number of days work performed by him, with the dates, and his claim, of course, at the rate of $5 a day, for overseeing the work and doing it. And I presented and had filed at the same time, this letter from Dr. Briggs, to prove that he had done the work after he had expended $1,500: the rest of the work had been done by the express direction of the Commission, and that therefore he was entitled to pay, inasmuch as that was plainly implied in the letter, or stated substantially, that he should be paid; that his compensation should be left to the executive committee. Those papers are the ones that Charley Anderson referred to when he testified before your committee. Those were the only papers put in my hands, and they were all filed when I presented the case. The Commission, after I presented this case, had a closed-door session, the one that has been testified about, and I was eventually, I think the next day, sent for: notified to be present; and they said they had rejected the claim; and Mr.

Briggs opened some book, which purported to be a minute book of the Commission or executive committee, and read from it a statement under some date prior to that date, in which it was said that George Anderson appeared before the Commission and waived all claim to compensation, and all claim against the Commission for this work. Of course that was a complete answer.

Q. If true? A. If true. Anderson denied that he had ever waived it; but before I could present it at another annual meeting of the Commission Anderson died. Of course, I did not have him then to prove anything about it, but, nevertheless, I appeared before the Commission—that was at the meeting in 1886—for the purpose of renewing this claim, and they would not hear anything in regard to it; said their books showed that he had waived all right and they would not hear any claim, and that ended the matter so far as I know. Those papers referred to, if they are in existence at all, and I presume they are, are among the archives of the Commission. I have not seen them since, at least.

Q. Did they state that Anderson gave any written waiver of his claim, or whether it was simply verbal? A. The minutes read by Dr. Briggs at that time indicated that he had appeared and made some verbal statement, and whatever this entry was, it was an entry made by the Commission or by its Secretary, not by him.

Q. Merely a statement from the Commissioners that Anderson had so appeared and waived? A. Yes, sir; I never thought that that was just. I condemned the action of the Commissioners for that. I think Anderson ought to have been paid. The Commission or its Secretary or its executive committee never should have ordered him to continue after he had apprised them of all the facts, and never should have said in that connection, that his compensation would be left to the executive committee, without assuming the responsibility afterwards, and paying it or making some provision, and I always condemned the Commission for that, but they met it by saying: "He took the contract to do it for $1,500; he expended that sum of money, and then we allowed him to go on and work afterwards, but it was a voluntary act, and he appeared before us and waived all right to that. He simply found himself in a bad contract, spent all the money, and we allowed him to go ahead, and furnished money to pay his workmen and for supplies."

Q. I understand you that this letter that Dr. Briggs wrote authorizing him to go on with that work and that the Commission would see that he was paid, that his compensation would be fixed by the Commission, was after he had exhausted his $1,500 contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that letter refers to the work that he did and was induced to do after the contract had expired? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you or do you not know whether the Commission or committee ever paid anything for that work that was done? A. I know they never did. I know they never paid Anderson a cent afterwards, because I tried to get it before his death and after his death, and failed.

Q. Do you know of any person ever having received it for Anderson? A. No. I know that, because I got letters of administration for Charlie Anderson in the matter, in order to give somebody a legal standing to collect, and he has the letters yet; at least, the estate is not settled up.

Q. Do you know whether he did place somebody in legal standing to collect it in case he died, and if so, who was that person? A. Well, Charlie Anderson got those papers before I was elected to the Senate, I think, or afterward.

Q. Papers of administration? A. Yes, sir; he got it before; and I told him if the Commission would not settle it after he got the letters of administration, that I would endeavor to get the Legislature to pay it. He made that statement before the Senate committee. I do not know whether he did before your committee or not; but I told him I would endeavor to have the Legislature pay him.

Q. Has there ever been any application to the Legislature? A. I do not think I introduced a bill last session, but I won't be sure. I introduced a general omnibus claims bill for Yosemite Valley, which did not pass. But I have forgotten whether Anderson's claim was involved or not.

Q. Within your knowledge, you cannot say the Legislature ever made any appropriation to pay that money? A. I know they did not make any appropriation to pay it. I understood you to ask if there had been any attempt made. I know that the Legislature never appropriated any money for that purpose, and that the Commission have never made any for that purpose.

Q. Have you any idea of ascertaining, or did you ever ascertain, anything like an approximate idea of what was the value of the work he claimed he had done after the contract expired? A. Yes; I think that I am mistaken about saying that the two hundred and twenty-two days was both before and after. I think that the two hundred and twenty-two days were all after, because I told him he could not collect anything.

Q. That was for work done afterwards? A. Yes, sir; I was mistaken. I will correct myself in that particular. Well, I inquired of him what his own services were reasonably worth, and he said $5 a day. I inquired of Mr. Conway, who was also a witness here once before—a road builder—and he said he thought that was reasonable. I would have been able to prove before any Court or jury by road builders in that mountainous country, that the work of superintending the construction of such a road or trail was reasonably worth that amount.

Q. The amount that he claimed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The question here is, "The destruction of private and public property in Yosemite Valley?" A. Well, I last night took down, while Mr. Robinson was testifying at that point, some pieces of property referred to by him, and I will mention them in the same order. The Anderson cabin was taken down. That was a cabin which was put up by George Anderson for convenience during the construction of this trail that we have been speaking about. The understanding was that that was there for temporary purposes, and it was not to remain there after the work stopped; and of course, when the work was stopped and after he died, there was nobody to take charge of it. The cabin was of no use to anybody, and it was taken down. An account was made up of the amount of lumber—it was carefully measured—with the understanding that whatever that was worth should be paid to the legal representative of George Anderson. The lumber itself was admitted to be the property of Anderson, or of his estate. But that was not a destruction of any private property. On the other hand, it was by virtue of an understanding that it was torn down.

Q. Do you know whether he was ever paid for the value of that lumber? A. I cannot say. He certainly was not paid before his death. His representative, if paid afterwards, must have been Charles Anderson. I should take his word on that subject. I think he testified before the committee that he had not been paid anything. But before I heard that testimony, I was under the impression that he had been paid for that lumber, or that he had sold it.

Q. I think he testified to the fact of having received some little money. I do not know what shape it was.

MR. GARDNER: I think never a cent. A. As I explained before, that was torn down, and if anybody received it, it was his representative, Mr. Charlie Anderson. The fact of the business was, the Anderson brothers were not on very good terms. George Anderson and Charlie Anderson had lived within a few miles of each other, but had not met each other for fifteen or twenty years, and Charlie Anderson knew nothing about his business until after his death, and the first he knew I sent him a letter that I had a claim in my hands, and would like for somebody to be the principal in the matter; and he came then to Mariposa to see me about it. That was the first interest he took.

Q. That was the first item on Robinson's account? A. Yes. The next was Lembert's cabin. Lembert's cabin was a hut; it was of no value at all. I do not think Lembert ever claimed that he had any right; he was there by sufferance, and it was a disgraceful structure anyway; of no value. There are Indian cabins in the valley, Indian huts, of a great deal more value. It is not worth mentioning. The Fagenstein cabin is something I know nothing about. Whatever was done, was done by Mr. Dennison. That was before my incumbency as a member of the Commission. The Folsom property he claims was torn down. That I recommended to be torn down myself, because I was a member of the building committee; at the June meeting last year I recommended it to be torn down, because the building was in a condition or state of ruin. The Stoneman House had been built—this will apply generally to the Cook hotel, to the Folsom property, and to the Leidig hotel, with all their appurtenant outhouses of all descriptions. The Stoneman House had been constructed. These buildings were in a state of ruin, all of them. The only one that I endeavored, by my action, to save from destruction, was the Leidig hotel. I recommended to the Commission at the June meeting of last year, that the Leidig house be preserved: not for the purpose of opening it, or permitting anybody to open it as a hotel, but for the use of campers. Now, it was proposed, and we did at the June meeting last year, set apart new grounds for the campers, including the grounds from the Cook hotel, on the south side of the Merced River, down to where the river comes in against the wall of the valley on the south side, near Bridal Veil; of all that territory, a large tract of new ground, including the meadow that Leidig had been using for many years, and which was formerly fenced; a very pretty meadow, small but productive—for campers. We knew that sometimes storms come up and campers are not always there prepared to protect themselves from these storms. Even the tents that many brought in were not sufficient to turn the sudden and heavy rains that come; and my proposition was that, inasmuch as the new ground was to be set apart for campers, that we preserve the Leidig hotel and throw it open, and, in such cases as I mentioned, rainstorms, the campers would be able to take refuge there. It would accommodate a good many. Well, other members of the Commission opposed that, on the ground that if we left the house open for anybody and everybody, that the end of it all would be that it would be burned up some time by malicious persons, be fired just for the fun of it, and that it would soon be in a condition so that no campers would occupy it anyhow; there would be nobody to take care of it, and that to be of any use and to be safe, it would require annual repairs, which would be expensive. And so my judgment in the matter was overruled, and I am inclined to think wisely overruled, too: at least I feel responsible for my share in its destruction. The other buildings had unquestionably reached a point when they ought to be destroyed. Why, when I was in the Assembly, and the Commission and the Guardian—I believe Mr. Hutchings was Guardian at that time, were you not?

MR. HUTCHINGS: At what time?

THE WITNESS: When I was in the Assembly in 1885, elected in 1884.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Yes, sir.

THE WITNESS: When the bill was introduced to appropriate $40,000 to build the Stoneman House, photographs of Cook's hotel and some of those other buildings were sent here and put on exhibition in the Sergeant-at-Arms room of the Assembly, for the purpose of convincing members of the Legislature that there was a necessity for an appropriation for building a new hotel. This picture of the Cook hotel, furnished you by Mr. Robinson, looked very pretty on paper, but that long wing, that low part, that seems to be a long building, is only one room deep, and the walls and the floor and the roof, all were in a condition that was disgraceful. The Folsom building was also in a dilapidated condition. It was not a thing of beauty, by any means, but there was some lumber in it that could be used in some other way to put up buildings that were necessary. Furthermore, the same may be stated of the Leidig property. There was some lumber in it that could be used to advantage elsewhere, and a great deal of the timber was rotten. Now, during all the years that I lived in Mariposa County, both before I was a Commissioner and afterwards, as long as Mr. and Mrs. Leidig ran that house, I made the Leidig hotel my stopping place, because I was on more intimate terms with those people than I was with the others that were living in the valley. The upstairs part, where the bedrooms were, was in a shaking condition. You know how a house will go when it is old and some of the timbers have fully or partly decayed; it will show it by the movement of the floors and of the walls and of the porches. And I know that, in order to make it safe there was required a considerable expenditure every year, in the way of repairs. The fences about it were all broken down and worn out, and the outbuildings, too, were in a disgraceful state. Nobody will dispute that. The house itself looked pretty well after it was repaired two years ago; that is, in 1887; yet something had to be done over every year, or it would go to pieces; and it never would have been destroyed as long as Leidig and his wife were there. I want to say, in that connection, that Mr. Leidig and his wife put in an application in 1887, the first meeting I attended there, for a five years' lease of this property, and it went in with my indorsement, too. They asked we whether they should do it or not, before they did it. But the Commission opposed it, and they told Mr. and Mrs. Leidig—most of the Commissioners were stopping at the house at the time—they told them: "As long as we are on the Commission, you shall have this property from year to year. What better do you want than that assurance? We do not like to renew that old evil that lasted through so many Commissions, of giving these long privileges." It gave rise to complaints, to claims against the State, and against the Commission, that had no foundation in equity at all; and people always were harder to control. They would consider that they had an unbridled license to do what they chose, and the policy of the Commission for several years has been gradually changing from their policy of granting long tenures to a policy of granting short tenures or permits, in order that the holders may consider themselves more responsible—more directly responsible—to the Commissioners. So we told Mr. Leidig: "Now, if we do this, a whole lot of other people that have buildings will come in and want these five and ten-year leases, and it is better that you do not insist on this. We do not want to renew that old thing, and we will assure you that you shall not be disturbed." Of course the lease was held in the name of Mrs. Belle T. Leidig, the wife; and she and Leidig expressed themselves perfectly satisfied with that arrangement, to us or to me. The night before I left Yosemite Valley I stayed up in Mr. and Mrs. Leidig's barroom with Leidig and his wife until four o'clock in the morning, and they expressed themselves perfectly satisfied with the arrangement. They would not deny it if they were here now. We tore down those buildings then—I will say, in short, the Folsom property, and the Cook hotel, and all the outhouses, and the Leidig hotel—because they had served their purpose and were unfit; they were in a dilapidated condition, and were a disgrace to the State. All the lumber of it that was in a condition to be used to any advantage at all, anywhere in the valley, was saved and preserved from those buildings.

Q. Subsequently utilized for other purposes? A. As to that, Judge Tully, I will state that we gave, at the June meeting last year, our instructions upon these various matters. How they have been carried out, of course, we cannot ascertain fully until the next June meeting, because we hold one annual meeting in the valley. Of course, none of this tearing down had commenced when the Commission adjourned at the June meeting last, and when we left the valley. I was in the valley last August for one night. I was stopping on the road, and I went in with some parties. The removal of these buildings had not commenced at that time, so I cannot say how the material was used. Our instructions were all that could be used anywhere should be kept.

Q. By what process were Messrs. Leidig and lady gotten rid of ultimately? A. They were not gotten rid of. It was against the wish of the Commission, or, at least, a number of the Commission, I know. The first I knew of it was on a Sunday, in Fresno; Mr. Leidig came to my house and told me: "I have sold out to Cook & Barnard. I have concluded that many tourists will naturally prefer to go to a new hotel; and we have worked like slaves here in the valley for so long, and I was anxious to get out so that my children, who are growing up now, should have more advantages, see more of the world, and I have got what I consider a good offer." He explained what the offer was, and asked my opinion about it, and said that he was glad to get out of the valley, and his wife was; thought he could get into something where he was going—Los Angeles County—that he could make more money at, and where his wife would not have to work so hard as she did in Yosemite, and where his girls would have better advantages, educational and socially. And I expressed great regret at it, and I think it was a thing regretted by nearly every member of the Commission, if not every member of the Commission. The majority of the Commissioners stopped always at Leidig's, as Mr. Hutchings well knows, and everybody in the valley; that was the favorite place, that was the favorite family in the valley. If anybody was ever favored by the Yosemite Commissioners the Leidigs were, and would be yet, if they were there. And I say, in connection with the tearing down of that place, if they had remained there the proposition never would have been made to tear it down as long as it could have been repaired from year to year, no matter what the cost. The disposition of the Commission would have been to keep repairing it and bolstering it up, because it was the Leidig place.

Q. That is all you know about the destruction of public or private property? A. Yes, sir. I will tell you this much more about the Leidig place; they claimed an equity in the building. I do not know that it is necessary to state to you in detail, and do not know that I could do it with absolute correctness, what that equity was. I know that they have explained the matter fully to me; gave me a great many papers bearing upon the subject, in order that I should introduce a bill at the last session of the Legislature for their relief—a claim—and I did introduce it.

Q. Do you know if they presented their claims in equity to the Commissioners? A. No, sir; they never did, to my knowledge.

Q. The third charge here is: "The unnecessary destruction of timber in the Yosemite Valley." A. Well, about that my testimony is practically different from that of Mr. Robinson. In the first place, he has given, while I was present, this committee to understand that the Yosemite Valley is sparsely wooded; at least, I so understood a part of his testimony last night. That is not true. The bed of Yosemite Valley is thickly wooded. There are open places, of course. There are these meadows that have been spoken of that are open naturally. In those places, where they are cultivated at present, what they would be if not cultivated, I do not know. In those that have been fenced for a considerable time, what they would be if not fenced and closely fed, I do not know. But the rest of the valley outside of the meadows is thickly wooded. The growth of the young timber is marvelously rapid there; all the brush and undergrowth. Before I was a member of the Commission, I heard that question under discussion before the Commission at one of the annual meetings, and it was said then by some member that one of the hardest problems that the Commission would have to deal with in a few years, was the disposal of the dense growth of timber that was coming up, that underbrush, and the fear was expressed that the Legislature never would give the Yosemite management sufficient means to enable them to guard against that peril.

Q. Against the encroachment of the undergrowth? A. Yes, sir. Now, as to the cutting. You can go through Yosemite Valley and find evidences of the cutting of timber running back twenty-five or thirty years ago. You can find where crops of trees were cut a great many years ago, and you can find places where the stumps have rotted so they could be easily removed. This cutting of timber in Yosemite Valley has been done for thirty years past, year by year, by different persons; some of it was done before the Commissioners had anything to do with Yosemite, and some since. My judgment about the trees—beginning to particularize a little—my judgment about the trees that were cut about the Stoneman House is, that they were necessarily cut, every one of them. The Stoneman House was built in a forest of trees; naturally the first thought, the first necessity, would be to cut away enough trees so as to give room for the foundation. The next that would naturally occur would be to remove all such trees as stood in that position where they could imperil the building and the lives of people that were likely to be about the hotel. Those had to be taken out, everybody will admit. When the Commissioners went there for the purpose of designating what trees should be cut—those that the Commission deemed likely to be in such position as to imperil the building—the Commission also noticed some other trees that were neither beautiful nor useful, and they were ordered taken away; but very few, however. I have been at the Stoneman House since it was finished—I was there last summer—and I say that there were no trees taken away from the vicinity of the Stoneman House that were not an improvement to the location; an improvement to the ground; an improvement to it looking toward it from any point that you could select, or looking from it to any point. I am opposed, in taking out trees that way, to taking them out and leaving the stumps there. There were some stumps left.

Q. You give it as your opinion that there has been no unnecessary destruction of timber? A. I am speaking of that place. I want to say, in regard to the views, I think the opening of the view from the Barnard hotel to the lower Yosemite Falls was an advantage. I do not know how many trees it was necessary to cut there, but it was an advantage. I have never approved, and do not now approve, of the cutting down of trees up there and leaving the stumps in, because there is no beauty about the stumps, no matter if the removal of the trees does open some new view or improve some place. I do not think it was good policy to cut the trees near Mr. Hutchings' house; there were some oaks there, and I was surprised that they were cut; I do not know where the order came from. There has been some testimony, I believe, before the committee, in regard to the cutting of timber since the last meeting of the Commission. That I know nothing about. None was ordered to be cut at that time, except what I have mentioned. There is ample timber in the Yosemite Valley; in fact, there is too much. I am opposed to cutting down the big trees, but I am in favor of keeping out this bramble and underbrush that closes up roads, and closes up trails, and obscures views; it is not beautiful. That is the reason that the Yosemite is not as beautiful to-day as it was twenty-five years ago—the reason that the Commission have never had the power or financial ability to keep that down. I think there has been some injudicious cutting of trees, but that, if it be one, has been very much exaggerated.

Q. That closes what you wish to say about the unnecessary destruction of timber? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next question is: "Clearing and plowing valley meadow land." A. Well, most of the land that is cleared in that valley and that is plowed, was cleared and plowed and under fence when I went to Yosemite Valley first. The Lemmon orchard was there. There was an inclosure about Mr. Hutchings' place, and a good deal of fencing. There was a tract of meadow land; a large tract fenced in between Barnard's and Cook's, and from the appearance of the fence and the old walk across there, it had been fenced in a great many years. That was not plowed, however. There was fencing at the Harris place, that which is now held by Coffman & Kenney. A great deal of fencing, a great deal of territory fenced in. And there was another lot fenced in for campers use. There is a piece of ground adjoining the Lemmon orchard, which is attached to the Stoneman House. There is a tract there which is under fence, and which has been cleared of small brush, and some of the larger trees have been taken away. Most of them have been left standing, however. That was seeded to grain or hay, when I was last in the valley. Now, I will state to you that it was conceded that it would be necessary to have cows around the hotel. That is, they should, in some way, have milk; and there is nobody, of course, who hauls milk in there for sale. And it was considered necessary that the Stoneman House should have some pasturage attached to it—a few acres—enough to sustain a couple of cows, anyway, or three cows; and we did not wish to give permission that these cows should be allowed to run at large. That has always been the objection—to allow any stock to run at large—because it is dangerous to campers, dangerous to people on these trails. It would be a very awkward predicament for a person to be in, coming down a trail, looking down two or three thousand feet, to meet a cow or two or three horses; it would frighten the one he was riding on. And so we have endeavored to prevent anything of that kind. Mr. Cook was allowed to fence in a certain tract, which was obscured there, and plow it for that purpose. As to this talk about using these meadows and destroying the botanical value of what they would produce, if any, and as to the fences preventing people going where they pleased, there is a good deal of sentiment about that—a good deal more sentiment than there is sense. There is not any lady who visits Yosemite Valley, that is apt to go on to those marshy meadows. I know that the meadow between Barnard's and Cook's, which is fenced, but which has not been plowed, a great deal of it is under water, which is backed up from overflows. Bridal Veil meadow has never been plowed in the years that I have been there, and I do not know whether it ever was. It never could be; it is too marshy. Now, people are not going out into those meadows to get any views of any place. I am opposed to farming Yosemite Valley as much as anybody, but nearly all these fences have been there for years. I suggested at the last meeting of the Yosemite Commission that they should tear down all those fences between Cook's old house (of course, it is not there now, but I speak of it), Cook's old hotel and Barnard's, because the fence has become old. Well, it is in the same condition as those buildings were which were torn down, dilapidated. It is not beautiful. It is not plowed, and I think it would be a good thing, on the part of the Commissioners, to remove that fencing altogether—turn that meadow open.

Q. About what proportion of the floor of the valley proper has been inclosed with these fences? A. Well, it would be difficult to say.

Q. One third, or one fourth of it? A. Of course, the valley extends through six miles of length. Mr. Mills says nine. I do not consider that the cañon, from the Cascades up for two or three miles, is any part of the floor of the valley. It is more cañon, but say six or seven miles. I think altogether there is not over two hundred acres fenced. That is not all in one spot, remember.

Q. We understand that. A. The valley, for six miles, will average, I think, one half a mile wide, or nearly so. In some places, it is much wider; other places, it is quite narrow. It will average one third of a mile wide, I think, for six miles. You can judge by that how the amount of fencing will compare with the rest. I do not think there is over two hundred acres fenced.

MR. GARDNER: What about the beautiful groves of cottonwood trees that were cut down? A. I asked Mr. Robinson about that last night, and I cannot get the particular grove that he refers to fixed in my mind. As I understood it, he referred to two groves of cottonwoods; one across the river from Fagenstein's place, and another grove across from Barnard's. Now, in respect to the grove across the river from Barnard's, there was no injury done at all by cutting those trees, that I could see. They stood in the way of the view from the south side of the Merced River along by Barnard's. Mr. Hutchings owned those buildings at one time, and it was considered a central place in the valley. There the Guardian's office has been; there the Post Office is, and there, if there was any particular celebration of any kind, the crowd gathered; and, from that point, the best views are obtained of the Yosemite Falls. Now, these cottonwoods across the river there did, to some extent, obscure that view from that side. I think, originally, the proposition was to cut out a few of those trees, so as to enable people to see. I deny that the cottonwood trees that grow there were beautiful at all. There are many cottonwoods along the banks of the river that are pretty, you know, alder and trees of that description on the rivers and streams, that are very beautiful, that have not been molested; but I do not think there were any trees that were worth preserving at that point.

MR. TULLOCH: The land which you have just spoken of being inclosed between Cook's and Barnard's hotels, was that plowed up or not this fall? A. Well, sir, I do not know. If it was, it was not by order of the Commission. Of course; I have not been there officially since June. I have not been there at all since August. I was there for one day in August; that is, I went in on the stage one day and went out the next; and if that ground, that you speak of, or any of it, has been plowed, it was not plowed by any authority given by the Commission at the June meeting, and by no authority I know of. Here is a building, I see, that Mr. Robinson referred to last night as being torn down, which I have not mentioned. That is the Cosmopolitan saloon. Well, the lease had expired on the Cosmopolitan saloon. It belonged to the State. There was a man—he is a friend of mine, too, Captain E. S. Utter—who was keeping a saloon in it. The Commission concluded that the saloon, unless run necessarily in connection with the hotel, was not a good thing to keep up in the valley. It was the cause of little disturbances occasionally, which were not pleasant to tourists, and it was concluded that it better be stopped; that they could use the building as a Guardian's office. The building belonged to the State; it did not belong to any private parties. There were some fixtures inside of the building which belonged either to Utter or Coffman, and Mr. Utter complained very much about what he called the destruction of those fixtures. I was not on the Commission at that time, and he came and consulted me as an attorney, upon the proposition of bringing an action against the Commissioners for damages. Now, Mr. Robinson said last night that he supposed that Mr. Coffman was placated for that injury, by being granted an exclusive privilege for the saddle train. I presume this committee does not care to deal in suppositions. That is, of course, not true.

MR. TULLY: The next charge is: "Debarring the general public from the joint and legal use of the valley." A. Well, I do not know what that means.

Q. I understand that in the course of their management, if they have done anything that the Commission have done, or sanctioned the doing of anything there, which tends to interfere or interrupt tourists and visitors in the valley in their free enjoyment of the valley? A. No, sir; not that I know of. I think the Commission—the majority—have made mistakes. The Commission itself, as a body, have differed, and since I have been on we have had debates and discussions.

Q. I understand it probably applies more directly to the fencing; fencing up the valley; depriving campers of the ground that they would probably like most to occupy to camp upon. A. Well, I have heard campers say—that is an opinion—that they would like to see all these meadows open, and be permitted to camp on all of them; but, of course, some of this was fenced long ago, and orchards were planted, and some has been under fence a great many years, and they have been using it for pasturage in the valley. It was considered necessary. The Commissioners did not want cattle and horses to run at large, and it is necessary to have both in the valley, and therefore there had to be some place fenced to keep them in, and there had to be garden spots to be used in connection with these hotels, and used for the benefit of campers themselves. They could not, of course, haul vegetables in there; could not have them always through the medium of peddlers. I have heard campers say these meadows ought to be all open, and they have complained that the meadows were fenced. I have heard campers complain that the camping grounds were not extensive enough, and we endeavored to remedy that at the last meeting of the Commissioners. That was before the "Examiner" commenced the attack on the management. We endeavored to remove that by setting apart a new ground, and including a meadow which had been formerly used in connection with Leidig's hotel. After the "Examiner's" attacks commenced, I was at Wawona perhaps six weeks; that is on the road twenty-five miles from the valley, and a great many campers passed there—all from the southern part of the country—from Merced, Fresno, Tulare, and Kern, in that direction; all the campers came that way, and these attacks had commenced in the meantime, and I was noticing them every day, of course; and I made it a point, without stating and explaining that I was a member of the Commission, to inquire of those people as they came out. I found that nearly all the people on their way went in with the idea that they were going to be robbed and mistreated, and that they nearly all came out, or all came out, with exactly the opposite opinion. Of course, you want to know what the public complained of. I do not mean the "Examiner"—I do not want to flatter the reporter. But the campers, as they came out of the valley, unanimously, in my experience—and I interviewed a very large number—denounced the charges against the Commission, but two. That is, they said they thought that these meadows ought to be open, so that they could camp upon them; but, at the same time they admitted that, if they all were open, that the campers who went in in the early part of the season would get all the benefit, and those who went in in the latter part of the season would not get any benefit from it. That was one of the things they found fault with, and the other thing was the tolls, and the tolls on the road outside of the valley. You understand that the Commission has no power to control the tolls on these roads.

MR. TULLY: We understand that perfectly. A. The campers complained of that, and the complaint was directed more against the Boards of Supervisors of the counties that permitted these franchises and allowed the collection of tolls than it was against the Commissioners, because they realized that the Commissioners could not control them.

Q. Is it not your opinion, then, Mr. Goucher, that the building of those fences operates as a barrier to the enjoyment of tourists and others going into that valley? A. Well, I am opposed to wire fences. Yes, I am opposed to fences myself.

Q. You think the valley would better subserve the public interest if those fences were removed, except what is absolutely necessary? A. I think there are a good many fences absolutely necessary, and there are some spots inclosed, as I have explained, that are wet and damp, and muddy, where people would not go if they could, if they were opened; but I think the best policy is to have as few fences as possible. There are some fences that could be disposed of; and especially the wire fences. I thought that was a piece of folly. They were constructed mainly during Mr. Dennison's term; perhaps some during Mr. Hutchings'.

MR. HUTCHINGS: No.

THE WITNESS: No matter when they were constructed, they were wrong. If fences were necessary in the places even where they were put, it was wrong to put wire fences, because they are dangerous.

Q. They should have been built of different material? A. In some other way; and I think there are some fences there that ought to have been removed. I do not think there is any fence that has been put up since I have been a member of the Commission that ought to be removed, but I think there are some other fences that are unnecessary, and some inclosures that ought not to be, and that some of the fencing is of the bad character I have mentioned.

Q. Do you think the quantity of land assigned to camping purposes is adequate to the demand? A. Well, I do not know. Yes, it is adequate to the demand for camping purposes. If you mean by that if it was adequate for the demand for feed of the stock of the campers, I say no, it is not, and I do not believe the whole valley, if it was opened, would be, because the people who went in early in the season would not feed at all; when the feed was good they would not feed their stock at all; the result would be that every one of those meadows would be completely eaten out and fed. The campers who went in there would go in without any chance to feed their stock on the meadows, but would have to feed altogether. And it is the same way, Mr. Tully, now with respect to the grounds assigned to campers; those who go in early, of course, get the best feed; their stock eats out what feed there is; those who go in in the fall have to feed their stock.

Q. Is it or is it not true that the greater portion of the fences there now are dedicated to the use of those persons who own the privilege of running saddle trains; that is, Coffman & Kenney, and the care of their stock?

A. No, it is not true.

Q. What proportion of it is? A. Well, I presume one third of the fencing perhaps, or less, in the valley is the fencing inclosing land which they are allowed to use under their privilege.

Q. It has been made to appear, or at least it has been attempted to be made to appear, Mr. Goucher, that it is absolutely necessary, in order to secure the necessary amount or number of saddle horses and conveyances and vehicles of whatever characters necessary to the accommodation of those tourists and visitors, that there should be maintained a saddle train permanently there in the valley? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And upon that is predicated the justification of leasing this fencing, and fencing it up for Coffman & Kenney? Now, looking at it from a standpoint as a committee man, one of those Commissioners, independent of how it would affect the profits of Messrs. Coffman & Kenney, as to whether they were required to bring their feed inside and keep their horses up and feed them, whether it would not be the better policy to abolish that pasturage system that is kept up there for the accommodation of those men, and, as a matter of course, to decrease the expenses of maintaining their animals, whether or not, independent of any consideration as to how it would affect those gentlemen, but simply as to how it would affect the valley, what is your opinion with regard to the propriety of abolishing all that pasturing of stock in there inside of those inclosures by those parties who lease them for the purpose of the saddle trains? Do you understand what I am trying to get at? A. I do not know that I do exactly.

Q. I will state a hypothetical case. Supposing the State were to abolish the privilege of renting the pasture land to parties, and simply rent them the stables; a man comes and rents the privilege of running a saddle train. The State says to him, "Very good; you may run as many saddle trains as you please and bring as many animals here, but you shall not fence up the valley and pasture there. You must foot your bills by bringing your provender and feed for your horses from the outside and keep them in stables." Of course, that will lessen their profits, but has the State anything to do in the management of that valley—is it necessary that they should look as to how it will affect somebody who wants to run a saddle train there? Now we are supposing that you are looking at this matter as a Commissioner, outside of how it affects Coffman & Kenney, or anybody who wants to run a train; whether or not it would be the best policy for the State to say, "Here, we won't fence up this valley at all, except what is necessary for the use of the hotel: but if you want a saddle train, bring it in here; we will give it to you; we will build you stables in appropriate places, but you must bring your feed from the outside, and you shall not fence the valley up for the purpose of keeping your horses in; in other words, you must keep your horses up and feed them with feed brought from the outside?" A. Do you mean how it would affect Coffman & Kenney?

Q. No; not how it would affect Coffman & Kenney; but would it strike you as being a good proposition for the State? A. I hardly know how to answer that.

Q. Because it is not supposed that the State is at all concerned whether Coffman & Kenney, or anybody else, who runs there, makes any money. That is their business, and not the State's? A. The Commissioners require, however, certain things of these men. For instance, they will not allow them to charge more than a certain price; they fix the figures. They compel them to submit to a whole lot of rules and regulations, some of which are complained of by them as bringing on them hardships. They complained about the difficulties of getting any feed at the seasons of the year when they want it.

Q. It lessens their profits, as a matter of course? A. They complain of inability to furnish stock in proper condition without the use of some pasture. They run short of feed sometimes, and they are required to have their whole stock in there ready to commence at a certain time, and that is before there is much travel; but you never can tell from one day to another, at least from one week to another, how much travel there will be, or how many people there will be to accommodate. The result is, these people are dealing in uncertainties. They say: "Now, you require us to bring in this great lot of stock. We cannot afford to bring it in, and we cannot either have it in good condition without having the use of some pasturage here. Our stock won't do well all the time kept up."

Q. When you say they cannot afford it— A. That is a question touching the profit; but when I speak of the condition of their stock, that is a question that affects the convenience, and pleasure, and safety of the people who go there.

Q. Now, is it not a matter of fact that there are facilities for communicating from the outside of the valley; that is, from the exterior limits? Let us make another hypothetical case. Supposing that the Commission were to refuse to allow any grazing privileges there at all. Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith want to obtain the privilege of running saddle trains. The Commissioners say to them: "Very good; we will grant you the privilege; we will rent you stable privileges, because they do not take up much ground. We can furnish you all the stable room you want, but if you want to keep one hundred horses, or ten horses, in order to meet the demand"—as a matter of fact, that travel does not all come at the same time. In the beginning they will need a few horses; after awhile a few more; and when the rush comes, they will probably need one hundred head, and then it gradually diminishes until the season is over. "Now establish your ranch outside of the valley, and get your horses and give them pasturage there, and you can easily communicate with the sources from which these tourists will come. You always know it twenty-four hours beforehand, and when the travel is beginning to come, you can bring in ten horses. Next week, if the travel is increasing, or you notice that visitors are coming, bring in twenty horses, and in proportion as the travel increases, you can bring your horses in, and, as it decreases, send them out. You can supply your stables from the outside, and do away with the fencing up of the valley." How does a proposition of that kind strike you? A. I think that is good. I think it is a good proposition.

Q. Do not you think it would be better than to fence up that valley and allow them to pasture their horses there? A. I do.

Q. I know something about the cost of taking care of horses. They could keep a ranch out there, and could furnish any number of horses upon six or ten hours' notice. A. Here is a difficulty the Commission has had to deal with: Of course, you know, some inclosures are absolutely necessary. Then it is a question how far above that actual necessity the fencing should go. In considering the matter there are two classes of people who visit Yosemite Valley to be taken into consideration. First, the tourist class, who come in by public conveyance, and after they get in there they expect to be provided or expect to rely on some kind of public conveyance to transport them over these trails. The object the Commission has in view is to make that transportation for them inside of the valley as cheap as possible; but, on the other hand, there is another class of people who go in there with their own conveyances and with their own animals to transport themselves about the valley, and they want all these inclosures open, so there is a conflict of interests. In endeavoring to cheapen the transportation for those who go in without their own methods of conveyance after they get inside, in order to do that the policy would seem to be to throw as many advantages in the way of the saddle train line as possible. On the other hand, to benefit the camping public the policy would seem to be to have no fences at all, but turn the whole valley open and let them camp where they please. Now, the course pursued by the Commission has been between the two, to divide the honors between the traveling public, who expect to get transportation on the inside, and the campers who bring their own transportation.

Q. Now, Mr. Goucher, the general tendency of all the evidence from both sides here tends to show two things: One that, notwithstanding the so called exorbitant rates, as some class it—and others say they are moderate: but the rates of board for hotel accommodations there, as a rule, tourists do not complain of those prices. The complainant is an exceptional case. The charges for those horses some consider exorbitant, but I understand the great majority of tourists do not object to those charges; they say they are reasonable enough, if they take into consideration the character of the service and everything. Now, even admitting that they had to take their horses on the outside and keep their ranch and their stables, the principal part of their horse business out there, even if we could have an extra amount or a raise in the price of the service in the saddle train line there, do not you think that tourists would be better satisfied to pay an extra 50 cents a day for their horses to go over the mountains—$3 50 instead of $3; would be better satisfied with that expenditure of 50 cents, than they would be to go there and find the valley in the condition it is? A. I do not think the tourists would, if you speak of those who go on stages; I do not believe there would be one in a hundred who would complain about the fences. The great bulk of the tourists there look at those wonderful Falls, and they make those trips over those wonderfully constructed trails to the different points and take in that view, and the fences are of no consideration. There is only an exceptional case of a party who will say anything or even notice the fences. But the other class of tourists, that is, those who come as campers—

Q. Visitors we call them? A. I will speak of them as campers, because they come by their own conveyances. The campers do object to it, as you say, and they would rather have the price of horses raised 50 cents a day, or $1 a day, for that matter, because they do not patronize that business; they bring their own horses; or, even if they did patronize it, I believe they would prefer to have the price raised and these fences removed, except where they are actually necessary.

Q. You will understand that the nature of our investigation is not, perhaps, so much to convict somebody of doing something, as it is to ascertain what the management has been, and to suggest, if possible, some improvement on it, and we want all the information in regard to that; and the idea has been suggested, and it suggests itself to most any reasonable man, whether or not there can be an improvement upon the present management in the line which I have indicated? A. Well, I agree with your suggestions in that particular, without going further into detail. I think that would give a great deal more satisfaction to campers, and perhaps to the others.

Q. You think it perfectly practicable to obtain the assistance necessary there for the saddle trains, etc., for tourists and visitors; it would be perfectly satisfactory, and it is perfectly practicable to require them to do as I suggest: keep their horses on the outside, and bring them in in small lots and keep them in stables? A. I think they could do that; they have a telegraph line, and they know when a party leaves San Francisco.

Q. I was going to ask you that question? A. They can know two days before a party reaches Yosemite that it is coming, and how many there are, and how many are able to ride on horseback, or to ride on horseback when they get in the valley.

Q. A condition of affairs like that would do away with the necessity of inclosing that park to a very great extent? A. Yes, sir; it would, if those saddle train men could get accommodations outside, as you say.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Concerning the charges for horses now, I understand the price is $3 a day. I believe that fifteen pounds of hay per day—these are the army rations—at 3 cents a pound, that would be 45 cents; and at 4 cents a pound for the barley, ten pounds would be 40 cents, making 85 cents. I would like to ask if $2 15 per day profit upon a horse, and for his wear and tear, would not be fair compensation, even though they should keep them up in the stable? A. If I were in the saddle train business I think I would consider $2 15 a very good profit. I do not know what their other expenses are.

MR. TULLY: Put it at $1 a day; then $2 would be a very handsome profit, I think? A. I think so.

Q. You think there would be no necessity for the Commissioners allowing them an extra dollar? A. No, sir. Of course, I am no expert in this livery business. I never ran a livery stable. I have gone to a livery stable and hired horses a good many times, and I have nearly always thought I was overcharged, but I suppose if those fellows came and hired me in a lawsuit, they would think they were overcharged, too. I am not an expert in that line. Of course, these saddle train men require a good deal of help. There are a good many men required, and it must be remembered too, that they have got to have in the neighborhood of one hundred head of horses in the valley; many a day there are not over five or six horses out of the whole number that go out at all on a trip.

Q. For the residue of that one hundred, they could keep them fifteen miles out on a farm, where they could keep them, at perhaps, one half the cost that they do in there, and it is admitted that they could have ample time to bring them in. It would not operate to their disadvantage. A. That system you proposed strikes me as being a very good one, but if we had the time, I could point out where there would be, perhaps, some study of details necessary.

Q. I am only speaking of it in general terms. We will work out those details. A. I do not know.

Q. For instance, you say it could be known that a party leaves San Francisco at a certain time, and they could send out and get enough horses to accommodate the party? A. Well, sometimes a party comes in and stays two days, and they expect to be in the saddle all the time, going, in order to see as many points as possible in a short trip. Some parties come in and stay one day, and go out and expect during that one day to be in the saddle constantly; and another party will come along that will spend a week in the valley. Of course, you might provide for a party, say of twenty, but find out, when they get the horses in there, that they need a change of horses all the time during the trip.

Q. The supposition is that, in a system of that kind, they would not reduce themselves to the actual demand. They would always have to have some surplus horses just as livery men do; they have to keep a surplus of horses, because they do not know how many horses they are going to let in a day, or how many horses will be sick. Those are matters that I am familiar with? A. With proper consideration as to detail, I think your suggestion is a good one.

Q. Admitting that the cost of keeping a horse is $2 a day; they would make $1 a day for each horse they use? A. If they could have all their horses out every day, as I said before, I think a great deal less than $1 a day would be sufficient profit.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I would like to ask the Senator if he does not know that they feed but very little to the horses; that the horses have to pack people up and down those mountain trails all day, traveling up and down, and then they have to travel all night, for the most part, and get their living? A. Mr. Hutchings, I will answer that question; that, of course, I will have to answer on information. I have heard it charged in Yosemite Valley, every time I have been in there, that these saddle train men did not feed their horses; that they wanted to depend, and did depend, mainly, on what ground they were allowed to use, and I have heard it charged that the horses were in an unfit condition. Every year, in June, we inspect their horses; we have them drive their horses up, and we examine them first; look at them when they are saddled, and then we order these fellows to get up all their stock, so that we can inspect it, and we look at it after it is saddled, and examine the saddles, and examine the wagons to see in what condition they are, and the horses; when we have examined them, they have always appeared to be in fair condition. If I were going out to buy a horse, I would not buy any of them, because they look rough to me. Coffman & Kenney, when asked about it, and their men, say, "Well, we feed them; we feed those that we know are going on a trip, and even if we do not, the others we feed during the busy season, and we feed a great deal." Those are the kind of answers they make to us. Sometimes I have thought the horses were not fed, but the fact that there has never been any accident on the trails there would seem to show that the horses are strong enough, and fit for the service; and they say it requires a particular kind of fitness in the horses; some horses won't stand the work at all; from nervousness they won't stand it; and they have got to exercise care in choosing their horses that do this work. As long as the horses do the work, and do it safely without accident, it seems to me that answers all the requirements. I have thought myself that they did not feed enough; that the horses ought to look stronger; they seemed to look as though they were not strong, but I would see big two hundred-pounders get on them and ride them all day up to Glacier Point, and the horse would look as well when he came back as he did when he started. What appears to be so on the outside would not be a safe basis for any judgment. I am like you, though, Mr. Hutchings, or like your question indicates; I do not believe that they feed as much as they represent they do.

MR. HUTCHINGS: And there is another thing. I will say that in the morning they send out their men, say at five or half-past five, and you will find them coming halloabaloo and helter-skelter, driving them as fast as they can; and to see the dust they raise! No matter if people are passing that narrow causeway at that particular time, they have got to jump off or be almost driven over, as they drive them so carelessly. Of course, this is before they are saddled; they have been out all night, and they are driving them up to be saddled.

MR. TULLY: The next question is: "Holding annual meetings with closed doors, in violation of State laws?" A. Well, they did that.

Q. How often? A. Well, I got very angry about it. At the time I presented the Anderson claim, after I had presented that claim, after other matters were brought before the Commission, they locked themselves up, and we all had to take a walk. I complained of it then, and when I came to the Assembly—I was elected to the Assembly in 1884, and with Mr. Long, of Tuolumne County, who was on the Committee on Yosemite with me, formulated a bill requiring them to hold their meetings with open doors.

Q. This happened before that rule was established? A. Yes. I may have said in my testimony that it was in 1885 that I appeared before the Commission with that claim, but it was in 1884, and this happened before that law was passed; but I think they did hold another meeting the next year, 1885, after that law was passed, because I went in there for the purpose of appearing before them; they were holding some kind of a private meeting; I think Mr. Sprague and Mr. Drew were there.

MR. SPRAGUE: That was in 1885.

THE WITNESS: That was 1885. It was after the passage of the law, and in the face of the law they held a meeting with closed doors—that is, they held a part of the meeting with closed doors. Well, I was indignant about it, because they had elected me their attorney after I presented the Anderson claim; at the same meeting they elected me their attorney. I did not solicit the position and I did not fill it. I talked over with Mr. Hutchings one or two matters on one or two occasions, and I talked over with some of the Commissioners, perhaps, but they would not fix any compensation, and I did not like the position. However, I did not resign. I went up to that meeting to present this matter again, and Mr. Drew was there, and Mr. Sprague and others, and they held a part of their session with closed doors, and I was their attorney; they did not invite me in, and I resigned. I think my letter of resignation is on file likely, and it may show why. The real reason was I did not approve of their violating the law. Some of them afterwards said that, it being a new law, they were not mindful of it at the time; that it was a momentary oversight; and others—I believe, Mr. Raymond—well, he is dead; I will not mention his name in the matter particularly. I will say, however, that there was one or two of the Commission who openly defied the right of the State to legislate controlling them. They claimed they held authority from a higher power—from the Federal Government—and that they were not amenable to any law that the Legislature of the State would pass, because they said that that would be virtually managing the valley through the Legislature, instead of managing it through the Commission. That was a high-toned view taken, I believe, of one or two of the Commissioners.

Q. So far as the State was concerned, they considered themselves a law to themselves? A. Yes, sir; they said when the Legislature undertook to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of the valley and for the Board, it was virtually taking the management out of the hands of the nine Commissioners mentioned in the Conness bill. I took an opposite view, that the State Government held it in trust.

Q. The State Government held it in trust, and was responsible for its management? A. Yes, sir. Well, I differed with the Commissioners, anyway. None of those Commissioners who held that view are present now. They violated the law then, but I do not think they did it willfully. I did then. I thought they were too arrogant and aristocratic to suit my views; but I had a good many grievances against the Commissioners, at least, I was led to have a good many, by being in the county there. There was a good deal of complaint about some members of the Commission; and the complaints I had heard, and those that I believed, were more against individual members of the Commission than against the Board.

MR. GARDNER: Have they ever held meetings with closed doors since? A. No, sir; they have not. I will explain. It is the custom, when the Commission meets, for the President—that is, the Governor—to appoint sub-committees on various subjects; that is, to expedite business in the valley; and the sub-committees are directed to go and examine in respect to the matters pertaining to that committee, and to report. Sometimes those committees go off by themselves and look around the valley; look at roads, for instance; the Committee on Roads, and Trails, and Bridges; and sometimes they come back, and they may hold their meeting private, in getting up their report; but, when they make their report, they make it in the full Board, and that is open, and the business transacted. There is only one violation of the law that I know about, and that is claimed to have been an oversight by those who did it.

MR. TULLY: The seventh charge is: "Violation of State laws regarding the granting of exclusive privileges in the valley?" A. Well, sir; there have been no exclusive privileges granted since I have been a member of the Commission. If there were before, the circumstances are not known fully to me, and, unless a particular case is mentioned, I do not care to testify about it, because the record of the Commission might differ from my recollection or understanding of the matter. There have been no exclusive privileges granted since I have been a member. It has been charged—I might as well come to that point at once—it has been charged that Coffman & Kenney have an exclusive saddle train. That is not true. It was not the design of the Commission to give them an exclusive privilege. They have been expressly told—they were expressly told at the last meeting of the Commissioners, and at the meeting before the last—that they were to understand that they did not have any exclusive privilege; and the privilege that they do hold, in writing, the lease, declares it; declares that fact. And I will tell you another thing: the lease that Coffman & Kenney hold is virtually a lease from year to year. There is a resolution on the minutes of the committee stating how that contract shall be construed. The least violation on their part of the terms of the lease, subjects the lease to cancellation by the Commissioners; and, furthermore, the Commissioners reserve the right to cancel it at any time, with cause or without cause.

Q. You are a lawyer. What do you understand to be the difference between a single privilege and an exclusive privilege? A. There is not any difference in effect, but I deny that it is a single privilege that Coffman & Kenney have. It never has been a single privilege. It may have been a single privilege for a short period of time, but the Commission are open to grant a lease to anybody, if a proper person applies. If the Commission are satisfied that the party applying will render good service, that he is a responsible man, that he will provide horses that are safe, and that he will keep enough at all times to accommodate the travel, the Commission are ready to give him a lease. We have, I believe, given Mr. Clark a privilege of the same kind, but he has not utilized it. Now, that brings us back to the point which Mr. Mills explained before the Senate committee; that there has been difficulty as far back as I have known anything about the management of Yosemite Valley, in dealing with people who were applying for leases for various business. We would give the privilege to two or three men to do a certain thing, and they will consolidate secretly, and the Commission cannot help it. The hotels have done that, and the Commissioners ascertained it by accident at last, and found out that they were all pooled. It did not matter where a man went. On the outside they appeared to be fighting for the travel. Leidig was trying to get all the travel to go to his hotel, and the other fellows were trying to get it to theirs—Cook and Barnard—and they were making a big struggle on the outside, and to the Commissioners, and to the public, it appeared that there was a contest going on between these men; whereas, secretly they had an understanding that if a man went to Cook's hotel, there was a certain pro rata that was to go to Barnard and Leidig in the end, in the settling up at the end of the season.

Q. It was a hotel pool? A. Yes, sir, of course; it was discovered in one case; I cannot be sure that we discovered it in other cases. For instance, now, there are two men in Yosemite Valley at the present time who have the privilege to sell merchandise. We were compelled, for the convenience of people who stopped at the Stoneman House, to permit Mr. Cook to sell certain things there, and to allow him to keep liquors. Of course that is a necessity of a hotel—there are many people who consider it so, at least; I do not say that I do—and a billiard-room, and certain articles that tourists would want; for instance, ladies frequently come there and have no proper ulster, no proper hat, rubbers, and one thing another that they need to have in taking some of these trips; they need to get them somewhere. There was a store privilege, to a limited extent, granted to Mr. Cook, also there is one granted to Cavagnero; those men may pool their issues; they may fix prices on certain things that are exorbitant. We think it is the best policy to control prices and limit the number of men that are engaged in business, but compel the service to be of the best kind, and prevent extortions. Now, it has not been a policy of the Commission to grant an exclusive privilege, or a single privilege, to Coffman & Kenney, or anybody else, engaged in the saddle train business.

Q. Speaking of Coffman & Kenney, I will ask you, Senator—it is conceded that those privileges are leased there; let out to certain parties under the rules? A. Which; the saddle train?

Q. Any privileges; all privileges to do business there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a certain competition for the bids, as far as that goes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after they are let, that ends the letting process? Only one privilege is granted, say to Coffman & Kenney? A. The next day you can go and ask for a privilege too.

Q. For the same privilege? A. Yes, sir. Here is the idea. We will say that at an annual meeting last year, we let Coffman & Kenney a privilege for the saddle train; now, we adjourn; the executive committee have full power until we meet again, as a general committee, to lease to anybody else also; to give anybody else a privilege. At the next meeting the application can be made to the full Board, and when the full Board is not in session, then anybody can apply at any time for the privilege to the executive committee.

Q. I will advise you that it is in evidence here by some of the Commission that once they let these privileges, they let them for the term say of one year, and after that no bids are received. You say they may apply; do you know of any instance in which they may have applied and been refused? A. Well, I don't know, because the correspondence with the Commission is carried on through its Secretary—either through the Secretary or through the Guardian—and of course many members of the Commission do not see the correspondence until the annual meeting. Many letters are sent to the Guardian and many to the Secretary that I do not see until the Commission meets, at the same time of its regular meeting, in the regular term.

Q. Coffman & Kenney hold a lease there in which they are granted the privilege of furnishing the tourists with vehicles or conveyances, horses, and so forth? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have also leased the privilege of those inclosures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, isn't the operation of such a lease as that to Coffman & Kenney, or to any other party, granting them the privilege of running their trains there, and leasing to them the available ground, the available pasture necessary for such purpose, is it not virtually an exclusion to others in its operation? A. So far as leasing the ground is concerned, it is virtually excluding others from those grounds; but so far as the right to conduct a saddle train business is concerned, it don't exclude anybody, because the Commission don't bind themselves in any way at all to refuse the same permission to other parties. Of course, we can't lease the same piece of ground to two parties.

Q. Conceding that Coffman & Kenney have leased that privilege, and obtained possession of these lands and inclosures for their own purposes, doesn't that tend, and isn't the operation of such a lease as that, doesn't it put any other person who might want to compete by a subsequent proposition, or subsequent application for a privilege, wouldn't the better condition of Coffman & Kenney exclude competition on even terms? Could an outsider, after they have secured those privileges, come in there and successfully compete with those parties who have that privilege? A. No; he could not have the same premises, of course; could not have the same use of those premises that Coffman & Kenney have; that would be a physical impossibility.

Q. Consequently it is a virtual exclusion of competition? A. No; I don't say it is.

Q. They owning all the desirable privileges there in the shape of inclosures, it virtually excludes the competitor from entering and applying for those bids upon an equal footing with those who have those privileges? A. No; it don't do that. It is true Coffman & Kenney have that property leased, and for that purpose; at least they used it for that purpose. Now, it don't shut out any competition, if we should let somebody else have the privilege; it don't shut out any competition except so far as it applies to the use of those premises, so far as the exclusive use of those premises is concerned. The Commission might lease a privilege and give pasturage elsewhere to other people, and in that way put them on equal terms, but they have not done it.

Q. It is not very likely they will do it? A. No; because there is an objection to fencing in these tracts.

Q. I am trying to get at the force it puts those gentlemen in possession of, virtually excluding competition on equal terms? A. No; I don't think it does. I say the only territory leased to saddle train men is leased to Coffman & Kenney. To that extent other people are shut out; but the Commission is not bound to Coffman & Kenney not to lease to other parties other privileges. It is not likely the Commission will lease any territory to any other parties for that business, for the reason that there is not any other that we could lease now and keep the public satisfied.

Q. And for the additional reason that even admitting that the Commissioners are disposed to do so, it is not at all probable that they would inclose and make other preparations there for another lessee, placing him upon an equal footing with the others? A. No; we would not do it, because I think the Commission itself—a majority of the Commission—to-day are opposed to half the fences in the valley. More than half the fences were built before the present Commissioners were in office. I think the majority of the Commission to-day are in favor of removing fully half the fences in the valley.

Q. Do you think it at all probable, if an outsider were to come in there to take a lease of the bare privilege of running a saddle train there, that they could get a lease of that kind if they added to it the condition that they were to have equal privileges with Coffman & Kenney in some other parts of the valley by an inclosure? A. No; they could not, on the ground that the Commission would not encourage the inclosure; that is my opinion, of course.

Q. They are virtually excluded, so far as the operation of those leases is concerned, and the condition of the valley? A. No; that is only my opinion as to what the Commission would do. I have no right to speak for them.

Q. I am speaking of the operation? A. You asked me whether it is likely the Commission would do this thing. I said: "No; that is a matter of opinion." I don't think they would, but they might do it, and then they would put them on an equal footing with Coffman & Kenney. So far as I am concerned, I would not consent to it, and I don't believe the majority of the Commission would. Then, if I am correct in my opinion on that subject, then virtually nobody could come in there and be placed on the same footing as Coffman & Kenney, of course, because we would not close up other land, and give it to somebody else.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Suppose, for instance, that I applied to the Board of Commissioners to run a saddle train, and I gave bonds for carrying out and performing everything that I did, and I would put up a building at my own expense; such a building as would have taste in it—that is, show good architectural taste, and I kept all my animals up in the stable. Would I get that privilege, do you think, of competing with Coffman & Kenney? A. I think you would get it. I will tell you there is one thing that I don't believe the Commission would permit. I don't believe they would permit you to put up a building yourself, for the reason that the Commission have come to the conclusion that they would not permit private individuals to put up buildings. In nearly every case where it has occurred, those individuals, no matter what they have said in regard to it before they would put up a building, have claimed pay for the building, whether it was any account or not when they got through with it, or when their lease expired.

MR. TULLY: Have they not put up buildings—the State holding a right—have they not put them up for Coffman & Kenney? A. They have, and for both stage companies; and for this reason—

Q. Taking Mr. Hutchings' proposition as he states it, with the exception that he was to ask them to put up the building, reserving the right of the State in the building, and he taking it as a lessee; do you think they would allow him to do it? A. I think they would, if he could satisfy the Commissioners that he would not claim anything for the building afterwards. That has been the great difficulty. People have put up buildings there and have agreed at the expiration of the lease to claim nothing; that the building should revert to the State; but whenever the lease is up, they always want something for it, and they come around growling about it and claiming that they ought to be paid.

Q. You say they are gradually adopting a one year system? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Mr. Hutchings' hypothetical case, the fact of not having any guarantee that he would get it for a second term would operate—knowing that he had to deliver that up, it would deter him from putting up a building on his own account, would it not—the tenure by which he would hold it being so uncertain? A. Yes, sir; it might deter him from doing it. I hardly think a man would put up a building with no assurance of more than one year; such a building as he would require.

MR. HILL: I offered to do that.

THE WITNESS: Yes; Mr. Hill did, in respect to a studio.

MR. HILL: To put $1,000 in it and present it to the State, and I would lease it by the year.

THE WITNESS: Mr. Robinson also offered to put up a studio and convey it to the State, in any way the State required, and then take a lease of it.

MR. TULLY: This was to make a legal document to protect the State against a disposition to hold over? A. I only mentioned that in my answer to Mr. Hutchings, because it occurred to me at that moment, but it affects a good many of these questions that are being asked.

Q. As a legal proposition there would be no danger on the part of the State? A. As a legal proposition that could be provided for. The difficulty in the case that Mr. Hutchings has spoken of would be that the applicant would be unwilling to make the application unless he could be assured of retaining the privilege for a term of years.

MR. TRUMAN: Did Mr. Hutchings mean to come in any time and make this proposition, or at the annual meeting in June?

MR. HUTCHINGS: It was merely upon the principle whether I could do it at any time; of course, at the suitable time.

MR. TRUMAN: You could not do it, of course. They only meet once a year, in June, by law. They go up there, and are paid their traveling expenses. Then, if Mr. Hutchings at the annual meeting should put in an application saying that he would like to build a house, and make a deed at the end of the time, I think that his bid would be better than Coffman & Kenney's, and he would get it.

MR. TULLY: It would not be necessary to make a deed at the time.

MR. TRUMAN: A promise legally that the State should get it.

MR. TULLY: In other words, the house belongs to the State as soon as he puts it up?

MR. TRUMAN: Yes, sir. It is the determination of the Commission—they have been gradually getting at it for six or eight years, and I know all future Commissions will abide by it—to hereafter let no human being put up a house and own it himself. But no one can come in after they have granted a privilege, between one June and another, no matter if he would run free, you know. But the man who puts in the best bid in June, all things considered, is going to get the bid. I think it runs that way; it did last June.

THE WITNESS: I have a different view from Major Truman in that. We don't obligate ourselves, in accepting any bid, to restrain ourselves to that bid.

MR. TRUMAN: I say, all things considered.

THE WITNESS: We may accept two bids; we may let to two men if we choose. Of course, in the case of the Stoneman House, that business is of a character that we could not let to two.

MR. TULLOCH: Major, if anybody was to make a higher bid than Coffman & Kenney, would not the Commission consider that Coffman & Kenney had equitable rights? In case a party had put in a higher bid than Coffman & Kenney, wouldn't the Commissioners have refused it on the ground that Coffman & Kenney had equitable rights, as in the case of the application of Sprague, where Leidig had the place?

MR. TRUMAN: I don't think so generally; I think possibly there might be such a thing; I don't think so generally.

MR. TULLY: I think the question would be this, in letting that lease to a person other than Coffman & Kenney, would they take into consideration Coffman & Kenney's equities? That is, that they have expended money and got teams and everything there, and been on the ground and gone to a considerable expense in anticipation of a long term, whether they would not take that into consideration in determining whether or not they would accept the other bid?

MR. TRUMAN: That is, after their lease expired?

MR. TULLY: Yes, sir.

MR. TRUMAN: Well, I think they would take it under consideration; I don't know whether they would or not, other things equal.

Q. Other things equal, you think they would give him the preference?

MR. TRUMAN: Well, I am rather inclined to think they would. I would not say Coffman & Kenney, but any party under the same circumstances. Yes, sir; I would from a standpoint of business.

MR. HUTCHINGS: The point I want to make is this: would I, as an individual, be allowed to put in a bid, just for a stable, or a permit, without reference to Coffman & Kenney, or anybody else; a bid as against another bid. I mean, as a competing interest; that there should be two to compete for the travel. That is the point I want to make?

MR. TRUMAN: In June, you mean, of course?

MR. HUTCHINGS: At the regular meeting, of course.

MR. TRUMAN: I think you would; but I think the Commission would see to it that there were provisions made that there would be no pooling between the two; between you and Coffman & Kenney, or any selling out between you and Coffman & Kenney. I think there would be provisions made. But if there were two men and those provisions could be made, I am rather inclined to think that they would let two men in that important business, because it is a big business, and I think two men could live in it. But, still, I don't know as others would think that way. I have no doubt about that, however, in the world; that if a man should put in another bid, or, I would say, that two men asked for the privilege, and they could prove that they could make provisions that there was no pooling or selling out, that they would do it.

MR. TULLY: The next charge is, "The reduction of rentals to the prejudice of the State's income?" A. There are only two things that that can refer to: that is reducing Mr. Robinson's rental for the building occupied by him as a studio from $20 to $1 a year, and the other is a reduction of Coffman & Kenney's rental $250, I think. Now, in regard to that—the reason that was done was this: Coffman & Kenney appeared before the Commission at its last meeting and stated that their crop was practically a failure; there was nothing grown there; it didn't promise to be of any value, and the building on the place, of course, in bidding for it, in paying this rent, they were paying for the use of the building, as well as other things: that those buildings had been consumed by fire and some feed destroyed in the buildings; that they had lost all those things, and that they were not responsible for any of those things. They represented, in other words, that the privilege had not been of that value to them. Of course, that might be considered bad luck. One of the Commissioners took the ground that that was one of the chances of trade, and that the Commissioners should not interfere in the matter because a man had lost in a matter of that kind. But other Commissioners said, "We are not running this valley to make money out of it, but we are managing it for the best interests of the State; and if these people have been doing good service, and have lost, without their own fault, the production of that farm, which they had a reasonable right to expect when they made this bid, and have lost the use and benefit of these buildings, which they had a right to expect to use throughout the year or the term, we ought to take it into consideration as a matter of equity." And we did—the majority did—and reduced it. That charge must refer to that matter. That was done because the buildings that they leased were burned up, and they didn't have the use of them for a year; and for the further reason that the crop was a failure.

Q. Do you think it was a part of the duties of the Commissioners there to take into consideration—of course, if he lost something on that, it would reduce his profits on his contract—do you think the Commissioners considered it their duty to take into consideration the fact that he would, without this reduction, be liable to lose some money? A. We don't look at it in that way, as a question of profit to them; we looked at it as what the thing was worth; whether an accident had destroyed the value of the privilege or not. And inasmuch as an accident had destroyed the value of the privilege, we considered, representing the State and the government itself, that we were big enough to make that much reparation.

Q. Is it or is it not true that Harris offered to pay some $1,700 for the same privilege, or even lesser privileges, as I understand it, than Coffman & Kenney got? A. At the last meeting?

Q. At the time Harris lost his rights there, and was superseded by Coffman & Kenney? A. Well, I don't know. Harris was a disturbing element in the Yosemite Valley the last two or three years he was there. He made a good deal of trouble. I don't know what for. To my face, he was very friendly, always. Of course, this thing was done about the time I went on the Commission. But the most of the trouble he had with the Commission he had before I was a member. He seemed to have trouble with Dennison a good deal; and he had trouble with May; but I always thought that he and Dr. May were the warmest kind of friends, ready to hug each other every time they met. But, when they were not together, Harris was always denouncing May as the breeding spot of all his troubles. Harris was a personal friend of mine. I did business for him as an attorney in Mariposa. He had consulted me. I always liked him and liked the members of his family. But the last year or two he was there he seemed to be making a good deal of trouble, and was constantly growling and kicking about first one thing and another; gave the Commissioners a great deal of trouble; and I think the Commissioners were anxious to get rid of him for that reason; they didn't want him there. Besides that, the campers were continually complaining about him. There were complaints made to the Commissioners that he bought a lot of hay from some man and took the tags off the bales, and put new tags on, with fifty and a hundred pounds added to the weight. One man that was employed by him there, testified that Harris made him go out and bale hay in the morning after it had rained during the night, or while the dew was fresh, at daybreak, and bale the hay there, and only sell hay to campers at certain times; they had to come and get it at that time or not get it at all. These are a few of the things that he was charged with having done. They were a few of the reasons that prompted the members of the Commission to get rid of him, so far as that farm was concerned. I know that a great many campers came away from there and spoke very highly of Harris and his family; a great many. But there were a great many complaints of this nature. I was not on the Commission at the time these things were coming to a crisis, and consequently I didn't investigate these charges, but I am telling you what the reports were.

Q. Do you or do you not know that Harris did put in a bid of that character as against Coffman & Kenney, and that his bid was refused, and the five hundred and odd dollar bid of Coffman & Kenney was accepted? A. No; Mr. Harris put in a bid for the farm at the time that it was let to Coffman & Kenney; it was leased to them, but he put in a bid for $450. Now, he might at that time have put in a bid for the saddle train privilege, which in the aggregate would have made his bid reach the figures you have mentioned. That may have been done, but I am not prepared to say. These bids were separate, you understand. I know that he put in a bid for the ranch at $450, the same figure he had it for for the year before, and possibly the same figure he had it for for several years; and Coffman & Kenney bid $550, and the ranch was given to them; and as to what the amount bid by him for the saddle train privilege was I don't know. I don't know whether it was as much as Coffman & Kenney bid or not. I think their bid was $1,200 a year.

Q. Those are the only instances you know of reduction of rentals? A. Well, I don't know that I can say that. I have heard it said that there were deductions made to Cook when he had the old Cook house, and deductions made to Barnard; reports to that effect, because of certain repairs they had made on the buildings and so forth. But those things came to me merely as reports before my identification with the Board as a member. The two reductions are the only ones I know of personally.

Q. The next charge is: "Failure to recognize their own contracts?" A. I don't know; there is that Anderson case, which I explained. Anderson took the contract to build the trail for $1,500, and spent all the money; was paid all that money by the Commissioners. Then Dr. Briggs, who was Secretary of the Commission, wrote to him and told him to go ahead with the work and the Guardian would furnish him supplies, and mentioned, as I said before, in the letter, "Your compensation is left to the executive committee." Anderson went on and worked two hundred and twenty-two days, and they never paid him.

Q. You know of no other instance? A. Well, that may allude to these workmen, and I will explain that to you. In 1887, at the June meeting, when I first went on the Commission, the workmen, some of them, were friends of mine; some young fellows that had lived in the county there and knew me well, and other friendly workmen. They told me that the Guardian, Mr. Dennison, worked them from daybreak until sundown, and that they worked ten hours and eleven hours; and I told them that they could not be required to work by the day or month any such hours, as they were working for the State; that that was forbidden. Eight hours was a day's work. I brought the matter up by motion or resolution to the attention of the Commission, and we directed the Guardian not to work the men over eight hours a day, unless there was a contract made that they should receive so much per hour instead of so much per day. And upon my motion or upon a resolution I offered, he was ordered to compute the time that each of these men had worked over the eight hours a day from the time that each had commenced to work and present it to the Secretary or to send it to the Secretary of the executive committee, that these laborers should be paid for that extra time. That was done at the June meeting, 1887. At the June meeting in 1888, the workmen called me aside one evening, as some of them testified here, and told me that it had not been paid; and I brought the matter up again, but it was explained to me that they did not have funds available; in view of other contracts that they had, they had not had funds available; they couldn't pay it for that reason, but that it would be arranged, and the Commission again indorsed it, and I don't know why it has not been paid.

Q. You know that it has not been paid? A. I don't know that it has not been paid.

MR. TRUMAN: It has not been paid.

THE WITNESS: I know that one of those workmen was here and swore that he had not been paid, and he had his account; but I know it has been ordered paid at two sessions of the Commission.

MR. TULLY: It is in evidence that at one time Anderson had a contract for building a bridge, and worked a number of days there—I don't know how long; don't recollect—and got out some timbers; and that the contract for building that bridge was subsequently let—it was determined to build an iron bridge—and the contract was let to some other person, and the Commission refused to pay Anderson for the timbers he had gotten out on that contract? A. Well, sir, that was before my connection with the Commission, and I know nothing whatever about it; and to tell you the truth, I never heard anything about it before to-night. I have heard that charge read several times, but never heard its meaning explained before. That occurred long before I had anything to do with the Commission, and I don't know a thing about it. I will state that George Anderson, when he came to consult me, never said that he had any claim against the Commission of that kind. He never mentioned any such thing to me.

MR. KELLY: He addressed a long letter to the Commission about it? A. I don't know; if he did, it was long before my time.

MR. TULLY: The letter is in evidence, asking that he be compensated for the work, and they refused to do it, and that subsequently he worked a small portion of the timber he had gotten out to a suitable length and size, and the bridge contractors allowed him something for the timbers he got out, but the Commissioners paid him nothing. He complained to the Commissioners in a long letter and asked compensation; complaining and asking their reason why he should not be paid for the losses he had sustained. A. George Anderson was dead more than two years before I became a Commissioner, and hence I know nothing about that.

Q. The tenth charge is: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State and illegally leasing the same." A. That involves two things. In regard to one of those charges or one part of that charge, rather, I know nothing at all, because a sub-committee went up to receive the hotel. We met in June, and the hotel, we were told by the contractor, would be completed at a certain date in the fall, or about a certain date, and that he would communicate, and of course there was a sub-committee appointed at that time to go and receive the hotel. That committee was then, I believe, authorized to invite as many of the Commissioners as they desired, and that sub-committee proceeded to invite the whole Commission to go. I intended to go, but was attending to a law suit which took up my time, and I couldn't go at the time, and I understood afterwards that the Governor went; that Mr. Madden, one of the Committee on Buildings, went; Mr. Chapman went, and that Mr. Griffith went. Some friend of Mr. Griffith's was the architect who furnished the plans for the building; that he went. As to what they did when they went up there, I don't know anything.

Q. You don't know any of the particulars of the leasing? A. No, no; I am not talking about the leasing; I am talking about the receiving from the contractors—the turning over of the property; that I know nothing about. As to the leasing of the hotel, I was there and participated in everything that was done. That was at San Francisco. And now I will state to you what I know in regard to that matter. Bids had been published, or at least a call for bids had been published in the "Bulletin" of San Francisco, and when we opened the bids in San Francisco there was a letter in my possession; there was a letter in my possession when the bids were opened, from Judge Grant, who testified before you, I believe, in which he stated that he did not wish his bid considered at all; that he wanted the Stoneman House leased to Mr. Tyack and his wife. Mrs. Tyack had been the house-keeper and general manager of Grant's hotel at Grant's Springs, on the Yosemite road, and she was a very excellent manager of a hotel. Mr. Grant in his letter said he did not wish his bid considered at all. Tyack and his wife were present with a bid. I think their bid was lower than Grant's. Now we opened the bids. There was a bid from Mr. Choynski, from Tyack and wife, from Grant, and from J. J. Cook, and that was all. My memory is not powerful enough to recite to you the details of each bid, but this struck the Commission: that these people had not been informed fully of the kind and the probable cost of the furniture that the Commission would require to be put into this building; they had not been informed, when they prepared these first bids, in regard to the privileges that would be attached to the hotel—necessary privileges, such as the Lemmon garden, orchard; it was adjacent and it was necessary to be attached; the store privilege and bar privilege; a billiard-room privilege had not been referred to in the advertisement; the advertisement, in fact, had been defective; the bids varied in their terms; they were not uniform. Now I will say this, to illustrate and not to recite the details of any bid: one bid would have a condition in it which we had not called for, and another one would have some other privilege in it. Each person who bid put in a bid for what he wanted and with his own ideas governing, so there was some difference in every bid. When they came to be compared they were not uniform; they were not bids for the same thing, in other words; and we said at once, "Well, this won't do; these people have not bid for one thing." We told the applicants about these defects in their bids. "Now," we said, "hold on; we will make out something that is clear to you, so that each one of you can bid upon the same proposition without any surroundings or attachments." And then we proceeded to try to agree upon something.

We concluded, from the report of the expert whom we had investigate the matter, that it would cost from $10,000 to $11,000 to furnish the hotel as we wished it furnished, and as we insisted on its being furnished. We then discussed what privileges we would attach. We concluded that we would attach this Lemmon orchard and, in fact, more ground which is adjacent to it, to furnish pasturage for cows, and that we would give a privilege to have a kind of store, with a bar, and also a billiard room, but we didn't want that inside of the hotel; didn't want any barroom inside of the hotel at all; and so we agreed in that way upon all the things. Now, we came to consider how we would ask these people to bid. We considered that in view of the immense outlay that would be required right at the start to furnish the building, that we would arbitrarily fix the rent for the building itself at the minimum figure fixed in the law. The bill which I introduced and which passed the Legislature, required that the new hotel—after the appropriation of $40,000, required that it should be leased for not exceeding ten years; that follows the language of the Conness bill, ceding the valley to the State; and at a figure that would produce not less than 3 per cent upon the appropriation; that would be $1,200. So we fixed that at that figure. Then we made up a list of the privileges which we would attach to the hotel, and the figures which would cover the cost of furnishing. We called these people back then, and we read over to them what additional privileges we would grant. We said to them: "We have agreed to fix the rent of the hotel at $1,200 a year; we think that is enough, in view of the fact that the furnishing will require $10,000 or $11,000 outlay at the start. But now, we intend to lease to the man, whoever is successful, that is, whoever gets the hotel, we will lease to him certain other privileges." And we recited them all carefully, and gave each party who wanted to bid, a copy. We said: "Now estimate on this basis and put in a bid." Well, they nearly all of them—I think all of them indicated to us at the outset that they would not bid at all. Cook said: "Well, I don't think I will put in a bid." Choynski the same, and it looked like we were going to have no bids at all. Of course Judge Grant was not there to be consulted. He could not be told about these new conditions; but the rest were, and he had written virtually withdrawing from competition in the matter. He was no longer considered as a competitor for the hotel, because he had written expressing a desire that his bid should be ignored, and that Tyack and wife should have it. We gave them until next day. They put in their bids again, but reluctantly, and Cook bid higher than the others for the attendant privileges. You see, after we explained all the things that we would require of the man who got it, including cost of furniture, etc., they were not so anxious to get it as they were before; and so they bid with some reluctance. Mr. Cook was the highest, and we gave it to him. There was opposition in the Commission to giving it to Cook, and I was one of the parties who was opposed to giving it to Cook, on this principle: That Cook was understood to be an owner in one of the stage lines running to the valley; and I stated to other members of the Commission that I believed it to be bad policy to lease a hotel in the Yosemite to a man who was represented to be an owner in one of the stage lines. All these men came well backed, well recommended. Judge Grant, in his letter, stated that he would furnish any amount of bonds required for Tyack, and see him through on the enterprise. Mr. Kreling, of San Francisco, who was Tax Collector, I believe, at that time, came to me personally, and also came before the Commission, and assured us that he would back Choynski in money and bonds, all that was required; and so did Mr. Cook furnish assurances. So far as that was concerned, there was no difference between the men. When it came though to opening the bids, Mr. Cook had overbid the other parties, and we gave it to him. The other parties all expressed themselves as rather glad to get out of it, at that time; and Mr. Choynski, particularly; and it amazes me that he had changed his mind so much in the last twelve months, the last year or so.

Q. Right there let me ask you a question. You have already said that so far as bonds and guarantee for the faithfully carrying out of their bids, you say they were all on an equality? A. Yes, sir; they were all well backed.

Q. Was there any objection urged against Choynski that tended to influence the minds of the Commission? A. Yes, sir; somebody—I don't know who it was; some member of the Commission; one of the San Francisco members—said that from what they could learn, he was not a man that was fit to run; that is, that he had not made a success in the hotel business; that he had not run, and was not capable of running, a first class house. It was some San Francisco member who said that he learned that from inquiry there among his friends. That much was stated.

Q. Didn't this man who objected to him predicate his objections to Mr. Choynski upon information supposed to have been derived through this star chamber down there that is called "Bradstreet's Mercantile Agency?" A. Well, I don't remember. Things of that kind frequently come up.

Q. Did you hear anything of that kind yourself? A. I don't remember. I know this: I have a clear memory that something was said by some of the San Francisco members against Choynski's standing. I think, as a hotel man, that people who knew of him said that he was not capable of running a first class hotel; but I don't know whether that cut any figure in the result or not. There is one thing I want to say about Mr. Choynski. When he was before the Senate committee here—I didn't hear his testimony before your committee—but when he was before the Senate committee he said, and evidently with the intention of throwing some odium indirectly on the Commissioners, or on some of the Commissioners, he said that he met and was introduced to a man in San Francisco at that time. He says: "I believe I was introduced to him by Senator Goucher, at the Lick House." Those were his words. I asked him who the man was. The "Examiner" stated that I did not cross-examine him; stated that editorially, but that was false, I did ask him at the time—interrupted right there—and asked him if he remembered the name of the party, and he said he did not; and I asked him if it was Brown, and he said he didn't know.

MR. KELLY: The name was mentioned between you and him and agreed that it was Brown? A. I asked him if it was Brown, and he said that he didn't know, or something to that effect; but I said it was Brown. That was my statement. But I asked him for a purpose. Here comes the point of the thing: He said that this party was an applicant for the purpose of putting gas into the hotel; that is, these gas machines to make gas for the building, and that this party, in an interview with him, stated to him or asked him why he did not use money with the Commissioners, the same as Mr. Cook did, or words to that effect; and I forget what Choynski stated to be his reply; and that this man said, "Well, I know how and when and where, and what amount to use," rather persuasively, indicating that he was competent to manage anything of that kind. Well, while Choynski did not swear positively that I was the party who introduced him, I am satisfied that I was the party introducing the man he mentioned; and I want to state to the Commission who he is, in order that, if they desire, he may come before the committee. The only man who appeared there during the time that these matters of leasing the hotel were under consideration, in the guise of an applicant for the privilege to furnish these gas machines, was a friend of Mr. Rundell's, from Hornitos. His name is Jerome B. Brown. You know him, Mr. Rundell, very well. He has been a neighbor of yours many years. Now, he came to me, Mr. Brown did, and stated that he wanted to put these gas machines in, and told me that he had a sort of an agency for the machine, a certain kind of machines, and that he wanted to get it done. I told him I didn't know what the policy of the Commission would be; whether they would do it or let the man who leased the hotel do it. So we talked among the Commissioners, and they said they would let the lessee do that if he wanted to do it. Then of course Brown wanted to know who the lessees were, and wanted to get acquainted with them. I don't remember positively whether I introduced Brown to Choynski or not, but presume I did.

THE CHAIRMAN: You thought it was safe to copper anything Brown stated? A. No; I am not testifying on that subject at all. I don't know what Brown said to Choynski, or whether either has told a falsehood, or both; but I suggest to the committee, if you want to find out whether Choynski is a truthful man or not, that you send for Brown. His name is Jerome B. Brown, and he lives in Hornitos, in Mariposa County, where Mr. Rundell lives. But I have known Brown so long that I am satisfied that he never made any such statement to Choynski. He is not a man of that kind, so far as I know him. It is a matter I know nothing about. I mentioned it here because I thought perhaps Choynski had made that statement before this committee. If he did, I wanted you to know who the party was. It don't affect me; it don't affect me personally in any degree at all; but of course if I had known that there would have been such testimony, I should have asked the Senate committee to send for Brown in the first place.

MR. TULLY: I don't know that it is material. It is a question of veracity between the two? A. Well, I don't know whether Brown said it or not. I say I would like to know if he did, and that is the reason I would like to have him here. I didn't hear his testimony, and I thought probably he had mentioned it, and I wanted to put that in a proper light; give you the name and address of the party. If there was anything of that kind going on I don't know it.

Q. Is that about the amount of what you know of the letting of the Stoneman House? A. That is all I know. We let it to the highest bidder, Mr. Cook.

Q. How about the illegality clause here? A. Illegally letting it?

Q. Yes? A. Does that apply to the letting or receiving?

Q. It says: "Withholding from citizens facts concerning the acceptance of the Stoneman House by the State, and illegally leasing the same." A. It was not illegally done at all. You gentlemen can take the Act providing for the construction of the hotel, and there is nothing in there that has been violated.

Q. You acted in accordance with the requirements of the law? A. Yes, sir. There is a clause in that bill which you, as a lawyer, will know to be useless as soon as you read it, because it is not referred to in the title. It was amended in a silly manner in the Senate. There was another law providing against exclusive privileges, and it was not necessary to put it into that bill. That bill simply provides for the appropriation of money to construct a hotel in the Yosemite Valley, and away down in the bill, somewhere, somebody in the Senate put a clause in it like this: "No exclusive privilege in the hotel business shall be allowed." That is provided for elsewhere, and had no right to be in that bill. But there is no provision in that bill saying how we shall let it. We shall let it for a minimum of three per cent on the cost, and that is the only restriction there is. Without even publishing an advertisement, we might have gone to a man—it would have been bad policy, but we might have gone to a man—and said: "We will lease this to you for $1,500 a year."

Q. The illegality or legality are conclusions of law? A. Yes, sir; I hate to testify about the law. There is no law, that is, there is no statute violated. I think we leased it to the best advantage, myself. There was a whole lot of people wanted to lease the hotel.

Q. Here is a very grave charge, and I want you to give it your careful attention: "Rendering useless the district school of Yosemite Valley." A. There was no such thing done. That is absurd. We could not control Leidig's going out, and there was nothing incumbent upon the Commission to compel us to have a factory in there. Leidig's folks went out, as I tell you, of their own volition, and there was nobody in the country sorer than I and my friends, and my relatives, and I believe the whole Commission; well, there might have been one or two Commissioners, but it was a source of regret to all; and they went out of their own accord. They were the pets of the Commission, in my opinion, the Leidig family.

Q. How many school children did the Leidig's take out with them? A. I have stayed in their house every time I went to the valley, but I can't remember; let me see, I think they took out about five that would draw school money.

Q. Do you know how many Harris took out with him? A. No; I was not so well acquainted with Harris' family, but he must have taken four or five.

Q. Did that school close up on account of the absence of those children? A. No, sir; it did not. When the Commission was in session last year there was a teacher there; the school was running. Both of these families were out of the valley at that time. I know the young lady who taught the school at that time very well. I heard nothing about it. We made an arrangement there to build a new school house at the last meeting, reported in favor of building it; there was an application from the Trustees. I understand the number of children who draw school money in the school district aggregated over twenty, and of course it may be true that some of those children live so far from the school that they could not attend school; but the district would draw its school money, enough to sustain it.

Q. Do you think that district is likely to prove an exception to the general rule in California, so far as furnishing children for schools is concerned? A. There are few families in Yosemite. It is not the policy of the Commission to encourage settlement there; there has been an objection to that all the time; but I know that there is a prospect there for an increase in the population; there are families there that are bound to increase in the natural course of events.

Q. I will ask if there is anything in the law imposing a duty upon you that will require you to furnish children for the school? A. No, sir; none that I have discovered. I suppose nearly every season there will be some children in the valley, who do not have a residence there, who will go to school.

Q. That is not the fault of the Commissioners whether they have or not? A. No, sir; we could not control the matter if we tried.

MR. TULLOCH: Was or was not Leidig in a manner compelled to go out by reason of the stages not stopping there? A. No, sir; he never was. There was one year, and that was before I was a Commissioner—I don't know how many years ago—that I heard—it was rumored through the country that stages—Leidig since has told me that on a few trips the stages did not stop at his hotel: but as soon as it was brought to the attention of the Commission, the stage companies were compelled to stop, and after that always did, and there was no obstacle thrown in the way; and the fact of the business is the stage drivers themselves liked Leidig's better than they did the other places. The stage drivers, when they would put their stages up at the upper end of the valley, would go down and spend their evenings at Leidig's house; they were fond of doing it. Mrs. Leidig was an exceptionally popular lady, and the drivers had no disposition to do this, and the Commissioners would not permit the stage companies to do anything of the kind, and it was promptly stopped. Leidig may have had cause to complain of that a few times, one or two years ago, but it was stopped as soon as it was brought to the attention of the Commissioners. Of course it is a little outside of the range of your question, but I say the stage drivers, the people on both lines, the majority of them, were very warm in their friendship of the Leidig family.

MR. TULLY: The next question is with regard to the "Neglect of public roads and trails within the grant." A. There has never been any neglect of the public trails and roads within the grant. I say this: that the roads and trails in Yosemite Valley for the last two years have been in as good condition as they possibly could be in. I don't believe that there is any unprejudiced man in California, or anywhere else, who will go over those roads and trails—who was over those roads and trails last year or the year before—who will pronounce them in bad condition or neglected. On the other hand, they are in exceptionally fine condition.

Q. Are there not in some of those trails going up to the mountains, cuts that have been made—water-ways—to prevent the water running down and cutting and washing out the gullies? A. There are little outlets of that kind, necessarily, but they do not interfere with travel. In fact, they are a necessity, and the trails and roads are in fine condition. Who made these charges, Mr. Robinson?

Q. They are sworn to by Mr. Robinson. A. Well, Mr. Robinson is away off on that. There is no defense for any such charge as that; no defense for the charge having been made, I mean.

Q. Have you been over those trails lately? A. Yes, sir; I have; not lately.

Q. I mean during the last year? A. Yes, sir; during the season, last year and year before.

Q. What was the condition of the roads in the valley with regard to dust and chuck-holes? A. Well, of course, there is some dust; that is unavoidable. We cannot sprinkle the roads. There is a good deal of travel; the stages come in there and go out every day, two lines, and there are places, of course, where the roads are dusty; that is unavoidable. These trails, too, get dusty in some places, over some kinds of rock and some kinds of soil. The tramping of horses' feet will make some dust; that is unavoidable. There would only be one way to avoid it, and that would be to have them sprinkled a couple of times a day, and we can't afford that; we have no means to do it with. I think there has been no complaint about the roads being dusty. I notice in front of Barnard's hotel there is a circular rack for horses to be tied to. The saddle train men, when they have orders from tourists for horses, bring down a drove and tie them at those racks. Sometimes they have to wait on the parties they are to take out three quarters of an hour or sometimes an hour, and there are stages driving in and turning there. That makes quite a dusty place. Mr. Mills I heard mention that before one of the committees. It is true there are dusty places that way, and it seems unavoidable. The Yosemite Commission has never been granted money enough by the State to keep roads sprinkled, although it could be very cheaply done; I mean on the roads in the valley. It would require a couple of horses and the services of one man. Water could be very easily obtained. Of course, the roads around where the buildings are could be kept sprinkled.

Q. Don't you think it would be advisable to incur that additional expense, and put those roads in good repair, say in the winter and the early spring, when they are damp and can be made solid and firm, and then by a judicious employment of water sprinkle them, and keep that dust down? A. Well, I will say this—that they are kept in good repair. All that is done except the sprinkling, and that sprinkling is not required in the early part of the season. The snow has just gone off, and there are little rivulets running down over the road, and it is kept pretty moist. There is not much dust until along towards midsummer, June; in some places, it begins to get dusty.

Q. Do you think that would be advisable? A. Yes, sir; I think it would be very good. I think it would be a good thing.

Q. You don't think it would be a very expensive operation, either? A. Yes; it would involve the purchase of a span of animals for that use alone, and the employment of one man for that purpose alone.

Q. For a short period? A. Yes, sir; for about three or four months. There would be no way to keep the trails from getting dusty, and you never hear any complaint of it. People who go riding up and down those trails don't wear their best clothes on those trails, anyway. They don't expect to get the enjoyment of it without getting a little dust on them.

Q. In traveling over those trails where those waterways are made for the purpose of preventing the water from running down in a continuous stream, did it not suggest itself to your mind that if little culverts were put over those trails, and those trails kept in such condition that the water running down after the melting of the snow should run through those culverts, that that would be much more preferable than digging ditches and putting poles in them? A. It never occurred to me, because I never saw where there was any cut that amounted to anything; that was dangerous, or anything of that sort.

Q. Are you in the habit of traveling a good deal over the mountains? A. Oh, yes.

Q. If you are like most men that travel over the mountains, you would not notice many places that a man who is accustomed to traveling on good roads would notice? A. Well, I have been on some good roads, but I would hardly expect to find as good roads there, up and down those perpendicular cliffs, as I would in a level country. I think that this examination, if it were practicable—it is no use to talk about that—ought to have been made in the summer time, and the committee have gone up to the valley.

MR. TULLY: That is my opinion, too.

THE WITNESS: It would be a great benefit to the State to have an official report, based upon a personal investigation by the committee. Much of this I think you would discover to be unworthy of notice, and where there are things of consequence you would be better able to make recommendations than you will here by hearing a lot of conflicting testimony. My own opinion is that the trails and roads are in the best possible condition now.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Might I ask the Senator if he went up the Clouds Rest trail last summer? A. I never went up the Clouds Rest.

MR. HUTCHINGS: Up beyond Snow's? A. I will tell you what trip I took. I took what they call the round trip. That goes up by Snow's and crosses up above Nevada Falls, and goes around and eventually comes out at McCauley's, and then down on the Glacier Point trail.

Q. Didn't you notice in that trail very deep steps, say a foot down, where there were rocks running across beyond Snow's, between there and the top of the Nevada Falls? A. Yes, sir. There is a space there that is bad. There is some of that trail that is rough. It is a trail that has been discouraged, for various reasons. I will state that what they call the round trip has been discouraged by the Commission, owing to the fact that while lots of people like to take it before they have taken it, nobody wants to repeat it. Now, the crowd I was with consisted of three or four Commissioners and some other parties; I think in all about fifteen or sixteen, a few of them ladies; and the trip is too long and too tiresome, too hard for a party of pleasure seekers to take; and generally when a party goes on that trip they come back and they will tell all the rest of the tourists, "Don't take that trip."

MR. TULLY: Don't you think it is a little dangerous for ladies, for instance, who are not accustomed to ride on animals of which they know nothing, coming down a steep hill, that there are poles, for instance, where the animal will have to step down eight or ten or twelve inches at a step, and probably have to step at the same time over a pole that is laid across the road? Don't you think that is dangerous? A. Stated in the way you state it, it looks as though it would be dangerous; and if I had not been over these trails, and seen the way the horses act on them, and if I did not know that no accident had occurred, I would say, in answer to the question in the abstract, that it would be dangerous. But the horses used there seem to be specially fitted in that way, and they do not cause accidents. I think it is dangerous to ride on a trail, no matter how smooth it is, where I can look down two or three thousand feet, and I would not do it, although my wife rode behind me, and she did, and other ladies did; but I got off and walked. Personally I am afraid to stay on a horse when I am going down the Glacier Point trail. I would not stay on a horse for all that Coffman & Kenney's whole crowd of horses are worth, because it looks to me in many places like the stumbling of a horse would send a person thousands of feet, and I prefer to walk.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I would like to ask the Senator if he walked from Barnard's hotel up to Cook's at any time during last summer? A. From Barnard's to the Stoneman House?

Q. Yes? A. I walked up and down there a great number of times during the time the Commission was in, and that other time in August when I was there, I walked up and down; made two or three trips up and down in the evening, and after night.

Q. Don't you think that is a dusty walk? A. Yes, sir; in August that was pretty dusty; I walked it.

Q. This was in June that I referred to. A. I think it was dusty in June, portions of it.

Q. But yet there is no pathway for people to walk up; they must take the dusty road? A. There is a portion of the way. There is a pathway from Barnard's around as far as the school house; a little further than the school house, and there is a similar pathway around by the side of the road where you can avoid walking in the road; but the greater portion of the way there is no path.

Q. There is no dust at that particular part? A. No; there is no dust there although there is a trail there; no, that road is dusty.

Q. Did you ever ride down by the lower iron bridge? A. Yes, sir; often.

Q. And from the lower iron bridge up by the Cathedral Spires? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Beyond the Cathedral Spires, going beyond Leidig's, didn't you find a good deal of dust? A. Yes, sir; there is a good deal of dust along by Leidig's for a half a mile before arriving at Leidig's, or more; a mile I guess, half a mile anyway. The road is pretty dusty.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I might state before this committee that there is a soil in that valley that will pack, if it is put around, which I have proven in many places. You take that long stretch of several hundred feet across the Ribbon Falls; a stretch of country that is never dusty.

THE WITNESS: That is proved also by the fact that there are sections of the road that never get dusty, and other sections that always get dusty. That can only come from one thing, except from moisture, and in many cases it does not come from moisture; it comes from the soil. There are portions of the valley that will not get dusty, no matter how much travel goes over them; and other portions that will get dusty.

Q. May I ask if you crossed the road over the iron bridge at Barnard's towards Yosemite Falls? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Across the meadow? A. Yes, sir; I was over there a number of times.

Q. Didn't you find that pretty dusty? A. Yes, sir; that road was dusty.

MR. TULLY: Do you think if that soil that packs were carried over and spread judiciously—that those roads, in other words, were graded up with this soil and packed there, that it would put an end to that dust? A. Yes, sir; it would if enough were put on the place. It would cost considerable money to so grade all the roads in the valley.

MR. TRUMAN: That has been done in places? A. Yes, sir; it has been done in some places.

MR. TULLY: "Employment of State labor upon work for private parties?" A. I don't know anything about that. I never heard of that until it was—I believe even the "Examiner" didn't make that charge during the publications that have been alluded to so often. If anything of that kind had been done—of one thing I am sure, it never was done at the order of the Commission. I don't know to what particular thing this refers; but there has been no man directed to do any work for private individuals when in the employ of the State, by the Commission, and the Guardian has never been given any such authority.

Q. I have an idea, not from anything I have heard directly, so far as the evidence is concerned, but from outside parties, I have an idea that it probably alludes to the building of those additional sheds or stables that were put up? A. If it alludes to that, the answer is that those were not put up for private individuals. One of them may be used by Coffman & Kenney to-day, and they may be used by you to-morrow.

Q. They belong to the State? A. They belong to the State. You might as well say, if that was work for private parties, that the contractors, Carle, Croly & Abernethy, who had the contract for putting the building up, were working for private parties.

Q. You know nothing about anything of that kind? A. No, sir; I never heard of that before hearing it in these charges.

Q. "Failure of the Board to properly manage the Yosemite Valley in accordance with the conditions imposed upon the State by the United States?" A. Well, that embraces some of these other charges.

Q. That would apply to the general management? A. I don't think the management has been good since the Commission was first formed. I think the management has been improving for some years.

Q. Especially since you got on? A. No; I don't want to say that. But, honestly, I am of the opinion that the management of the Yosemite Valley is improving. Many of these things that lay at the foundation of these charges preferred here are things that have been removed and stopped long since. Many of the things complained of, which were probably the cause of some of these charges, have been long since reformed and stopped, and the Commission has been on the road toward reforming many of what I considered the abuses that have grown up there. But as to the management now being perfect, or anything approaching perfect, I refuse to testify to that condition. I don't believe you can pick out any nine men in the world, and put them in charge as a Board of Commissioners to manage Yosemite Valley, and pick out any man in the world as Guardian there, that they will be able to manage it even to their own satisfaction, much less to the satisfaction of outsiders, because among the Commissioners we differ on various things, and the contests there between the Commissioners are sometimes as bitter as any contest over a bill in the Senate or Assembly. We do that on the question of Guardian; we get into rows on the election of Guardian, and there sometimes is a good deal of feeling engendered, because one man thinks Mr. Hutchings is a good man, and another thinks Mr. Dennison ought to be there—he is a good bookkeeper, writes a beautiful hand—and somebody wants another man, and so it goes. When you come to say the Yosemite Commissioners have not managed the valley in pursuance of the conditions imposed by the general government, the question is too broad. I don't believe that I am fit to manage the Yosemite Valley, and yet I think I am as fit as anybody in this room.

Q. You think it is like all other things; it is to some extent experimental; although a man might have been employed on other parks in the world, still Yosemite is a law unto itself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when he would come into Yosemite he would find new features that he had never contemplated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he would require some experience before he could grasp the entire management of it? A. Yes, sir; and it is like anything else. To manage Yosemite requires that the Commissioners should be educated up. They cannot know at once what is best. They require to become familiar with the valley. I don't mean by that, to become familiar by first starting in and cutting down all the trees there, as has been charged, or by any abuses of a similar character. But gradually I think the management has been getting better. We have gotten rid, on the Yosemite Commission, of some people whose presence there, in my judgment, was not for the best interests of Yosemite. We have been unfortunate, I think, in the choice of a Guardian. I would prefer in expressing these things, that the newspapers should not mention my opinion. I have mentioned it before the Commission, and perhaps I have mentioned it publicly. I think the Commission was unfortunate in having Mr. Dennison as Guardian there. I think he was a theorist and not a practical business man. He was a good bookkeeper. I think his intentions were honest; I don't say anything about his honesty. I think he had bad judgment. I think he was too strict. When he got instructions or directions in regard to a thing from the executive committee, he was too stern and too strict about it; he wanted to carry things out to the very letter, without using any discretion; and perhaps he may have done something that the Commissioners did not mean to authorize him to do.

Q. While we are on this broad question, involving the entire management, I want to ask you a few questions, for the purpose of getting your ideas with regard to some suggestions that have occurred to not only myself but to others in this connection. Do you or do you not believe that the Secretary of the Yosemite Commissioners should be a man outside of the Commission? A. Yes, sir; I always have believed it.

Q. And that he should be salaried? A. Yes, sir; I always have believed it.

Q. And not form a part of the Commission at all? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you or do you not believe that the interest of the State would be better subserved by a smaller Commission, and an obligation imposed upon them to reside in the valley, especially during the busy season, when they should be in executive session continually, especially through the busy season, when the most improvements are made, and when the greater part of the business to be transacted by the executive committee would be done; that they should stay permanently there? A. That is a matter I had not thought of; I had not thought of it. It seems to me that virtually puts the whole thing into the hands of the Governor. Mr. Mills has testified here it was in the hands of the Governor, anyhow.

Q. My suggestion reaches beyond the Governor; it goes back to Congress. Whether or not a better system, predicated upon the experience of the past fifteen or twenty years, might not suggest some idea in the management, for which we would necessarily have to apply to Congress to obtain permission to do it, involving radical changes in the present management of it? A. Do you mean, for instance, to take that power away from the Governor altogether and adopt some plan, through, of course, the action of Congress, whereby the Yosemite would be managed by three Commissioners?

Q. I have not stated any number of Commissioners. A. Well, I understood you to say three, at first.

Q. No; I spoke about the executive committee being composed of three. I have not designated any number; I have not suggested even the number. I say the reorganization of the committee upon a different plan, and that plan would involve the necessity of the residence of the executive committee in the valley, and an independent Secretary? A. That could be done without a reorganization. If the Legislature elected to do so, it could provide the salary and executive committee, and require them to reside in the valley, but that would necessitate indirectly a reorganization of the Commission as it at present stands; because the Commission would not do it. I don't believe there is any three on the Commission who would go and live there. They are all interested in other business.

Q. Suppose the Commission were to consist of three, one of whom was to be nominally the Guardian, but the three together would constitute an executive committee, during the busy season at least that those Commissioners should reside there; and make their office a salaried one? A. Well, you could find men to fill that, but I am satisfied the present Commission would not do it; that is, I am satisfied that no three of them would go there to reside, and discharge those duties.

Q. I am simply asking for suggestions. A. Well, I don't believe that it would be any better than it is at present. I think if we had a proper Guardian there, in the Yosemite Valley—and there is a good deal in choosing a proper Guardian, more than perhaps you are aware of—if there is a proper Guardian in Yosemite Valley, that is enough; and I see no fault with the number of the Commission—nine men.

THE CHAIRMAN: While you are on that question, will you give the committee your opinion of the present Guardian; his capability for the position that he occupies? A. I think he is fit. I have heard no complaint of him since he was elected, and we used to hear complaints of his predecessor, by night and by day, from one year's end to the other; but Mr. McCord has been very fortunate, so far as I know, in pleasing the public. I liked Mr. Hutchings, myself, first rate when he was Guardian. I don't know whether

I like him so well now. He was well liked, at least by my people, where I lived, and, so far as I know, was well liked in the valley. I heard no complaint. There were, of course, men on the Commission at that time who had been there a long time, and they had an idea that Yosemite belonged to them. With some of those men Mr. Hutchings did not get along well. I think the only misfortune in respect to choosing a Guardian there was in the case of Mr. Dennison. He didn't give satisfaction to people who lived in the valley, nor to the people who came into the valley, nor to the Commissioners or anybody else. I don't believe he satisfied himself.

Q. He is no longer Guardian? A. No, sir; fortunately he is not. Dennison was a capable business man, and honest, I think—I am sure of it—but some way he always had some row started. There were always complaints coming in. If any complaints have come in against the present Guardian, I have never heard them.

MR. TRUMAN: He is improving every day, too. He is getting to be a very superior man for a very complicated kind of work.

MR. TULLY: There is no doubt in my mind but what the filling of the role of Guardian is a very serious matter, and the men who are capable, by nature and education, to fill that position are very few.

THE WITNESS: It is a harder place to fill than that of Commissioner, by far. The Commissioners merely outline certain things that they want done. It is the way it is done that tells, and a man with poor judgment is very apt to abuse the power given him.

Q. The Guardian is the arm by which they operate on the valley? A. Yes, sir. Here is one thing which, while it guards carefully the public money that is devoted to Yosemite, is somewhat of an incumbrance to the Commission, and I think I am mainly responsible for it. I had an idea, when I was elected to the Assembly, that things were not honestly conducted at Yosemite, and I thought it would be a good idea to have disbursements of money in relation to that made the same as they are in other departments of the State Government, through the State Board of Examiners and through the State Controller's office. Up to that time it had not been done by the Commissioners. They were a sort of independent power. The money that they collected for rents and privileges in the valley they held. They had a Treasurer of their own. When he was ordered to pay out money, he did it. The State Controller didn't have anything to do with it. All that the public knew about that was their general right to inspect their books: but, of course, they reported every two years to the Governor. Now, in that bill which I referred to awhile ago, which Mr. Long, of Tuolumne County, and myself drew, and which was passed, we made it obligatory upon the Commissioners to pay into the State Treasury all moneys received by them from every source, and required that it should be disbursed in the same way that other public moneys are disbursed, with all these checks. Now, of course, in the first place there must be a warrant or an order by our Secretary. First the expenditure must be directed through the executive committee: then the Secretary draws his order; that goes, I believe, to the Board of Examiners, first, with the vouchers: then the Controller's warrant follows, if it is a proper claim, and then the Treasurer of State pays the money out; and in that way there are a great number of checks. I believe Mr. Truman has figured it out, and claims that there are nine checks on every cent that is paid out. Now, I have been blamed by the Commissioners for that. They denounced me immediately after the Legislature adjourned, because—well, Mr. Madden, Mr. Raymond, and others on the Commission said that it made the duties of the Secretary a great deal more arduous than they had been, and that there was a great deal of roundabout red tape before money could be drawn out. For instance, a man working in Yosemite, when he had completed a month's work and his account was certified to as correct by the Guardian there, that he immediately got his money from the Treasurer of the Commissioners, and now it has to go through all this circumlocution before he gets it.

Q. One of the Commissioners was Treasurer at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Secretary was also a member of the Commission? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Long and I did that.

MR. TRUMAN: The Secretary and Treasurer are the same; always have been.

THE WITNESS: Mr. Long and I did that because there was complaint about it, and rumors that the money was being diverted from its proper purpose, and so forth, and we did that in order to put the matter under the control of the proper officers of the State. Of course it makes it much more troublesome for the Commissioners to disburse the moneys—pay the workingmen up there; and the workingmen growl about it. They say they are kept out of their moneys sometimes a month or three months longer than they ought to be, when the money is really on hand.

Q. Do you think that system adds any greater protection to the fund? A. Yes, sir; no doubt it does. I think it does, but it has been complained of. I am explaining that. It has been complained of by men working there in the valley. They are hired by the day or by the month, and when they work awhile and quit they want to get their money, and their warrants have to take this roundabout course before they eventually get their money, and they complain about these delays. But the plan was adopted upon the suggestion of Mr. Long and myself. Neither of us were Commissioners and never expected to be, and we thought we would put a guard on the expenditures that would stick; make them be honest, whether they wanted to or not. You had some pictures of an unpleasant character last night. There are some photographs here of buildings in the valley, and some views.

MR. TRUMAN: Some new bridges and some new roads?

THE WITNESS: New bridges, and new roads, and new buildings. I will just put them in. The views, of course, that were presented by Mr. Robinson were picked, doubtless, with special reference to this investigation; these were not taken with special reference to this investigation.

Q. In other words, they were ex parte pictures? A. Yes, sir; I suppose you could call it that. If I had thought that any decision would be reached by an exhibition of that kind, I think I would have caused some photographs to be taken of the most beautiful places. We certainly can show more pretty places than they can bad ones—a thousand to one; I would not fix any proportion. There are some places there that there have been old logs lying down; trees have been swept down and burned.

MR. TULLY: There is one that represented an old dead horse—the one that died in the wilderness—and laid under the wire fence? A. I saw that in the "Examiner;" I don't know anything about that.

Q. You never saw that? A. No.

MR. KELLY: I will ask you whether it would be better for the valley that it would be managed by, say three men, at an adequate salary, to give their whole attention to it? A. Yes, sir; I do, undoubtedly. Any men, I don't care what the number is, whether it is three or nine, who can give their undivided attention to it, and be there while the traveling public are coming in, will manage it better than men who only go there once a year. But under the law the Legislature has not appropriated money enough to pay our traveling expenses to Yosemite once a year for two years.

Q. Doesn't the railroad furnish passes? A. It doesn't to me; I don't know what it does with the others. Mr. Mills, I believe, is in the employ of the railroad company, and has a pass.

MR. TRUMAN: He paid his fare, every man did. I saw them buy their tickets, because they would not dare do any other way; that is, I saw all but one and I blushed when I handed out a paid ticket instead of a pass for the first time.

THE WITNESS: I want to state to the committee that the actual necessary expenses with me is the smallest part of it.

MR. TULLY: It is the contingent expenses? A. That is, what I can really get back from the State, is the least part of my expenses, I mean to say. That brings me to the champagne question. Some of the witnesses testified that when the Commissioners come in there is a big celebration; that is to say, that everybody doing business in the valley puts the best appearance on to the Commissioners, in order to deceive the Commission; the Commission don't see the worst side of the valley; in other words, that we are hauled around the valley in the best teams, and wined and dined. Well, now, that is not true.

Q. Do you put up for your own wines? A. Yes, sir. I have been there under all kinds of circumstances, nearly. I have been in there, when I have been out in the mountains on hunting trips, with my hunting clothes on, and I have been in there as a candidate for office; they are not likely to spare a candidate for office; I have been in there on pleasure trips; been in there on legal business; been in there as a Commissioner.

Q. Are those people allowed to vote? A. Yes, sir. It is one of my favorite precincts. I got all the votes but three there when I ran for the Senate. I approve of their judgment.

Q. Did Mr. Robinson vote for you? A. I believe he did. Speaking of Mr. Robinson, who is the author of these charges, Mr. Robinson wrote to me after the "Examiner" had published several articles, and told me that he exonerated me from all these charges; he was hitting at other men. He stated in his letter that he had written a similar letter to the one written to me, to two—I think he mentioned two—Commissioners; but he said so far as the rest of them were concerned he didn't want to make any explanation to them, but he exonerated me from all blame. Of course he stated in the letter that the matters that he referred to were things that I had opposed, and disowned all intentions of having anything apply to me. Of course I presume he meant that because I had championed his cause in regard to this studio. I want to say to this committee now, that when I went into the valley first as a Commissioner, I went with prejudice against Mr. Hill; not personally against Mr. Hill, but against the rights that he had obtained from the Commissioners there, in comparison with the rights accorded to Mr. Robinson. I thought that they gave Mr. Hill everything and Mr. Robinson nothing. Upon an investigation I found out that they had given Mr. Hill the right to build a studio, which he did build, at an expense of several hundred dollars.

MR. HILL: Over $800.

THE WITNESS: Several years before I became Commissioner; and a lease for ten years; that after that some considerable time Mr. Robinson applied for some similar privilege, but he applied at a time when the Commission had concluded they would not give any of those long leases any more, because they had had so much trouble about it—about claims grown up; but I found out they had not thrown many advantages in Mr. Robinson's way; simply refused to let him build; and at Mr. Robinson's request I became his advocate before the Commission, and I demanded, on his behalf, that he should be given a privilege at least equal to Mr. Hill; and he offered at that time to build a studio, and they didn't want to give it to him in the place that he wanted. Well, I went out with him. He told me what place he wanted the studio, and eventually I got the privilege agreed upon that he should be allowed to build it there; and then the objection was afterwards raised that that would be departing from a rule, and allowing a private individual to build. So it was agreed that Robinson should furnish the builder and the plans, the whole cost not to exceed $300, the studio to be built under his supervision alone, and the building to be put up just as he wished it to be put up—I mean in style—but not to exceed $300. That was agreed. At the same time Mr. Hill came in and said that he held a lease for a longer term, and that, as it seemed to be a bone of contention, or seemed that it would be making a difference between the two, he surrendered the lease: so we accepted a surrender of his lease for the rest of the term, so as to put the two painters on an equal footing. It is true, as Mr. Robinson says, after we adjourned that meeting that agreement was not carried out with Robinson. I believe he states that Mr. Griffith told him that the Governor had concluded that it could not be done; did not have the power; that under the law the moneys derived there from rentals must be used in preserving the valley, and improving the roads leading thereto, and for that reason they got out of it. Well now, that was wrong; I don't indorse the action of the Commission in that matter. We agreed to a clean cut proposition that he should build this studio, or it should be built under his supervision, at an expense not exceeding $300, held by the State, and we would lease it to him; and this agreement afterwards reached by the executive committee—and I was a member of it, but was not present—was in violation of the order of the Commission.

MR. TULLOCH: You don't approve of it then? A. I was not present. There was no action taken by any executive committee while I was present. But as I said, I was, of course, practising law in Fresno City, and between there and Mariposa; living in Fresno; and I had a number of invitations to be present at a meeting of the executive committee when I could not go, and I heard, through a letter from Mr. Robinson long after, that they would not build it, and about these difficulties; and, of course, the first opportunity I had to bring it up was the next meeting of the Commission, which was the next year, 1888. It came up again in the same form, and Mr. Robinson applied then for a building. He told me before he went in that he wanted this building that had been used, I believe, as a Post Office; the building that he occupied, anyway; and we gave him the privilege of using that building at $1 a year, a nominal rent. He expressed to me at that time that he was fully satisfied, although he said that there were members of that Commission that he wanted to get after; he intimated that he would like a chance to. Of course, I knew what Commissioners he alluded to, but in his talks with me—and he was always very free and elaborate; it is unnecessary to speak of the elaborateness, probably—all his complaints seemed to be against Mr. Dennison; Dennison and two members of the Commission. He didn't like Mr. Raymond, who is dead. Mr. Raymond was brusque and abrupt and rather arrogant in his style; his manner of talking to people. I believe he didn't like Mr. Robinson either, and Robinson didn't like Mr. Griffith of Los Angeles, who is now off of the Commission; and perhaps there is somebody on the Commission now that he don't seem to be in love with very much, but his grievances seemed to be against the parties I have named mainly. At all events, he wrote me the letter that I have told you about; and the last annual meeting in June,

I left Yosemite Valley impressed with the belief that Robinson was fully satisfied with the arrangements the Commission made for him. We gave him at the last June meeting all that he asked. The only thing he asked—and that was all—was what I told you.

Q. Do you know anything about the breaking in of his doors, and the removing of his house? A. That I only know from him; I only know from him. He said that when his things were in this little house by the side of what was then called the Cosmopolitan Saloon—now used as a Guardian's office—he says that the Guardian broke the doors and broke in and removed his property from there; I heard him swear to it the other night here before you, and he told me on numerous occasions before that, when he was not under oath. I have no doubt it is true that the Guardian did enter his house, and took his things out. But at the last June meeting we gave him all that he asked, and he said that he was satisfied, and thanked the Commission, and after these articles commenced appearing, he wrote to me that he was not responsible for them and had not prepared them as against me; that he had sent some figures to the "Examiner," and he was afraid I would blame him, because he said in his letter, "I told you at the last June meeting, that I would like the privilege of having a table in the room where the Commissioners were; being provided with a place to sit, because I wanted to act as a reporter for the San Francisco 'Examiner.'" And, of course, I had the table and the arrangements provided for him so he could do it. He said: "I though perhaps you would think I was the author of these articles, and as they reflect on you in some way, I want to assure you that I did not write them."

MR. KELLY: Mr. Robinson always said he was all right on Goucher.

THE WITNESS: The "Examiner" stated that I was an attorney for the railroad company, making it appear that all the Commission were railroad men. It said that I was an attorney for the railroad company. I never was attorney for the railroad company in anything. I prosecuted some fellows who robbed one of the Yosemite stages for Washburn & Co. three years ago, but I was not a member of the Commission at the time I prosecuted.

MR. KELLY: Did the "Examiner" ever say you were an attorney for the railroad company? A. Yes, sir; editorially and locally—in its news columns and editorially. I never had a case for the railroad company, and never was consulted by them, and never by anybody who held stock in any manner in the railroad company. For the Yosemite Stage and Turnpike Company, while I lived in Mariposa, I was hired—there was a robbery committed just over the line, two men robbed two stages, and I went to Fresno for the company and assisted the District Attorney in the prosecution of the cases. On the first trial they were convicted; there was an appeal, and they got a new trial; and the second time I was in the Legislature, two years ago, and could not assist the prosecution. There was a hung jury, and there was a third trial, and I prosecuted them again, and there was another hung jury, and the case was dismissed. I was attorney for the stage company in that transaction, never in any other business.

J. M. HUTCHINGS.

Being recalled, testified as follows:

THE WITNESS: Mr. Washburn, before this committee, testified that I was saying matters or things against his company, and in favor of the Oak Flat route—perhaps, I ought to say against his company and route, and in favor of the Oak Flat Company and route, after I became Guardian. I wish to state that that is positively untrue. I do not mean that Mr. Washburn does not think it. Some one may have told him. But after I became Guardian I made up my mind that I should work for no special interests of any kind, hotels, or roads, or anything; that I meant to be fair and square with each and all. That is all that I wish to say about that. Then in reference to another matter, that he thought the Commissioners never gave any orders for throwing obstacles in the way of his running in horses by way of Glacier Point. I state most positively that I received direct orders to construct a fence and prevent Washburn from running horses over that trail, because they had leased the privileges to other parties, and even if I took the whole force of men upon the ground, and if that were not enough to call upon them, and they would get the forces of the State if need be to protect that. I have these letters somewhere, and I have letters alluding to them right in this city now, to show that I was not only requested, but positively and decidedly ordered to do that work, and as I testified, it was the most unpleasant duty that I ever had to perform while I was Guardian of Yosemite Valley, but I obeyed my orders.

C. O. DREW.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLOCH: Did you or did you not at one time have an exclusive privilege for keeping a butcher shop in the valley? Answer—Yes, sir; I believe that I did.

Q. You did have? A. I believe that I did have.

Q. When was that? A. Well, I couldn't tell you what year.

Q. How long did you have it? A. I think I had it for three years.

Q. Did you at one time try to get a lease of the Leidig hotel? A. I put in an application, in Mr. Snow's favor, for the Leidig hotel, in his name.

Q. For Mr. Snow? A. Yes, sir; not in my own name.

Q. You didn't get it? A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Washburn ever ride over the Yosemite and Big Oak Flat turnpike road on a free pass? A. We never charge stage people.

Q. I would like you to answer the question; did he or did he not? A. Mr. Washburn went in on our road last season; that is the only time he ever went over our road. We would not expect to charge him anything.

MR. GARDNER: Did Mr. May ever?

MR. TULLOCH: That is the party? A. Well, yes; May has rode over our road; not on a pass, but on the courtesy of the company.

Q. He did not pay for it? A. No; he didn't pay the company anything.

MR. GOUCHER: You have invited me to ride over that road? A. We have invited all the Commissioners.

Q. You invited me last year, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that hold good until next year? A. That holds good. We always invited the Commissioners, and we would like to have them come out over the road and see it; and the Governor. We got one of the Governors, and I don't know but one or two. Since I have been in we have had one—Stoneman rode over our road.

MR. TULLOCH: He was not a passenger, he was an extra individual, who came under the head of an invite? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was May a Commissioner at that time? A. Yes, sir.

MR. GARDNER: Was Governor Stoneman? A. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: Did May offer to pay you for the passage? A. I don't think that we asked him for any pay. I don't think the company asked him for any pay. I superintended the road, but I did not collect the fares. But I don't think he was asked anything.

MR. TULLOCH: Do you know whether or not after Mr. May passed over the road by reason of an invitation from your parties, without paying anything for it, whether or not he drew his expenses just the same? A. I don't know that.

G. G. GOUCHER.

Being recalled, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: I want to ask you in regard to those toll roads outside. What is your opinion in regard to the extinguishment of those toll roads, as far as they affect the valley? Answer—I think they ought to be extinguished, all of them.

Q. Don't you think they are a great bugbear and scarecrow to the traveling public? A. Yes, sir. There is more complaint, Mr. Tully, about the toll roads leading to the valley, on the part of campers and people who are going in there, than about all other things combined.

MR. PRIEST: Do you know the difference in the tolls between the different roads to Yosemite? A. No; I am not familiar with the tolls; I never heard any complaint from your road, but the complaint I allude to has been from the Mariposa side; I have heard a great deal of that.

THOMAS HILL.

Being sworn by the Chairman, testified as follows:

MR. TULLY: You are well acquainted with the Yosemite Valley, I presume? Answer—Have been for twenty-four or twenty-five years.

Q. Been all over it? A. There is not much but what I have seen.

Q. You are thoroughly familiar with all the scenery? A. I could make a sketch right here, without looking at it, of every spot in the valley.

Q. Have you noticed anything that has taken place there, anything that has been done by any individual in there, calculated particularly to mar the beauties of that valley? A. Well, I could mention one instance.

Q. Let us have it? A. I think the cutting of some trees looking over in the direction of Mr. Hutchings' little cabin, so that they could get a better view of the lower Fall of the great Yosemite, is a mistake.

Q. You think it did not improve the beauties of the valley? A. No, sir; it does not. Now in regard to the cutting of the trees, if I may go on, I tell you, sir, I go to that valley to sketch those beautiful and grand rocks, and I positively assure you that I have not missed a tree. I don't see as there has been any cutting, except where I stated and around the Stoneman House. That was a necessity.

Q. That around the Stoneman House? A. That around the Stoneman House was a necessity.

MR. TULLOCH: What made it a necessity? A. I think it has been very well stated here—that the danger of trees falling upon the house. It is in the immediate vicinity of the cyclone, which might occur again.

Q. Does the cyclone come regularly? A. No, sir.

Q. Did they cut them on account of the cyclone? A. I don't know whether they did or not.

MR. GARDNER: If a cyclone had come, and these trees had still been standing there, there would have been danger of their being blown down on the house? A. Doing some damage to that State property. But I don't agree with some gentlemen who have testified that there has been a great cutting of trees. If they would go with the ax liberally now, they would do a great deal of good, if they only understood what they were doing—a great deal of good. It was a beautiful park when I first visited the valley. You could look from one side to the other; but now it is grown up with all kinds of brush and small trees; it is a perfect thicket.

Q. You have gone all over the ground where this wanton destruction of timber was made? A. I don't see it; I have not seen it.

Q. You heard Mr. Robinson testify? A. I have not seen anything of that kind. It may be there, but I have not seen it.

MR. TULLOCH: When were you there? A. Every year for five or six years past; spent a great deal of time there, and have been going, as I told you, for twenty-four years.

MR. KELLY: Do you think it improves young pine trees to cut off the lower branches? A. I would have cut them down.

Q. Does it improve them to trim up the branches eight or ten feet, and leave them standing, whole groves of them? A. I can't say that I like that. I should have cut them all out.

MR. TRUMAN: How many miles of road, about, do you think there is now around the valley? A. Well, sir; I think it would take me two days to go over the whole of it; to walk easily.

Q. Is it generally wooded; these roads, either on one side or the other, or on both sides? A. Yes, sir; it is considerably wooded.

Q. Most of the thirty-six miles? A. Yes, sir; too much to suit me. We go there to see those grand rocks. We can find plenty of trees outside; but it is a forest now. Of course, my friend Hutchings don't think as I do. He knows we have always disagreed on that; at least he may remember it.

MR. HUTCHINGS: In some things.

THE WITNESS: We disagreed on the trees. You were always for leaving the trees, and I was for cutting some of them.

MR. HUTCHINGS: I was in favor of protecting the trees, and not of cutting any down until they could be judiciously cut down by those who thoroughly understood it—Fred. Law Olmstead, for instance.

THE WITNESS: I don't think he knows any more about it than you or I, with all due deference to Olmstead. There has too much been said about Olmstead. I don't care a copper for him. No, sir; I believe in your judgment just as soon as I would his; and I will say right here that I believe, though I do not agree with Mr. Hutchings, that he is the best Guardian we ever had in the valley, and most suited.

MR. TULLOCH: Have you always had that opinion of him there? A. I have, sir. I have known him in the valley. Mr. Hutchings knows how to explain that valley, and entertain tourists as no other man that has ever lived there can possibly do it, and that is what we want. There are a great many who are not pleased with his management. He is like us Englishmen (I think he was born in England); I don't know, but we have a peculiar way that some people don't like. I am very sorry to see those beautiful trees cut, and I don't wonder at Mr. Hutchings feeling bad that they were cut near his cabin. They were beautiful trees, three or four of them. But that was done to get that vista through there, which I did not approve of. It looks as though a cyclone passed through right in the direction of the Fall. That is the only instance, and around the Stoneman House, that I know of where it looks as though some trees should have been left.

W. C. PRIEST.

Being recalled, testified as follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: Is there any statement you want to make, Mr. Priest? Answer—I wanted to explain this feed question. I see that there is a great many don't understand it, even the Governor. In the Governor's statement last night he didn't understand it, and I think the Governor and half this Board of Commissioners don't know that there is more than one road into the Yosemite Valley, and my reason for thinking so is the statement they have made in regard to that feed. It is true they have all traveled over the Raymond route to the Yosemite, and the greater part of that road, more than half of it, passes through a barren country; but there are two other roads into the Yosemite Valley—the Coulterville and the Big Oak Flat roads—and within thirty or forty miles of Yosemite Valley on both of these roads there is far more feed held for market than the Yosemite Valley would consume if the stock were all kept up and fed. I was thinking to-day of the Governor's statement, and I will guarantee that all of those saddle train horses can be fed on 55 cents a day from our part of the country there. There is a very extensive farming country there in our part, and there is a great surplus now, and every year it is increasing.

MR. TULLY: You would be glad to find a market for your produce? A. Yes, sir; mighty glad to find a market. I live on the Big Oak Flat road, and I am buying as good hay as I ever saw for $15 a ton, and it is hauled eighteen miles to my place, and on the Yosemite side of my place. I know last summer there was ground feed hauled from our neighborhood into the Yosemite that was sold for $2 50 and $2 75, and the farmers waited until next June for half of their money. There is far more stuff raised in our part of the country that wants a market, and can be delivered in the valley, hay for $40 a ton, and ground feed from 2½ to 3 cents. That is something I wanted to contradict, as the Governor and two or three others made that statement here. It is only an excuse of some of these parties for keeping up those fences—that is the whole amount of it. I don't say that is the case with the Governor, but the Governor don't know there is anything raised in that country, and it is natural that he should say so, for the reason that he has not seen this side of it, where the Coulterville and Big Oak Flat road passes through. There is a great surplus of hay and grain there every year, and every year it is increasing, and it is no excuse for not pulling down those fences for the want of feed, for they can get feed in there cheaper than they claim to be using it and raising it; better hay and better grain. Another thing: in my opinion—I have some means of knowing, for I was a long time on the Commission—some man ought to be allowed to go in there and establish a hay yard; haul his own hay.

Q. I was going to ask that question. Allow me to put that question in another shape. Do you not believe that if horses were required to be kept out of the valley until such times as they were required in the valley for service, and then brought in and kept up and fed on hay and grain, that the parties who used those horses could still, even at the present prices, do that business with a handsome reasonable profit on their investment? A.

That won't work, and I'll tell you why: I know all the country around the Yosemite Valley for forty or fifty miles, and there is no place within ten or twenty miles of the Yosemite Valley that you can get any pasture to amount to anything. That won't work.

Q. Couldn't they establish their stables out there and haul their hay a short distance? A. They could feed them on the outside; that is very little better than feeding them inside.

Q. I was going to ask you whether or not it would not be good policy for the State, or the Commissioners, to have stables built there for the convenience of those who chose to bring their own hay in? A. I think so. I think there is already barn room enough. I think so. I think there is plenty of barn room there now for that purpose. Give some man the right to go in there and sell hay to camping parties. There is no occasion to ask more than three and a half for the best hay in the country. It is plenty, and there can be plenty of it got there and sold at that price.

MR. GOUCHER: Coffman & Kenney expressed to me and expressed to the Commission a willingness to surrender their right to sell hay. They don't want to use that privilege; the Commission compelled them to do it because nobody else had applied for the privilege.

THE WITNESS: It ought to be given to somebody. There are farmers up in our country that would be glad of that chance to make a market. They sold hay last year at $60 and $65. Last summer the Big Oak Flat Company contracted for small quantities of hay in there at $42 50. I know there can be plenty of hay put into the valley for $42 50, and good hay; and there is no end to the quantity; it is in great abundance and always increasing.

MR. TULLY: Suppose they haul their hay in there under the present conditions of affairs, would they find a place to store it? A. Yes, sir.

MR. TRUMAN: Why haven't they hauled it in? A. Because there is no one to buy it. Even during the time I was on the Commission I have known men to make application for a bakery, and known them to make application for feed yards, and all those things, and that was never allowed. When I was on the Commission I used to fight them about a number of things, and that was one of them that I was always opposed to. The great trouble with this committee, gentlemen, has been that the executive committee does the whole business. It was so in my time. I don't know how it has been since Mr. Goucher has been a Commissioner, but that was the case during my time, and that was the principal cause of my being disgusted with it. That man Briggs was more to blame for the bad management of Yosemite Valley, and all of this talk and this investigation has been caused by Briggs more than anybody else.

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

Committee on Judiciary Regarding Railroad Tax Suits, Etc.

ASSEMBLY---TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

PROCEEDINGS.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
SACRAMENTO, February 14, 1889.

Hon. J. H. SEAWELL, Chairman Assembly Judiciary Committee:

DEAR SIR: I have been shown a letter addressed to you by Hon. Creed Haymond, in which he says that your committee "has concluded, before reporting a bill to collect the back taxes claimed to be due from the railroad company, to inquire whether there are any such taxes due, or whether the company ought to be required to pay, and to investigate other matters."

If your committee has come to any such conclusion, then it is safe to say that no bill will be passed at this session for reassessment of taxes where they have failed because of the original assessments being invalid or void. As this reassessment may involve an amount up in the millions, which the railroads should be compelled to pay, and as the session of the Legislature will soon expire, the bill should be pushed forward with all possible celerity. The investigation which is sought by Mr. Dunn and Mr. Haymond should be deferred until this bill is safe. If the railroads do not owe any back taxes, this bill cannot possibly hurt them.

Mr. Haymond says he wishes certain records and papers in the United States Circuit Court introduced in evidence, and that the Court will make the order if I will stipulate with him as to the subject. Inclosed please find the stipulation signed by me; but as the matters of difference between Mr. Dunn and Mr. Haymond all occurred during the Attorney-Generalship of Mr. E. C. Marshall, I desire to say that I have signed the stipulation simply as a matter of convenience. I had nothing to do with these cases until long after the findings were settled and signed and judgment rendered. When I came into office I took steps to have these judgments set aside, but it was impossible to effect this, because of the findings, which recited that certain things had been assessed by the State Board of Equalization which the Supreme Court of the United States says they should not have assessed. What was assessed by the State Board I know nothing except by hearsay. Of course, Mr. Dunn, also his attorney at that time, and the State Board of Equalization, could throw a great deal of light on the subject, and I merely suggest that the subpœnas include these gentlemen, and also Mr. E. W. Maslin, the clerk of the Board.

Very respectfully,

G. A. JOHNSON,
Attorney-General.

Chairman House Judiciary Committee:

MY DEAR SIR: I see that the Judiciary Committee, at the request of Mr. Dunn—and a very proper one it was—has concluded before reporting a bill to collect the back taxes claimed to be due from the railroad company, to inquire whether there are any such taxes due, or whether the company ought to be required to pay, and to investigate other matters.

Speaking for the company—as I have had charge to a great degree of these matters—we are willing and desire a full and thorough investigation, and if the House authorizes it, will present our side of the case as rapidly as possible.

Much of it depends upon the original records in the Circuit Court of the United States, which could not be taken to Sacramento under a subpoena, but could only be taken from the Clerk's office upon an order of the Circuit Court, which order would undoubtedly be made upon a stipulation between the Attorney-General and myself. Such a stipulation I am willing to make.

I would desire to examine the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States, ex-Justice McKinstry, Mr. A. L. Rhodes, Mr. M. H. De Young, Mr. W. T. Baggett, ex-Attorney-General Marshall; witnesses residing in San Francisco, most of whom are busy men.

If it is possible for the committee to hold a session in San Francisco, it would be a very great accommodation to these gentlemen undoubtedly; besides we need not, in that case, take the records out of their proper custody.

We would also want as witnesses the members of the State Board of Equalization, the Assessor of Yuba County, and the Assessor of San Joaquin County. We would also want Mr. E. W. Maslin, Secretary of the State Board of Equalization.

These are the witnesses that I think of at present, and I suggest their names now, so that we may not be placed in a position of seeming to delay the investigation which we earnestly desire.

If the question of expense is raised in relation to coming to San Francisco, the answer to that would be that the expense would be less than the expense of taking witnesses to Sacramento; or, if that would not be an answer, we would, in order to accommodate the gentlemen who might be called who occupy prominent positions, we would be willing to pay that part of the expense incurred by holding the investigation here.

If the resolution should pass the House to-day, I wish you would be kind enough to have subpoenas issued to have witnesses summoned in case you conclude to sit in San Francisco. Fix the date to suit yourselves, and summon the witnesses accordingly. We would want to take up the San Francisco branch of the case first, because it would hasten matters to go through in chronological order.

What I propose to show:

First—That the company has never attempted to delay proceedings, but that all dilatory pleas came from the other side.

Second—That the San Mateo case was a fair case, and thoroughly presented the questions.

Third—That the Controller of State and the then Attorney-General, and numerous other persons, threw discredit upon the San Mateo case, and charged that it was friendly, and that for this reason, and this alone, the controversy was not decided at the first term when that case was called up.

Fourth—That the Federal franchise was assessed every year up to the last, and its valuation included.

Fifth—That the company has paid more taxes since 1879 than could have been assessed against it, even if the Constitution is valid.

Sixth—That the company has never at any time attempted to evade the payment of a just tax, and it does not at this time owe the State anything.

Seventh—That in all of the cases the action of the company and of its attorneys have been fair and free from all fault.

These items cover the general points.

If the house pass the resolution of investigation will you be kind enough to notify me by telegram, so that we may prepare for the investigation and not cause any delay.

I am, very respectfully yours,

CREED HAYMOND.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, February 16, 1889.

The committee met at 11 A. M. in the Supreme Court building.

The Chairman, J. H. Seawell, called the meeting to order, and the following proceedings were had:

THE CHAIRMAN: Gentlemen of the committee, we have met here, as you are aware, for the purpose of continuing the investigation on Assembly Bill No. 17.

A MEMBER: I do not think that is the purpose of this meeting. I do not think it has anything to do with Bill No. 17, but I think it is in regard to the resolution introduced by Mr. Dibble.

THE CHAIRMAN: Bill No. 17 is reported on, and this grew out of that, and while it is not directly connected with it, it is simply one question connected with that, and that is as to whether the charges as to the falsification of the record in that case, as made by the State Controller, are true.

A MEMBER: Let the clerk read the resolution introduced by Mr. Dibble, and adopted by the House.

[The clerk read the resolution from the minutes.]

A MEMBER: The records, I understand it, are at another place.

THE CHAIRMAN: So I understand.

MR. DUNN: My clerk has been waiting for Judge Sawyer, with a stipulation that the records may be sent here, I understand, and that Judge Sawyer desires somebody representing this matter to go before him, and make a showing upon which he can authorize the records to be taken.

MR. HYDE: I believe there are two different subjects that we are to take up. One is the railroad back taxes, and the other is the investigation of the record. I think that it would be proper for us at this time, and in this place, to take up the subject of the railroad taxes, and listen to those witnesses, and some time this afternoon to adjourn to the United States Circuit Court room, and when we are there we can have the records brought before us, without any requisition or order. Judge Sawyer will let us have the records right there. But that I consider entirely separate from this examination which we can take up at this time.

MR. HALL: I do not think we have anything to do with the railroad tax question, outside of the investigation of these records. Mr. Hyde said that we are to take up the matters concerning the railroad tax question. That has been reported to the committee, and we have nothing to do with that. I do not see what testimony there is to take in that matter.

MR. HYDE: The resolution says that we are to investigate the question of back taxes. I won't say it is railroad back taxes, but it has been admitted to be so. It is the back tax question that we are to take up at this time, and we might as well take it up now, and make an investigation of the records this afternoon at a place where we can best examine them.

MR. HALL: I think we may want to reconsider and change our report in regard to the bill.

A MEMBER: What do you want to do?

MR. HALL: To see whether these records are falsified or not; that is all I want. We will have to elicit our information before we can take steps in the matter. I am perfectly willing to reconsider. I was on the side of the minority, and I want to reconsider it. But what are we taking testimony for if we don't do that? We have already concluded to vote a certain way upon that.

A MEMBER: Don't you think it possible to receive testimony now of the witnesses who are here present; and when we adjourn we can examine the record at the United States Circuit Court room?

MR. HALL: We have already reported, and what is the use of our receiving testimony?

A MEMBER: Because that is what we are here for. We take testimony under the resolution introduced and voted upon, simply authorizing us to come here.

MR. STORKE: It seems that the best thing is to complete that stipulation, so as to get the record right before us.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Haymond is present, and desires to make a statement to the committee.

MR. DUNN: As I understand it, it will take this committee all day long to examine the records, the entire day, and a portion of the evening, I believe.

THE CHAIRMAN: Here is the stipulation drawn up. [The Chairman produced a stipulation in regard to the withdrawing of the record from the Circuit Court, which stipulation Mr. Haymond signed.]

MR. HAYMOND: Gentlemen, my understanding is that the real purpose of this bill is the collection of back railroad taxes. I was invited by the Chairman of the Senate committee to appear before the committee for the railroad company; I suggested in a letter to him that there was no back railroad taxes; that all of the railroads represented in the Southern Pacific system had voluntarily paid into the State and county treasury more money than would have been legally levied against them had all the acts been constitutional. It was simply a suggestion made, and an excuse for my not appearing there. That before the Legislature went to all of the trouble of passing such a bill, it would be fairer for the Legislature to ascertain whether any taxes were due from the railroad company, as there seemed to be no disposition to collect any back taxes from anybody else. I do not desire to be understood as expressing any opinion as to what the legislators meant by that bill. I have no means of knowing. But these are the things that were in the press, and it seemed to me that if the committee would take time, and would ascertain that these railroad companies had paid to-day, as it can be shown by undisputable testimony—if you are willing to take it—more money than would have been levied upon their properties, had the tax been legal from the beginning to the end, that would end that matter. I stated in a letter which I was bound to send to the committee, that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had no desire at all to interfere with the legislation of this State; that they did not desire nor did they wish to seem to desire to do it; that there was nothing in the language of the bill that affected either of these companies. I suggested there that if an examination was gone into—I did not ask it—that I would present all of the facts, and that everything we have done would be laid before the Legislature for its benefit. I thought that was our duty.

It was and has been suggested by men that the records have been falsified. So far as that is concerned, I have never seen the records until they were placed in the Supreme Court of the United States. The records of a writ of error are made up by the Clerk of the Court, under the direction of the plaintiff in error. We have nothing to do with them; have no right to see them, and no copy is required to be served upon us. When filed in that Court and printed, the rules require the Clerk to send the records down to the defendants in error. And that is the first time that ever the defendant in error sees a record in error.

Lawyers will bear in mind that this is not a case of an appeal, but it is a writ of error, which is the institution of a new suit, and not like the appeals taken from one Court to another. The losing party sues out his writ of error, and becomes the plaintiff in a new action in the Supreme Court. He makes his record in the first case. He is not bound to serve anything at all upon us but the citation which issues from the Supreme Court when that record gets there. There were but few questions which we desired to present upon those records, going to the constitutionality of the law, and to the right of the State to destroy the property of the United States. The records were satisfactory to us for that purpose; and I do not believe for a moment that the Attorney-General of this State, or anybody else, has falsified them.

If you are going into this investigation, we desire to offer you every facility for getting the facts; and I have sent one of my associate counsel to the Circuit Court this morning for the records in the case, but they cannot be withdrawn without an order of the Court. If the State asks, and we ask, of course they will be brought here.

My object in asking you to come here to-day, was not to take up your time, but to economize your time and facilitate your labor. But I propose to say to you in the course of this investigation, and it will take more than to-day, working as rapidly as possible, that the railroad company has paid more taxes in proportion to the value of its property than any other people in this State, without any law, and in no instance has the railroad company ever delayed these cases. I propose to show you that we have paid into the county, State, and city treasuries of this State since the adoption of the new Constitution, which exempted railroad companies from taxation, and so held by the Courts, the sum of $3,600,000, without any law. That in order to pay that money into the treasury, we have had to come into this tribunal and get its mandate to compel the officers of this State to receive these taxes.

I propose to show you that shortly after the passage of this Act, Collis P. Huntington brought a suit in the Circuit Court of the United States here, alleging that this Constitution here was unconstitutional, presenting but that single point for adjudication, and that the State of California, instead of meeting that issue and having it determined, went in there with what lawyers call a dilatory plea, pleaded in abatement of that suit, because it said that Collis P. Huntington had no right to bring that action. The Circuit Court of the United States decided that case upon that dilatory plea, interposed at the instance of the State itself, and refused to decide a question in which you are interested, and in which the people of this so called sovereign State are interested, because the State of California so desired. It stood in that tribunal represented by these officials, and justice was denied to us, because, they said, his action was not in form.

That case was appealed, as I shall show you, and I make the statement now, because, if you desire to go into this investigation, and will have the patience, it will end this matter now and forever, to the credit of the people whom I represent, for their conduct, and their action is without parallel in the history of this or any other country. No men, nor set of men, have ever contributed, without color of law, under the persecution of public officials who were defying the laws of the State; whose duties had to be enforced upon them by the mandate of its highest Court: who had paid, voluntarily, three million six hundred thousand golden dollars to support and defray the expenses of that government. So, there was no end reached in that case, because the State of California denied to us common justice and common right.

Then these suits were brought; suits which eventuated in the San Mateo case, and it was claimed that a citizen of this State had no right to dispute a tax, and say that it was illegal; forgetting that it was under that standard at Bunker Hill that our fathers fought; forgetting that Hampden had been made immortal by resisting unjust acts; forgetting that the resistance to the paltry tax upon tea had given to civilization and the world the grandest republic that it had ever seen.

We were assailed from one end of the State to the other because we said: "We are the trustees of the National Government; they have authorized us as their agents to build across this continent a great military instrument to be held by us in sacred trust for the uses of that Government in time of peace, and in time of war." We asserted that the rails of the Central Pacific Railroad Company stood upon the same footing as a frigate of the United States. We had said, as it was our bounden duty to say, because we were the trustees and officials of the National Government, that when the earliest drum-beat was heard in the national capital, they had authorized and directed us to do these things; and we had built this road; and we had a right, and it was our bounden duty to maintain it, and that no State could tax that right, because that right to maintain that road was derived from the Federal Government. We held our commission from them, as the commander of your frigate at Samoa holds his commission. And it would have been no less treacherous on our part to have surrendered that property to the States or Territories through which it passed than it would be for the Captain of an American frigate to haul down his flag and deliver his ship to a German gunboat at Samoa. Now, whether we were right, or whether we were wrong, matters not. We had a right to assert that thing in the Courts of the country. No one accused us of covering our property, and no one said that if the State recovered judgment it could not make the money on execution.

That was the San Mateo case. Mr. A. L. Rhodes, one of the most distinguished judges that ever sat in this tribunal, of as pure and spotless character as any man who ever practiced at this bar, came to me and asked me if I desired that these cases should be heard upon the two great constitutional questions involved. And I said I did.

MR. STORKE [Interrupting]: It seems to me that this argument can be had after the matters are submitted to us, and are before us, rather than at the present time, as our time is limited. And I think we had better do our work first, and then hear arguments afterwards.

MR. HAYMOND: I will show Brother Storke that I am right. If your time permitted you to go into this examination, you would very much better understand it as it goes along, and the testimony bearing upon it, if I make a statement of my case now. It is customary in Court.

MR. STORKE: But it is the intention of the committee to hear testimony in this case to-day, and then afterwards we can continue the examination at Sacramento.

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir. I only want to put in this documentary evidence here, and call a few witnesses. It was for their convenience. I agree with you, and I am only stating the case now.

MR. DUNN: I understand that Judge Sawyer is at the Circuit Court and is prepared to give an order that these records may be taken up here.

MR. HAYMOND: I will sign any stipulation. No stipulation has ever been brought to me by these gentlemen to sign that I have not signed without reading it.

I arranged with the County of San Mateo, also, to bear a portion of the expenses of contesting that case. That rose in judgment afterwards, as you will see, against us. Judge Rhodes and myself took the answer in that case, and we eliminated from that answer every defense which we had to the tax; and we presented two questions to the Supreme Court of the United States: First, is this railroad a Federal instrument? Does it derive its right to do business, to charge freights and fares, from the Federal Government? If so, of course it follows that you could not tax that right, if it was a Federal institution. Second, does the Constitution of California violate the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution?

Lawyers will understand the vast difference between that and a case which is tried in Court to determine the validity of a given tax. In other words, the San Mateo case presented to the Supreme Court of the United States this question: All of the State laws being valid, and all of the proceedings being proper, can this tax be levied under any circumstances?

In pursuance of that stipulation we went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there argued those two questions, and those alone, upon their merits. Of course that case would have been determined in our favor; because subsequently the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as the Supreme Court of this State, decided that it was a Federal instrument, and that the State could pass no law to affect it, barring, of course, police laws for its protection. That case was argued and submitted. Then came a change of administration—and I am going to show all of these facts—and throughout the press, at the instance of numerous people whose names I will not mention, but will produce documents here, the good faith of the San Mateo case was assailed; it was said that the record was a false one; it was said that we had paid the taxes; it was said that we paid the expenses. Now, that was true, in part; because we were anxious to get a decision, and we said to the County of San Mateo, "If you will become a party, and employ counsel, etc., we will contribute, in order that this matter may be settled and that we may know our rights." Everything was said about the case which involved the honor or integrity of counsel upon each side, and in the language of a distinguished Justice of the Supreme Court, "their waste baskets were flooded with denunciations of the San Mateo case." And I want to inquire, in this connection, and fix the responsibility upon a man connected with this State Government who dared to approach the Supreme Court of the United States; whose mind was so base that he supposed any other consideration than justice or right would sway the mind of a single man sitting upon that bench, upon the bench of what a correspondent of the "Examiner" states to-day that "it is the most august judicial tribunal ever established by man." What was the result? That case had been submitted. They do not hold cases long, and it would have been decided. But under this flood of material (Mr. Rhodes, a stranger to the Court, I was not even admitted to its bar) such a cloud was thrown upon the San Mateo case that they set aside the order of submission, and at the instance of the State of California, and directed that the five cases should be tried here upon the evidence introduced, and that findings should be made, and that when those five cases were brought up they would advance them upon the calendar.

I will show that those cases came on for trial, and were tried. I will show you that before they came to trial, the People of the State of California filed another dilatory plea in those very cases. We had averred, as we had the right to do, as the record will show in that case, that this assessment, independent of law, was a fraudulent one, and we were prepared to prove it. We averred the specific acts of the fraud: that the State Board of Equalization had willfully, fraudulently, and knowingly valued our locomotives, old and new, some of which had been in the service of this company for twenty-five years, at 80 per cent more than locomotives of the same manufacture could have been placed upon the roads. We averred all sorts of acts tending to prove fraud, that went to the merits, as they call it, of the case. Actual fraud was charged. And how did the representatives of the State of California meet that averment? Did they dare, in the presence of the Court, to allow it to come to trial? No, sir; they moved to strike from the answer, Mr. Storke, those very averments, which, if proven, would have justified us in the sight of man and of God. I, who had the charge of the cases, was absent in Europe, and on their motion, those averments were stricken from the answer, as irrelevant and immaterial, on their motion, not on ours. They shrank from the contest; they shrank from the proof which they knew that we had of the damnable fraud that had attempted to be perpetrated.

Had I been here, familiar as I was with all of the facts, I would have sustained that averment in the answer, because we had the right to make it; it has been drawn within the case of Cummings vs. The Bank, in 100 U. S. Reports, but counsel who conducted it never expected that a great State in a Court would shrink from the examination of such a charge as that, and it was stricken out. There was the next dilatory step.

All of this was done at the instance of the State, as we will show you. Then the case came on for trial; and this assessment was tried in that Court, and the ending was ridiculous. It never has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States, because it turned upon the question of elementary law. The State was represented in that case by Mr. Delmas, one of the ablest lawyers, and one of the brightest men in this country, who can always take care of his client if his client has anything to take care of, and nine times out of ten can get away with the case when the client has not got that. In that case it was found not that the fences were assessed, as these men put it; there never was any such finding as that; but they found that in valuing the specific things which the Board had the right to value, they covertly estimated in that the value of the fences. They had no more right to tax them than you have, the Court says. That was an elementary proposition. Not a lawyer on this committee but knows that from time immemorial it has been the law, if property which is not taxable is blended with property which is taxable, that it invalidates the whole assessment. That ended these cases. Then I will show you the next step.

A MEMBER [Interrupting]: Mr. Haymond, there is one remark of yours that I desire to be a little more enlightened upon. I understood you to say that, seeing that this company owed its existence to and derived its authority from the United States Government, it was not subject to State taxation.

MR. HAYMOND: Not subject to State taxation as to the things which we hold in trust for the National Government.

A MEMBER: What does that comprise?

MR. HAYMOND: That is the question. My opinion is that nothing that they have can be taxed, under the decisions. We have not raised that point, nor will we raise it as long as the companies are in the hands of the present men—

THE CHAIRMAN [Interrupting]: You are not interested in this investigation, then, are you?

MR. HAYMOND: I think I said that we were not. Having stated that we have no interest whatever in the Langford and Ostrom Bills, I am, as a citizen of California, interested in this investigation and, shall I tell you why?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: I have been deeply interested in the taxing system of this State. I say it without any egotism that I drew the first law, and had it placed upon the statute books, under which any tax could ever be legally enforced in this State. Long before I came into the employment of the Southern Pacific Railroad, I had been at Sacramento, and through almost every administration, I had been consulted upon these very questions, and out of the mere love that a lawyer sometimes gets for pursuing a subject, I have become very familiar with taxation, and all of the questions involved. I have listened with attention to the debates on the new Constitution. I have seen men stand upon the floor, men of eminent ability, and say to that convention that these provisions could not be enforced. I have examined them and upon the stump have told them that they could not be enforced. I have seen the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to only apply to negroes. I believe that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution was the keystone to our institutions; that at least it had embodied in a constitutional provision the great truths which lie at the foundation of every government, and which were enunciated in that new evangel of liberty, the Declaration of Independence.

I believe that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments had changed the form of this Government; had converted a federal republic into a nation; that the power of sixty millions of people under that amendment, whether they were black or white, whether they were associated together or not, could be invoked to protect their rights as against the State.

These were all great questions. I have had something to do with them for eight years, and I have lived to see the Supreme Court of the United States reverse the Slaughter House case, and declare that the right to life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness, could not be taken away from any man or set of men in this country either by the State government or any other power; that the humblest individual, languishing in a prison, without money and without friends, that the power of the State might send his application for a writ of habeas corpus to the Federal Courts, carry his case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and have it there whether he was deprived of any right, even though a Southern State was the power that was set in motion.

I have been interested in these questions because I know Leland Stanford. I have been his confidential attorney for eight years; have drawn his wills; have drawn the magnificent trust that he has created for you and for your children. I know him as a confessor knows a man. I know that while this property stands in his hands—because he has no interest in it, except in one single share—all of the bonds, all of the stock, all of the lands, the herds, and the cattle are not only yours, but they belong to mankind, under his direction to be maintained forever—to teach what? The great truth which lies at the foundation of Anglo-Saxon liberty, that all men are endowed with equal rights. After a few donations to his friends and relatives, which a decent respect to the opinion of mankind require him to make, it is all yours, except one share, which authorizes him to sit with the councils of the Board and represent you. Not only that, but all his grand possessions are given by that instrument to you. I knew, when he told me that this Constitution invaded these great rights and that he opposed it, that it was the opposition which a statesman might make, and which ought for the public to be made.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court, which holds that the identical property involved here (that they have taxed), and which decision they follow afterwards in this action, and say, as a mere dictum, that it may be taxed, was made before they held it to be a Federal instrument; it was made upon the theory that while the property and business of a United States bank could not be taxed, yet its house, the building in which it did business, might be. It was based upon the theory that the State cannot prevent a mail carrier from buying stages and horses, and that they may be taxed, because the Government had no interest in the house and bank. But they have held that it is the franchise that the Government is interested in. Look into this Act of Congress, and what do you find? You find that it was not to carry the mails that this Act was passed. It was not to carry troops upon anything which these people might build; but it was to build a specific thing—an iron railroad—and to maintain that railroad forever for the use and benefit of the United States. And we have a contract upon the Oregon line, the greatest military road ever built upon this earth, to transport for all time to come free, the troops and munitions of war of the United States. That road, skirting these great valleys lying behind this range of mountains, supported by four or five transcontinental roads, defended this Pacific Coast, as millions untold could never defend the Atlantic Coast.

The first road was chartered, Mr. Salomon, when you were in the army, when I was in this State, and the destinies of this State hung trembling in the balance, when it was a touch and go whether it would have seceded from the Union or stand by it. Never did Congress intend that this State should have power over that road. I tell you, gentlemen, I may not live to see it, because I am an old man to-day; I tell you, in all sincerity, that I can sit down and demonstrate to you, as a mathematical proposition, that you can no more tax nor affect that line of steel rails, laid to bear the Federal armies from east to west, than you can tax a United States frigate off Fort Point. Why, my dear Mr. Salomon, had this doctrine that has been preached here ever been got into the head of South Carolina, you would have had no war. They would not have planted batteries and erected guns against the flag that floated from Sumpter, but they would have taxed the brick and mortar in it, and sold it under execution.

A MEMBER [Interrupting]: To what part of the road in this State do you think that argument applies?

MR. HAYMOND: To the Southern Pacific and the Central, the Government roads alone, and the Oregon branch, because in that the Government has a military interest.

And there is another point which has been overlooked. I have no interest in this matter in the world. I have less interest, perhaps, in what is going on than any other man could have of my age. I am an old man, alone in the world, all that is dear to me has been taken away, without a hope, without an ambition, except to be right. You are legislators charged with the interests of this State. I am saying these things to you as I would say them under the sanction of my oath, and as I hope to meet my God when I shall have been permitted to pass away. I tell you that is the position of this thing. Governor Stanford will soon be gone. Three out of five of these men have passed away. The control of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is no longer in their hands; they are stockholders holding their seats in the Board of that railroad company by sufferance of the men who hold it, who are not citizens of this State, and who are not identified with its interests. As long as they hold seats in that Board they will do in the future as they have done in the past, measure out to you not justice, as defined by rules of law, but justice as they see it. They have no interests but what are your interests, and they will pay these taxes, as they have paid them these years, although I say to you that no such taxation as this here was ever in any country imposed upon like property. I am speaking for you now, and I tell you that the State of California can regulate freights and fares upon those roads whenever the State of California can lower or raise the salary of the President of the United States. You levy this wonderful sum of $2,500,000, and what do you do? For years and years, owing to competition, the difference between the income and the expenses of this road has fallen within $100,000, and what do they do? They pay no taxes; they levy that sum themselves upon the counties through which this road runs. That would be a good way to collect all of the State's taxes. I tell you that. It would be a proper way to collect them, from the corporation. But it would not be just now to make the railroads collect it all, because they do not run into all of the counties of the State. It would make Santa Barbara pay too much, and it would make Alameda pay too much. But the plain and proper plan is to do what Pennsylvania and those States are going to do, to have the tax collected by quasi public corporations for State purposes, and put into the State Treasury. No more wasteful and extravagant system has ever been devised than the ad valorem tax system of California. Mr. Donovan, who served in the Senate with me, and who was the Assistant Treasurer of San Francisco, after careful figures made several years ago, said that under this system, counting all the expenses and waste, that you got into the treasury out of every dollar collected but 40 cents. I know of no man in the State of California who has given the subject of taxation more care than Mr. Donovan; a practical man, who has to do with it, and that is the conclusion at which he arrived. Of course, it cannot be demonstrated mathematically.

Then you would get rid of this confusion about assessments at different rates. For instance, the property in San Francisco is assessed at thirty-three per cent of its cash value, with but rare exceptions, while property in other counties is assessed at its full cash value. If the Langford Bill passes, probably that will apply a remedy that may be able to bring the Palace Hotel up to its fair cash value for the last ten years, but this makes confusion and trouble.

In the nature of things this property will pass away. It cannot be held much longer by these men. I wrote to the Governor of the State of California, and had I not been the attorney for the Central Pacific Railroad Company I would have sent the letter, because I felt that the railroad should be kept out of politics in every form. I would have called his attention to these things, and to the necessity of this legislation, and of such legislation as would fairly tax this property. Because I tell you there is no use to collect an ad valorem tax from any of these roads, because you can not sell them out; you can not sell the legal title. The Act of Congress fixes the legal title of the severalty in the whole. We had a contract with them to build the road and take so much land, they lending us so much money. I will furnish you my argument before the Pacific Railroad Commissioners, where I discussed this proposition. In 1855, or thereabouts, this company had the option to pay those bonds, or surrender the road to the Government of the United States—that is, the interest. There is a first mortgage upon it, but the United States had provided that their interests should never be foreclosed under that first mortgage. Whether I am right or wrong, these are questions for your serious consideration.

The taxes for 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883 had all become due, and suits were pending in nearly every county of the State and the State's finances were demoralized. In 1881, or may be 1880, when the State Board of Equalization made an assessment, there were no provisions making due process of law. Subsequently that was remedied. Judge Field decided that assessments should be made between two certain dates, and that parties might come in and be heard, or waive their objections. So far as these assessments were concerned, if they were valid in other respects, there was due process of law.

MR. DUNN: Were you not in favor of the Act of 1883?

MR. HAYMOND: I am in favor of every Act that the Legislature passes, if it agrees with the Constitution of the United States.

MR. DUNN: Did you not state, as Senator, during the session of the Legislature of 1883, that you were in favor of that Act?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; because Justice Field was in favor of the passage of those provisions. I had argued that the law which gave to the Board of Assessors the right to assess at any time, or at any place, without notice or hearing, did not constitute due process of law. When this bill was introduced I was asked if that would constitute due process of law, and I said it would.

MR. DUNN: Have you not objected to paying the taxes on the ground that that Act was unconstitutional?

MR. HAYMOND: The Courts of this State have decided that these provisions are unconstitutional; and that you set up a special system for collecting railroad taxes which the Constitution of this State declares shall be done. I am not like you in this matter; I think I am impartial.

MR. DUNN: I think I am as impartial as you.

MR. HAYMOND: I differ with you.

MR. DUNN: What I want to understand now is, I understood you to say that during the session of the Legislature of 1883, when this Act of 1883 was before the Legislature, you were in favor of its passage.

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; and I say so now.

MR. DUNN: And that you believed that the railroad people would pay the taxes?

MR. HAYMOND: If they were fairly assessed; and so they have.

MR. DUNN: Now, if I understand it, I think I can prove by the record this afternoon that one of the main points of objection which you make to paying the taxes is, on account of certain provisions in that Act, that you have favored in its passage.

MR. HAYMOND: I did not make the laws of this State. I might be in favor of the passage of the Act, but there was from the start no law here at all by which the railroad taxes could be collected. My attention was called to the due process of law, and I wrote an opinion, and said that that made due process of law. As to other provisions in other laws, the Courts have decided that they are all invalid.

For the taxes of 1886, suits were brought in the State Courts. We did not remove them to the Circuit Courts at all. They were tried in the State Court. Those suits involved every question, both as to constitutionality and everything else. They went off on demurrer, and were decided in our favor about two years ago. Two years ago they were appealed to the Supreme Court of this State. We tried to get the case advanced; tried to have it heard. You know how the calendar is crowded. In that case all of these questions as to the validity of these other acts which you are now passing were involved. It covers the Langford Act. If they are constitutional, then the question as to whether the Constitution is constitutional is also involved. I have tried by best; have petitioned the Court to advance that case; but the State has objected, and it has not been advanced. It can be heard in this tribunal in forty-eight hours. I am ready to argue it at any time. I think the Court has decided in two cases, that the Act is unconstitutional. That case has lingered in this clerk's office involving all these tax proceedings. In our effort to get some decision, we petitioned this Court, and set out all of these facts, and asked them to hear this case, to put the matter at rest.

This Legislature is now discussing the validity of this Langford Bill when the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States could have been obtained at any time within the last few years, as to the constitutionality of the question.

Now, take the tax for the fiscal year 1883-84. The Spring Valley Water Company have been allowed to settle their debt to the State for the flat tax, no interest, and 10 per cent taken out of the tax. I have been saying, as I shall show you when I introduce proof, that we were anxious to pay a fair rate of the tax; that we were offering to pay for the three years, upon the assessment made in 1882. The "Chronicle" then published an article, and said that if this railroad company is honest—if Haymond is telling the truth about this thing—they will come up and pay the taxes flat, without penalties, without attorney's fees, and without interest. I wrote to Mr. De Young a letter, in which I told him the position in which his paper had placed itself. I said to him: "Now, I am willing to stand any test as to the sincerity of my motives, because I have no interest in the matter. I am simply a lawyer, and I am willing to stand by your proposition. I am willing to do it. We have paid some of the taxes, and we are willing to pay $1,400,000, the taxes for those three years, to make it cover all, flat, without interest, penalties, or anything else." I took the letter to Mr. De Young, and said to him: "I do not want to take any advantage, as an attorney in this case, in the newspaper, but if you are willing to stand by that proposition, publish my letter, and say it is right, and I will make the payment to the State." He did. And we went then and paid the money. We paid every quarter of a dollar that the State claimed up to that date. Now understand Mr. De Young's statement was, that all litigation should stop then. What did we do? We went into the Circuit Court of the United States, and submitted this question to Judge Sawyer, and asked him upon all of these records, to render a judgment against us, and in favor of the People of the State of California, for the amount of the taxes that we paid out. I had then the checks in my pocket for the money, drawn upon the Bank of Nevada; for the balance, as there was some deductions to be made for partial payments that had been made. Judge Sawyer stated from the bench: "These cases have been submitted, upon the facts, I find for the defendant." Then he said: "I will not render judgment, because this whole thing is invalid. I will not put myself in that position." Then I said: "We are in a box," to Mr. Marshall, the Attorney-General, who had been our bitterest enemy, who had tramped this State from one end to the other, assailing us, and everybody else, and he is a very clever, bright fellow; he is the only man in the world that I ever liked to have abuse me, because he does it so nicely. I then made a stipulation with them, that this judgment should be set aside, the judgment rendered in favor of the State of California, for the principal, and I did not ask him to carry out his agreement. I said: "Now, there is an excitement about this, and do not do it. I will stipulate with you, that you may take an appeal from the judgments to the Supreme Court of the United States; that they shall not be treated as consent judgments; and if you get a judgment against us for these taxes, with fees and penalties, we will pay them." That stipulation is upon record. Now, Mr. Storke, I am coming to the extra session question.

A MEMBER: Would it not be a good stopping point to take a recess?

THE CHAIRMAN: Let Mr. Haymond finish.

MR. HAYMOND: That was the situation; but Mr. Delmas said that that was a consent judgment, and the Supreme Court of the United States would not hear it. I said: "No; who is there to object? We have stipulated not to do it. A judgment is a contract, and where the parties consent that a judgment be a final adjustment of its rights, as its terms import, they cannot appeal." But here it was stipulated as in a written contract, that as to this thing it should not be final. They rushed to Sacramento, and got Governor Stoneman to convene an extra session of the Legislature. For what? Mr. Dunn figured up that we owed to the State about $1,000,000. He counted interest upon this at 2 per cent a month, compounding every half second, I believe. I don't know how he got at it.

MR. DUNN [Interrupting]: That is not a fair statement of it.

MR. HAYMOND: It is something like counting up the value of moon-beams and multiplying them by a hundred.

There was no interest under the law upon these taxes; there was no attorney's fees; there were no penalties. But if there were, the State had a stipulation that they might appeal. But they said "the Supreme Court won't hear that." I went to General Stoneman with Colonel Joseph P. Hoge, and submitted to him a stipulation at that time, and after consulting with Colonel Hoge, whom we regard here as the head of the bar, and as to matters of taste and propriety we will take his word, and look to him as our leader, type, and pattern of what should be done at the bar, he, "the noblest Roman of them all," I telegraphed to the Supreme Court of the United States the situation here, and asked them if they would advance that case to a hearing, if both sides stipulated. You cannot stipulate to advance cases in the Supreme Court of the United States. The Judges directed the clerk to telegraph back to forward the records, and they would determine the motion, which was all that they could say.

An extra session was called. And now we have this remarkable position, and the records will bear me out in this, that the State was paid every dollar that belonged to it; that they had a stipulation with us that the Supreme Court should determine whether we owed any more, and if we did, that they should take judgment for that amount. They were the plaintiffs in error. I made this stipulation in order to test the law, because they have always been wrong. There is no instance in all of this litigation where they have ever been right. In order to test their law. I went, though not an attorney of the Supreme Court, under an associate's name, Judge Brown; and at the opening of the next term of Court, moved to dismiss that case, upon the ground that this was a consent judgment, taking their ground that the Court would not hear them. Of course, I knew that they were not consent judgments, not within the meaning of that term. And, so that I may state this thing accurately, I have the documents here.

I agreed with the Attorney-General that that motion might come up without notice. And here is the stipulation. And I will venture that that presented the attorneys in such a position as you have never seen them. They were the plaintiffs in error; they were the only men asking that the Court would not hear the case. I could not make the motion against my own stipulation, without stating it, and so I stated the whole case. And then, I said in order to make myself right—because no lawyer would want to stipulate one thing and do the other—I said: “In making and submitting this motion, it is due to counsel who made the stipulation, the defendants in error in the Court below, to say that they fully recognized the binding force and effect of that stipulation, and that this motion was not made for defeating the effects thereof; but merely to take the opinion of the Court upon this question,” etc.

That was in the San Bernardino case, a test case. There were fifty or one hundred of all of these cases. On the next morning the Supreme Court said: “This is not a consent judgment; we will hear the case and determine it.”

MR. DUNN: I understand you that the San Bernardino case that went up to the United States Supreme Court was the case in which it was stipulated that all of the other cases should abide the decision in that?

MR. HAYMOND: That was the stipulation between the Attorney-General and myself.

MR. DUNN: I deny that charge, and I shall prove the truth of my statement to the committee this afternoon.

MR. HAYMOND: I simply assert that that was the stipulation. I have made a great many stipulations in my life that were not in writing. I practiced law with one of the Justices of the Supreme Court on the bench for six years in one of the counties of this State, and I have practiced for years, and I never knew a stipulation to be filed in that Court. Governor Johnson can vouch for that. He lived there, in the County of Sierra, and nine stipulations out of ten were not in writing. We understood what we wanted; whereas, if we were to put it in writing, we might not express it. I do not know whether there was a written stipulation or not, nor does it matter. My verbal stipulation has always been better than a written one; because I construe it upon the other side. Mr. Dunn talks to me about law, when he is not a lawyer and does not know anything about it. He ought to have a lawyer.

MR. DUNN: I do not deny stipulation in the San Bernardino case, but I do deny that a stipulation was made in that case, covering all of the other cases—

MR. HAYMOND [Interrupting]: I never said it did. I said I had a stipulation, or had stipulated that the other cases should abide the result of that one.

MR. DUNN: I deny that.

MR. HAYMOND: You deny it because you do not know anything about it. You might deny that Mr. Storke and I had met upon the street this morning. That was the understanding.

They heard the San Bernardino case, and they said there was no attorney's fees, and no nothing, and decided it upon its merits. That I will present to you. That, of course, disposed of everything. What was the extra session called for? We understand that the Governor can call a session of the Legislature, and can say the subject upon which the Legislature is to legislate, but the Governor, in this most peculiar proclamation, directed them to do certain legislation. But nothing was to be done. These five cases had started on their way up. It was the duty of the people to take them up, and we had made no objections. There was not an engrossed statement in any of those cases, but we waived them; we told them that they might make up their record on appeal from the rough, unengrossed notes, or in any other manner; to go up to that Court just as they pleased. There never was an engrossed bill of exceptions in any of those cases, because the Attorney-General had no money, and I waived that. You will find, when you investigate that, that that is the foundation of these notions that Mr. Dunn has got about the Attorney-General having falsified his own record.

Instead of taking the five cases, as the Supreme Court of the United States had directed, so that they could determine the whole subject, they took up one case, and the Supreme Court said: "No, we won't hear this thing piecemeal. Bring up your records." Then along came Attorney-General Johnson, and he and I met, and three times in the United States Court we have argued these questions; three times, and we have never shrunk from their determination. And I tell you now, that there is a case pending in this very Court, and this community can have it called up, because when we consent, this Court will take it up and determine all of these questions, and I will agree that it shall.

Then another proposition: I will show you that I offered to stipulate with this State to waive all of these constitutional objections, and to go into the Courts and try the question upon the question as to whether we had not paid all our taxes; agreeing to pay the balance, and not to appeal, unless they provided for appeal; stipulating that I would interpose no technical objections. Now, Mr. Storke, it is an elementary proposition that no State that desires the name of being a civilized State will deal with its citizens upon any other basis than that. That is the reason a State is not allowed to be sued, because a State will do justice.

MR. STORKE: Do you mean, to bring an action upon an implied obligation to pay?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; and let the Court determine how much we owe, if anything. We claim that we have overpaid our taxes. But we will admit that the State Board of Equalization in 1883 admitted that they had assessed us above all other property.

A MEMBER: Did you pay any taxes for 1885, 1886, and 1887?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; and another thing: when this suit for the taxes of 1885 was pending, we took into the Court about $300,000 and tendered it to them.

A MEMBER: The tax was $500,000.

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; and we stipulated that it should not affect the balance of the debt; and up to the very day that the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States issued, they only had to take an order of the Court to get that money. Now, if anybody owes that money to the State of California, it is the bondsmen of the Controller. He refused to take any money on account. The Court decided that he was wrong in it. He managed and controlled the case, and he lost $300,000 that might now have been in the State Treasury. That is in the record.

MR. DUNN: In what Court was that tendered?

MR. HAYMOND: In the Circuit Court of the United States, and in the pleadings. When we did that, Mr. Marshall was the Attorney-General, and he went, as you should have gone, and got an order from the Court, that the money be paid to him. Such a thing is without parallel.

MR. DUNN: Where is the money now?

MR. HAYMOND: We have got it, and you owe it to the State, or your bondsmen owe it. For every year, although not one dollar of these taxes has ever been legally levied, not one dollar, why did they not press their suits, and why do they not press them now?

What wrong have we done? That stipulation is open to you to-day. I will wipe out every judgment; I will agree with you, sir, to go into that Court, and they may determine and take an account of all the assessments, with regard to the constitutionality of this debt, and without regard to any other provisions, if we owe the State one single dollar, I will leave it to this committee, if they will assume the responsibility. If the Legislature will authorize you to sit under the sanction of your oath, I will leave it to you, and I will give a bond security to pay the amount; and will give a bond that will establish before you that we have paid more than half a million dollars more than is due, and will agree that when you render judgment in our favor, I will contribute that amount to the State Fund. I will stipulate to leave it to this committee; and I will leave it to you, Mr. Storke, if the State will do that.

Now, what position are they in? They talk about a sovereign State. The great trouble is that these men have confounded themselves with the State of California; and their unlawful acts they ask the sanction of this people for. Strangers to our race, strangers to our institutions, they cannot comprehend these great principles which are born in every American boy, and are his birthright.

A MEMBER: I, for one, would be willing to accept your proposition.

MR. HAYMOND: I am willing to stipulate now, though I am a stranger to Mr. Storke, I know he is a lawyer, and I know the estimation in which he is held by the Courts of this State, and I know the estimation in which I hold him; I am willing to put my case in his hands, without any stipulation, and without any appeal, and whatever his judgment is, they may take an appeal from it, but as to me, it shall be a finality.

Now you say you have not got the power to do that; but, my God, is there any law or any constitution which prohibits a State, through its Legislature, from doing right? Are you not passing claims every day which could not be enforced against the State? Are you not giving relief against your laws? I made these proposals to your State authorities years ago in writing. They have never submitted them to the Legislature. I am willing now to join with anybody in passing or submitting that bill. I can make a stipulation after the bill, and it is valid, with the Attorney-General. I will make it; will waive everything; will waive the judgments which he will get in any United States Court in Christendom. I am saying these things to you because this company has been misrepresented. Times have changed greatly in the last few years in its favor. While the men at its head were struggling to preserve this property to you, while they had to bear the reputation of being rich, I grant to you all that their agents, unobserved, did things which ought not to have been done. My advice to them in writing, which I will read to you on this investigation, was, that under this form of government, this great Anglo-Saxon race, and the sense of justice implanted in its bosom, the railroad company could safely appeal to the people, without having a lobby behind it. Then it was all there was of the State; now it is nothing. It has elevated this State into its prominence; they have dropped out of sight, and are insignificant. In their earnest effort to keep from the legislative halls, and to keep that corporation out of politics, we deserve—we may not receive it to-day, but we will to-morrow—the assistance of every honest man in this State.

It is proclaimed publicly through the State and through the press, that bills have been introduced into this Legislature in order to bring the "sack" to light. I do not know whether there is any truth in that. I have known something of Legislatures from my boyhood, and I have seen very few men in any Legislature that I believed to be corrupt. I have known men to be sold, delivered, and paid for—or heard that it was so—whom no amount of money or any indirect influence could purchase. The great danger in this matter, when we are striving to accomplish this thing is, that the best men in the Legislature will be allied with the base ones, if there are any, under the pretense that they are serving the people of the State.

I say again, that we desire support in these measures after these offers solemnly made in writing. And I will go further than that, and tell you, Mr. Storke, the dangers of the situation. If I had time I could satisfy you of it; of our desires as citizens of this State, for this property will soon pass away to other States. I am willing to do this, to stipulate that the record now in the Supreme Court shall be made as you will make it, to determine all of these questions. I will give you a carte blanche stipulation to amend that record as you please, without anything except the pledge of your lawyer-like reputation that you will do right in passing upon this question. I will stipulate with you that that case may be heard on thirty-six hours' notice, to have all of these questions decided. I will agree with you further, to have a bill passed, in case this whole system is declared invalid, which the Supreme Court has already declared it to be; and I say, as Mr. Conkling said, "It stands without parallel; it is all upside down."

I have read his speech upon it in the "Examiner" this morning. He was one of the greatest lawyers that this country ever produced. No man ever doubted the purity of his character.

I will agree with you, and with this committee, to put the case in your hands; to go with you to these Justices and ask them to determine it as a public matter. Then we will know what the law is. If it is decided that the whole thing is invalid, I will sit down with any committee which you may appoint, and assist you to the best of my ability—and I know as much about these things as almost anybody, because I have made them my study for twenty years—in preparing a revenue bill which will collect taxes from the railroad company. These proposals we come to you with. Because I want this railroad company to appear before this people as I know it should. Can it be done? You remember as a lawyer, Mr. Storke, that for a thousand years when the King of England, that country from which we derive our jurisprudence, took the oath of coronation at Westminster, surrounded by the tombs of his ancestors, that oath was taken to administer justice in mercy. And no State can afford to make this record; no State can afford to refuse its citizens a hearing in Court if that citizen waives all of his rights. That will settle this question.

MR. STORKE: I will ask you whether you would be willing to make up a record of the case that is now in the Circuit Court so that it should contain nothing but Federal questions?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir. But in that case, put them all in; let us know the whole of them. I speak now of an amicable arrangement which shall not raise any of these questions. I speak now as to this stipulation. I do not raise the question that the law is unconstitutional; I waive that. I only raise the one question that they have assessed property which they ought not to have assessed; and that they have assessed it out of proportion to other property in the State. This stipulation which I make does not involve any of the questions which we waive.

MR. STORKE: I asked you if you were willing that a record should be made up containing Federal questions?

MR. HAYMOND: What do you call the Federal questions? I have always done that. Certainly I will do that. But that question will be decided by this Court here, and the Supreme Court have decided it. If their decision is against us, we will have a writ of error. Most of these cases have been decided.

MR. DUNN: The case of the State of California against the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the case against the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company, were not ~~appealed~~.

MR. HAYMOND: I made a stipulation to the Attorney-General: I do not know what that stipulation is, but he has got it: I have not seen it.

MR. DUNN: The stipulation is an agreement. [Inaudible.] General findings were entered in those cases. It is agreed that those shall be set aside, and that the cases may be brought up in the United States Supreme Court. Will you agree and stipulate to have those cases brought up, and the decision of the question as to whether our system of assessment is in violation of the fourteenth amendment, or whether you have had due process of law?

MR. HAYMOND: We have had due process of law.

MR. DUNN: Whether our system of assessment is in violation of the fourteenth amendment? Will you agree to take a case of that kind up to the Supreme Court embracing the question of the fourteenth amendment only?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir. And I will take this case up now any day that the Court can hear it.

MR. DUNN: The case against the California Pacific, and the Northern Railroad Company, and the San Pablo and the Tulare, I think, contain no Federal questions of franchise, etc.

A MEMBER: In that stipulation, do you reopen the back cases?

MR. DUNN: No, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: I shall not raise the question that we are not subject to taxation at all. That was decided in the Union Pacific cases, and it has not been raised in any of these cases.

MR. STORKE: If we are going to make a test case, we had better have all of the Federal questions in.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I will put that in. We have paid our taxes this year in full.

MR. STORKE: For the benefit of the State hereafter, that should be settled.

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir; and in case that decision is against you, a commission should be appointed of the Governor, the Attorney-General, the Controller, the Secretary of State, and some other officers, vested with power to appoint a commission of three competent men, to present to the next Legislature some system of railroad taxation. We will pay our taxes up to that time, without any law. It has not taken any law to make the railroad pay their taxes. We will pay the taxes up to that time. This will settle the whole matter, I understand it, and we need not go any further.

SEVERAL MEMBERS: No, sir.

MR. DUNN: I propose to prove that my statements are true.

MR. STORKE: That any officer of the State has committed a falsification of the records?

MR. DUNN: In relation to the taxes of 1884, in the cases against the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific, or the San Pablo and Tulare, or the Northern Railway, one of those cases contained the findings which I understand were agreed to by the attorneys for the railroad?

MR. HAYMOND: No, sir; they were submitted, but the findings were settled by the Court.

MR. DUNN: They were prepared by the attorneys for both sides and submitted to the Court, and there was no question raised between the attorneys as to the findings. Of course, counsel discussed the matter, but when you presented the findings to Judge Sawyer, it was agreed that you gentlemen were satisfied.

MR. HAYMOND: Possibly, yes, sir.

MR. DUNN: In every case where the findings would show that the State Board of Equalization, in 1883, assessed the fences, they were untrue. I propose to show to this committee that the Supreme Court of the United States decided some of those cases upon findings that were false.

MR. HAYMOND: That is very often the case.

MR. DUNN: I shall also be able to show this committee that four miles of water across the Bay of San Francisco was found to be assessed by said Board—

MR. HAYMOND [Interrupting]: I make no point upon that. I don't know whether it was or not.

MR. DUNN; I shall prove by Mr. Ryan, the tax agent for that company, that he knew that we did not assess fences.

MR. HAYMOND: I believe I can put you on the stand and show that you did assess fences last year. I don't think you intended to do it.

MR. DUNN: Put me on.

MR. HAYMOND: Mr. Delmas said that you had done it up to 1885.

MR. DUNN: Mr. Delmas did not say anything of the kind, that we assessed fences up to 1885.

THE CHAIRMAN: The committee will now take a recess until two o'clock and fifteen minutes P. M.

At two o'clock and fifteen minutes P. M. the Commission met, and took a recess until three o'clock P. M., at which hour they met in the United States Circuit Court room, and the following proceedings were had:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, }
City and County of San Francisco. } ss.

I, Creed Haymond, being first duly sworn, do depose and say: That about the month of September, 1887, the honorable Stephen M. White, now Lieutenant-Governor, came to me and represented that the Attorney-General desired him, White, to see me, and to state that the Attorney-General was anxious to have the question whether the Constitution of California, relating to the taxation of the property of railroad and other quasi-public corporations, was in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and wished to know whether I would sign a stipulation that the cases might be advanced for argument upon the calendar of the Supreme Court. I stated to Mr. White that a stipulation to that effect would amount to nothing; that the Supreme Court would only advance the case upon statement of facts, showing that it was such a case as should be advanced, and not upon the mere stipulation of attorneys; or, in other words, that the Supreme Court of the United States would not permit the attorneys to arrange its calendar. I had just received, and had upon my table the records upon the writs of error in cases which the Attorney-General desired to be advanced. I turned to the record, and showed Mr. White that under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, already made, the question which the Attorney-General desired to have decided would not, in all probability, be determined by the Court; that the cases would probably pass off on the questions of the taxation of the Federal franchise, or other infirmities in the tax. Mr. White, after examining the record, agreed with me upon this subject. I told him that I would be pleased to see the Attorney-General, and talk with him upon the subject. Subsequently, the Attorney-General called, and I went over the same matters with him. He either presented to me a written statement or stated orally that he would

Had I joined with the Attorney-General in the representation, as requested, I believed, from my standpoint, that I would have been imposing upon the Court.

I also stated to the Attorney-General that there were five cases pending in the Supreme Court of the State of California; that I would stipulate to take them up with him at any time the Court would determine, and bring them to a hearing. I said to him that these cases could be decided and taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States on writs of error, but that a case going to the Supreme Court of the United States from a State Court upon a writ of error would only give the Court jurisdiction over Federal questions, and that it would not look into minor questions, such as whether fences had been assessed or not. I also told him that we could probably get such cases before the Supreme Court of the United States as soon as the other cases and get a decision on the Federal questions. He declined to join with me in such a stipulation, and advised me that he would apply, as he had the right to do, to advance the other cases. Having notice that the application would be made, I sent to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States a telegram, of which the following is a copy:

SAN FRANCISCO, October 7, 1887.

Clerk United States Supreme Court, Washington, D. C.:

The Attorney-General of California advises me that he will move the Supreme Court of the United States to advance the railroad tax cases now upon its calendar. Five tax cases were tried in the Superior Court of San Francisco about the beginning of this year, and in each case judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, upon the ground that the statute of California under which railroad taxes were assessed, was in violation of the State Constitution, and therefore void. These cases have been appealed to the Supreme Court of California, and will be heard at the January term of that Court. If the judgment of the lower Court is affirmed, it will finally dispose of all the tax cases pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. I suggested to the Attorney-General to state this fact in his petition to advance the cases, believing that the Supreme Court of the United States would not wish to pass upon that question when it was pending and about to be heard and determined by the highest Court of this State, it being a question as to the construction of the State Constitution, the determination of which by the State Court would be followed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Attorney-General has said that he will not state this proposition to the Court in his petition to advance the cases, but has agreed that I may state the fact to the Court. The Attorney-General will be in Washington and no doubt will agree that this statement is correct. Please be kind enough to submit this telegram to the Chief Justice, in order that the attention of the Court may be called to the fact. If, notwithstanding this, the cases are advanced, I would like to have them heard at the earliest moment possible.

I made the statement that the cases would be heard at the January term of the Supreme Court of California, because I then believed that upon my motion, and owing to the importance of the questions involved, the Supreme Court of California would advance them upon the calendar. I was disappointed in this, for the Attorney-General appeared in opposition to the motion and prevailed against me; hence, the cases have not been heard up to this date.

During my statement before the Assembly Judiciary Committee, a difference of opinion arose as to whether I had made a stipulation with the Attorney-General, Mr. Marshall, that the other cases, involving the taxes for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, should abide the decisions in the San Bernardino case. Mr. Dunn thought that there was no stipulation. I knew at the time that there had been such an agreement, but whether it had ever been reduced to writing or not, I did not know. I find in my letter-book a press copy of such a stipulation, as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States, District of California.

COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO, }
 vs. } No. 2829.
 SOUTHERN PACIFIC R. R. Co. }

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to the above entitled action and to the actions hereinafter referred to by number, and all recently determined by the Circuit Court of the United States, that the last mentioned actions shall abide by and be governed by the final determination of the Supreme Court of the United States in the above entitled action; and it is further stipulated that neither party will treat any of the judgments entered in said cases as consent judgments; that if necessary to avoid such treatment by the Supreme Court of the United States, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff in each of said actions may on motion of the plaintiff be set aside and judgments in each of the said cases in that event shall be entered nunc pro tunc of the date of the present judgments in favor of the defendants, according to the original decision of the Court, and to have the same force and effect in all respects as if such judgments had been so entered at said time. The cases referred to and which are to abide the final decision aforesaid are numbered on the calendar of the United States Circuit Court as follows: 2755, 3093, 2781, 2778, 3060, 3061, 2786, 2788, 3108, 2798, 2797, 3063, 2803, 3071, 2820, 2819, 2825, 2914, 2773, 2840, 2841, 3062, 2756, 3094, 2767, 2829, 3064, 2789, 2787, 3109, 2809, 2840, 2835, 2839, 3096, 3065, 3102, 3101, 3077, 2817, 2818, 2837, 3095, 3059, 2677, 2780, 3069, 3109, 3104, 3083, 2826, 2913, 2782, 2779, 3072, 3068, 2759, 3097, 2838, 3219, 3218, 2811.

Dated March —, 1884.

CREED HAYMOND,
 Counsel for defendants, for all attorneys for defendants.

E. C. MARSHALL, Attorney-General, State of California:

The case intended to be referred to stands on the calendar as 2757, instead of 2829, and the latter number was entered by mistake. This stipulation is amended according to the original intention of inserting said number 2757.

CREED HAYMOND,
 Counsel for defendants.

E. C. MARSHALL, Attorney-General for State of California:

No actions, to my knowledge, have been brought by the State of California to collect the taxes for the year 1887 upon the assessment by the State Board of Equalization. On the roll, the Northern Railway, the San Pablo and Tulare, and the California Pacific Companies appear delinquent, and none of these cases involve the question of Federal franchise. If a suit is brought upon either or all of said cases I will appear at once and agree that the cases shall be tried at the earliest moment possible, and afford the State an opportunity to try in either of the cases the issue whether fences were or were not included in the assessment by the State Board of Equalization for the year 1887. I am willing to stipulate that said cases, if brought, shall not only be tried as speedily as possible, but, after determinations by the Superior Court or Circuit Court, as the case may be, that the record may be prepared, and the cases hurried forward to the appellate Court for final determination with all possible speed.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MR. HAYMOND: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to offer in evidence some documentary evidence showing the position of the railroad company from the beginning of this litigation. They are communications from myself—some newspaper articles and communications from myself—stating the position of the company. Many of them are long, and if it suits the pleasure of the committee, I will give the pages of the paper that they are in, and let the shorthand reporter take them and incorporate them.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir; there are no objections.

MR. HAYMOND: They just sustain the positions that I took this morning. I first refer to an article on page twenty-nine of my scrap-book, entitled: "The Position of the Railroad Company Stated, and why the Corporation refused to accept the valuation of the State Board of Equalization." This is made over my own signature as counsel for the company, simply to sustain what I have put in, but I want the article to go into the record.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: The article referred to is as follows:

RAILROAD TAXATION.—THE POSITION OF THE RAILROAD COMPANY STATED.—LETTER FROM THE HON. CREED HAYMOND.—WHY THE CORPORATION REFUSES TO ACCEPT THE VALUATION OF THE STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

Editor Colusa Sun:

DEAR SIR: In your issue of March eighteenth, appears an article headed "The Railroad Taxes." In the positions taken by you in that article I in the main agree, and especially do I agree to the proposition "that rich men are interested more than poor men in maintaining not only the legal but the equitable rights of property, and they are interested more in the maintenance of good government."

The article in question bears upon its face evidences of the sincerity of the writer, and deals with what the writer terms the sins of the railroad company in a spirit more of regret than of anger.

A due regard for the judgment of thoughtful men, and respect for the opinions of the public, call for a statement of the position of the railroad company relative to taxation—a position much misunderstood, but as impregnable in law as it is just in morals.

PROMPT PAYMENT OF TAXES.

For many years prior to the adoption of the new Constitution the railroad companies of California, and especially those belonging to the Central Pacific system, paid their taxes promptly, and since the adoption of the new Constitution such companies have paid without question taxes assessed upon their stations, workshops, and lands by the same tribunals which assessed the property of other persons within their jurisdiction. The taxes so paid for the present fiscal year amounts, in the aggregate, to $250,000; and the taxes so paid by the railroad people for the years 1881 and 1882 in Colusa County amounts, as appears from the books of the tax agent of the company, to $9,098 22, while in Alameda County the payments for the same year and purposes amounted to $46,075 89, and in Sacramento County to $55,075.

CASES STATED.

Since the adoption of the new Constitution difficulties have arisen which the railroad companies deplore as deeply as can any one else. The new Constitution provides a general system of taxation which affects all property within the State, except railroad property operated in more than one county. This general system in brief provides that property shall be taxed in proportion to its value; that is to say, that the rate of taxation shall be the same as to all property, and that all property shall be assessed in the same proportion to its value, whether that proportion be one third or two thirds of the value thereof. This provision carried out produces that equality which is the very essence of taxation. This system requires that the proportions of value shall be ascertained by a general law affecting all persons and all property within its scope. It requires that before a liability is fixed there must be notice and an opportunity to be heard and given to every person whose property is to be affected. This system gives an appeal from the Assessor to the local Boards of Equalization, elected by the people of the counties—to Boards which hold their sessions at times fixed by law, and of which notice must be given—to Boards which must transact their business openly in the presence of the people, and must proceed according to rules of evidence calculated to insure justice. This system requires the assessment to be made in the county by the Assessor elected by the people of the county, and who acts in their presence and is directly responsible to them for his actions. It prevents property from being assessed in localities distant from the place where the property is situated. This system prescribes that the mode and manner of assessment must be carefully and precisely fixed by general laws; and lastly, this system allows every owner of property to deduct from the value of the same the value of mortgages, deeds of trust, or other liens thereupon, and permits the Assessor to assess such owner only for the beneficial interest which he has in the property, i. e., the value thereof after deducting the amounts of such mortgages or liens.

There are difficulties inherent in the subject which have hitherto rendered it impossible to frame laws which, under all circumstances, will distribute the burden of taxation with exact equality, but all just laws aim to accomplish, as nearly as may be, that end, and the general system adopted in the State of California contains the safeguards which experience has taught to be necessary for the protection of the citizen in his rights of property against unjust and arbitrary exactions. The framers of the new Constitution adopted another and special system, which applies alone to franchises, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock of roads operated in more than one county—not to all railroads in the State, nor to all property operated in more than one county. By this system one class of property is singled out from the mass of property, and is subjected to its operations. This special system finds its origin in Section 10 of Article XIII of the new Constitution. That section, in respect to the subject under consideration, prescribes that "the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock of all railroads operated in more than one county in this State shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization at their actual value, and shall be apportioned to the counties, cities and counties, cities, towns, townships, and districts in which such railroads are located in proportion to the number of miles of railway laid in such counties, cities and counties, cities, towns, townships, and districts." This special system, by virtue of Section 4 of the same article, as construed by the Supreme Court of this State, prevents the owners of such property from deducting from the value thereof the value of the mortgages or liens upon the same; or in other words, while the owners of all other property in the State are only assessed for the excess of value over mortgages and liens, the owners of such railroad property are to be assessed for the full value of the property, without any reduction whatever. From this summary it will be readily apparent to all that the owners of railroad property operated in more than one county are denied any protection from the general laws, constitutional or otherwise, which:

1. Require that property shall be taxed in proportion to its value.
2. Require such proportions to be ascertained by a general law.
3. Require that before liability is fixed, notice and an opportunity to be heard must be given.
4. Give an appeal from the Assessor to another tribunal.
5. Require the assessment to be made in the county, and prevent its being made in localities distant from the situs of property.
6. Which prescribe the mode and manner of the assessment, and the rules of procedure and evidence; and
7. Which allow deductions for indebtedness secured by mortgage or other liens.

THE POWER OF THE STATE BOARD MUST BE MEASURED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

Section 10 of Article XIII of the State Constitution contains a full grant of power. It is what the lawyers call self-executing. If that section be legal and valid, the power of the State Board under it, and the limitations upon that power, must be ascertained by an examination of the section itself, for it is not within the rightful authority of the Legislature to take away any part of the power conferred by the constitutional provision. Starting with the proposition—which cannot be disputed—it is manifest, if these provisions be valid, that railroad property operated in more than one county can be assessed at any time or place which the Board may in its pleasure elect to meet, without notice of any kind to persons to be affected by its actions; that it may assess the roads at $100,000 per mile, or it may assess them at $1 per mile, and its action being final and conclusive; that neither the railroad companies on the one hand, even if the power is exercised to the extent of confiscation; nor the people, on the other hand, if the Board became corrupt, and should assess the property at $1 per mile, could obtain any relief. The power of this Board under the Constitution was strongly but accurately stated by the Attorney-General of this State in his brief filed in the Supreme Court in the case of the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad vs. The State Board of Equalization. Said the learned Attorney-General: "There is nothing in the Constitution or statutes requiring such notice—a notice of some kind to the property owner before his liability is fixed—or pointing out specifically the manner to be pursued by the Board in making assessments and fixing valuations. This being so, it may adopt such a mode of procedure as appears to it suitable and proper. If the Board has adopted no general rules applicable to all cases, then whatever manner was adopted by the Board in making the particular assessment complained of became the rule of this case. The Board have authority to make rules for its own government; can change such rules as often as it sees fit; can adopt a new rule for each case which comes before the Board, if it desires to do so." In other words, the will of this Board, without regard to the forms in which that will is expressed, without regard to the evidence by which it arrives at its conclusion, without regard to the time or place at which it acts, is the law of the land.

IT POSSESSES SUPREME AND ABSOLUTE POWER

Over all the property under its jurisdiction. It may virtually exempt such property from taxation, or under the pretense of taxation it may confiscate it. We maintain that such a power vested in any tribunal is incompatible with the existence of republican institutions, and that its exercise would be subversive of the great principles which underlie our form of government. It may be here asserted, without fear of successful contradiction, that from the time of the establishment by James II of the "High Commission" to the time of the creation of the Board of Equalization in California, no tribunal has existed either in England or America which even claimed the right to deal with life, liberty, or property subject to no rules except those of its own pleasure. Nearly two centuries have elapsed since the power to deprive a person of property, except in accordance with the general laws of the land, has been asserted in any country where the English language is spoken. It is true that in some States laws exist for the ascertaining of the value of railroad property by tribunals differently constituted from the tribunals which ascertain the value of other property, but such tribunals have jurisdiction over all railroad property. They must proceed upon notice; the manner of their proceeding is regulated by laws analogous to the laws governing other tribunals exercising like powers; laws which throw around such property every protection which the laws of the land give to property in general. It is against this special system—under a claim to the protection of general laws—that the railroad company has taken its stand. It relies for its jurisdiction upon rightfulness of its cause—the decisions of the Courts which will be pronounced when the case shall be heard upon its merits—and upon the enlightened judgment of a people jealous of those rights which government was ordained to protect and preserve.

MONEY TENDERED.

The railroad company seeks in this matter to violate no obligation which it owes to the public. In the performance of the great office which it has taken upon itself, of protecting the property of its shareholders, whose trustee it is, against the exercise of unlawful power, it has kept itself clear of the mere question of dollars and cents by tendering to every county more than once a tax in excess of that paid by other citizens of the same county upon their property. Nor will the company stop at this, but in each case which has been or shall be brought against it will for a like purpose waive all questions of the legality of the tax and agree that a judgment may go against it for a tax upon a valuation higher than was ever affixed to such property in the United States. It does this in the consciousness that the class to which you refer is standing anxiously by, seeking to make political capital out of any false step the company might take in the premises. It does this in discharge of equitable obligations, although there be no law to compel their performance. It has paid to San Diego County $25,000, not because it has been assessed, but because, if assessed, there would be that much due to that county. The Directors of the company never will, until they have the judgment of the highest tribunal in the land, allow one dollar of the property of the stockholders, whose trustees they are, to be taken from its treasury in violation of the fundamental laws of the land. They will pay to the counties, even if the company be successful in this litigation, a tax for the last two fiscal years which, beyond all question, will exceed the amount legally chargeable against them. Its Directors appreciate the value of an enlightened public opinion to aid them in the discharge of onerous duties; and none more than they feel the importance of being right, to the end that such aid may be secured. Against the arbitrary power conferred upon this State Board of Equalization the railroad company comes into the Courts of the country and interposes as shield between the property of its stockholders and the assaults of this power.

FEDERAL CONSTITUTION DEPENDED ON.

The provisions of Section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. That section declares that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

This may be summed up in a single sentence: "The equality of all, whether rich or poor, high or low, before the law." Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Such is the language of the amendment, and it applies to the action of the State, whether the State speaks through her legislative assembly, or through her people in their original capacity, whether through acts of the Legislature, or by the voice of constitutional enactments. "The principal embodied in the clause quoted," says Mr. Justice McKee, "underlies all forms of government by law. * * * The Legislature (the State) has no power to take away a man's property, nor can it authorize its agents to do so without first providing for personal notice to be given to him, and for a full opportunity of time, place, and tribunal to be heard in defense of his rights. This constitutional guarantee is not confined to judicial proceedings, but extends to every case in which a citizen may be deprived of life, liberty, or property, whether the proceeding be judicial, administrative, or executive in its nature." And Mr. Justice McKinstry, in the same case, Mulligan vs. Smith, holds that any system of taxation which does not provide for notice or process by means of which the property owners are to be subjected to the judgment of the tribunal which fixes the tax or assessment is void.

Says Earl, Justice, in the well reasoned case of Stuart vs. Palmer (74 N. Y. 191):

"It is difficult to define, with precision, the exact meaning and scope of the phrase 'due process of law.' Any definition which could be given would probably fail to comprehend all the cases to which it would apply. It is probably wiser, as stated by Mr. Justice Miller of the United States Supreme Court, to leave the meaning to be evolved by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, and the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded. (Davidson vs. Board of Administrators of New Orleans, 17 Alabama Law Journal, 23.) It may, however, be stated generally, that due process of law requires an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard, and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights. A hearing or an opportunity to be heard, is absolutely essential. We cannot conceive of due process of law without this."

The learned Judge continuing, says:

"In Ireland vs. City of Rochester (51 Barb, 414), Judge James C. Smith, speaking of the imposition of assessments, says: 'It is in the nature of a judicial proceeding against them, and its effect is to take their property for public use. * * * It is a plain principle of justice applicable to all judicial proceedings, that no person should be condemned or shall suffer judgment against him without an opportunity to be heard,' and he says that an Act assessing persons without notice, transcends the power of the Legislature, and is itself void. In the matter of Ford (6 Lans, 92), Judge Gilbert says that the duties of Assessors in making assessments are of a judicial nature, and that it is a fundamental rule that in all judicial or quasi judicial proceedings, whereby the citizen may be deprived of his property, he shall have notice and an opportunity of a hearing before the proceedings can become effectual. That Assessors act judiciously, see also Barhyte vs. Shepard (35 N. Y. 338), and Clark vs. Norton, (49 N. Y. 243). In Overing vs. Foote (65 N. Y. 363),

Mr. Commissioner Reynolds says: 'The general theory under our laws for taxation of property, is that the citizen to be affected must have some sort of notice of the proceeding to be had against his property, and that in some form he may be heard, if wrong is apprehended, before any portion of his estate is seized for the support of the government.'

Judge Earl in the same opinion quotes with approval from Judge Cooley, the following: "We should say that notice of proceedings in such cases, and an opportunity for a hearing of some description, were matters of constitutional right. It has been customary to provide for them, and it is not to be assumed that constitutional provisions, carefully framed for the protection of property, were intended or could be construed to sanction the legislation under which officers might secretly assess one for any amount in their discretion, without giving him an opportunity to contest the justice of the assessment."

Judge Earl concludes his opinion upon the topic in the following significant language: "It is not enough that the owners may by chance have notice, or that they as a matter of favor have a hearing. The law must require notice to them, and give them a right to a hearing and an opportunity to be heard. It matters not upon the question of the constitutionality of such a law, that the assessment has, in fact, been fairly apportioned. The constitutional validity of the law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but by what may by its authority be done."

The case of Stuart vs. Palmer, from which I have quoted at length, was decided by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, but it is authority in this State, having been approved by the Supreme Court of California, in the case of Mulligan vs. Smith, lately decided. The terms "life, liberty, and property," comprehend every right known to the law. (Cummings vs. Missouri, 4 Wall. 320.) In Munn vs. Illinois (94 U. S. 123) it is held that while this clause in the fourteenth amendment is new in the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the State, it is old as a principle of civilized government, and as the Constitution contains no definition of the words used, their significance must be determined by ascertaining the effect which usage has given when employed in the same or like connection. In the Sinking Fund cases (99 U. S. 718), Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States says: "The United States * * * are not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but equally with the States, they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property, without due process of law."

THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

Nor shall any State "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." This, too, is the declaration of the fourteenth amendment. This amendment is

THE SUPREME LAW OF THE LAND,

Anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. In construing constitutions we are not confined to narrow or technical rules of law. The greatest constitutional lawyers of this country have been those who, possessing but moderate knowledge of the technical learning of the law, have brought to the consideration of the subject a thorough knowledge of the object and purposes of rightful governments, and who, with broad and enlightened minds, have applied strong common sense rules to the interpretation of fundamental laws.

PEOPLE ABLE TO GRASP THE SUBJECT.

The American people, by reason of their participation in the affairs of government, are able to grasp and comprehend a constitutional question. It has not been unfrequently the case that the educated masses arrive at a correct solution of such questions in advance of the mass of legal profession. Notably so was this the case upon the greatest constitutional questions ever raised, namely, of the relations of the Federal and State governments to each other, and of the relation of the people of the Union to each other. Upon these questions lawyers and Judges differed from the beginning, and after years of discussion were as far apart as ever. Yet the people seized upon these questions in the supreme moment and determined them with such accuracy that now no one questions the justice and wisdom of that determination. Hence it is that such questions may always be addressed with propriety to the people, and hence it is that the railroad company may securely rest upon its proper action, in lawfully resisting a violation of the Federal Constitution. Hence it is that it may in confidence look beyond the misrepresentations and misapprehensions of the hour to the time when the sound and just judgment of the people will approve and vindicate its action.

I think you may be assured that there is not an intelligent citizen of your county but upon reflection will say: "The railroad company has within the county been denied the equal protection of the law." Under the laws the property of every person in that county found protection against any unjust action of the Assessor in an appeal to the local Board of Equalization. This protection was denied to the railroad company. The railroad property, under the special system established, is taxed to support the county government, but is denied the protection of that government.

SUPPOSE THE CASE YOUR OWN.

To illustrate, and to bring it home to you, and to your people, let us suppose the Constitution had established, as it has, a general system of taxation, and then had provided that every tract of land within the County of Colusa should be assessed, not under that general system, but by a State Board, the members of which Board were elected for four years, and from distant parts of the State; that such assessment might be made without notice, without regard to any rules of procedure or evidence, under no law save the will and pleasure of the Board; that from such assessment there was no appeal. Suppose this case—apply it to yourself—and then you have the case of the railroad company. Let me ask if the supposed case existed, whether there is a single man in your county who would willingly submit to such a system? I do not think so. I might go further and say, if he did he would be unworthy to be a citizen of this country. The claim of the railroad company here presented may be put in a single sentence: It claims the right when its property is assessed for county purposes, to receive the benefit and protection which the county government affords to every other person within its limit. It claims the right to have its property valued, for the purposes of taxation, under the same rules of evidence, and by the same modes of procedure, which are applied in the valuation of other property. "Of the fourteenth amendment," says Judge Field, in the Virginia Jury cases, "it assures to every one the same rules of evidence and modes of procedure."

Commenting upon this decision, and upon the case of the People vs. Weaver (10 Otto, p. 539), John Norton Pomeroy, Professor of Law in the Hastings Law Department of the University of California, and one of the most learned men in his profession, says: "Upon the same principle a State law sanctioning the imposition of unequal burdens must fall before the constitutional amendment."

A FULL EXPLANATION.

For more than one year last past the railroad company has been trying to get this matter before the Courts of the county upon its merits; over a year ago it commenced proceedings in the United States Courts; an objection was taken to the form of the action by the parties representing the people. That objection was sustained. In every proceeding had since, the attorneys have refused to make the case upon its merits, but have objected to the form of the action.

When the time came that the property might be sold by the Tax Collector, proceedings were instituted, in the Superior Court of San Francisco, against the Tax Collector of each county to enjoin the sale. But in each case, as you will see by the complaint on file in your Superior Court, it was averred that the plaintiff in those actions, "while then and now denying all liability upon said pretended assessment, and claiming that all the proceedings had in relation thereof were in violation of law and the rights of the plaintiff, did tender and offer to the said defendant—the Tax Collector—the sum of (this blank in each case was filled by an amount equal to 60 per cent) in United States gold coin, in payment of the taxes which would be due upon said property if it had been assessed in the manner provided by law (that is, by the general law), and that the said plaintiff then was and ever since has been, and still is, ready and willing to pay the same; that the amount so tendered was and is in excess of the full amount of said State, county, township, and district taxes, which would be due upon said property, if it had been assessed as provided by law, and is and was in every respect in excess of the full amount which the defendant in that event would have been entitled to receive for such taxes; and plaintiff now brings the said sum (stating the amount in each case in accordance with the facts, and in your county for the year 1881, at $5,152 72) into Court, and offers the same to defendant, and if refused by defendant, subjects the said sum to such orders or judgments as the Court may make in the premises."

MONEY OUGHT TO HAVE BEEN ACCEPTED.

Now I submit to you and all candid men, if it would not have been the rightful policy of the parties representing the State to accept this money, have the Court make an order—which Judge Waymire will tell you he was ready to make, and to which we had no objections—that plaintiff pay the sum into the county treasuries, and then to have met the case as to the balance, upon its merits, and have the question determined free from all embarrassment as to the sum already paid. For some reason, which I never have been able to comprehend, the attorneys representing the State refused to act upon this order, but moved to dissolve the injunctions, taking an objection to the form of action, which objection Judge Waymire sustained. And here let me say, a serious misapprehension exists as to

WHAT JUDGE WAYMIRE'S DECISION WAS.

Judge Waymire's decision is published in full in the San Francisco "Chronicle," of March twelfth, on the fifth page. In that opinion Judge Waymire says that "the complaint not only fails to show a clear case for equitable relief, but it shows a clear case where no equitable relief is necessary." In other words, Judge Waymire holds that upon the admitted facts the tax was illegal and void upon its face; that a sale for such a tax would not cloud the title to the property, and that equity had no jurisdiction, there being an ample remedy in law. With Judge Waymire I do not agree. I believed when I filed the complaints, and still believe, that under the decision of the Supreme Court of this State in the case of Porter vs. Pico (55 Cal. p. 165), a party owning property had a right to enjoin a sale, even though the process under which the officer acts is void upon its face. In Porter vs. Pico (55 California Reports, p. 165), it is clearly held that an injunction will lie to restrain a sale by a public officer, although the authority under which the officer acts is void upon its face, and the sale would, therefore, be ineffectual to pass the title to the purchaser. This decision went upon the grounds that, although the sale would be ineffectual to pass the title, yet it would be sufficient to cast a doubt upon the validity of the title, and that the owner was entitled to an injunction to prevent the injury caused by such doubt. This seems to be a common sense view of the matter, and it is the view taken by our Supreme Court. But the very moment Judge Waymire made this decision, the remedy, if his decision was correct, was clear. Under a law passed last winter the writ of prohibition, as to Superior Courts, was enlarged so as to run against executive and ministerial officers exceeding their jurisdiction. The revenue laws provide that if there is any illegality in a tax the Tax Collector shall not sell; therefore, if we assume that Judge Waymire was correct, and that the tax was illegal and void, our remedy was not by injunction, but was by prohibition.

EXCESSIVE VALUATIONS.

One single illustration will show how excessive has been the valuation of this property. The Southern Pacific Railroad runs through a portion of San Diego County which is a desert. The right of way is granted by the Federal and State Governments, over the Federal and State lands. These lands could not be sold to-day for $1 an acre, and yet the land of the railroad company there has been assessed for nearly one hundred dollars per acre, while its road across the desert has been assessed for 25 per cent more than it would cost to replace it.

I agree with you that the directors of corporations should be held to the strictest accountability; that all good citizens should maintain the laws, "the legal and equitable rights of property, and the cause of good government," but I submit, in conclusion, that when, in the defense of the property of its shareholders, the directors of a corporation assert the supremacy of the Federal Constitution, and in the Courts uphold the grand central idea of that Constitution—"the equality of all before the law"—that such directors are in the faithful discharge of their trusts and of the highest duties which devolve upon citizens of a free country.

Respectfully yours,

CREED HAYMOND,
Associate Counsel of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

MR. HAYMOND: Then the article on the back of that page headed, "Railroad Tax Suits. Creed Haymond's Reply to the State Officials. The Controller's Figures, The Railroad's Assessment Compared with that of Other Corporations, Etc. A Speedy Settlement Desired." This article is signed by myself, and was published in all of the papers of the State. These articles are not offered for any other purpose than to show the position of the company. The article reads as follows:

Colonel Creed Haymond has submitted the following in reply to the opinions of Governor Stoneman, Attorney-General Marshall, and Controller Duinn, in relation to the railroad tax suits:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, November 10, 1883.

Governor GEORGE STONEMAN, Sacramento:

MY DEAR SIR: I find upon my table this morning your note of November 8, 1883, in answer to a proposition made to yourself relative to an adjustment of the railroad taxes. I also find copies of the opinion of the Attorney-General and Controller published in the morning paper of this date. Perhaps it will be unnecessary for me to state that I am startled and surprised at the views expressed by the Attorney-General and Controller.

The Attorney-General sees in the proposition an attempt not only to subvert the Government, but to overthrow civilization itself. My friend, the Attorney-General, also affects to see in the proposition a menace to the Government, and deduces from it the conclusion that the railroad companies are arrogating to themselves sovereign powers.

I must acquit you of sharing in any of these fears, and I regret that any action of mine in relation to the subject-matter should have excited in the mind of the Attorney-General any uneasiness as to the perpetuity of the institutions under which we live, or should have led him to conclude that civilization has about reached its end. I am sure that in the conference between your Excellency, and the Attorney-General, and myself, there was nothing in my manner to arouse such fears. It is true that I may have approached the presence of the powers that be without the fear with which the Hindoo approaches his idol, but I am certain that I did it with his awful reverence.

The Controller overwhelms us with an array of figures which set at defiance all rules of mathematics, and from which he has produced the most startling results. He finds that if the adjustment is made upon the basis suggested in my communication, the State and counties will lose the enormous sum of $1,014,626 10. The truth is, that computed up to the first day of November, 1883, the total amount claimed by the State and counties and remaining unpaid for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, including all penalties and interest, and attorney's fees at 10 per cent, is but $1,321,131 22, much the greater portion of which the companies propose to pay. I beg to suggest that if the figures in the Controller's office support the statements made by the Controller and show as large a balance as he claims to be due, vast sums of money paid by the railroad companies upon the taxes in question have never been reported to the Controller, or that his system of bookkeeping is as inaccurate and worthless as the array of figures which he presents in his communication to you.

The Attorney-General thinks the settlement of a disputed claim, between a citizen and the government, as to dollars and cents (say, advisedly, dollars and cents alone, for in all propositions it was understood that the contest on principle should be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States), would shake society to the center and leave government a wreck. From the beginning of the Government of the United States, under the administration of Washington and Hamilton, down to the settlement with the Spring Valley Water Company and the San Francisco Gas Company, under the administration of Marshall and Dunn, compromises and adjustments of conflicting claims between subjects (I but follow you in using this term) and governments, have been of every day occurrence. Many have been the causeless fears and sinister auguries in the past, but the government, like the visible frame of nature, still endures to be as lasting, we trust, as the sunny Isle of Greece, of which it has been said, "Eternal summer gilds them yet."

The railroad companies have adjusted with a great many counties their taxes for the three years in question, and I have yet to learn that any great amount of dissatisfaction has been expressed with those settlements, and I am sure, neither in civilization nor in good government, do those counties rank below their sisters.

I think the circumstances do not warrant the forebodings of General Marshall. I have confidence that his fears are unfounded, and faith that for all time to come civilization will advance, the Government of the Union still exist, filling its great destinies, giving not only the equal protection of the laws to all persons within its jurisdiction, but by its example assuring the same boon to all the peoples of the earth. I cannot believe that the hopes of mankind, or the greatness, glory, and fortunes of my country rests upon so slight a foundation that the appeal of any person or corporation to the established Courts to determine a liability for taxes will imperil the fortunes of the one or blast the hopes of the other.

A controversy between yourself and the railroad company upon the question as to whether its property was overvalued or not would not be appropriate. We tendered to the State of California this issue, and offered to prove on the trial of the cases which have been tried in the Circuit Court, that the valuations were excessive, and out of all proportion to the valuation fixed on other property. The State of California, represented by her Attorney-General, as I am advised, refused to meet this issue; this action should close the controversy on that point. The State Board of Equalization, the tribunal intrusted by law with fixing this valuation, admitted, in 1882, that its valuation for the two preceding years were erroneous.

The Controller, in his article, singles out the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and compares its valuation with the valuation fixed upon the Spring Valley Waterworks. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company has never earned or paid a dividend, and for many years, indeed up to 1882, did not earn its operating expenses. The Spring Valley Water Company, the Controller tells us, was assessed for the fiscal years 1881-82, at $5,740,770.

The Controller must have known that this property could be sold at auction, on thirty days' notice, in the City of San Francisco, for a sum nearly, if not double, the amount for which it was assessed. The Controller must have known that the property in question has been paying large dividends upon its capital stock.

Authorized by competent authority, I made a proposition to sell to the State of California the Southern Pacific Railroad, for 10 per cent less than it was valued at for the purpose of taxation in the years 1880 and 1881. That offer, I have no doubt, remains open not only to the State of California, but to any person who desires to accept it.

From the beginning of the litigation between the railroad company and the State, every effort has been made by the company to have that litigation determined as speedily as possible, and in almost every instance these efforts have been met by technical objections to the form of proceeding, and delays of every kind have been interposed by the State authorities.

A partial answer to the Controller's claims of enormous sums in interest is found in the fact that the company tendered, without any qualifications, 66 per cent of these taxes to the State and counties and brought the money into Court, and has ever since kept its tender good. I am also advised upon this subject that leading counsel employed by the State and counties have held that there is no such liability.

The company, although advised by eminent counsel that the new Constitution virtually exempted its property from taxation, has at all times been willing, notwithstanding that exemption, to contribute its fair and just proportion to the support of the government of the State, and of the various counties through which its road runs. We have not sought to compromise any legal claims, for, in our judgment, no such claims exist.

The company has been willing at all times, notwithstanding its success in this litigation, to pay a fair and just rate of taxation.

I submitted to your Excellency statements showing amount of revenue collected from railroad companies in other States—in States where the tax is levied upon income, and in States where the tax is placed upon an ad valorem valuation. I have shown you that the amount which the company voluntarily proposed to pay upon a single track road is from 50 to 100 per cent in excess of the amounts paid by double or four track railroads in other States, whose incomes are from twice to five times greater than that of the Central Pacific. As that portion of my communication has not been published by you, I herewith append articles contributed to the press of this city which show the facts.

In conclusion, permit me to say that I have read with satisfaction this paragraph in your letter: "The State is a sovereign power, and in order to secure the respect due to that power, must administer the laws justly and equally to all its subjects."

The great truth so aptly expressed by you, lies at the foundation of free government. The sad and bloody experience of ages, however, has demonstrated that States, though sovereign, have not always been just. "From Runnymede to Appomatox, the jewel for which civilized man has fought has been the law of the land, and equality before the law."

In order that no State in the Union should ever do that which, in your judgment, would cause it to lose the respect of all good men, an amendment was adopted to the Federal Constitution which provides, among other things, that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The railroad companies in question do not seek to have the revenue laws administered unjustly or unequally, but in respect to this very matter have always maintained that the system of taxation adopted in this State denies to the citizens of the United States, who own this property, the equal protection of the law, and violates not only the constitutional provision in question, but the fundamental principles of free government.

It may be in good taste for the Attorney-General and Controller of a great State, in a public document, to charge citizens who, under the shield of the Federal Constitution, seek the protection of the Courts, and who are willing to abide by their judgments, with arrogance and lawlessness. The citizens of this country who own this property have been reared in another school. They have been taught by a brave and hardy ancestry that to resist an illegal tax is to obey the laws of the country; that to enforce and uphold the provisions of the Federal Constitution is commendable and creditable. At the same time they have no quarrel with those whose education leads them to different conclusions.

My clients have implicit faith and confidence in the people of this State, and feel sure that the railroad companies will not, in their good judgment, take harm by reason of the fact that the shareholders, in the exercise of a right guaranteed to all, have asked that the Supreme Court of the United States should pass upon the question, whether the provisions of the Constitution of the State of California, relative to railroad taxation, deny to such shareholders the "equal protection of the law." No good citizen at this day will desire to overturn the true principles of Republican government, or esteem it a crime for any other citizen to assert the supremacy of the Federal Constitution. While regretting that your conclusions are that there is no power reposed in the Executive to adjust the matter so far as dollars and cents are concerned, upon equitable principles, I beg to return to your Excellency the thanks of my many clients for the attention you, at their instance, have given the subject, and to express the hope that a speedy settlement of the vexed question may be reached.

Very respectfully,

CREED HAYMOND.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I offer in evidence an article from the "Chronicle" of November 12, 1883, headed "The Railroad Taxes." It reads as follows:

THE RAILROAD TAXES.

The State officers having declined the offer of the railroads to compromise their taxes, Mr. Haymond, one of the attorneys for the railroad, replies in a long letter intended to be sarcastic, but which is certainly more rhetorical than business like. In fact, the correspondence on both sides seems designed more for political effect than to serve the State. The Controller, by omitting to credit sums already paid by the railroads on account of their taxes—and which, of course, will have to be credited—and of figuring interest and penalty without allowing for such payments or for tender of payments, makes a statement of $2,419,593 27 due. The railroads are credited with having paid only $320,810 12, while they say they have paid $1,200,000, and Mr. Haymond claims that they owe for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, not to exceed $1,321,131 22, interest and all, admitting the tax to be legal, which of course, he does not. This difference in figures indicates loose bookkeeping somewhere.

The Controller gives the following as a statement of the total taxes levied upon the railroads:

1880	$488,588 20
1881	548,065 83
1882	408,151 22
	$1,444,805 25

We omit the taxes for 1883 ($600,807 42) as yet not in litigation. The railroads proposed to pay on the basis of 1882, which would make the amount payable $1,297,965 77. The difference is only $146,838 48. But the State authorities very properly declined to accept the offer, because it involves a reduction of the tax, and is an admission by officers who have no power and no right to make such an admission that the assessments for 1880 and 1881 are too high. Now, this is a plain proposition, and Mr. Haymond has not attempted to answer it. He says some members of the State Board of Equalization admitted that the assessments of 1880 and 1881 were higher than they should have been or would have been but for the understanding the Board had before the decision of the Supreme Court, that they could raise other assessments to correspond. What does such an admission amount to? It does not express the views of the whole Board, and if it did, it was probably carried out by making the assessment of 1882 so low as to make the general average for the three years correspond with the views of the Board. It is simply absurd for the railroads to say they will keep the State and counties out of their revenue, because they have been assessed 10 per cent too high. That is all it amounts to. They offer to pay $1,297,965 77 out of $1,444,805 25, but refuse to pay the residue of $146,839 48 for fear of conceding the assessments of 1880 and 1881 to be fairer assessments. For the three years the average assessed tax is $481,601 75; as offered by the railroads, it is $432,655 19; the difference is $48,946 56—about 10 per cent. There is, perhaps, not a taxpayer in the State whose tax does not vary more than this. If this is a justification for the refusal to pay taxes, the State will be compelled to cease attempting to collect its revenue.

To an ordinary observer, the conduct of the railroad authorities appears altogether insincere in this matter. The indication is very strong that they do not want to pay at all, and merely make offers which they know cannot be accepted for effect upon public opinion, to excuse their delinquency. It is not, probably, that they are merely fighting for a difference of 10 per cent of their taxes. If they are sincere, why don't they offer the full tax? Mr. Haymond's reference to the settlement with the gas and water companies is unfortunate. Those companies did not obtain a reduction; they paid the tax in full, although their assessments were much higher for 1880 and 1881 than for 1882. No matter how the decision of the Supreme Court may go, the railroads cannot do business in this State without contributing their portion to the support of the government. A voluntary payment would be much better for them than any number of favorable decisions.

MR. HAYMOND: Then an article in the "Chronicle" of November 13, 1883, in this scrap-book, and then the "Chronicle's" response to that, November thirteenth. These articles relate to the proposition which I stated this morning—that the article had publicly made, and which had been accepted. They read as follows:

THE TAX CASES—WHAT THE CENTRAL PACIFIC PROMISES TO DO.

To the Editor of the "Chronicle":

SIR: I note your editorial to-day (Monday, November twelfth), commenting upon my reply to Governor Stoneman and through him to the letters of Attorney-General Marshall and Controller Dunn, both of which letters were published in the daily papers of this city.

You say that the correspondence on both sides seems designed more for political effect than to serve the State, and that much of my reply is irrelevant to the question involved. It may be true that much of my reply is irrelevant to the question involved, but it certainly was not irrelevant to the matters contained in the communications in question. It would not be becoming to me to reply to State officers to deal with their communications as irrelevant, or to assume that they were intended for political effect, instead of to serve the interest of the State. I replied to those communications calmly and temperately, stating fairly and in sincerity the position of my clients.

You seem to doubt the sincerity of the proposition made by the companies. Let me assure you that we have made many propositions to adjust this unfortunate difficulty, some of which have been rejected, and some of which have been accepted. In no case where there was an acceptance have we failed to perform what was offered, in letter and in spirit.

The fact that but thirty-two counties were interested in these matters, and that only thirteen or fifteen took interest enough in the prosecution of the cases to appear in answer to the summons of the State authorities, is satisfactory evidence to me, and ought to be to everybody else, that the position of the railroad companies is becoming understood, and that in the good judgment of the people no very great fears are entertained of a loss to the State or counties, whatever may be the result of the litigation.

From the tone of your article you make us appear to complain that we are assessed 10 per cent too high. It is needless for me to repeat that the assessment upon the single track railroad is from 50 to 100 per cent higher than any railroads in the United States have been assessed at. It is needless for me to repeat that a railroad, the net earnings of which do not exceed $1,500 or $1,600 per mile, cannot afford to pay from those earnings a tax of nearly $700 per mile.

I, however, do not propose to take up your space or time in an argument to prove the sincerity of the companies in all offers made.

In the editorial referred to you have stated what you consider a fair basis of settlement. You urge that if it is a matter of principle with the railroad companies they ought not to stand upon a few thousand dollars one way or the other. As an evidence of the sincerity with which the railroad companies which I represent have acted in this matter, and of their entire good faith, I now offer to adjust the disputes for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882 upon the basis of your figures, and that upon the payment by the companies upon the basis suggested by you all suits shall be settled and dismissed, except those which have been, or are to be, appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that we allow those cases to stand, in order that the principles at issue may be determined, agreeing, whatever may be the result in these cases, to adjust them in the end upon the same basis.

Permit me to say that from the beginning I have never doubted, and do not doubt now, the result of this litigation. I have confidence enough in my opinion to desire that at least one or two cases shall be kept open for the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Very respectfully yours,

CRED HAYMOND.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 12, 1883.

["Chronicle," November 13, 1883.]

THE LATEST PROPOSAL.

The latest proposal of the railway monopoly for the adjustment of its taxes due to the State and certain counties, under the assessment of the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, as made by the State Board of Equalization, will be found in a letter from the monopoly's counsel, Creed Haymond, to the "Chronicle," in another part of this paper. This letter was prompted by an editorial in Monday's "Chronicle" headed "The Railroad Taxes." In that article we presented the Controller's statement of the taxes levied on the monopoly's railroads for the three years next preceding 1883, as follows: For 1880, $448,588 20; for 1881, $548,065 83; for 1882, $408,151 22; total for the three years, $1,444,805 25. All of these taxes that are now unpaid, the monopoly, through its counsel, Haymond, proposed on the twentieth ultimo, in a communication to the Governor, to adjust with the State and counties "on the basis of the valuation fixed by the State Board of Equalization for the year 1882." This proposal was rejected for want of any authority in the Governor to entertain it, and because, as we stated in Monday's "Chronicle," its acceptance would involve a reduction of the taxes, and be an admission by officers who have no power to make such admission, that the assessments of 1880 and 1881 were too high. The State Board of Equalization, acting in 1880 and 1881, and no other officers in the State had the authority, by the Constitution and law, to make these assessments, and no future Board has power to abate any part of the tax levied under those assessments, any more than the County Boards could abate the taxes levied by a preceding County Board, due and unpaid. In this state of the case, the monopoly, through its counsel, made the offer to pay for the three years on the basis of the valuation of 1882 set on their property, which would be $1,297,965 27, instead of the $1,544,805 25 assessed and levied by the State Board. The abatement they ask amounts for the three years to $146,839 98, or about 11½ per cent. The average yearly tax for the three years, as assessed by the State Board is, as we stated yesterday, $481,601 75. The average which the monopoly's counsel is willing to settle on is $432,655 19. The difference in average, upon which they are holding out, is $48,945 50, or about 10 per cent (a little more) less than the State's average. We said yesterday, and we repeat here, that this difference is but a small amount for the railroad company to stand out for, if they are sincere in their wishes for a fair settlement of these taxes. It is probable that ten thousand taxpayers have quite as good reason as this corporation has for thinking their taxes 10 to 15 per cent too high every year; but if they should all take the stubborn course the railroad has taken, and refuse to pay for three years, it is easy to see that the State and county governments would be involved in bankruptcy, and political chaos ensue.

Mr. Haymond, as counsel for the monopoly, now "offers to adjust the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, upon the basis of your (our) figures," and he assents that on this basis, "all suits shall be settled and dismissed, except those which have been, or are to be, appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States." These cases he would have "stand, in order that the principles at issue may be determined, agreeing, whatever may be the result in those cases, to adjust them in the end upon the same basis." What he offers is simply this: To pay the taxes for 1880, 1881, and 1882, as they were assessed. That is, for the three years, $1,444,805 25, or $146,839 48 more than the offer made to the Governor on the twentieth ultimo, excepting only as to such counties as have or may have cases on appeal to the Supreme Court, and as to them, even if the cases shall go against the railway, to settle with them on the same basis, as with the others, and with the State. The proposal says nothing about the 10 per cent penalty, and interest on the taxes due and unpaid. Everything demanded by the State law, but these two points, is surrendered, with the additional reservation, touching the principle the Supreme Court is to decide, namely, whether our Constitution, which taxes mortgages on railways, but not on other property, is in conflict with the fourteenth amendment or not.

This proposition seems to be a reasonable one. If it is carried out, the railroad company will pay the full amount of the taxes levied by the State Board of Equalization in 1880, 1881, and 1882. It is true that the corporation does not consent to the payment of interest or penalties, but in view of the fact that very able lawyers not friendly to the monopoly consider the tender of a part of the taxes by the agents of the company, as relieving them from penalties and interest, it is more than doubtful if they could have been recovered even by tedious and expensive litigation. Under the circumstances it seems to be the part of wisdom for the authorities to accept this latest proposal. They will surrender no principle, and will be but following the generally approved precedent set in the settlement of the litigation of the gas and water companies of this city. The State will collect the full amount of the taxes levied by the State Board for the three years in litigation, and relieve the embarrassments of the State and numerous county treasuries. The determination to press the settlement of the question whether the State Board of Equalization has the right to assess railroads in the manner prescribed by the Constitution should, however, not be lost sight of, and the case now before the United States Supreme Court should be pressed to a decision as speedily as possible.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I offer in evidence an article from the "Colusa Sun," of November 24, 1883, headed "Railroad Taxation," and my reply to Mr. Green, who had discussed the matter. It reads as follows:

RAILROAD TAXATION.

The writer of this owes A. Montgomery, a California millionaire, a sum of money, say $2,000, on which he pays interest, and if he claims a reduction on account of any mortgage, the Assessor puts in Montgomery's interest in the property we hold, so the State gets the taxes in any event on the value of the property, without any regard to ownership or any incumbrance on it. Now, to place the railroad company and its creditors on an exactly even footing with the writer and Alexander Montgomery is all he wants. We think that Mr. Haymond knows that if we had all the power of all the Czars and all the Kaisers in Christendom, we would not exact one cent more of the railroad company than that which, after a careful and candid examination, appears to be just. If we are not just in any matter, any gentleman can have the use of our columns to go before the same readers to show wherein we fail. It does not set us back any to be proved in error. All men err, but it is not every one who can acknowledge an error for truth's sake, when satisfied that one has been made.—[Colusa Sun, November seventeenth.

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without the process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.—[Fourteenth Amendment.

Editor Sun:

I note in your issue of November seventeenth, an editorial entitled "Railroad Taxes," from which the article first above is extracted.

You are right when you assert that I know if you had all the powers of the Czars and Kaisers in the world you would not exact one cent more from the railroad company than that which, from a careful and candid examination, should appear to you to be just. An intimate acquaintance, extending over a quarter of a century, with you, gives me such confidence in your judgment and integrity that I would be willing to-day, the State consenting, to withdraw the tax cases from the Courts, submit them to you for determination, and accept your judgment as a finality.

I believe the railroad company is right in the position which it has taken, and I have yet to see one fair-minded man who, after understanding the facts, does not approve its course.

To resist an illegal tax is not only the right, but it is the duty of every citizen. I do not mean by this that it is the duty of a citizen to resist a tax because it is slightly excessive or out of proportion; what I mean is this: that every tax which is levied in violation of accepted fundamental principles of government should be resisted, and that to resist such a tax is as great a virtue as to bear arms in defense of a lawful and just government.

You give an instance above, and say that all you want to do is to place the railroad company and its creditors on exactly an even footing with yourself and Alexander Montgomery. That is all the railroad company wants. To illustrate: You own a farm worth $4,000; you owe Mr. Montgomery $2,000; under the Constitution of the State of California you are assessed upon that property $2,000, and Mr. A. Montgomery is assessed for $2,000. If you pay the tax upon the $4,000 you are entitled to deduct one half of the amount paid by you from the debt which is due to Mr. Montgomery. There is no doubt but that this is the law, and there is no doubt but that this is just and right. Your partner, Mr. Addington, owns a farm also worth $4,000; he owes Mr. Montgomery $2,000, secured by mortgage upon the farm. Now, suppose the law stood precisely as I have above stated in regard to the transaction between Mr. Montgomery and yourself; but as to Mr. Addington, the law should say that the whole value of his farm should be assessed to him, and that he should pay the whole tax without any deduction from the debt of Mr. Montgomery; would anybody pretend that yourself and Addington received the equal protection of the law? Would it not be plain to every person that Mr. Addington was required to pay the Government, for the same protection which you secure a tax upon the same valuation, double that which was required from you? But this is not all. Suppose the law should provide, as it does, that your property should be assessed by a local assessor, and that if, after notice, you believed the valuation was too high, you might appeal to a local tribunal, before which you could appear, make your complaint, and be heard; and that, on the other hand, the same law provided that Mr. Addington should be assessed without notice by a State Board of Equalization, which could assemble at any place in the State, and before which he had no legal right to be heard, and whose action was final; would anybody pretend that this law was just, or that you and Mr. Addington stood equal before the law? I think not; yet the two supposed cases present the position of the railroad company, with this exception, that there is much more merit in the claim of the railroad company than the holders of its bonds should be taxed than there would be in your case that Mr. Montgomery should be taxed for the amount of the debt which you owe to him.

You will remember that the Central Pacific Railroad was built in time of war, when values were largely inflated. For instance, locomotives for which it then paid $35,000 can now be bought for $8,000; steel rails can now be purchased and laid for less money per ton than the Central Pacific Company paid for freight alone on the iron rails which it used. To state the matter generally, the Central Pacific Railroad could now be constructed from San Francisco to Ogden for, say about one half what it actually cost to construct it at the time it was built. This shrinkage in value the railroad company has to bear, but it ought, in justice, to bear no more. Now, on the other hand, its bonds were sold, including the bonds guaranteed by the United States, on an average of not less than 40 per cent below their face value. These bonds in the hands of the bondholders have not depreciated, but, on the contrary, the Federal bonds are worth about 34 per cent premium, while the company's bonds are worth at least 14 per cent premium. While the property of the company is the general shrinkage which followed the war, and the resumption of specie payments has shrunk in value about 50 per cent, the property of the bondholder has in the one case increased 94 per cent and in the other 84.

In view of these facts, I assert without fear of successful contradiction that the discrimination made against the company by the system of taxation provided for in the new Constitution is unjust, and is more marked and unfair than the discrimination which would have been made had the law as to Mr. Addington and yourself been as above stated.

Are you prepared at this day to say that there should be one law for what you are pleased to call powerful corporations, and another law for that class which you term the poor? I do not believe that you are prepared to take this position, yet every argument which you advance tends in that direction.

I have maintained in these tax cases that there should be one law in the land, and that law should be administered equally with respect to every person within the jurisdiction. I have never proposed to compromise any tax. I have denied from the very beginning the validity of the provisions of the State Constitution, and have asserted that they are in flagrant violation not only of the Federal Constitution, but also of those great governmental principles which require that the laws should bear equally upon every person within the jurisdiction of the Government.

During the canvass which resulted in the adoption of the new Constitution, most of the eminent lawyers opposed its ratification by the people, took the same view of the question which the railroad company has since maintained.

The railroad company has at all times been willing to contribute its share towards the support of the State and County Governments, and from the very beginning of the litigation to this moment has not, as you put it, endeavored to make its own assessment, but has offered voluntarily to pay to the State and counties a sum greater than was ever levied as a tax upon similar property in any State in the Union, either in peace or in war.

The idle talk which has been current (I acquit you, however, of it), about the railroad company resisting the law, seeking to assess itself, and setting itself above the law, has no better foundation to rest upon than the fact that the railroad company, as any citizen might do, has gone into the Courts of the country under the shield of the Federal Constitution and questioned the validity of the Constitution of California in relation to revenue.

If the decision of the tribunal to which the Constitution of the United States has intrusted these questions shall be adverse to the position taken by the railroad company, it will cheerfully acquiesce in that judgment. That the decision will be in favor of the position taken by the railroad company, I have always believed. I do not think that the august tribunal can ever divide upon the question, whether the railroad company has received the equal protection of the law.

One of the learned Judges who decided the Santa Clara case, says, in his opinion, that "this case, as well as the San Mateo case, has been laboriously prepared and elaborately argued by eminent counsel, and if the industry of the Attorney-General, and a large number of attorneys and special counsel for the numerous counties interested in the question, has failed to find any recognition of the principle which they are endeavoring to maintain, either in the practice of the several States in the text-books, or decisions, or even dicta of the Courts, we think it will be safe to presume that none can be found."

There is no precedent in the jurisprudence of civilized countries for the discrimination attempted to be made against the railroad company; nor is there, to my knowledge, any precedent for the action of the railroad company under the circumstances. Notwithstanding the fact that it was advised by most eminent counsel that these taxes were invalid and never could be collected; notwithstanding the decision of the Circuit Court of the United States; it has already paid over a million of dollars in the State and counties, and has offered to pay another million. It would be well for those who are criticising the action of the railroad company to look around and see what other corporation or person has ever paid voluntarily such sums of money upon a claim clearly illegal and unfounded.

I believe that if the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution is rightly interpreted and faithfully executed, the result will be that no legislative assembly in America can give to one person any right, privilege, or thing without extending to every person within its jurisdiction the right to have the same privilege or thing, under the same circumstances. That no legislative assembly in America will ever be able to take from one citizen any right, privilege, or thing which it does not, under the same circumstances, take from all.

When this shall be accepted as the correct interpretation of that great amendment and conscientiously acted upon, we shall have intelligent legislation, directed in the best interests of the Government; the rich and the poor, the high and low, will stand upon the same footing before the laws of the country, and it will be no longer possible to array class against class.

In conclusion, and as pertinent to this article, I quote from the concurring decision of Judge Sawyer in the railroad tax cases the following:

"Great stress was laid in the arguments of plaintiffs' counsel upon the growing and over-weening power and greed of corporations; and it was vehemently asserted that this is a struggle between the people and the corporations for supremacy; that corporations, by corrupt means, and through their large and widespread influence, have obtained and they are obtaining control of Legislatures, etc.

If this be so, it is of the utmost importance to every natural person in the United States, that these guarantees of the fourteenth amendment to the National Constitution be maintained in all their length and breadth. They are the only means of protection left to the people. If these unequal taxes can be imposed upon the class of corporations named in the Constitution, the position of the parties can be reversed, and the unequal law now thrown upon the corporations may hereafter be imposed upon the other parties. If these can be taxed without a hearing, and if there is good ground for the alarm manifested by the counsel of the plaintiff, such corporations when they acquire the deprecated power and control indicated, will not be likely to be slow in shifting the unequal burden to the other side. There is, therefore, upon that hypothesis, no safety to the people except in most rigidly maintaining the guaranties of the fourteenth amendment in their broadest scope.

Very respectfully yours,

CREED HAYMOND.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I offer in evidence an article headed "Railroad Taxes," from the "Bulletin," and signed "Lex." The paper is not paged, but it is an attorney's review of all the methods of assessments, costs, etc. It reads as follows:

["Bulletin," January 26, 1884.]

RAILROAD TAXES.—AN ATTORNEY'S REVIEW OF THE METHODS OF ASSESSMENT ENFORCED, AND THE APPEAL THEREFROM TO THE COURTS. THE STATE CONTROLLER'S ACTION.

Editor "Bulletin:"

After three years litigation an agreement has been made between the State authorities and the railroad companies to adjust the taxes heretofore in dispute.

Prior to the adoption of the new Constitution the railroad companies had for many years, without any contest, promptly paid all taxes assessed against them. After the new Constitution was adopted, which by its terms imposed the duty of assessing railroads operated in more than one county upon the State Board of Equalization, the railroad companies affected contested the validity and justness of the taxes, chiefly upon two grounds. First, that the provisions of the Constitution of the State of California which allowed all other persons and corporations to deduct mortgages from the value of their property, and provided that the value of such mortgages should be assessed to the holders thereof, but denied that deduction to the companies interested, violated not only the principles which are the foundation of all just taxation, namely, equality in the apportionment, but also the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which requires such equality.

Second, that such provisions gave to every other person and corporation the right to a hearing before their liability was fixed, and the right of appeal, and denied both of these rights to the companies assessed by the State Board of Equalization, thereby violating the provisions of the Federal Constitution which declare that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law; and that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

All the suits to enforce the collection of these taxes were transferred to the United States Circuit Court, and the San Mateo case came up for hearing before Justice Field and Judge Sawyer, upon stipulation as to the facts, made by Attorney-General Hart, and Mr. Rhodes, counsel for the plaintiff, and by the attorneys for the railroad companies. After an elaborate argument judgment was rendered in favor of the railroad company. From this judgment a writ of error was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The election came on, involving a change in the personnel of the State administration, and it was asserted in every quarter that the San Mateo case did not fully present the State's side of the question. That case was argued in the Supreme Court of the United States and submitted for decision. Other cases were pressed in the Circuit Court of California, and in view of the assertions that had been made about the San Mateo case, the railroad company reluctantly consented that the submission of the San Mateo case might be set aside and cases enough tried in the Circuit Court (by new counsel coming in under the present administration) to present all the facts, and that upon these cases being taken to the United States Supreme Court they should be advanced. In pursuance of this agreement several cases were tried and decisions were given therein in favor of the railroad companies.

The attorney for the State produced a writ of error in a single case, to wit, the Santa Clara case, and moved to advance this case on the calendar; but the Supreme Court refused to hear the litigation piecemeal, and required all the cases that had been tried to be brought up, hence the delay.

In 1882 the railroad companies brought in the Superior Court of San Francisco, before Judge Waymire—now one of the counsel for the State—a series of injunction suits, and tendered in Court and offered to pay without prejudice 66 per cent of all the taxes assessed. This offer was refused.

The taxes for the year 1880-81 were assessed by the State Board of Equalization before any other assessments were made, and before the State Board could know at what ratio other property would be assessed. In 1882, and after the Supreme Court of California had decided that the State Board of Equalization had no right to raise individual assessments, the State Board again assessed the railroad property at about 66 per cent of the previous assessment, the Chairman of the Board stating in open Board that the assessments for the preceding years had been made high upon the theory that the Board had the right to raise all other assessments in the State to the same standard. This portion of the proceedings of the Board was published in the press of that date, and was a concession by the highest authority in the State that the assessments for the preceding years were enormous.

I have already shown in a previous communication to your paper that the assessment for the year 1882 was a higher assessment than was ever made upon railroad property in any State in the Union; although in some States there were double track railroads, and in others four track roads of far greater value than any roads in this State.

Another fact which has been lost sight of in the consideration of this matter, is that all of the railroad is not assessed by the State Board of Equalization; that the warehouses, stations, depots, water stations, workshops, and steam ferryboats, all of which are as much a part of the road as the rails, and which in other States were included in the assessment, were all separately assessed by the County Assessors, and the taxes for these had all been paid for the years in question.

The lands belonging to the railroad company were also separately assessed, and the taxes paid without delay.

After the assessment of 1882, and the concession made by the State Board of Equalization, settlements were made with a majority of the counties interested, which settlements reduced the principal for the three years to about $800,000.

Notwithstanding the fact that the railroad companies have prevailed in the litigation, and notwithstanding the fact that the attorneys who had taken these cases on contingent fees for the State had, after hearing them argued, demanded cash fees in addition, thus showing their lack of faith in the final result, the railroad companies now offer to settle the unpaid taxes for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, as levied.

This proposition the State authorities have, we understand, accepted, the Attorney-General holding that it is very doubtful whether the State, in any event, could recover more.

As to the taxes for the year 1883, the Legislature of last winter provided for a State assessment roll, upon which taxes assessed by the State Board of Equalization should be placed.

The railroad companies have already tendered a large proportion of these taxes, under an agreement that if the portion tendered were accepted, it should not prejudice the right of the State and the counties to recover the balance. The Controller has refused to permit these part payments to be made.

When the railroad companies have paid the $600,000 in question, they will have paid for the three years more than $2,000,000 State and county taxes, nearly three fourths of which, under the decision of the Courts, they are not legally liable for. When irresponsible fault-finders can point to another corporation which has, to like extent, acknowledged equitable claims, it will be time to criticise the action of these companies.

L. E. X.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I will offer in evidence Exhibit "A," a letter addressed by Governor Stoneman to Judge Rhodes and Mr. Delmas, dated February 6, 1884. It reads as follows:

EXHIBIT "A."

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, }
 SACRAMENTO, February 6, 1884. }

Judge A. L. RHODES and D. M. DELMAS, Esq.:

GENTLEMEN: Knowing you to be counsel for the State and certain counties in various actions now pending against the Central and Southern Pacific Railroad Companies to recover delinquent State and county taxes now due from said corporations, I take the liberty of asking your opinion, in writing, to the following questions in connection with said cases, viz.:

1. Can the State and counties, parties plaintiff, in your opinion, recover from defendants the five per cent delinquency, as provided in Sections 3746 and 3756 of the Political Code, and other sections and Acts relating to said delinquency?

2. Can the State, in your opinion, recover from the defendant the 2 per cent per month interest, as provided in Section 3803 of the Political Code?

3. Can the State, in your opinion, recover from the defendants the fees of the attorneys acting for and on behalf of the State to the extent of 10 per cent of the amount found due, or for any amount of fees less than 10 per cent?

4. Has the Attorney-General, or either or all of the attorneys acting for and on behalf of the State and said counties in those cases, the right to stipulate that judgment may be taken in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the tax assessed by the State Board of Equalization without the penalty, interest, or attorneys' fees, or consent to or allow judgment to be taken, by order of the Court or otherwise, for a less amount than the amount claimed by the plaintiff in the complaints on file?

An early answer is desired.

Yours truly, etc.,

GEORGE STONEMAN,
 Governor.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I will offer in evidence Exhibit "B," attached to Exhibit "A," which reads as follows:

EXHIBIT "B."

SAN FRANCISCO, February 7, 1884.

To his Excellency GEORGE STONEMAN, Governor of California:

DEAR SIR: In answer to your communication of the sixth instant, which is hereto appended, we beg leave to make the following replies, responding to the questions in the order in which they are stated:

1. To the first question we answer, yes.

2. To the second question we answer, yes.

3. To the third question we answer, yes; to the extent of 10 per cent.

4. To the fourth question we answer, no. Neither the Attorney-General, nor any of the attorneys acting for and on behalf of the State, has any such power, authority, or right, as mentioned in this question.

The time allowed for a reply does not permit the giving of the reasons upon which our conclusions are based, but if these are desired, we shall be glad to furnish them.

Very respectfully,

A. L. RHODES.
 D. M. DELMAS.

MR. HAYMOND: I next offer in evidence a letter from myself to General Stoneman, in relation to those matters, headed, "An Open Letter from Haymond to Stoneman;" the letter which I referred to as having been prepared by Colonel Hoge and myself. It reads as follows:

THE EXTRA SESSION—AN OPEN LETTER FROM CREED HAYMOND TO GOVERNOR STONEMAN.—THE TAX ISSUE KILLED.

[Sacramento "Bee," March 4th.]

Hon. Creed Haymond, attorney for the Central Pacific Railroad, has addressed the following open letter to Governor Stoneman:

Governor GEORGE STONEMAN:

DEAR SIR: That in the future there may be no misunderstanding in reference to the position of the railroad companies I take the liberty of addressing this communication to you in your official capacity.

Prior to the adoption of the new Constitution the property of railroad companies was taxed in the same manner as the property of other persons.

IN VIOLATION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The new Constitution separated part of the property of railroad companies from the great mass of property in the State, and applied to it a system which the companies believed to be a violation of the National Constitution. To determine this question, Mr. C. P. Huntington, early in 1881 commenced actions in the Circuit Court, in which the whole matter at issue between the companies and the State could be finally determined. The State took a technical objection to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the case went off upon that ground, and without reference to the merits.

In 1882 the companies commenced proceedings in the Superior Court of San Francisco, on the equity side, to determine the question at issue, and tendered into Court without prejudice 65 per cent of the amount claimed, and desired to litigate for the balance. Again the State interposed technical objections, refused to receive part payment, or to let the case be heard on the merits.

THE STATE COMMENCES SUIT.

The State then commenced suits to recover the taxes. These cases were taken into the Federal Courts, and an agreed case, known as "the San Mateo case," was made up between the State, represented by Judge Rhodes, and the companies, represented by Judge Sanderson and myself. This case was taken to the Supreme Court, advanced on the calendar, argued, and submitted for decision. In the meantime an election had occurred—a change in the State administration. It was asserted by the press and many able lawyers, publicly, that the case was not a fair one. These things were pressed upon the Supreme Court of the United States, and that tribunal, as I am advised, directed that enough cases should be tried upon their merits to present all the questions, and that when such cases were brought up that they would advance them on the calendar and hear them at once. This was announced at the commencement of the Circuit Court last August. These cases were tried, six in number; but one of them has yet been appealed.

That case was taken up, and a motion made to advance it. The Court refused. The ground of refusal, as stated in the telegram from Washington to the press, was that all must be brought there, and they would not hear the case by piecemeal.

A PROPOSITION FOR SETTLEMENT.

Upon my return to the State in October last, I made you in writing a proposition to settle the whole matter upon the basis of the assessment of 1882. This you refused, giving in writing your reasons for such refusal. Your refusal was in November. On the twelfth or thirteenth day of November, the "San Francisco Chronicle," in an article commenting upon the railroad's proposition, took the ground that you had done right, but maintained that a fair settlement of the whole matter would be for the companies to pay the taxes flat. To this the companies acceded, being willing to make any sacrifices for peace. Matters continued in this state until a few weeks ago, when I was advised that the Attorney-General would close the cases in which counsel employed by counties interested did not object, upon the "Chronicle's" proposition.

Correspondence between the Attorney-General and yourself excited the public mind, and we concluded it best to pay the taxes, according to the "Chronicle's" proposition, and leave the question open whether we were liable for any more.

THE FULL AMOUNT DEPOSITED.

I met the Attorney-General in the Circuit Court, and all the cases then on the calendar were submitted for decision on the testimony taken in the six cases tried. Judge Sawyer then decided the case for the defendant. I then, in open Court, suggested that, notwithstanding this decision, judgments might go for plaintiffs for the amount of taxes claimed. Judge Sawyer declined to do this without the consent of the Attorney-General, who did not consent. At 3 p. m., of the same day, I went into Court and moved to set aside the judgments and enter judgments for the plaintiffs, as proposed. Messrs. Rhodes and Delmas were present, and one or the other objected, and asked for a continuance of the matter until the next morning, agreeing, as I understood them, that the statu quo should be maintained.

I then deposited the full amount of the taxes with the Clerk of the Court, to be paid to the State and counties interested.

As the matter then stood, judgments were for the defendants, on the same evidence already taken. The money was in the hands of the Clerk to pay the taxes.

The next morning the papers published your letter to Mr. Delmas, announcing that in your opinion the Legislature should be convened, and that you would convene it.

A STIPULATION DRAWN.

After this, all parties were again in Court, and I urged the Court to enter judgment for plaintiffs, which the Court would not do unless the Attorney-General consented to set aside the judgment already entered. This the Attorney-General did, and judgments were ordered accordingly, I stating in open Court what was strictly true, that I desired to get the money into the State and County Treasuries as soon as possible, and that the stipulation made by the Attorney-General and myself was not intended, and under the circumstances should not be construed, to cut off any rights which the State would have to appeal.

I further drew the following stipulation, which embodied my understanding of the situation:

"In the Circuit Court of the United States, Ninth Circuit, District of California.
 "[Title of Court and Cause.]

"It is hereby stipulated by and between the parties to the above entitled action that a writ of error shall be taken in the said case to the Supreme Court of the United States upon a record which shall fully present the question whether the defendant is liable for penalties, interest, and attorneys' fees claimed in said action.

"And it is further stipulated that both parties will join in the request to the Supreme Court either to advance said case at once for hearing and decision, or, if that cannot be done, both parties will stipulate to submit the case upon written or printed arguments, as soon as it can possibly be done.

 "Attorney for Defendants.

"SAN FRANCISCO, CAL."

WAITING TO HEAR FROM THE SUPREME COURT.

I then telegraphed as fully as possible the situation to the Supreme Court at Washington, and asked them to hear a test case at once, and am at this moment expecting to receive an answer.

While I am of opinion that the entire rights of the State involved in this controversy are saved (as it was intended they should be) by the judgment already entered and proposed to be entertained in favor of the State, yet I am perfectly willing to place the point beyond controversy by any agreement or any form of judgment that may be necessary for this purpose, so that no doubt can be entertained by any one, and so that every question involved between the railroad companies and the State may be set at rest forever, and decided finally and at once by the Supreme Court of the United States, no question remaining.

I have thus, my dear Governor, endeavored to give you a plain statement of the precise status of the litigation now pending, and of the entire willingness and readiness of the railroad companies now, as in the past, to bring the controversy between them and the State to an immediate and final conclusion.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

CREED HAYMOND,
 Assistant General Solicitor Central Pacific Railroad Company.

SACRAMENTO, March 4, 1884.

MR. HAYMOND: From the second scrap-book I offer in evidence my letter of November 22, 1885, making certain propositions to the State in relation to setting aside all of these judgments, which are also embodied in my letter to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of this year. It reads as follows:

A SCATHING LETTER.—THE LATEST OFFER BY THE RAILROAD COMPANIES TO END THE TAX QUESTION.

The following letter is clearly explanatory, and needs only to be read to convey to the reader a true idea of the spirit that animates the railroad companies in all this tax dispute.

Mr. JOHN P. DUNN:

SAN FRANCISCO, November 22, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have before me your "open letter" of November twenty-first. To my letter addressed to Messrs. Rhodes and Delmas, a copy of which you make part of yours, Judge Rhodes had already replied, recognizing in a suitable manner the courtesy which I had extended, and promising at an early day to make a public statement. I do not admit the right of Mr. Delmas to transfer the matter to any one. The misrepresentations contained in his letter to you will be noticed in a proper manner. You propose, in order that you may be satisfied of the good faith of my clients, to enter into certain stipulations with me relative to the pending tax cases. You have recently published a letter to the world in which you gravely assert that stipulations made by me have no binding force whatever, because I am not attorney of record. The Supreme Court of California and the Circuit Court have decided that you have nothing whatever to do with these cases. When you shall change your opinions as to my powers, and when the Courts shall have changed theirs as to your powers, I will consider your propositions. That you may be entirely satisfied with the good faith of my clients, and not hereafter have to give them "the benefit of the doubt," I will stipulate for my clients in a form which the Courts will hold binding if you will procure a like binding stipulation on the part of the State, as follows:

First—To set aside all judgments and orders heretofore made by any Court in all or any of the tax cases, and to withdraw all answers and defenses therein.

Second—To take an account of all assessments made against my clients for the past five years and all payments made thereon.

Third—To let the Court determine upon principles of right and justice—all legal technicalities being waived on either side, and with or without appeal as you may prefer—whether the railroad assessments were made upon a basis of equality and uniformity with the average assessment of other property in the State for the corresponding years, and whether or not the sums paid exceed or fall below what would have been justly charged had the assessments been so made.

Fourth—If it is decided by the Court that the sum paid is less than the amount equitably due, that judgment shall be rendered against the railroad companies for the balance; but if the Courts decide that the payments have been greater than the amount equitably due, then the faith of the State is pledged to return the railroad companies the excess.

Fifth—One case presenting fairly the legal questions raised in the cases to be reserved and presented to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision, in order that the State and companies may hereafter understand their respective legal rights.

The State cannot afford to take from any of its citizens more than is due. In my judgment, the railroad companies have already paid nearly double what was equitably due.

As to the difference between us relative to the amounts paid, I am having a statement made up from the vouchers, and will publish it. From this statement you will get the data by which your books can be corrected, and the full amount paid can be shown by them.

Relative to the submission of the San Bernardino case—under the ninety-day rule—I have only this to say: That the attorney for the State pressed for such submission, and I agreed to submit, but not until after the Kentucky cases had been decided. You say the Judiciary Committee at the "extra session," reported that the San Bernardino case could not be heard by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has since decided that it could be heard on the merits. I would respectfully suggest that the "extra session" is no longer authority, the people having at the last election reversed the "extra session."

Respectfully, your friend,

CREED HAYMOND.

MR. HAYMOND: Then I offer in evidence here an article, the author of which I do not know, but it is signed "Lex," December 8, 1885. It is a comparison of the California and Kentucky cases; a celebrated Kentucky case which it was then supposed had some bearing upon these tax cases. It is a discussion of them. I do this simply because the committee may desire to look into that case.

MR. DIBBLE: I think that is in 115 U. S. Reports.

MR. HAYMOND: It reads as follows:

THE RAILROAD TAXES.—THE WHOLE QUESTION REVIEWED.—A COMPARISON OF THE KENTUCKY AND CALIFORNIA CASES, AND ANALYSIS OF THE PRINCIPLES INVOLVED.—DOES THE RECENT DECISION AFFECT THE CALIFORNIA CASES?

Editor Evening Post:

No question has received so much attention among the legal fraternity as the railroad tax issues, while politicians and many others have come to regard it with interest, not only on account of the influence it has on the financial condition of the State government, but from principles involved. The railroads claim they are contending for principle and equality of taxation, while a certain class of politicians have found it convenient and profitable to harangue the uninformed on the arrogance and the injustice of the course pursued by these powerful aggregations of wealth and influence. The recent decisions made by the United States Supreme Court in what are commonly known as the "Kentucky cases," have given rise to a diversity of opinion, and produced an anomalous condition of affairs, inasmuch as each side claims a victory. One would suppose that under such a condition of affairs each side would be correspondingly happy, and all further discussion cease, but such is the inconsistency of human nature that the matter is still agitated and still "shrouded in the mysterious arguments of the lawyers," as a morning contemporary puts it. Among the numerous columns of newspaper articles devoted to this subject I have seen no comparison of the California and Kentucky cases, and no fair analysis of the principles involved, while a brief comparison and almost superficial examination of the two would suffice to convince any intelligent observer whether the decision of the Kentucky cases militates against the cause of the railroads in this State, or vice versa.

In a recent issue, a morning paper says: "On the two main points—the point that the railways had no notice of the assessments, and were, therefore, in danger of having their property taken without due process of law, and the point that a difference in the method employed for assessing railway property and the method employed for assessing other property was in violation of the fourteenth amendment—the Supreme Court reverses the decision of Judges Field and Sawyer sitting in circuit. That Judge Field concurred in reversing his own decision is not natural; he may have had reasons of his own. He may have seen the error of his previous way."

That Judge Field concurred in the decision is true, and he did so without giving a written opinion, but that he intended thereby to reverse himself is absurd, and could emanate from no source except one of well known hostility to the eminent jurist. No one acquainted with Judges Field and Sawyer doubts for a moment that either would have any hesitancy in reversing his own decision if convinced of his error, but the eminent standing of each, coupled with the gravity of the act, would seem to require that the reasons therefore should be published to the world, as all decisions of importance are. Judge Field concurred in the Kentucky cases, and an analysis of Justice Matthews' opinion would be found to affirm the doctrines enunciated by Judge Field in the California cases, and dispel the fallacy contained in the above excerpt.

As to the point that the railroads had no notice of the assessment. It is true this point was raised in the Kentucky cases, and decided, but it was not decided that no notice was necessary, and the entire opinion on this point is in complete harmony with the views of Judges Field and Sawyer. In the Kentucky case it was contended that the taxation of the roads by the State was an attempt to take the property without "due process of law" for the reason that they had no notice of the proceeding, or right to be heard, when assessed by the State Board of Railroad Commissioners.

On this question Justice Matthews says:

"It has been repeatedly decided by this Court that a proceeding to raise public revenue by levying and collecting tax is not necessarily judicial, and that 'due process of law,' as applied to that subject, does not require the right to such notice and hearing as are considered to be essential to the validity of the proceedings, and the judgments of judicial tribunals. Notice by statute is generally the only notice given, and that has been held sufficient."

STATUTORY NOTICE.

Further on the opinion says:

"This Board has its time of sittings fixed by law, and in the proceedings questioned in these cases, there was, in fact and in law, a notice and a hearing."

The Court decided by the above language that notice by statute was sufficient notice for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and in support of the position quoted as follows (96 U. S., 97, 107), the same authority relied upon by Justice Field in the California cases:

"In judging what is due process of law, respect must be had to the cause and object of taxing power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these, and if found to be suitable, or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be due process of law; but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared not due process of law."

"The Kentucky cases then decided (or rather affirmed, as there were no new points presented by the record, and the appeals were rather frivolous than otherwise) that personal notice was not necessary; that notice by statute was sufficient; that the proceeding was not judicial, and that the power of taxation came within the provisions of the fourteenth amendment."

Let us next examine the opinion of Justice Field on this point, and we find that he in no way differs from Justice Matthews. In deciding the Santa Clara case, he says (9th Sawyer, page 203):

"The notice to which we refer need not be a personal citation; it is sufficient if it be given by a law designating the time and place where parties may contest the justice of the valuation. As a general rule only a statutory notice is given. The State may designate the kind of notice and the manner in which it shall be given. All that we assert, or have asserted, is that there must be a notice of some kind."

Justice Sawyer's opinion is to the same effect. He says (9 Sawyer, 225-8):

"In my judgment the authorities establish beyond all controversy, that somewhere in the process of assessing a tax under a law, or a State Constitution, at some point before the assessment becomes irrevocably fixed, the person affected should have notice. The notice may not be required to be personal to each individual, or anything other than statutory."

OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD.

And again, "At the time the assessment in question was made, neither the Constitution nor any statute of California gave the defendant any right, or afforded it any legal notice of the proceedings, or opportunity to be heard."

In view of the above excerpts, it is difficult to perceive how there can be any difference of opinion as to whether the two sets of cases are in harmony or variance on the question of notice. It is true that the attorneys for the State and counties in the California cases claimed that a statute existed providing for notice—the Act of March 14, 1881—but in the trial of the cases it was proven by the original written journals in the custody of the Secretary of State that the bill did not receive the constitutional majority on its final passage in the Assembly, and notwithstanding it was printed among the statutes of the State, and purported to be a valid law, it was declared unconstitutional and void. This being principally a question of fact, it is extremely improbable that the ruling of Judges Field and Sawyer in this record will be disturbed. It is also true that the Legislature of 1883 passed an Act providing for notice, but this could not affect the assessments for the preceding three years, and on this point alone it is difficult to perceive how the Supreme Court can do other than affirm its own rulings, and thereby affirm the judgment of Judges Field and Sawyer in the Santa Clara case. Had the time of the meeting of the State Board of Equalization been fixed for some certain and fixed period, it might be construed as sufficient notice; but as the meeting was fixed by law for "on or before the first Monday in May," the officers of the corporation might be kept watching for weeks for an opportunity to be heard, and the term is too vague and indefinite to be construed as a notice of meeting, which authority has determined is an absolute right. On the next point: that a difference in the method employed for assessing railroad property and the method employed for assessing other property is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment, and that Justice Field overruled himself; in this respect, also, the writer is equally at fault. Justice Field never invoked any such fallacy, and reference to his decision will readily convince us of the fact. The issue was raised in the Kentucky cases that the railroads of that State were denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment, by a discrimination against them in ascertaining their value for the purposes of taxation. There was no claim that the property was not assessed at its cash value, the same as other property, but that they were assessed by a Board of Commissioners; that their property was assessed as real estate, and taxed as such, while other corporations paid a kind of income tax. Other real estate was assessed by local Assessors. Justice Matthews says there is nothing to forbid the classification of property for purposes of taxation, and the valuation of different classes by different methods. He further adds:

WHAT EQUALITY MEANS.

"The rule of equality in respect to the subject only requires the same means and methods to be applied impartially to all constituents of each class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon the person in similar circumstances. There is no objection, therefore, to the discrimination made as between railroad companies and other corporations in the methods and instrumentalities by which the value of their property is ascertained. The right to classify railroad property as a separate class for purposes of taxation grows out of the inherent nature of the property, and necessarily involves the right on its part (the Legislature) to devise and carry into effect a distinct scheme with different tribunals in the proceeding to value it."

An examination of the opinions enunciated by Judges Field and Sawyer in the San Mateo and Santa Clara cases will find them in entire harmony not only with the principle, but almost the language of the Court in the Kentucky cases. On this point Judge Sawyer says (8th Sawyer, 309):

"We do not conceive that a provision for assessing railroads operated in more than one county by the State Board of Equalization, while other local property is assessed by the local Assessors, would be denying the equal protection of the laws, provided the assessment in the former case is made upon the same basis and upon the same principles, etc., as in the latter. Nor do we think that the assessment of the railroad as a unit is objectionable. Indeed, this seems to be the only practicable way of assessing such a road."

Indeed, the right of classification was not seriously questioned in the California cases. Justice Field simply held that the classification must be based on equitable principles. He says (9th Sawyer, 199):

"But it is urged that property may be divided into classes and subjected to different rates; that such classifications may be made from inherent differences in the nature of different parcels of property, and also from the different uses to which the same property may be applied. As already mentioned, the Constitution of the State provides, with respect to property, that it shall be taxed in proportion to its value. The classification of property, either from its distinctive character or its peculiar use, must be made with the rule prescribing taxation according to value."

An examination of the opinion in the Kentucky cases will disclose the fact that no equitable question was involved. It was not claimed, as in this State, that the roads were compelled to bear an unjust proportion of the public burdens, by reason of the unequal taxation. It was not claimed that they were subjected to pay double taxation, but simply that the Legislature had discriminated against them by prescribing different forms, means, or methods for ascertaining the value of their property.

IS IT A SYSTEM OR A STANDARD?

The question remains to be settled whether the terms "means," "methods," and "instrumentalities," as applied to the medium of ascertaining the value of taxable property, as used by Justice Matthews and concurred in by the Courts, is intended to designate the Board, officer, or quasi-judicial authority, with the powers and jurisdiction thereof, or whether it is intended to mean the gauge or standard of measurement by which such authority may ascertain such values, or both, or whether the latter powers are necessarily included within the former. In other words, is it intended that such a rule as the following should be valid? As to valuation for the purposes of taxation, all property shall be classified into two classes: First, railroad property, which shall be taxed at double its cash value; second, all other property, which shall be taxed at its actual cash value. This was the principal point on which the California cases were decided, and we shall examine the question more in detail further on in this article.

The element of classification, in the language of Justice Miller, requires the same means to be applied impartially to the constituents of each class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon the person in similar circumstances." This element is lacking in the classification of California railroads. It was in evidence in the Santa Clara case, that a private citizen owns a railroad extending from the City of Marysville, in Yuba County, to Oroville, in Butte County. This railroad is not assessed as the railroads of corporations. If this road were covered by a mortgage to its full value, the owner would have no taxes to pay upon it, while another road, from Marysville to Sacramento, covered by a like mortgage, but owned by a corporation, or aggregation of citizens, would pay taxes to its full value. It will thus be seen that the element of equality so essential to bring the California cases within the rule is lacking. In the language of Justice Field (8th Sawyer, 20):

"It is not classifying property to make a distinction of that character in estimating its value as a basis for taxation. It is making the amount of taxation depend, not upon the nature of the property or its value, but upon its ownership; and, if this can be done, there is no protection against unequal and oppressive taxation."

THE LAW CANNOT BE UNJUST.

Appropos to this is the language of Justice Matthews in the Kentucky decision: "If the system of taxation be found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it will be declared to be not due process of law."

To sum up, two principles were settled by the Kentucky decision, neither of which brought the case within the fourteenth amendment.

First—Statutory notice is sufficient for the purposes of assessment and taxation.

Second—The classification of property for the purposes of assessment and taxation is proper and permissible where the rule works equally on all the class and applies impartially to all the constituents under like circumstances, without working oppression and injustice.

It was decided in the California cases that the railroads did not have even statutory notice, and that the classification as made discriminated unjustly against a species of ownership. On both points the cases are almost diametrically opposed to the Kentucky suit. Had the latter case been fortified on either point with the same state of facts which exist in the California cases, the decision would have been exactly the reverse of what it was. The Court of Appeals in Kentucky, in deciding the cases (and the decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court), refer to the same class of cases, then recently tried in California, and the Judges were of the opinion that the facts were so dissimilar that the cases must necessarily differ, and divers conclusions be reached. It would be difficult to perceive how Justice Field could consistently do anything else than concur with the decision in the Kentucky cases; and it will be still stranger if the Supreme Court should inconsistently fail to affirm their own opinion and concur with Justice Field when they decide the celebrated California railroad cases now pending on appeal.

What were the grounds on which the railroad companies contested the payment of their taxes in this State? There were simply two points, and they are briefly stated by Justice Field in the opening of his opinion in the San Mateo case (8th Sawyer, 246):

"The railroad company contends that the taxes are invalid and void on two grounds:

First—Because the assessment was made in pursuance of the State Constitution, in enforcement of which the company was not allowed any reduction for the valuation of its property, and was thus subjected to an unjust proportion of the public burdens, and denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment.

Second—Because the assessment, made in pursuance of the provisions of the State Constitution, which provided no notice to the company, and gave no opportunity to be heard."

A SOPHISTICAL ARGUMENT.

We have examined the second ground of contest and referred to the other incidentally, but the first named is the great question of overshadowing importance in this important litigation, which goes to the very foundation of constitutional government—the great question whether oppressive and unequal taxation is permissible under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This matter cuts no figure in the cases taken from the highest Court of Kentucky, and dwarfs into insignificance all other questions. It is the question upon which the California railroad cases must stand or fall in the supreme tribunal of the nation. From the same article of the morning paper, to which we have referred in this creed, we take the following excerpt:

"The point is covered by that portion of the decision of the Supreme Court which distinctly affirms the right of a State to devise different schemes for the assessment of different classes of property. The rule which authorizes a State to provide that private property shall be assessed by Assessors, while railway property shall be assessed by a Board of Equalization, also authorizes a State to provide that railway mortgages shall be assessed in one way and private mortgages in another."

The sophistry of the argument is apparent to all but the dyed-in-the-wool anti-monopolist. None so blind as those who will not see. Railway mortgages are not assessed in one way and private mortgages in another. Railway mortgages are not assessed at all, and private mortgages are. Railway property is assessed by the owners at its full value, while other property is assessed at its value, after deducting the value of the mortgage. The writer assumes too much, and the conclusion that a State may devise any scheme or schemes for the assessment of different classes of property is not borne out by the decision—the scheme must not be “found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust.” Such is the language of the Court in the Kentucky case on which the writer relies. A brief analysis of the proposition will readily convince one that it is not “assessing railway mortgages one way and private mortgages another.” The State Constitution declares that a mortgage, for the purpose of taxation, shall be treated as an interest in the property; that is, there are two owners to be taxed for every piece of mortgaged property—the mortgage shall be taxed for the amount of the mortgage and the mortgagor shall be taxed for the residue. This is all cases except the property of railroad corporations. In all such cases the mortgagee shall be exempt from taxation. The mortgagor shall be subject to double taxation, as contradistinguished from all other taxpayers. A discrimination is made against the companies because of their ownership; not from any differences in the character of the property, or its specific uses, but in favor of a special favored class of bondholders, from no other reason apparently than a capricious desire to “cinch” the railroads at the time the new Constitution was adopted. The principle which justifies double taxation of the owners of railroads, and exempts bondholders, would justify any like discrimination between owners on account of age, color, or race, which the State might designate as a sufficient reason for discrimination. The valuation and constant taxation could vary as the owner was white or black, old or young. The value of the mortgage could be deducted from the property of the white man and not the black one—from the young and not the old; deducted if the property was owned by a man doing business alone, and not deducted if owned by men doing business together as partners, associations, or corporations. Cannot any man, or set of men, be despoiled of their property by such a scheme? It is arbitrary and despotic—the very essence of tyranny—and only resorted to by evil governments in evil times. Of what avail are the rights guaranteed to every citizen in the enjoyment of his life and property by the fourteenth amendment, if some cunningly devised scheme of taxation could force any special class to bear an unequal share of the burdens of taxation? If such trickery could be successful, the fourteenth amendment should read, as ironically observed by counsel in the San Mateo case: “Nor shall any State deprive any person of his property without due process of law (except it be in the form of taxation), nor to deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws (except it be by taxation).”

AN APT ILLUSTRATION.

It is well known to all intelligent persons how the rule works, but an illustration may not be out of place. Suppose A, a natural person, has $5,000 in cash, and purchases of B a piece of real estate for $10,000, that being the actual value. He pays one half down and gives a mortgage for $5,000 to secure the balance of the purchase money. The State Constitution says that A and B each has a $5,000 interest in the property and each shall be assessed and pay a tax on $5,000. A, in this instance, is worth only $5,000, and if he pays taxes on a larger amount he pays taxes on somebody else's property. C, a railroad, purchases of B, for its proper use, an adjoining piece of real estate for $10,000, paying $5,000 down and giving a mortgage for the balance of the purchase money. In this case C has only a $5,000 interest in the property—precisely as in the other case—and B the rest. Each has a half interest; but in the latter case C shall, nevertheless, be assessed for and pay taxes on the whole property—double the amount he really owns—and B shall be exempt from taxation on this piece of property. C pays taxes on his own and B's property, and money, to the amount of the tax, is taken from C and appropriated to the use and for the benefit of B, to liquidate B's share of the public burdens. It seems self-evident, under such circumstances, that a law authorizing and requiring such proceedings does not afford, but expressly denies, the equal protection of the laws granted by the great Magna Charta of the American people—the fourteenth amendment. Perhaps Mr. Dunn's legal advisers may be able to explain on what principle of justice or equality such a system can be upheld. If they are able to do so they have certainly mastered the situation since the time the cause was presented and argued before the Court, for on this subject Justice Field says (9th Sawyer, 178):

THE OWNER SHOULD PAY THE TAX.

“On what principle or by what species of reasoning a tax upon property can be upheld and enforced against a party, when the taxable interest in it had, at the time of the levy of the tax, been transferred to another, I am at a loss to understand. This position of the case was suggested to counsel on more than one occasion during the argument, but no answer was made to it. To every other position an answer was attempted, but to this one none, and as we think, for the best of reasons, because none was possible.”

We now revert to the proposition whether the modes, methods, and instrumentalities which may be adopted in ascertaining the different values of the different classes of property, justify a different gauge or standard of measurement for different classes of owners. Thus one class of owners shall have their property taxes at its cash value; another at a fictitious value; white owners at 50 per cent of its real value; black owners at double its value, and associations of men or corporations shall be taxed for the interests of others in the property. Such a system is arbitrary and unjust. Judge Sawyer states the true principle of classification in the Santa Clara case (9th Sawyer, 234).

"Different kinds of property may require to be taxed in different forms and modes in order to be equally taxed. And classifications of property for purposes of taxation should have reference to the just equality of business, as far as that is practically attainable. Classification should have reference to the different character, situation, and circumstances of the property, making a different mode or form of taxation proper, if not absolutely necessary. It cannot be arbitrarily made with mere reference to the nationality, color, or character of the owners."

The language quoted might seem suitable enough to have been taken from the Kentucky decision, but it is from the California case which Mr. Dunn's disciples claim is in conflict with the former judgment. The great trouble with these partisans is that they are blinded by prejudice. They cannot see the distinction between the classification of property as property for the purpose of taxation, according to its character and uses, and the classification of the owners of property as owners. For instance, when the first mortgage bonds of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company are foreclosed the property will pass into the hands of private parties, and will be taxed on an entirely different system—the value of the second mortgage will be taxed to the holders thereof, and deducted from the value of the property, although there is no difference in the character and use of the property, but simply a difference in the ownership. It was decided (or affirmed) in the Kentucky cases that property might be classified according to its character and use, for the purposes of taxation, so long as the result of such classification was not "oppressive, arbitrary, and unjust," but it was not decided that property might be classified by ownership, and never will be so long as reason holds its sway. If such a consummation should be ever reached, the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to every citizen would dwindle into a hollow mockery and delusive sham. As justly observed by Senator Edmunds in his argument before the Supreme Court:

A CHANCE FOR COMMUNISTS.

"If you once concede the point that you may classify your values on different principles, as values, by deduction or otherwise, then there is no check upon the exercise of arbitrary power. The mob or commune that can get possession of the State Legislature for one term may despoil every one of its citizens whom it chooses to despoil, and the liberty and security of the Constitution, securing national intrinsic rights everywhere and to everybody—will turn out to be an utter delusion."

Some minor questions incidentally arose in the trial of the California cases. The attorneys for the State claimed that in the special case on trial (the Santa Clara case) the railroad companies should be adjudged liable to pay the taxes, notwithstanding the discrimination, because the mortgage in that case given by the company, contained a covenant that the corporation would pay all taxes and public burdens and charges levied upon the property. On this point Justice Field says:

"The covenant cannot affect one way or the other the right of the plaintiff to recover. The power of the State is not enlarged or diminished by it. It is not made with the State and could not be enforced by it. It is a matter which concerns only the parties. They can, by arrangement, vary it any day; they can enlarge it, release it, or qualify it, whenever they choose. It would be strange, indeed, if the State's power of taxation depended in any way upon the stipulation of third parties, or the validity of a tax could be affected by it. The covenant is necessarily limited to such taxes as may be lawfully levied on the mortgaged property, and cannot be construed to extend to any taxes in disregard of the Constitution and laws."

In other words, Justice Field held that the State's sovereign authority to levy and collect its taxes, did not depend on the private agreement of its citizens, and if a tax was unlawfully levied, a private contract could not give it validity. A position which is unanswerable.

Another point made by the State's attorneys in the California cases was that the word "person" as used in the fourteenth amendment, did not apply to artificial persons or corporations—that it simply meant natural persons. In other words, they claimed that when natural persons associated themselves together and conducted business in the form of companies or corporations, they lost those rights of equality and the protection of the laws which they would have otherwise enjoyed. They based their pretensions on the fact that the fourteenth amendment was adopted as a protection to the negro. Justice Field held that while such was undoubtedly the origin of the provision, the language was unequivocal, and it extended its protection to all persons, natural and artificial; of all colors, creeds, nationalities, and conditions. The Supreme Court evidently concurred on this point, for in the recent decision, they held by implication, that corporations were entitled to equal protection, and decided the case on merit, without regard to this technical objection.

In the face of these patent facts, it is difficult for any reasonable person to comprehend how the Supreme Court can do anything but affirm the unanswerable logic and convincing conclusions found in the opinions of Judges Field and Sawyer in the celebrated railroad cases. Of course, these remarks do not apply to your genuine hard-shelled, anti-monopolist. The flattering hope of yet "cinching" the railroad is his guiding star; it is the beacon light of his political career, and he watches it with pride, as the delusion which keeps his fragile bark from dashing to pieces on the solid rocks of truth and justice. If the railroads should submit to the extortion of discrimination that he and his like are enabled to practice upon them, through the ignorance and prejudice of his deluded constituency, then his occupation would be gone. While his battle cry is the railroad tax question, he secretly prays that the railroads will never pay their taxes. On the rostrum and through the press he exhorts his followers that the railroads should pay their taxes, "the same as other folks," and that all "voluntary contributions" offered in the shape of taxes should be indignantly refused as beneath the sovereign dignity of an outraged people. The mask of hypocrisy can be retained but a short time longer by the demagogic element, for a speedy decision on this question by the Supreme Court is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

A WRETCHED SYSTEM OF TAXATION.

The whole system of laws in California for the collection of taxes is sadly out of joint. A statute, which allows 10 per cent additional for lawyer's fees, to be paid by a taxpayer who may have good grounds for contesting the payment of his taxes, is a species of extortion. It is this statute which has created all the devilment in the present cases. Visionary lawyer's fees, aggregating over $100,000, have been piled upon the railroads—more than an ordinary fortune, if they were able to collect them. It is this enormous prospective consideration which has encouraged such an aggressive and persecuting spirit in the railroad tax cases, and enabled grasping and selfish leaders to carry the matter into political conventions, and, indeed, its baneful influence to permeate almost every department of the State Government. They have gained almost absolute and tyrannical control of one political party in the State, which, led on in its blind zeal and devotion by its vicious and dangerous leaders, is pledged for the extortion of this money from the railroad companies, even if it has to be taken in defiance of the judgments of the Courts and in defiance of law. A political party attempting to prejudge the decision of the Courts and pledging itself to extort the so called taxes, whether legally or not, is a disgrace to the civilization of the west. Had it not been for this 10 per cent statute, the tax question would have been settled years ago, and the Democratic party of California left without an issue.

What difference does it make to the revenue of the State if the railroads were assessed and taxed the same as other property? Not one farthing. The same amount of revenue would come from railroad taxation, but would come from different sources. Instead of the mortgagors paying the full amount, the mortgagees would bear their just proportion of the public burden, as is the case with all other mortgaged property. As the taxes on the mortgage would be a lien on the railroad property, the payment could be enforced as in all other like cases. It would be simply shifting a portion of the burden on the shoulders of other owners—if the mortgage covered the full value of the road, the owners of the mortgage must pay all the taxes—such is the law as it operates on others, and there is no good reason for making an exception of any person or class of persons.

When the news of the decision in the Kentucky cases reached us, Mr. Dunn authorized the announcement to the world, through the public press, that "The decision settles beyond any controversy that the same Court will decide in favor of the State." Mr. Delmas, his legal adviser and first lieutenant, also authorized the announcement that he regarded it as a "victory for the State" and a most complete defeat of the railroad companies. Perhaps Mr. Delmas also thinks that Justice Field overruled himself; although Justice Matthews quoted the same authorities and followed the same line of reasoning that Field did in the California cases. Time will tell. Hope told a flattering tale. In the meantime, Delmas and his followers can lay the flattering unction to their souls, that unless their cause is sustained, next year's Democratic victory, and 10 per cent counsel fees, will vanish into thin air like the baseless fabric of a vision.

Attorneys for San Mateo County in said action.

[The following is an agreement between the Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, regarding an action pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, said agreement being dated December 11, 1885:]

WHEREAS, There is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States an action in which the County of San Mateo is plaintiff in error and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company is defendant in error; and, whereas, the defendant in error, on the sixth day of September, 1882, paid to Rhodes & Barstow, attorneys for plaintiff in error, on account of the cause of action stated in the complaint, the sum of $7,247 63, and the further sum of $724 76, attorney's fees; and, whereas, the said action and the proceedings therein were of a friendly nature entered into in good faith to determine the validity of the constitutional provisions of the State of California, relating to the taxation of railroad property; and, whereas, when said case was argued and submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, various parties, for reasons of their own, misrepresented the said action and the relation of the parties thereto; and, whereas, it is believed by the parties that the purposes for which said action was instituted have, by such misrepresentations, been defeated; and, whereas, it was always understood that whatever might be the result of said action, the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company should pay the amount claimed and thus show its good faith therein; and, whereas, the Supervisors of said county have determined that it is impolitic to make any further expenditures in said actions, and have authorized a committee of their Board to settle and finally adjust the same.

It is hereby agreed between the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, defendant in error in said action, and the said committee of the Board of Supervisors acting for the County of San Mateo, that the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company shall pay into the treasury of said county, on account of the cause of action stated in the complaint, the sum of $7,613 30 in addition to the sum paid to said Rhodes & Barstow, the same being sufficient to more than pay the full amount claimed for taxes, penalties, attorneys' fees, and interest, as shown by the complaint in said action, and by the assessment roll on file in said county.

It is further understood and agreed that when the account is finally settled between the county and Rhodes & Barstow, an account shall be stated, based upon said complaint, and on the assessment roll, of the principal, interest, delinquency, and attorneys' fees, and also of the payment made to Rhodes & Barstow, and that the payment in excess of the true amount due shall be returned to the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, it being the intention of the parties that the whole tax, interest, and attorneys' fees, shall be paid, and the remainder of the payment be returned to the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

In testimony whereof the parties hereto have signed this agreement in duplicate, this eleventh day of December, 1885.

[Signed:]

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.
By CREED HAYMOND, General Counsel.

W. H. LAWRENCE,
A. F. GREEN,
JOHN MULLEN,

Committee of Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County.

[CERTIFICATE ATTACHED.]

I hereby certify, that in pursuance of the foregoing agreement, the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, on the eleventh day of December, 1885, paid into the treasury of the County of San Mateo, for the uses and purposes mentioned in said agreement, the sum of $7,613 30, in United States gold coin. I further certify that the County of San Mateo has had the use of the money in said agreement referred to as having been paid to Rhodes & Barstow, since the sixth day of September, 1882; and that the said sums more than pay off and discharge the principal, penalties, attorneys' fees, costs, interest, and all other things claimed in the complaint referred to in the foregoing agreement.

Witness my hand and the seal of the County of San Mateo this eleventh day of December, 1885.

[SEAL.]

GEORGE BARKER,
County Auditor.

MR. HAYMOND: I want to give the committee a chance to examine, and I now refer them to the case of Miller vs. Heilbron, a California case, the value of which I do not remember, but I will hand it to the reporter, in which they decide that this sort of legislation could not be sustained.

Then I offer in evidence and cite you to the case of the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad, 60 Cal., page 216, and the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company vs. the State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal., 135, in which we sought to have that question decided, but in which the objection was made that we were not "persons," and not entitled to the protection of the amendment, and the question went up on that ground, so we did not get an opportunity to have the Court determine whether Miller vs. Heilbron applied.

Then I desire to offer in evidence the oral argument of Roscoe Conkling, who is now dead, made in the Supreme Court of the United States upon this Constitution. I will give that to the reporter and ask him to attach it to this report.

I will also furnish each member of the committee with my argument in that tax case. I will send that to them.

A MEMBER: My understanding of this matter is, that there has been a good deal of matter produced this morning, and time occupied in a purpose foreign to what we came down here for. We came down to look into the records of the United States Courts.

THE CHAIRMAN: But I understand Mr. Haymond simply desires to cite some authorities.

A MEMBER: I intend to go to Sacramento to-night, and would like to have a chance to inspect those records.

MR. STORKE: I move that Mr. Haymond be permitted to simply file with the clerk the papers which he desires to introduce.

MR. HAYMOND: That will be agreeable.

THE CHAIRMAN: If there is no objection, Mr. Haymond will be permitted to file any documents in evidence bearing upon the matter, with the clerk.

MR. DIBBLE: We want to get them in as soon as possible.

THE CHAIRMAN: We want that record now.

MR. HAYMOND: I desire now to offer in evidence a statement by Mr. Ryan, and we will put him on as a witness at Sacramento to support it, that the various railroad companies belonging to this system, since the thirty-first of December, 1879, and up to the thirty-first of December last, have paid, exclusive of the taxation of the persons connected with them, $3,600,000, and a little over.

MR. STORKE: I request you to bring a statement of the parties to whom those payments were made, if you can.

MR. HAYMOND: That will take a good deal of time, but we have the vouchers, and will submit them to the examination of this committee.

MR. STORKE: I think that would be desirable, for we would like to know where the money has gone.

MR. HAYMOND: I think you will find a good deal of it in the various County Treasuries, myself. We paid it to the proper officers.

MR. STORKE: It is understood, then, is it, that Mr. Haymond is to furnish us with a statement of all parties to whom money has been paid?

MR. HAYMOND: What day will you call Mr. Ryan? It might take a good deal longer. We will give you all that we can make out up to that time.

MR. STORKE: As I understand it, the railroad company has paid on account to various County Treasurers throughout the State sums of money, and some of it ought to have found its way into the State Treasury, but, being refused by the Controller, still remains in the hands of the County Treasurers of various counties.

MR. SALOMON: Whatever has been paid on deposit the company has undoubtedly received vouchers for, and can show them?

MR. HAYMOND: Yes, sir.

MR. STORKE: But there is no tabulated list of the vouchers furnished?

MR. HAYMOND: Our vouchers are scattered through the daily transactions, and it may take some time to find them, but they are all there. If we cannot find them you can appoint an expert to get them. There is another matter that I desire to refer to. A gentleman that I walked down with to-day stated that it appears in the Controller's report of this State that the San Mateo County taxes were not fully paid. As I did that transaction I know that they were fully paid, every dollar. And if it is true that the Controller has stated that, I think it is due to myself that the committee summon the County Treasurer of that county, and allow me to produce the receipts. I telegraphed to the Supreme Court of the United States that the money was paid; that the County of San Mateo demanded it of us and we were under a stipulation to pay it, and we did. It was paid in full, every dollar. I had it done myself, and I therefore know, of my own personal knowledge, that there is no mistake about it. I ask the committee to allow me, as this is a matter which has just come under my observation, to file with them the original receipts.

THE CHAIRMAN: Is there any controversy about that matter?

MR. DUNN: Yes, sir. I am prepared to send to Mr. Haymond an affidavit by the Treasurer of the county that it was not paid.

MR. HAYMOND: I will state that that is unqualifiedly false. This is a very serious matter. It is unqualifiedly false; every dollar of it was paid, and I have the receipts of the proper officers for it. I simply telegraphed these receipts, or something equivalent to it, to Washington.

A MEMBER: It was paid to whom?

MR. HAYMOND: Paid to the proper parties in the very beginning.

A MEMBER: Do you say that it was paid to the County Treasurer of San Mateo County?

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Haymond reserves the right to introduce evidence hereafter to explain.

MR. HAYMOND: I cannot recall all of these things, but a portion of that money was paid to Mr. Rhodes in the very beginning. A portion of the San Mateo taxes was paid to Mr. Rhodes, and the balance was paid to the County Treasurer of San Mateo County, and I went to offer them.

MR. SALOMON: Let Mr. Haymond produce in evidence the vouchers, receipts, and whatever he deems necessary at Sacramento. I move that we now proceed to the business for which we came down, and that is to examine the records.

THE CHAIRMAN: If there is no objection that will be the order. Now, Mr. Dunn, we will hear from you.

MR. DUNN: Mr. Lezinsky will present the matter for me.

MR. LEZINSKY: Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee: In connection with this matter, the impression that has been sought to be conveyed to the committee is, that the statement made by Mr. Dunn is, that these records have been falsified; that is, that between the time that these records were made up, and these findings prepared, and an appeal taken in these cases, that this record was changed, or made false, so that the record that went into the Supreme Court of the United States was not the record that was on file here in the Circuit Court. That is not the statement, and that is not the position assumed by Mr. Dunn. The statement and position assumed by Mr. Dunn is this: That these records which involve the taxes of this State and several questions against the railroad companies are false in the findings and in the facts contained therein, in this, that there are in these findings statements that there was certain property assessed by the State Board of Equalization of these railroad companies, which, as a matter of fact, were not included in the assessment. And in that connection we will produce these findings, and point out the particular findings, and present to the committee the testimony showing that these findings are actually false; and then let the blame rest where it properly should. Furthermore, we intend to show to this committee that it is upon these findings, which are false, that the Supreme Court of the United States did decide these cases against the State of California; that thereby the State of California has been prevented from receiving an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States as to whether or not this system of taxation now in vogue in this State is, or is not, in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. That is where we say the evil in this matter exists.

MR. HAYMOND: Mr. Dunn assures me, and, of course, I have reason to believe it, that the statements in the newspapers imputing to me any responsibility in that matter, that he never thought any such thing.

MR. LEZINSKY: We say, let the blame rest where it should; let the committee decide where the blame should rest.

MR. HAYMOND: The newspapers have it the other way.

MR. DUNN: I have charged that the records were falsified.

MR. HAYMOND: That ends it as far as I am concerned.

MR. LEZINSKY: It may, or may not.

MR. DIBBLE: I understand Mr. Dunn's position to be this: I understood him to say, in Sacramento, that he charged that these findings had been falsified. I may have misunderstood him.

THE CHAIRMAN: I understood him to say that the records were false and fraudulent.

MR. DUNN [to Mr. Dibble]: Do you remember the second night, at a meeting of the Judiciary Committee, that you made that statement when you had your resolution prepared, and as to this specification, I said you are mistaken in that matter, and I declared that the records were false and fraudulent, and I repeat it.

MR. DIBBLE: Of course, the words "false and fraudulent," if Mr. Dunn were a lawyer, he would not publicly use, because that implies that the Judges of this Court had entered false and fraudulent findings. He does not mean to say that, I suppose. What he means to say is that the findings of the Court, which went up as the conclusions of fact before the Court, were erroneous.

MR. LEZINSKY: Our position is, and we say, that there was no evidence upon these points at all, and that the Court was imposed upon to make fraudulent findings by whomever presented those findings to the Court. That, I say, we will establish by the evidence. The gentleman who presented the findings, that will probably come out in the evidence. I now hold in my hands the papers in Case No. 3668, an action in the Circuit Court of the United States, entitled "The People of the State of California vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company." This was an action which was brought against the Central Pacific Railroad Company by the people of the State to collect the delinquent taxes for the year 1884.

MR. DIBBLE: Do you appear as a witness?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; as counsel for the Controller. In this case there is an allegation in the answer that the State Board of Equalization, in making up this assessment, blended with other values the values of ferryboats which were owned or purported to be owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or by individuals, or by some one else; and also the allegation that the State Board of Equalization, in making up the assessment sued upon in this case, designedly and willfully included in this assessment the value of the fences erected upon the lands of coterminous owners to this railroad, and also other defenses. These paragraphs are numbered in these answers, respectively, as paragraphs 25 and 25 A of the answer. There was a stipulation entered in this case that the case should be submitted by testimony offered by the defendant tending to prove the averments contained in Subdivisions 25 and 25 A of said answer, and by testimony offered by plaintiffs tending to disprove the averments in said paragraphs contained.

MR. DIBBLE: That is a part of the finding?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; this is a part of the stipulation as to the findings, made between counsel. This is a stipulation as to the testimony, and what that testimony was. "Upon certain admissions and upon certain testimony," the stipulation says, "offered by the defendant to prove these facts, and by testimony offered by the plaintiff to disprove these facts." In the findings made in accordance with this stipulation, there is a finding which is numbered "Finding No. 22:" "Rules of equity as regards the system adopted by said Board. The State Board of Equalization, in making the supposed assessment of said roadway of defendant, did knowingly and designedly include in the valuation of said roadway the value of fences located upon the line between said roadway and the land of coterminous proprietors." That is entirely in accordance with the statement made by us that we intend, and will show to this committee, that no testimony upon that point was offered whatever, and that, notwithstanding the fact that no testimony was offered upon that point whatever, and notwithstanding the fact that that fact was entirely untrue, that this finding was permitted to be incorporated within these findings, and upon that finding the Supreme Court of the United States rendered judgment in favor of the defendant.

MR. DIBBLE: That is one of the cases that went up?

MR. LEZINSKY: Yes, sir; that is one of the cases that went up, and was decided by the Supreme Court upon that point.

MR. HAYMOND: Do you say that that case was decided upon that point? That question was decided upon the question of the Federal franchise.

MR. LEZINSKY: That point was also involved. The case went off on both points.

MR. DIBBLE: Do they decide both points?

MR. LEZINSKY: Yes, sir.

MR. DIBBLE: Where is that case reported?

MR. DUNN: In 127 U. S. Reports.

MR. HAYMOND: If it won't interrupt you, I would like to ask you who made up the record in that case upon the writ of error?

MR. LEZINSKY: I do not know, but I think I can show who made up the findings.

MR. HAYMOND: Do you know who made up the record that went to the Supreme Court?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; but I propose to show that the findings were made up in the office of the railroad company, and that the Attorney-General may possibly have allowed these things to go in without examination, and thereby have been guilty of criminal carelessness; that these findings were submitted to the Court, and a statement made that they were correct, that thereupon these findings were accepted by the Court and signed. But I say that they were untrue and false.

MR. HAYMOND: Who made up the record in that case?

MR. DUNN: Mr. Johnson had nothing to do with making up that record.

MR. HAYMOND: He made it up entirely.

MR. DUNN: No, sir; that record was made up or prepared and the stipulation was signed by yourself, and by Mr. Brown, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Baggett, and Mr. Waymire. That record was made up here. I speak of the findings as prepared here under the stipulation.

MR. HAYMOND: That was made by Mr. Johnson.

MR. DUNN: Mr. Johnson does not want to be held responsible for that kind of a record. He had nothing to do with it.

MR. HAYMOND: I only want to get it before this committee that Mr. Johnson did make up that record, as I understand it, and took the writ of error in that case.

MR. DUNN: We will put Attorney-General Johnson on the stand when we go to Sacramento.

MR. STORKE: You are both correct. Mr. Marshall attended to the trial of the case below—

MR. HAYMOND: That is another suit entirely.

MR. LEZINSKY: This record was made up in September, 1885.

MR. DUNN: It was Mr. Brown and Mr. Marshall who signed it.

MR. HAYMOND: I speak of the record in the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error, where the State became plaintiff in error. That record was made up by Mr. Johnson; this was made up by Mr. Marshall.

MR. LEZINSKY: If that record was made up, it is simply a copy of these papers.

MR. DUNN: Mr. Johnson went before the Supreme Court on findings prepared before he came into office.

MR. HAYMOND: It was his duty, if you advised him that anything was wrong about it, to have corrected it.

MR. LEZINSKY: I do not think he could have corrected it.

MR. HAYMOND: I would have stipulated to have it corrected, if there was a mistake.

MR. LEZINSKY: I say not.

MR. HAYMOND: I have no doubt you would say anything.

MR. LEZINSKY: I have in my hand Case No. 3669, which is an action brought in 1884 by the State against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for taxes for the year, under the circumstances and in which the same state of facts exist, and the statement will apply. I refer to the findings on file in that case, and on page six of said findings we find the following, numbered "Finding 16 A:": "A distance of four miles from the wharf at the end of said defendant's road at Oakland, Alameda County, etc., used for the purpose of said railroad, was assessed to said defendant as four miles of said road, at the same amount per mile as any other equal portion of said road, said four miles across the bay constituting four miles of the aggregate of six hundred and two and twenty-two hundredths miles of said railroad, assessed to said defendant."

We state that that finding is absolute and totally false; that there was no evidence of that kind, and that no such assessment was made by the Board of Equalization.

Also the finding on page nine of these findings, which is numbered "Finding 21 A:": "Rules of equality as regards the system adopted by said Board. The State Board of Equalization, in making the supposed assessment of said roadway of defendant, did knowingly and designedly include in the valuation of said roadway the value of fences located upon the line between said roadway and the land of coterminous proprietors." That finding I state is absolutely and totally false.

MR. HAYMOND: This testimony should be taken under oath.

MR. LEZINSKY: I am not testifying. Your statement was not taken under oath. I say these are facts that we expect to prove.

A MEMBER: Do I understand counsel expects to introduce the evidence as introduced into the Court to prove to us that these findings were not sustained by the evidence introduced?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. DIBBLE: Where is that evidence in these cases?

MR. LEZINSKY: I say there was no evidence taken in the cases whatever.

MR. HAYMOND: You testify to that, do you?

MR. DIBBLE: The question is: was there any evidence taken in these cases at all, to show that these things were done?

MR. DUNN: No, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: I promise to convict the man of perjury who testifies to that before this committee. If these gentlemen are stating now that they expect to prove this thing, that is one thing; but if they state them as facts, that is another thing. If they state them as facts I want them under oath, and then I will agree to convict them of perjury.

MR. DUNN: I will now agree to go on the stand and give testimony that the State Board of Equalization in 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888 did not assess fences; did not assess steamers; did not assess the four miles of water across the bay as four miles of railroad, and I defy you to convict me of perjury.

MR. SALOMON: It seems to me that our work here this afternoon is simply the reception of documentary evidence. I understand it perfectly well, I think, and there is no use of getting into a dispute about it. I understand these gentlemen to say that these findings here find upon testimony apparently showing that the fences had been assessed. He says there was no such testimony. That can easily be ascertained, whether or not there was any such testimony. Mr. Haymond did not say that he would convict any man of perjury who said it was so, but who swears that there was no such testimony. All that is necessary is to present these findings, and then to show that no such testimony was taken. If those findings were arrived at without testimony, then there is something wrong, but if there was testimony taken and the findings were based upon testimony, that settles it.

THE CHAIRMAN: My understanding is this: let this documentary evidence go in, and then the gentlemen can produce the evidence.

MR. DIBBLE: I will make this suggestion, which I think the committee will appreciate. There is no necessity of going through any of these records, except those that went to the Supreme Court, because it is of no consequence to us unless there was some wrong effected by the fact which they complain of. I suggest that they simply offer in evidence the findings in these that went on appeal to the Supreme Court, because we must bear in mind that we have but a few days more of this Legislature, and this testimony has all got to be printed, and we do not want it to be too long.

MR. LEZINSKY: The testimony we have to offer, and the statements we are making is very short, and all of these cases can apply one to the other.

MR. DIBBLE: Did they all go up on appeal?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir.

MR. DUNN: Mr. Haymond has made a long statement. I admit that the case of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company was decided upon the question of the assessment of a Federal franchise. But you must also take this matter into consideration, for before these cases went to the United States Supreme Court there was a decision in the San Bernardino County case and the Santa Clara County case, and two or three others, where the Court declared that because the State Board of Equalization included the fences, no taxes could be collected. Was not this part and parcel of a scheme to get the same kind of a record in these cases, to have the Supreme Court shut us out again on the question of taxes?

MR. HAYMOND: I will answer that question now. The Santa Clara case has not been decided.

MR. DUNN: But why put into the record a statement that the Board of Equalization assessed things that they did not assess?

MR. HAYMOND: I think that your attorney stated in the Supreme Court in 1885, after this record was made, that you had assessed the fences, himself; not as a proposition of fact, but in order to maintain that construction as a cotemporaneous construction, and claimed that it was right; stood there in the presence of that Court, under the sanction of his oath as an attorney, because he was stating facts of which the Court would take judicial notice, if true, to get a cotemporaneous construction; he stated in the presence of the Court—that was in 1885—that the State Board of Equalization had always assessed the fences, and that it had always been insisted that those fences were assessable.

MR. DUNN: I will put Mr. Delmas upon the stand——

MR. STORKE [Interrupting]: We are not getting along with our work. It seems to me that we are here to determine whether or not any official of the State has been derelict in his duty. It makes no difference whether it was in one of the cases that went to the Supreme Court, or in one of the cases that did not go to the Supreme Court. I would like to see the record of all these cases.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir; I would too, but the object is to get this documentary evidence before the committee.

MR. LEZINSKY: In Case No. 3670, which was a case in the same year, and a case against the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company, which was not a corporation holding any franchise from the Federal Government, the same finding is incorporated in these findings, as to the fences: that is, that the value of the fences was included in the value of the assessment. That finding, we state, is absolutely and totally false. Therefore, to take an appeal in these cases after the decision of the Supreme Court saying that such assessment was void, and it appearing upon the findings that such an assessment had been made, it would be simply making a useless effort, because when the cases got into the Supreme Court of the United States, the judgment would be again affirmed for the defendant, and would be affirmed upon a finding that was totally untrue. In that case there was no Federal franchise to the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company whatever, but still there was a finding that the value of the fences had been included in the assessment. That was not appealed for the reason that if an appeal had been taken it would have been decided against the People, upon that finding.

MR. SALOMON: Do you mean that the findings are contrary to the evidence?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, sir.

MR. LEZINSKY: We are not attacking the findings, but the action of these officials in permitting these findings to be made, and I say that is criminal carelessness. I now have in my hand the record in the Case No. 3263, which was an action brought by the People of the State against the Central Pacific Railroad Company to collect the delinquent taxes for the year

1883. In the answer filed in this case, there is an allegation that the value of the steamboats was included in the value of the railroad, and that the values of the fences were included. And there was a stipulation in this case, "And it is further stipulated that, upon the issue of whether, in the assessment in this case mentioned, the distance across the Bay of San Francisco, from Oakland to San Francisco, was included in the length of the Central Pacific Railroad as assessed, the attorneys for plaintiff may file in the case a sworn statement of the Clerk of the State Board of Equalization, which statement, if filed, shall be conclusive upon the issue of whether or not the value of fences were included by the Board in the assessment of property described in the complaint." Now, I state in connection with this case that no such sworn statement ever was filed; and, notwithstanding the fact that no such sworn statement ever was filed, that still there was a finding upon those issues, and a finding which was absolutely and totally untrue—

MR. HAYMOND: Is that a statement of fact?

MR. LEZINSKY: Those are facts which I intend to prove and expect to prove as I state them. I will state them, and I expect to prove them as I state them.

MR. DIBBLE: Here is all the evidence. [Referring to a volume of California Reports.] It is all here.

MR. HAYMOND: The case occupied several days in trial; Mr. Delmas tried the case.

MR. LEZINSKY: In this case the findings make this statement: "Said assessment included all property and kinds of property mentioned in Section 3665 of the Political Code of California, as amended March 9, 1883, except depots, stations, ships, buildings erected upon the places covered by the right of way; which last mentioned property was assessed as provided in said section, by local appraisers." Section 3665 provided for the assessment of steamboats; and here is a finding that the assessment included all property and kinds of property mentioned in Section 3665. And we state that no such property was included within the assessment, and designedly, and with express intention of preventing any such confusion, the State Board of Equalization, after mature deliberation, decided that they would expressly leave out any such values in making up their valuation of the property owned by these railroad companies; the Supreme Court of this State having decided in June, 1883, that steamboats should not be assessed by the State Board, but by the respective County Assessors in which the vessels were enrolled. These were the taxes for 1883.

MR. HAYMOND: When was that assessment made in 1883, at what time?

MR. DUNN: In August, 1883.

MR. HAYMOND: That is the tax then for 1883-84?

MR. DUNN: No, sir; for 1883 alone.

MR. DIBBLE: When was the decision of the Supreme Court of this State rendered?

MR. DUNN: In June, 1883, prior to the meeting of the State Board of Equalization that year.

MR. HAYMOND: Then that was the assessment for the fiscal year 1883-84?

MR. DUNN: Yes, sir.

MR. LEZINSKY: I now have in my hand the record in Case No. 3265, which was an action by the People of the State against the Northern Railway Company, a case which was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. In this case the answer alleged that steamboats had been assessed, and also that the fences had been assessed. The printed findings as first prepared had in them a finding that the value of the steamboats alleged in the answer had been included in the assessment. But that finding was stricken out by the Judge on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain that finding. But in the subsequent year, the taxes in the action brought for the taxes of the subsequent year, No. 3672, which was an action against the same corporation for taxes for the year 1884, the finding is contained at page 6 of the finding, as follows: "Finding 11. The distance of one mile from Benicia across the Straits of Carquinez to Port Costa, over which freight and passengers are carried by said defendant upon steamers of said defendant, and used for the purposes of said railroad, was assessed to said defendant as one mile of said road at the same amount per mile as any other equal portion of said road; said one mile across said straits constituting one mile of the aggregate one hundred and fourteen miles assessed to said defendant."

This is Case No. 3672, a case against the Northern Railway Company, and that was a corporation which did not hold its franchise from the Federal Government. It was a case which, if the record was proper, could have been appealed, and the point which the State has striven time and time again to have decided could have been decided; that is, whether or not the system of taxation in vogue in this State to-day, and which has been in vogue since the new Constitution was adopted, is or is not valid in so far as it does or does not violate the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In this case the findings were permitted to contain the finding that the one mile across the straits was assessed as railroad property, which was absolutely and totally untrue; also, that the value of the fences was included in the assessment, as is found upon the subsequent page of the findings, and is numbered Finding No. 12 A. This case did not go to the Supreme Court, for the reason that the findings being in this shape, an appeal would have been futile. When the Supreme Court has decided that where the value of steamboats and fences have been included in the assessment the assessment is void, why should an appeal be taken upon such a statement of facts? The record was false. If the record had not been false then the case could have been appealed, and the Supreme Court could have determined whether or not, in view of the other facts, there was or was not then in vogue in this State a system of taxation, whether or not, as to railroads, it was or was not valid, upon which point a decision of the Supreme Court has never been able to be obtained.

A MEMBER: Do you contend that the findings of that fact were the result of a stipulation?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; but I say that these findings were presented to the Court, and that the Court found these findings; and that some official, or some person, was guilty of negligence, or something worse, in presenting such findings to the Court, when the testimony would have established, and when the testimony was absolutely to the contrary.

A MEMBER: Was there any testimony in the case showing that that mile of railroad from Martinez was included in that one hundred and fourteen miles?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; if there was it was absolute perjury.

A MEMBER: Was there any such testimony to show whether or not that mile was referred to in the testimony, or in the proof?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir.

A MEMBER: And you say that is contrary to the testimony?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; I do not say it is contrary to the testimony, but contrary to what should have been the testimony in the case.

MR. DIBBLE: That is a different proposition.

MR. LEZINSKY: There was no testimony at all. And, more than that, as a rule of law, this was a matter of defense. That was an allegation by the defendant of a matter which had been stated by him; therefore, there must be testimony introduced by him to prove that allegation; and the rule of law is that without such testimony no such finding could be embodied.

MR. DIBBLE: There is no such rule of law. Findings may be based upon the testimony of either party to the suit.

MR. LEZINSKY: That may be.

THE CHAIRMAN: But the allegation is presumed to be denied.

MR. DIBBLE: But the Court may find it upon the testimony of either party.

THE CHAIRMAN: Of course it may, but it is presumed to be denied.

MR. LEZINSKY: There was a cross pleading set up by the defendant.

MR. STORKE: It is alleged that that distance of one mile is a part of the road?

MR. LEZINSKY: It is alleged that that was assessed by the State Board of Equalization as a part of the road.

A MEMBER: What is the allegation of the plaintiff?

MR. LEZINSKY: The complaint simply is a formal complaint for taxes. It does not describe the road, but it follows the statutory form of a complaint for taxes; alleges that a certain amount of taxes are due; so much for State and so much for county taxes.

MR. DIBBLE: The answer sets up that there was an improper assessment.

MR. SALOMON: The complaint undoubtedly states that certain property had been assessed to such and such an amount—

MR. LEZINSKY: Yes, sir.

A MEMBER: Is there any record evidence in that case?

MR. LEZINSKY: I believe not. I say that no testimony was taken.

THE CHAIRMAN: The testimony as to that will be taken hereafter.

MR. LEZINSKY: This case was supposed to be tried here in the Circuit Court.

MR. DIBBLE: In this case you have referred to, I will call your attention to the fact that it was not decided upon the question of fences at all.

MR. LEZINSKY: In the case against the California Pacific Railroad Company, which was a case for the same year and in which the same state of facts exist, with this difference, that in Case No. 3671, of The People vs. The California Pacific Railroad Company, the finding is: "That the distance of two miles, from Vallejo Junction to Vallejo, over which freight and passengers are carried by said defendant, upon steamers owned by said defendant, and used for the purpose of said railroad, was assessed at and as two miles of said road, at the same amount per mile as any other equal portion of said road. Said one mile (evidently a mistake) across the said straits, constituted two miles of the aggregate of 112.50 miles of said railroad assessed to said defendant, and in so assessing said two miles, the said Board followed a statement filed by said defendant, and made such assessment in accordance therewith."

On page 7 is also a finding which is numbered "Finding 12 A;" which is that the State Board of Equalization included in the value of the assessment the value of the fences, and in connection with this matter, to show that there is something more than mere carelessness in interpolating findings of this kind into these findings, there is underneath this slip upon which this finding is contained, pasted on to these findings, a pencil memorandum: "Objected to; no evidence." And as to the most of these other findings, there is on the margin a pencil memorandum of "No evidence to support this finding." So particular attention is called to it. Notwithstanding that fact, this finding is put in, and made a part of the records in these cases, so as to cut off any right of appeal, because, if an appeal were taken the natural presumption would be that such an appeal would be futile, as the judgment of the upper Court of which these are findings, was in that condition.

A MEMBER: Who put that pencil memorandum on there?

MR. LEZINSKY: I do not know.

A MEMBER: Is that a part of the record?

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; except that the committee might take it into consideration that somebody's attention was called to it.

A MEMBER: My recollection is that a statement was made by the Controller, at the joint meeting of the two Judiciary Committees, that the case which was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States was reversed, on the ground that the assessment was invalid, because it included fences and steamboats. And the further statement was made by him that those findings were false, and not sustained by the evidence. My understanding of the committee's action was that we should investigate that case, or those cases. I ask the pertinency of going into all of the other cases which were not taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon which there has been no ruling. I think we should confine ourselves to those two cases, as those are the cases directly spoken of by the Controller.

THE CHAIRMAN: We want enough witnesses to ascertain whether or not any state officer has been derelict in his duty.

A MEMBER: I think we should confine ourselves to the cases spoken of by the Controller himself.

MR. SALOMON: That pencil mark refers to a finding that is stricken out.

A MEMBER: My understanding of this case is, that this testimony offered in these other cases which have not been carried up is, to show that, by reason of false findings in these cases, the State has been barred from pressing the claim to a final conclusion; that they had no reason to carry it up after the false findings got into the records here in the lower Court; that it operated as a bar, as the United States Supreme Court had decided against the State by reason of there being in those cases.

ANOTHER MEMBER: The resolutions recite the fact that certain charges have been made by the State Controller. Now, they have incorporated the charge of the State Controller that certain cases went to the Supreme Court of the United States. Those are the cases we were then considering in joint meeting of the two Judiciary Committees. A statement was made during the argument of counsel, by the Controller, that those cases ought not to be precedent for the action of the committee, for the reason that the Supreme Court of the United States reversed them on the ground that the assessments were invalid, which judgment was based upon certain false findings. And the purpose of our investigation here, I understand it, is, to ascertain whether or not those findings in those cases were false; to ascertain that the findings in some other cases were false will not assist us, unless there is a general stipulation which covers all these cases.

MR. LEZINSKY: There is a general stipulation.

A MEMBER: We have come down here to ascertain whether or not any officer of the State has been derelict in his duty, or criminally careless. We can ascertain that by investigating one of these cases that has not been carried to the United States Supreme Court, as well as those that have been carried, provided we find the false findings in any of the cases.

THE CHAIRMAN: We will take the evidence now, as we are here.

A MEMBER: I am informed that in these cases that have been carried up, that there was a stipulation to the effect that a decision in the cases carried up should govern in relation to all of the others, so that a decision against us in the one case, necessarily there was no use of carrying up the other. But still we wish to ascertain whether there was any dereliction on the part of any official of the State in any of these findings.

MR. DUNN: I think my statement was that there were findings that fences had been assessed, and that steamboats had been assessed since 1883, whereas no such assessments have been made by the State Board of Equalization. I also stated that the case against the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company went off upon the question of Federal franchise, but that the case against the California Pacific Railroad Company went off on these questions that were based upon records that never should have been placed in the Court, and never should have been in the findings, because they were based upon a statement that the State Board did things that they did not do.

A MEMBER: Did not that statement come in connection with this point, that there had been cases sent to the Supreme Court of the United States—we were then discussing why this had not been decided by the Supreme Court—and did you not rise in the committee and say that there had been two cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, but none of them upon the constitutional question, but upon the ground that the findings recited facts which were false?

MR. DUNN: No, sir. I refer to the case of the California Pacific, in Volume 127 of the U. S. Reports. And my statement was, that the Supreme Court of the United States never did decide the question that the railroad attorneys had been constantly telling the people of this State they were anxious to have them try and decide, and that was whether our system of assessments was a violation of the fourteenth amendment. And I said they will not decide upon that point, because every case that has gone up—the case of the Southern Pacific and of the Central Pacific—the last two cases, contain an assessment of fences and steamboats, the distance across the bay, etc. And the only time there has been anything like an approach to a Federal question was in the last decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, where it was found that the State had assessed the Federal franchises. Those are the only two cases.

A MEMBER: That is the reason I think we should confine ourselves to those two cases.

MR. DUNN: The California Pacific case went up there and that did not contain any Federal question.

A MEMBER: I will offer a suggestion, to expedite matters. I believe there is no difference of language as to the findings; and we know what the record shows the findings are. Now the question for us to investigate is, does the evidence sustain those findings?

MR. DIBBLE: Can Mr. Lezinsky tell us who were the witnesses examined in those cases?

MR. LEZINSKY: I say that no witnesses were examined. We do not expect to try these cases, but to put members of the Board of Equalization upon the stand to show that they were not called as witnesses, and that statement is absolutely untrue.

MR. DIBBLE: But that would not touch this question. The only question we can examine upon this inquiry is, whether there was testimony in this case to show that the franchise was assessed.

MR. LEZINSKY: No, sir; that is not it. The matter to be investigated is, has any officer been derelict in his duty, in permitting such a finding to be made, when the testimony was to the contrary?

MR. DIBBLE: The only way to ascertain that is, to learn what testimony was offered in the case.

MR. HAYMOND: I will make a little explanation now, and I think I can straighten all of this out. The first case which went to the Supreme Court was argued there, the San Mateo case was the same, in Volume 118 of the Reports, a case which was tried. I told you that the San Mateo case was assailed, and at the instance of the State, five cases were tried here in the Circuit Court of the United States. I was absent in Europe during those trials, but Mr. Delmas conducted that case for the State, or for the Controller. There was a trial of that case, and it took several days, perhaps a week, to try and argue it here. That case was decided against the State, and a writ of error was taken. In that case, hotly contested upon both sides, where all of the evidence was introduced—I do not know whether it was reduced to writing or not, as there is no shorthand reporter in the Circuit Court, and it may or may not have been reduced to writing. That case was tried by Mr. Delmas, assisted by Mr. Marshall. Mr. Delmas, I believe, had full control and charge; it was before the difficulty occurred between those gentlemen who were conducting this case for the State—

MR. LEZINSKY [Interrupting]: If you will permit me to interrupt you as to the testimony, it has been inquired what would be introduced to prove these assertions. What we expect to do is this: to put upon the stand every attorney who had any connection with these cases, and if such testimony was introduced in the case, that they shall upon their oaths tell who gave that testimony, when that testimony was given, and what was the character of it; then the committee can for itself judge as to whether or not any such testimony was given, and if so, who gave it and what was the character of it. That is the only way in which that matter can be determined, and we shall do that.

MR. HAYMOND: I have told you the history of the San Mateo case, and that that was set aside. The Supreme Court then ordered five cases to be tried and they were tried here, contested cases in Court. Mr. Delmas and Mr. Marshall conducted the cases; Mr. Delmas was the chief counsel, and we all know how he conducts a case. They took the writ of error in one case, and the Supreme Court would not advance it; then they took a writ of error in the others, and took up the five cases. That was done in the first place, because the Court ordered it to be done. That was a contested case fought over, and I have always understood that testimony was taken upon both sides. Mr. Delmas conducted that case; it reached the Supreme Court for argument on the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth of January, 1886, long after these records were made up in this Court, and long after these records had become a finality. Bear that in mind. In that case, the Court found, as a matter of fact, that the fences had not been assessed in the assessment, but that they had been included in the valuation of the franchise. They found that as a matter of fact. Now, I undertake to say that Mr. Delmas was not an attorney who would have allowed that finding to stand, if there had been no evidence to support it.

MR. LEZINSKY: In the case of 1881 and 1882 there was evidence to support that finding in those cases; that is in the Santa Clara cases. In those cases there was evidence to support that finding in this way; you are wrong.

MR. HAYMOND: I desire to make my statement. The gentleman does not know anything about what he is talking about. That case was tried, and Mr. Lezinsky says there was evidence in that case to support that finding. That was away back. But that case came up in 1886, and the Supreme Court of the United States never decided any of the cases prior to that, except those cases that were there upon questions as to whether they were there or not. That finding was in that case, and we said it was fatal to it. Of course, the State had brought that question in; it was not in the San Mateo cases. When we got into the fight and contest with the State, where it was sword to sword, the case was tried; the State made its case, and we made ours. Nobody that I ever heard of imputed to the Court or to the lawyers or anybody else in that case any unfairness on either side. Mr. Delmas believed that the fences were properly included in that assessment. He staked his case upon his opinion of the law, and went to the Supreme Court, and attempted to establish the fact by the law itself, by the judicial decision of this Court, or he could establish it in some Court by what we lawyers call contemporaneous construction, and the Court takes judicial notice of contemporaneous construction, and it don't have to be proved. Like all other facts of which the Court takes judicial notice, it informs itself by looking into books or the authorities or taking the statement of counsel, which, of course, is made of his own knowledge as to what those facts are. For instance, if a man would say that the sun rose at six o'clock, or half-past six, the Court takes judicial notice of that fact, but it has to look to some place to find it. If I were a Judge, and a reputable man would state to me that it rose at six o'clock, I would accept that, of course, nobody contradicting.

Now, Mr. Delmas understood that that was the law, and in 1886, long after all of these records were made up here, and long after Mr. Marshall and these men had agreed to these findings or had tried these cases, because they were all tried, long after they had tried these cases, Mr. Delmas said in the presence of the Supreme Court—made a statement which, had it been false to his knowledge, would have debarred him from ever practicing at the bar of that Court or any other; not a statement of what the record contained; not a statement of what the judicial decisions were, which could have controverted, but a statement of the fact that one department of this Government—

MR. LEZINSKY: Are you now under oath?

MR. HAYMOND: I am making a speech; but I will be put under oath. I am speaking from the record.

MR. LEZINSKY: When I was making my statement here, Mr. Haymond constantly objected to what I stated, on the ground that I was stating facts, not under oath. He is now making a statement about Mr. Delmas, and I say that Mr. Delmas did not make any such statement—

MR. HAYMOND [Interrupting]: Then I will read it from the record.

MR. DIBBLE: There it is in the book.

MR. HAYMOND: You will bear in mind that statement. Mr. Delmas attempted to tell that Court how one department of this Government had uniformly considered that law; he endeavored to convey to them the facts of which they were bound to take judicial notice, because contemporaneous construction by the Legislature, or any department of the Government, has a bearing upon the construction of the law. The statement was made by Mr. Delmas, taken down by the shorthand reporter, published in his own arguments, distributed all over this State, and entered on record in the record of the Supreme Court of the United States, to endure forever as a fact beyond all contradiction.

Now, bearing in mind that this case was argued for three days; that it was the only case there touching this question; on the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth of January, 1886, and decided on the tenth of May, 1886, long after these records, he says: "I now take leave of the Federal questions," and if you will turn to his argument you will find it was as able a one as could be made. He distinguished himself in the argument, and added to the laurels which he already wore, as one of the first men at the bar of this State. He says: "I now take leave of the Federal questions in this case; leave it to examine briefly some minor points which include no question of constitutional law, but refer to modes of procedure under the statutes of the State. Objection is made to recovery here, because it is claimed that fences on the line of the road were improperly included in the assessment of the roadway, because, in the first place, they were not proven to be the property of the defendant, and secondly, that they were not within the jurisdiction of the Board of Equalization. It is said that the plaintiff ought to have proved that the fences belonged to the defendant. A prima facie case made out by the defendant's documents established everything necessary to its recovery, among which is, that the property assessed belongs to the taxpayers assessed, referring to the assessment roll, and the rule of the statute that it shall be prima facie evidence, besides the general rule that fences belong to the railroads whose roadway they inclose.

"The defendants, in rebuttal of plaintiff's prima facie evidence, have not proved that they do not own the fences. All presumptions, then, arising from the plaintiff's prima facie case, remain standing in full force. Such fences are not enumerated by the Code among the things necessarily assessable by local assessments. Those are the depots, the station grounds, shops, buildings, and gravel beds. Unless the Legislature intended that they should be taxed, they are to be assessed by the Board of Equalization as a part of the roadbed. Fences built upon the line of the roadway are a part of the roadway, and necessary to its protection; as much so as the railing of the bridge is part of the bridge, or the framework of a tunnel is part of the tunnel. Such has always been the understanding of the law in California, and fences have always been assessed by the Board of Equalization. I have never been able to grasp the proposition that fences are not a part of the railway which they inclose.

"If the defendant made a conveyance of its railway, from San Francisco to San José, to the plaintiff, would not the fences pass by the deed? Clearly so, as much as the sale of my garden would convey the fences which inclose the garden."

Now, there is a statement of the attorney for the plaintiff in this case. Bear in mind I do not pretend to say what testimony was given in that case; I was not there, and know nothing about it. I only assume that Mr. Delmas was too good a lawyer to allow the findings to stand without making an attack upon them, if there was no evidence to support them.

MR. DUNN: Do you want me to explain how those findings were found in this Court?

MR. HAYMOND: No, sir; I do not care about that, because we might get into a controversy as to what findings were.

MR. LEZINSKY: There are some futher facts that the Controllor desires to set before the committee in his statement. I think we had better get in those records.

MR. HAYMOND: I will soon be through. On the seventeenth of February, 1885, before the case was argued, Mr. Marshall and Harvey Brown, the attorney for the railroad company, made this stipulation upon which these cases, among others, were decided: "It is hereby stipulated by and between the plaintiff and defendant in the above entitled action, that a trial by jury is waived, and it is further stipulated that the above entitled action," etc. [Reads stipulation.] Without knowing anything about the facts I will suggest that you call the Attorney-General or Mr. Baggett, and you will find that the findings were prepared by Mr. Brown on the part of the railroad, as findings are always prepared by the attorneys of the prevailing party; submitted to them, and they probably indorsed this memoranda, that they objected to these findings, and in that event the findings were settled by the Court itself wherever they objected; and wherever they agreed, the Court said "That is sufficient." Then Mr. Baggett, or somebody connected with the Attorney-General's office, probably said, "We do not agree to that or this," and then it was settled by the Court.

MR. DUNN: The findings in the Santa Clara case as to the assessment of fences was made up this way: There is nothing in the records of the State Board of Equalization since the year 1881, or since the assessment that was made under the present Constitution, showing that fences were assessed. But in the Santa Clara case two or three members of the State Board of Equalization were put on the stand here, and I was present during a part of the time, and they declared that in their opinion they thought that they had assessed the fences; had included the value of the fences in the right of way. Mr. Markley, a member of the State Board of Equalization from 1883 to 1886, and Mr. Maslin, the Clerk of the State Board of Equalization, were here during the entire time this testimony was had. And when they met in August, 1883, to assess the railroads, we had this before us—and I think Mr. Gildea can bear me out—I think that I was the person who made the suggestion, "Now, let us talk about this question of fences, so that we will be in a position to declare whether we do or do not assess the fences. Let us purposely determine not to do it," and it was so determined. There has been a wrong done to some considerable extent in these cases. The cases of 1883, 1884, 1885, etc., that were made up under our assessments, were to be submitted to this Court upon the evidence submitted in the Santa Clara case; and that evidence was that the fences were assessed. We had that before us, and we purposely determined not to assess fences, and yet this record contains that very evidence.

MR. HAYMOND: Then it contains it properly, under the stipulation.

MR. LEZINSKY: I desire, also, to call the attention of the committee to some of the subsequent cases in connection with this matter, based upon the statement made by Mr. Haymond this morning in connection with these cases; and if I should digress a little from what this question is, it is simply that the committee, in making this report, may report upon some step that may be taken in order that this question may properly be brought before the Court for its determination. In case No. 4014, which was an action brought for the taxes for the year 1885 against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the judgment was for the defendant, the case was appealed, and the decision went against the State, upon the question and upon the decision that in making the assessment there was included the value of the franchise, which was from the Federal Government, and therefore that the assessment was void. Now, in the other cases brought for the same year, to wit: the case against the California Pacific, and against the Northern Railway Company, and against the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company, a stipulation was made that the trial and findings of fact are waived, and that the decision should be the same in those cases as in this case of the Central Pacific; provided, however, that if the case should be decided upon some point not involved in those three cases, that the judgment should be set aside, and that findings should be had in accordance with the matters put in issue in that case; and that thereupon an appeal could be had, so that those cases might be determined upon their individual merits.

MR. HAYMOND: Who made that stipulation? A. I think it was by the Attorney-General.

MR. LEZINSKY: That stipulation was made then by the Attorney-General and yourself. It is signed Creed Haymond and Edward Marshall, Attorney-General. This is the stipulation. [Showing.]

MR. HAYMOND: That is the stipulation I am speaking of.

MR. LEZINSKY: The stipulation is as follows. I will read from the San Pablo and Tulare case, No. 4016: "It is hereby stipulated that a jury trial be hereby waived, and said case may be submitted to the Court upon the testimony referred to in the stipulation this day made and filed in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, subject to the same terms and conditions. And it is hereby further stipulated that special findings of fact in all of the above entitled actions are waived. It is hereby further stipulated and agreed that the said case of the people against the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall, by the losing party, be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the decision of said Court in said case shall be applicable to and be treated by such party as the decision of said Court in the above entitled actions, it being the intention and desire of the parties hereto to save expenses of separate writs of error, and that all of the above entitled actions shall abide the final decision of the said Supreme Court of the United States in the said case of the People vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company; provided, that said decision shall be made upon points involved therein, and if not so made, the judgments in any of the above cases in which the point is involved shall be set aside, and the finding of facts therein shall be made." Therefore, the decision in the case against the Central Pacific having been upon the point of the Federal franchise, as that point is not included in the case of the California Pacific Railroad, or the Northern Railway, or the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad, the judgment in those actions shall be set aside, and findings in those cases shall be prepared, which shall be proper findings; that thereupon an appeal shall be taken in those cases, in which at least the decision shall be had upon the question of whether or not the system in vogue in this State for the taxation of railroads is or is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. These gentlemen tried these cases in 1885; here a solution of these questions can be had. Shall these judgments be permitted to stand, when there has been a stipulation in a case upon which a decision had been rendered upon a point not involved in these cases? The stipulation says that it shall not be.

A MEMBER: Why didn't the State take advantage of that stipulation?

MR. LEZINSKY: I don't know. You shall ask that of the Attorney-General. I say that the Attorney-General has been derelict in this matter you are investigating. Has there been a public officer derelict in his duty in the management of these cases?

THE CHAIRMAN: I think that is pertinent to the point.

MR. LEZINSKY: Could or could not a decision by any possibility have been arrived at upon this point? There it could have been had, and there it should have been had. There is a case in position to get it. It is the suggestion of counsel for the railroad that a case at present hanging in the State Courts shall be tried, or shall be passed upon, and then an appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in that case; instead of that this proceeding should be taken: that a judgment framed upon a point not involved in them shall be permitted to stand.

MR. HAYMOND: I have stipulated to do just what you say you want to do.

MR. LEZINSKY: I am not questioning your acts, but I question the acts of any one who permits this judgment to stand, and who does not have findings before the Court which are proper findings in these cases, and then take these cases to the Supreme Court of the United States, and get a decision in these cases that these cases should have.

MR. STORKE: I submit that if the Attorney-General's attention was called to it he would do so.

MR. LEZINSKY: This is Mr. Marshall's stipulation. Mr. Marshall had charge of these cases, and Mr. Marshall should have attended to this matter. The Central Pacific case that went to the Supreme Court was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1886.

THE CHAIRMAN: Was not that after Mr. Marshall went out?

MR. STORKE: No, sir. Mr. Marshall went out in January, 1887. That was decided in April or May, 1886. It was about the expiration of his term.

MR. LEZINSKY: So far as the records in these cases are concerned, I have almost presented all of the points involved in the record. Now, as I have stated, it will be the course of the parties representing the Controller in this matter to place upon the stand all the attorneys, and every person having any connection with what was called the trial of these cases, in order that they may, under oath, state to this committee who gave the testimony which establishes those findings, in order that it may be ascertained whether any such testimony ever was given. We are called upon to do that.

A MEMBER: What do you say was the point upon which the Central Pacific case was decided?

MR. LEZINSKY: Upon the point that the franchise which the Central Pacific Railroad Company held was a franchise from the Federal Government, and therefore was not involved in the other three cases, because they held their franchise and power from the State of California. In connection with that matter, as Mr. Baggett is now present before the committee, and as Mr. Baggett was one of the attorneys of record in this matter who, perhaps, was present at the trial, I would ask that Mr. Baggett be placed upon the stand, in order that he may give his testimony as to what this testimony was which supported these findings. I want to call his attention to those findings.

A MEMBER: I suggest that Mr. Lezinsky ought to have some time upon this question, as Mr. Haymond has used the greater portion of the day.

THE CHAIRMAN: Of course there will be a great deal of this oral testimony given at Sacramento.

W. T. BAGGETT.

Called and sworn.

MR. LEZINSKY: I would like to ask you, Mr. Baggett, whether or not you represented the State in the position of counsel in suits numbered 3668, 3669, and 3670; those are the suits for the collection of taxes for the year 1883 and 1884? Answer—In 1883 I was the attorney, but not in 1884.

Q. In these cases there is a finding that the State Board of Equalization, in making its assessment, included in the assessment all of the property belonging to the railroad mentioned in Section 3665 of the Political Code? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I will ask you upon what testimony that finding was made. There were five of these cases, and we will take the case of The People vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company for that year? A. I cannot recollect whether the assessment roll was introduced in that case or considered in that case or not, but all of the cases for that year—and I think there were five suits—as well as I remember, were submitted upon a stipulation entered into between the Attorney-General and the attorney for the railroad people, to the effect that all of the testimony which had been taken in the case that had been tried here at great length by Mr. Delmas—the case called the Santa Clara case—that all of the testimony introduced in that case, which was applicable to the cases then being tried, should be considered before the Court. The purpose then was to get the matters in such shape that the money might be paid which was tendered to the Attorney-General by the railroad people, that it might be paid into the Treasury. The railroad people insisted that some trial should be made of the cases, and without going through the trial, as they had in the Santa Clara case, they were submitted by stipulation that all of the testimony taken in the other cases, so far as it was applicable to these cases, should be the testimony in these cases.

A MEMBER: Did the Santa Clara case contain the fence provision? A. Yes, sir; the Santa Clara case contained the fact that fences were included; the findings, and there was some testimony, I understand it. I was not here during the entire time of the trial of the Santa Clara case, but I understand that some testimony was taken to the effect that the fences were included, but what that was I do not know.

MR. LEZINSKY: If there was some testimony to that effect, why is it that the express finding upon that point, which is in typewriting here, is crossed out, in the case you are speaking of, in the case of the People against the Central Pacific, the case that I am asking you about? A. I am not talking about any testimony upon that. I will explain to you. In the Santa Clara case there was some testimony introduced as to whether the fences were included in the assessment.

Q. And admitted? A. Yes, sir. But what that testimony was I would not say. Upon whatever testimony it was, the Court found that the fences were included in that assessment. Before that decision in that case was rendered in the Supreme Court of the United States, these cases, to which you now refer for the taxes of 1883, were tried, and it was not known then the importance of the question of the fences. I think, if I remember correctly, the cases from 1883, in which I appeared as attorney, there was no finding that steamboats or fences were included for that year. Do you find them there in the taxes of 1883?

Q. No, sir; except in a general way. I do find that there was such a finding, but that it was crossed out in red ink? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the margin there is "Erased before signing and filing, L. S." I suppose that is Lorenzo Sawyer? A. Yes, sir; which finding I caused to be stricken out, because, notwithstanding it was not known that the fence provision cut any figure in the decision of those cases, that was anterior to the decision of the Supreme Court; but, for fear that there might be some point made on that, I made objection to this finding here, and had it stricken out.

Q. Was it not because the actual fact was to the contrary? A. No, sir; I think the proposition arose in this way: I don't know whether as to the fences or steamers, but there was some question about those facts, and I objected to them, because I said that under the stipulation upon which these cases were submitted, testimony relating to fences and steamboats for this year's assessment, all testimony relating to that was inapplicable to these cases; and that under the stipulation under which these cases were submitted, that testimony was taken in the Santa Clara cases, if it showed that fences were included, was not the evidence in these cases, because not applicable. So I insisted there, as you will find in the case for 1884 where this record was manipulated, I there insisted again, though I was not the attorney, but merely a friend, to assist the Attorney-General; I had some question in my mind about this fence proposition, and these other things, and I was trying to get everything out of the record that I could; and in the cases for 1883 I objected to the finding that the steamboats were included, not because I did not know that as a matter of fact they had been included, but I was trying to keep everything out of the record that I could.

MR. DIBBLE: Had they been included? A. That question came up; and, to determine that, we agreed, counsel for both sides, that whatever Mr. Maslin, who was then the Secretary of the Board, said about that proposition should be the evidence in the case. He wrote a letter, stating that they were not included, and you will not find it in the findings of 1883.

MR. LEZINSKY: It is in the findings of 1884. A. I am talking about the cases for 1883, as they were the only cases in which I had any connection as attorney of record, or any other way, except as a friend.

Q. Then I will call your attention to this part of the finding: "Said assessment included all property and the kinds of property mentioned in Section 3665 of the Political Code of California, as amended March 9, 1883, except depots, stations, shops, gravel beds, and buildings erected upon the places covered by the right of way, which last mentioned property was assessed, as provided in said section, by local assessors." If that finding is correct, when Section 3665 of the Political Code mentioned steamboats as a part of the property to be assessed, whether or not steamboats were actually assessed, or whether or not the Board of Equalization, upon the statement of Mr. Maslin that steamboats were not assessed in making their assessment, did willfully and designedly exclude steamboats in making that assessment? A. This is a general finding that all of the property mentioned in Section 3665 was assessed, which I suppose the Court, in the absence of any special finding, would find anyway, upon the presumption that the officers had performed their duty. This statute, 3665 of the Code, unfortunately for the State as it now turns out to be, is an unconstitutional and invalid provision.

MR. DIBBLE: They are proposing to reënact it now in the Legislature. A. The Supreme Court of the United States, and I believe they also refer to a State Supreme Court decision, hold that so far as that section attempts to enlarge the space over which the State Board of Equalization might exercise jurisdiction is unconstitutional.

MR. DUNN: The finding is that the State Board assessed all things mentioned in that section. That section mentions steamboats, and you declared or you suggested that steamboats ought not to be included, because you were informed that they were not assessable by the State Board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the finding you agreed to declared that the Board did assess them? A. I did not agree to findings. There are no findings here that I agreed to, and I do not suppose any findings that anybody agreed to. These findings, gentlemen, are prepared in this way: the winning party in a suit prepares a draft of findings at the request of the Court. The presumption is that the Court prepares its own findings, but we know that the work is done by the attorney who wins the case. The railroad people having won the case here, prepared a draft of findings for the Court upon the evidence, which, out of courtesy, they submit to the attorneys on the other side, to make any suggestions that they may see fit, and to make their objections to this finding or that, or to propose amendments to their findings, or to make objections to those which they have found; and then those amendments or proposals are all referred to the Court, and then the matter is entirely in the hands of the Court, and the Court makes the findings, and that ends the matter. There is nothing to agree upon. So, in the Santa Clara case, the findings were prepared in that way, and submitted to Mr. Delmas, and all the other attorneys in the case, and they made such suggestions as they saw fit, and then the matter went to the Circuit Court Judges, and they made their findings, and that became the record of the Court. And so in these cases, when these matters were submitted these various alterations which you find here were made by my objection to these matters which I spoke of.

MR. LEZINSKY: Because the fact was exactly to the contrary? A. I suppose so.

Q. You state that it was agreed that Mr. Maslin's testimony should be taken on that point, and that Mr. Maslin's testimony was exactly to the contrary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore these matters were stricken out? A. Yes, sir.

A MEMBER: Mr. Maslin's statement was to the effect that fences and steamboats were not assessable? A. I do not remember that his statement referred to fences; I think it related only to steamboats, but whatever he agreed to was to be the finding in that case.

MR. DIBBLE: Without referring to the record, you say that the findings in the Santa Clara cases found that the fences were assessed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there were no steamboats in that case? A. No, sir.

MR. LEZINSKY: Here is a further finding in the second Santa Clara case that has not been offered in evidence: a finding that the assessment includes all kinds of property mentioned in Section 3665 of the Political Code. That term "property" includes steamboats, and the testimony offered in that case was to the contrary of that finding, Mr. Maslin's testimony being that steamboats were not included? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore, the finding was contrary to the evidence, was it not? A. Yes, sir.

A MEMBER: If I recollect right, you stated that the reason that finding was stricken out in red ink, I believe, was because you stated to the counsel on the other side that that question was inapplicable to that case; that the question in the Santa Clara case was not applicable to this case in which you struck out that finding? A. Yes, sir; my first object in striking out this testimony was that there was no testimony upon that proposition before the Court, and that the stipulation upon which these matters were submitted made only the testimony in the Santa Clara cases apply as far as it was in its nature applicable; that, so far as testimony relating to the fact of whether or not fences were included in 1880, in the Santa Clara cases of 1881, would have no application to the question of whether fences were included in the assessment of 1883. The other parties contended that the stipulation was broad enough to cover those cases, and there arose the difficulty. I contended that was not the fact, and that it ought not to go into the record. And that is all that the railroad people asked; then we sent to Mr. Maslin and took his statement, without its being under oath, that there were no steamboats included for that year in the assessment. There was no question of fences in that proposition, and then that portion was stricken out, and this general finding here that all property that is mentioned in Section 3665 of the Political Code, I suppose, is supported only upon the presumption of law that the Board of Equalization performed their duties as they were directed in this statute.

MR. LEZINSKY: I hold a stipulation in my hand, and this was a part of it, that at any time before the decision the attorneys may take the statement of the Clerk of the State Board of Equalization upon the question of whether or not the value of the fences are included by the Board, etc., and that being filed, such a statement shall be conclusive upon that issue. You say that the sworn statement was obtained, and that the statement showed that the steamboats were not included in the assessment. A. I do not think that there was any sworn statement, but I think that Mr. Maslin wrote a letter stating that they were not included.

Q. Then the sworn statement was not produced? A. No, sir.

Q. It should have been obtained, but it was not obtained? A. Yes, sir; the party was not under oath.

Q. But still the statement was that they were not included? A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection.

Q. And for that reason the particular finding upon that point was stricken out of the findings prepared by the railroad company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The railroad company first prepared findings which did have this matter in them? A. Yes, sir; I suppose so, from that.

Q. I refer to the cases for 1883, simply? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the general finding which included the fact that the steamboats had been actually included in the assessment, was permitted to remain? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the testimony, whatever the character of that testimony was, which was produced upon this point, you now testify, was to the contrary of that finding? A. That is my recollection.

MR. HAYMOND: You are just testifying to your recollection? A. That is all, sir.

Q. Now, in relation to the fences, there is in that stipulation, a stipulation that there was additional evidence offered upon that question, both by the plaintiff and by the defendant. My recollection of that is, that you objected to the finding, and it was settled by Judge Sawyer in our favor, that there was testimony which proved in that case that fences were assessed. A. In 1883?

Q. Yes, sir? A. There is no finding about fences in that case at all, I think, but there is as to steamboats. I have never seen these records since then.

Q. This is the case I speak of, and this is the case decided.

MR. LEZINSKY: You had nothing to do with the cases of 1884? A. I have said I had nothing to do with the cases of 1884 as attorney. I will tell you all that I know about these cases.

MR. HAYMOND: There is a stipulation in 1884 that there was additional evidence offered by both parties. Now will you look at the record. You see that there are some pencil marks upon the margin there; will you see if you wrote that line? [No answer.]

A MEMBER: Who had the actual charge of those cases in 1883? A. It is hard to tell who were the attorneys of record, but by the orders made by the Circuit Judge the whole matter was given over to Attorney-General Marshall, and he had absolute control. Of course, I did all I could. When the record of 1883 was concluded a decision of the Supreme Court had not been made, and the importance of this fence and steamboat matter was not so apparent, but I had some idea that there might be something in it, and I tried to keep them out, to make as good a record as I could for the State, and that is how that comes.

MR. HAYMOND: I will ask you to look at the record, in which there are the pencil marks. Take the one for 1884, and I ask you if you know what they mean? A. I had nothing to do with the cases of 1884, except that having been connected with the cases of 1883, and entering pretty largely into the spirit that was entertained by the Attorney-General so far as that proposition was concerned, of getting all the money we could into the Treasury, and particularly upon the proposition of whether or not the San Bernardino case was a case properly gotten up which the Supreme Court of the United States would hear, I was very much interested in that matter, because we had been attacked in the extra session of the Legislature upon the proposition that there was not a record that the Supreme Court of the United States would hear, and I felt very much interested in the proposition; and being connected with the cases with the Attorney-General, when this matter came up he gave to me a draft of the findings after they had been submitted here upon stipulation. He submitted to me this draft that had been handed to him by the attorneys for the railroad, and asked me to look through it, and see if I could make any suggestions, changes, or alterations. I then went through the draft of findings, and made what appeared to me to be valid objections to the findings. I went through those findings or that draft, and made such objections to them as suggested themselves to my mind. I suppose the general finding was based upon the presumption that the officers had done their duty. No other evidence than Mr. Maslin's testimony was given in the matter. I went through this record in case No. 3669. This draft of findings was submitted to me by the Attorney-General, with the request that I should go through them carefully, and make such memoranda, or suggest such alterations, as to my mind ought to be made. This is the case of 1884, a case against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, that did go to the United States Supreme Court, and here is my memorandum attached to it. I went through the record, and you will find here in my handwriting, opposite certain findings, "No evidence to support this finding." "Objected to; no evidence." That is in another finding. "Objected to; no evidence." And there are several in the same way, and those findings appear here to have been stricken out. The first finding I refer to is No. 22.

MR. HAYMOND: There was some case read here by Mr. Lezinsky that had pencil marks upon them. A. This is the one I speak of, now. Here is Finding No. 22, in which I made a pencil mark opposite here, for the Attorney-General's use, that it should be stricken out: "Objected to on the ground that there is no evidence to support the finding." That is my handwriting.

THE CHAIRMAN: A finding, then, was made against your objection? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the finding? A. The finding that I objected to appears to be stricken out altogether. Of course it was not stricken out, but it is a finding; but my objection was made to it on the margin. Then it appears to be stricken out. Who struck it out I don't know; that I know nothing about. Or whether the Court struck it out when it was turned over to the Court, I don't know. This long finding was stricken out; and then some time afterwards, when the matter indirectly came to my attention—and to everybody's attention in the proceeding in the Supreme Court of this State in the suit brought to compel the payment of this money into the Treasury, attention was called to the fact that there was this slip of paper pasted over here, which took the place, apparently, of this finding which had been stricken out. And it appears here that this piece of paper here, right opposite the finding stricken out that was objected to, reads: "The State Board of Equalization, in making the supposed assessment of said roadway of defendant, did knowingly and designedly include in the valuation of said roadway the value of fences erected upon the line between said roadway and the land of coterminous proprietors."

THE CHAIRMAN: How did that get in there? A. I don't know.

Q. That was the language of the finding in that Santa Clara case, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

MR. LEZINSKY: Do you know, of your own knowledge, whether or not that statement of Mr. Maslin was not to the contrary of that? A. Mr. Maslin made no statement for that year.

Q. Do you know of any statement made upon that point whatever? A. I had nothing to do with that.

Q. Why did you make that objection then, to that finding? A. Because of that stipulation.

Q. The stipulation did not cover the point? A. That was my view of it. My view was that the stipulation filed in these cases that the testimony was introduced in the Santa Clara cases, so far as applicable, were to be used here; my idea was, that the testimony in the Santa Clara case about fences was not applicable to this case.

A MEMBER: Why? A. Because they were different years.

Q. Was not the stipulation in that case, that testimony should be introduced on both sides, concerning that matter? A. I don't remember how that was.

MR. HAYMOND: You will find that to be correct; but before coming to that, I will ask you, as a lawyer, what is your interpretation of what occurred there; what was done? The findings were prepared by the attorneys for the defendant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And submitted, and then you take those objections? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which would naturally be sent to the Court for decision? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it that all of these findings, and statements of facts, were not formally engrossed? A. I do not know. As I stated, there was some understanding between the Attorney-General and the attorneys for the railroad, that there need not be any engrossed statement.

Q. Was not that to save expense to the State? I will refresh your memory. Was it not stated that these findings would be in an awkward shape, and that if the Clerk would make it out from this statement (referring to Judge Sawyer) if any question arose as to what the findings were— A. I don't remember about that. All I know about this case is that I made those objections; and when the matter was called to my attention again in the Supreme Court of this State, they were in this condition; and I saw then that the matters that I had objected to had been stricken out; whether by the Court agreeing that there was no evidence for the balance of this matter, or what was the evidence, I don't know. The matter is in that shape.

MR. HAYMOND: Is that for 1884? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: There is a stipulation there that additional evidence had been introduced by both sides on that question. A. That may be so; I don't know.

Q. Is that correct; is that the fact? Was there a stipulation that there had been received additional evidence which was the basis of that finding?

MR. LEZINSKY: There was a stipulation that testimony should be offered.

MR. HAYMOND: The stipulation is: "This case is submitted by testimony offered by defendant, tending to prove the averments contained in subdivisions 25 and 25A of said answer, and by testimony offered by plaintiff tending to disprove the averments of said paragraphs contained."

MR. LEZINSKY: So far as your connection with these cases was concerned, was there any such testimony offered in 1884? A. I do not know.

MR. LEZINSKY: That is a question that we propose to ask of every attorney. A. I will say to the committee that there might have been testimony—a great deal of it—upon that, or any other point, which I knew nothing about, because I had nothing to do with the case, except to go to the Attorney-General and turn the matter over to him. But as I understood the stipulation I thought that that finding was not supported by the evidence, and I made the objection.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Monckton, who has been very kind in this matter, says he will have to take possession of these papers now, so as to lock them up with the other records.

A MEMBER: I move that we adjourn until Monday, at Sacramento.

ANOTHER MEMBER: Who tried that case in 1884? A. The Attorney-General. I will say one thing that is due to Mr. Marshall, as he is not here. A statement was made about his not taking advantage of the point given him by the stipulation here. If you will look at the dates, and examine the amount of this tax litigation and vast amount of trouble and talk in the newspapers, you will see that this matter came up a short time before he retired from office; and he told me that he had told the incoming Attorney-General of these matters, and offered to give him any assistance that he could in the matter, and I will say that it was as much the duty of the incoming Attorney-General, when he came into office, and in possession of these facts in the record, to press that matter, as it was for Mr. Marshall, the former Attorney-General.

Q. Was Attorney-General Marshall assisted in the trial of these cases in 1884 by anybody? A. No, sir; he tried it upon stipulation.

Q. How long after the stipulation did Mr. Marshall go out of office? A. I don't know the date, but there was time enough for the incoming Attorney-General to have taken advantage of this stipulation the same as Mr. Marshall, and I told Mr. Johnson, so far as these records were concerned, that I would give him my assistance concerning them.

MR. DIBBLE: What is the title of that 1884 case? A. One title is "The People of the State of California vs. the Central Pacific Railroad Company;" another, "The People of the State against the Southern Pacific Company;" another, the case of "The People vs. the Northern Railroad Company;" and another, "The People vs. The San Pablo and Tulare."

MR. STORKE: Did that involve the Federal franchise? A. Yes, sir: I think there was a general finding there that the franchises of the railroad were assessed. It was not supposed then that these people had any franchise from the Government, but in recent decisions the Supreme Court thinks they have got a valuable franchise, and, that being included, the whole assessment was void.

MR. DUNN: You speak about Mr. Marshall going to the present Attorney-General and offering him assistance? A. He informed me so; yes, sir.

Q. You probably recall the circumstances of that meeting in June, 1886, that I wrote a letter after I came down here and examined these records in the Clerk's office of this Court, where I found that the four miles across the bay has been assessed, as the findings declared, and then fences had been assessed, as the findings declared, and that steamboats had been assessed, as the findings declared, and that a day or two afterwards you were interviewed by a reporter of the "Examiner," on July 11, 1886; and, as I recall your answer, it was this: "If those records are not true, of course the Attorney-General can require, and will require of the attorneys for the railroad, that the records be corrected before his term of office expires." A. I do not remember that; I remember giving an interview, and whatever that is—that is a better statement of anything concerning this matter than my statement to-day, because it was made at the time.

Q. You think that that was correct? A. I would prefer to stand by the view that I then expressed, to what I do now, because the matter has gone partly from my mind since then. I think what I stated there in that interview was this: That if this record is not the record; if it has been tampered with; if it is not sufficient, or if it is a record that the Supreme Court of the United States ought not to permit to be among its files; that that matter could be corrected; that if the Attorney-General wanted to take any advantage of this fact he could very easily apply to the Supreme Court of the United States, and have the original record brought up from this Court into that Court, and they could then and there say whether that record was fit to be called a record of the Court. I suggested that to him.

MR. SHANAHAN: I understand that in order to get the evidence properly before this committee on the part of the Controller, or whoever you please, it will be necessary to have these records at hand, to the end that the questions may be properly put. We have made a hard struggle to get them, and we got them late in the afternoon. Our understanding was that we could get them to Sacramento easy enough. Mr. Haymond wrote that, I believe, and I objected to coming down here on that account. We came and ascertained that the record could not leave this Court. I desire to know whether we can get these records, and have them sent to Sacramento; if so, when can it be accomplished?

MR. HAYMOND: Only speaking for myself, I will enter into a stipulation with anybody that these records may be taken to Sacramento, or anywhere else. I do not think the Judge would object to having them withdrawn, if both parties agreed that they might be.

A MEMBER: Is it not a fact that there was such a stipulation, and that we could not get the papers?

MR. HAYMOND: That was because we were not able to find the Judge, I think.

A MEMBER [To Mr. Lezinsky]: One of the cases you referred to here awhile ago contained a finding that was stricken out in red ink?

MR. LEZINSKY: Yes, sir; my recollection is that it was the case of the People vs. the Central Pacific.

A MEMBER: And notwithstanding that finding was stricken out there was a general finding that the property was assessed under Section 3665 of the Political Code? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I want to know is, did the Supreme Court, in passing upon that case, take that finding, as a finding that the steamboats had been assessed, and decided upon that point in these cases where the special finding was stricken out, and there was a general finding referring to Section 3665 of the Code, whether the Supreme Court in passing upon that case, considered that general finding as a finding that fences and steamboats had been assessed?

MR. LEZINSKY: I do not think they passed upon it at all. But, in connection with that matter, taking that in connection with the findings of the case of 1884, it shows that that finding was stricken out of those findings, because there was no evidence to support it, or because the evidence was contrary. The evidence in the case of 1884 was the same, and the actions of the Board of Equalization were the same, so that that should have been official knowledge of that matter, so that that finding did not go into the findings of 1884.

A MEMBER: This case goes to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Attorney-General is charged with official carelessness to the detriment of the people. If the general finding was not detrimental to the people; that is, if the Court did not pass upon the finding that steamboats or fences were assessed; then this Act was not a detriment to the people, in so far as the State never had a decision by the Court.

MR. LEZINSKY: The findings are not in that case, and they did not go up on that point. [To Mr. Baggett]: In either of these cases of 1883 or 1884, were there, to your knowledge, any actual proceedings, or any actual testimony taken in Court? A. My recollection is that there were not.

Q. That there was no testimony actually taken; and no proceedings actually had in the Court-room, in all of the cases of 1883 and 1884? A. In 1884, I tell you I do not know; but in 1883, I had nothing to do with the trial of the cases of 1884, except a draft of the findings was submitted to me, and I made these pencil marks upon them. In 1884 my recollection is that no testimony was taken in the Court-room, and the only testimony taken outside of this stipulation, which referred to the testimony in the Santa Clara case, as far as applicable, was this matter relating to the assessment of steamboats, which was the letter of Mr. Maslin.

Q. And that was to the contrary? A. Yes, sir.

MR. HAYMOND: If you should be shown the record in which Judge Sawyer recites that the testimony was taken, you would change your opinion, would you not? A. I don't know; I would not change my opinion as to what I remembered about it. I am only stating what I remember.

Q. If you will look into this case you will find that Judge Sawyer recites that testimony was taken? A. That may be so; but I have no recollection of it.

Q. That is in 1883, or in 1884? A. 1884; in 1884; it may have been so.

[Here the Commission adjourned, to meet in Sacramento on Monday next.]

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 1063.

THE COUNTY OF SAN MATEO, Plaintiff in Error, vs.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Defendant in Error.

Argument of Roscoe Conkling, of Counsel for Defendant in Error.

MR. CONKLING said: May it please your Honors: From the new and novel Constitution recently devised for California, I will cull such provisions, and only such, as have to do with the case before you. Article thirteen embraces the whole ground of controversy.

This article seems to be—the adverse briefs insist that it is, and the Courts of California have adjudged it to be—self-executing; self-executing in dictating to the “State Board of Equalization” the action of which we complain. The article ordains:

First—That all property in the State, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law; and that “property” includes all things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership, including credits and franchises, except crops, school property, and property of the United States.

Second—That the Legislature may provide, except in the case of credits secured by mortgage or trust deed, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents of the State.

Third—“That a mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby.”

Fourth—That, “except as to railroads and other quasi public corporations,” in case of debts so secured, only, the value of the property affected, “less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property.”

I beg your honors to observe the sweeping effect of these words of exception. They extend to all taxable property. They denote all sorts of property, whether real, personal, or mixed. They embrace choses in action, chattels, and shares of stock, as much as lands. Railroad property, that is to say, property used or usable in operating railways, or appurtenant to railways, is not selected. No class of property or species of property is specified. By no possibility can the words be limited to certain kinds of property, or made applicable only to property devoted to particular uses. They include all manner of property, wherever situate, and however used. The only criterion or distinction is ownership. Whatever it be, wherever it be, whatever its use, if it be the property of certain owners, it is excepted. It is not like a special tax on dogs, or carriages, or mills, or machines, or watches, or railway equipment. It is a provision for special and excessive taxation of all the property of certain taxpayers. The same property possessed by other owners, though used in the same way, escapes the exception.

The argument has been confused by speaking of this invidious exception as if it were leveled only at “railroad property,” to borrow the language of counsel, and as if it were confined to property used for railway purposes.

Losing sight of this vital distinction, seemed to me to make the learned and able argument with which the case began evade the point, and fall short of the requirement.

Article thirteen continues:

Fifth—That all property shall be assessed in the manner prescribed by law in the county and at the place in the county where it is, except the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock of railroads operated in more than one county; and that these shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization at their “actual value,” and apportioned to the counties, townships, etc., according to the number of miles therein.

Sixth—The State Board of Equalization consists of a member elected from each Congressional District, and the State Controller, and its function is to equalize the assessment rolls of counties as between counties; it has no power to equalize individual assessments. This has been decided by the Courts of California, and is obvious on the face of the Constitution.

Seventh—The Supervisors of each county constitute the Board of Equalization of individual assessments. Under the first clause above recited, which ordains that the value of property in general shall “be ascertained as provided by law,” the Legislature has by statute provided for days and places certain for hearing, for full notice, and for opportunity to be heard, for all save “railroad and other quasi public corporations,” and has made the valuation and quantity of all property debatable and contestable, save only the property of “railroads operated in more than one county.” I wish here again to emphasize the word “property,” and again to beg the Court to observe that this exception in the statute is not of “railroad property,” whatever that may be, alone, but it is of all, and all manner of property whatsoever, owned by these corporations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HART: What exception do you refer to there?

MR. CONKLING: The statute has made the valuation and quantity of all property debatable and contestable by the taxpayer, save only the property of railroads operated in more than one county. The point is that this invidious exclusion is not merely of the roadbed, rolling stock, or the railroad, or of property used to operate the railroad, but it extends to all property whatsoever, wherever it may be, however it may be used, if it be owned by a company operating a railroad in more than one county.

The Legislature, as if the Constitution was not sufficiently blunt, enacted that "the valuation fixed by them (that is, the State Board,) shall be final and conclusive."

Eighth—No day is fixed on which the State Board shall make the assessment. The Constitution is silent in this regard, and a statute declares only that it shall be "on or before the first Monday in May." The same statute declares that an officer of any corporation operating a railroad in more than one county shall, on or before the first Monday in April, furnish the Board a sworn statement of the number of miles of road and their value, a detailed statement of all property (without value), number and value of engines and cars in the State or "on railways which are parts of lines extending beyond the limits of the State," amount of rolling stock, gross earnings of the entire railway, and proportionate earnings in the State, and all the property designated in the section of the statute, and such other facts as the Board may require.

What is to be done with this statement, or what part it is to play, is left to conjecture. The reasonable conjecture is indicated by the history of these provisions, and the excitement which gave rise to them, namely: that the list is an inquisitorial contrivance to aid in gathering the information which may be used in visiting with exceptional exactions the taxpayers to be put under a ban.

My learned adversary referred to this paper as a legal and final basis for taxation and assessment. I may refer to it again. I pause now to say that it is a mere bill of discovery—a visitatorial device to save the members of the State Board the steps and pains which might otherwise be necessary to spy out all the remote, disconnected, intangible items of property whereon to put the brand of unequal assessment and unjust taxation.

Ninth—No time, place, mode, or possibility of being heard, is provided for those thus handed over to the State Board. The same statute which makes the Board's assessment final, directs that "on or before" the fifteenth of May it shall be sent to the County Assessor of each county through which the road runs, and he and the Supervisors are to take it as they get it; and now I quote the words, "it shall constitute the taxable value of said property for taxable purposes."

Tenth—Under these provisions and this machinery, the State Board, by a letter addressed to the Assessor of San Mateo County, decreed that the defendant should be taxed on a valuation of $11,739,915, that is to say, $16,500 per mile of road. The road was mortgaged for upwards of $3,000 a mile. No deduction of the mortgage was made, and the property, as the answer alleges, and as the demurrer admits, was rated at twice its actual value, saying nothing of incumbrances.

The denial of deduction of the mortgage, of itself produced an excess of $2,133,000 in the valuation.

Eleventh—The assessment thus declared, included the whole franchise of the defendant, as well its right to be, and to do business, derived from the United States, as that alleged to be derived from the State of California. The assessment covered as well its right to be, and to act as an instrumentality and agency of the General Government, as its right to conduct private business. These elements are all blended in one whole, indivisible, single assessment.

I did not, perhaps, apprehend a remark which fell from the learned counsel on the other side, questioning the presence of this element of the case; but, whatever may have been his meaning, I meet him with page 29 of the record, which shows that the answer alleges—of course the demurrer admits—that part and parcel, indivisible and blended with all the other parts of this assessment, was the value of the franchise, the whole franchise, every faculty, every increment and right possessed by the defendant as a creature, or an instrumentality, or agency, or means, created or adopted by the General Government for governmental purposes.

The questions presented to your honors are—

First—Do these provisions and proceedings deprive the defendant and its shareholders of property “without due process of law,” and do they “deny to any person the equal protection of the laws?”

Second—May a State tax not only the tangible property of a Federal agent, but the agency itself, its faculties, trade, and occupation, and its right to be and to act?

Confining myself to the limits of time within which I mean to keep, I shall pass very briefly over some of the points discussed in my brief, and, in so doing, my learned brother must not think that I intend to fall short of a full opening of our argument.

This action must stand, if it can stand at all, on the revenue powers of the State. There seems, in the Court below, to have been an argument, perhaps only a suggestion, that it might be shifted to some other ground, and that the scheme of taxation formulated in the provisions just recited might find shelter and support in the right of the State to repeal, alter, or amend a grant or charter to a corporation. To such a theory there are several answers.

The action is for taxes, and for nothing else. It is founded on a statute specifically enabling a county to sue for delinquent county and State taxes levied on the same property. (Statutes of California, 1880, p. 136.) The declaration follows the statute and concludes with this demand, “wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment for said several sums, with interest and penalty as aforesaid, and costs of suit.” (Record, p. 2.) Yet, in the presence of this demand, my learned friend, in the stress of his argument, feels driven to maintain that this is not a personal action asking judgment in personam, but only an action praying that some lien in rem may be established.

It is a personal action, an action in personam, praying a personal judgment, in money, with interest and penalty—and an action for taxes, and nothing else.

The Constitution of California is divided into articles, and the articles into sections. Article XV, in twenty-four sections, deals with “corporations,” not with taxation. It contains nothing imposing any condition in aid of this action, nothing touching its subject. Article XII, with its several sections, treats of “revenue and taxation,” and of nothing else. It imposes no condition on the continuance of railroad or other corporations.

Corporations in California exist only under general laws. Special charters are forbidden by the new Constitution—so they were by the old Constitution. The right reserved to repeal and alter, relates to and is confined to the general laws which permit individuals to incorporate themselves.

It is not a power to single out one, or some, or any corporation, and alter its charter, or impose conditions on it; but only a power reserved to change the general law under which voluntary aggregations or associations, called corporations, are formed.

These are the words: "Corporations may be formed under general laws but shall not be created by special Act. All laws now in force in this State concerning corporations, and all laws that may hereafter be passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed." The language of the old Constitution, as far as it would touch this case, was in effect the same.

Between such a reservation, and the reservation originally suggested by Mr. Justice Story as a mode of avoiding, in the case of a special grant, the clause in the Constitution of the United States making the contracts of States inviolate, there is a plain difference, at least in the manner in which the power of alteration or amendment may and must be exerted.

The only existence the defendant ever derived from California was under a general law; and the power to alter, she has chosen to reserve, must be exerted by a general law changing the general law, and applicable alike to all the creatures which exist by reason of it.

That this distinction has not escaped your honors, may be gathered from Miller vs. The State, 15 Wallace, 478 and 499; and Holyoke Co. vs. Lyman, same volume, 500.

It is torture to twist the provisions for taxation, and the proceedings here complained of, into resemblance of an alteration of the statute of incorporation.

But suppose it were otherwise. Suppose the defendant held its franchise solely by special grant from California, and the grant reserved the right to alter or repeal.

Suppose further, that by express and apt words, California had attempted in any way, for any purpose, in the name of taxation, or in any other name, to take, or, which is the same thing, to burden the property of the defendant apart from its franchise—its tangible property, however lawfully acquired. (The mode in which its vested rights were lawfully acquired, be it by gift or gain, is wholly immaterial. 43 Michigan, 147, Cooley, J., and cases cited.) The act of the State in attempting by unequal taxation, or in any other mode, to wrest from the defendant its property beyond its franchise, or to burden or despoil it, would be mere confiscation. The right to alter the charter, or revoke the franchise, would give no warrant to such spoliation.

Railroad Co. vs. Maine, 6 Otto, 499, vid., 511.

Sinking Fund Cases, 9 Otto, 701, vid., 720.

Tomlinson vs. Jessup, 15 Wallace, 454, vid., 458.

Commonwealth vs. Essex Co., 13 Gray, 239, vid., 253.

In re Parrot, 6 Sawyer, 358.

Such appropriation of property, even under sanction of the Constitution of a State, is forbidden now by the Constitution of the United States.

It seems to have been argued in the Circuit Court, it has been hinted here, that the continued existence of the defendant has, in some way, operated as consent to be despoiled at the pleasure of the State, or of some ephemeral majority wielding for a time the scepter of the State. In answer it might be said, if the case required it, which it does not, that if such consent were written in the defendant's charter, the law would not tolerate such a violation of inherent right.

Insurance Company vs. Morse, 20 Wallace, 445.

It might also be said that the defendant by not dying or dissolving when the new Constitution came in, did not consent, even if consent would be effectual, to any wrongs which the Constitution threatened. Surely the act of being and continuing to be did not work a waiver or forfeiture of the right to claim the protection of the laws. It would be odd indeed if a citizen could buy the enjoyment of the fundamental rights a Constitution professes to secure to all, only by giving up, or being held to have given up, some of those very rights.

Leaving so far-fetched invention, I come to another which seems hardly less alien to this argument.

The learned counsel advanced it with some gravity. He shuddered at the consequences of your pronouncing the law. He told us that to annul the invidious exception aimed at certain taxpayers would prostrate California's tax system. He foretold paralysis, as if to uphold the equality of all before the law would "shut the gates of mercy on mankind."

I deny all this, and were I sure my learned brother would see no offense in it, I would say the fear is as empty as idle thunder from a "painted Jove."

Were the words "except as to railroads and other quasi public corporations" annulled or blotted out, property owned by corporations or aggregations would fall under the rule applied to like property, and to all property irrespective of its ownership; and then these taxpayers would be assessed and taxed as other taxpayers are.

His honor, Mr. Justice Field, suggests in the judgment, remarkable for its learning and ability, which he pronounced in this case at the circuit, that a new assessment might be necessary. That may be. If so, a new assessment is the extent of inconvenience—no more.

If the other invidious provision, giving to the State Board a star-chamber jurisdiction, falls, the remainder of the Constitution will still speak. These quasi public corporations will be assessed and heard by the same State authorities who deal with all other corporations and other holders of taxable property. And then, if the authorities confine their assessments to the property which the law makes taxable by the State, and do not reach out hungry for jurisdiction over not only the tangible property, but the faculties of national instrumentalities, nobody will complain.

Moreover, may it please your honors, for a State Legislature to propose and the people of the State to ratify an amendment of the State's Constitution, even if that were needful, is not in our system so serious or so hurtful as to trample on common, elemental, and vested rights, or to enthrone chaos or communism. The people of all the States in Congress assembled, and the people of the States themselves, went to the trouble of so amending the National Constitution as to forbid, and as far as they could to prevent, the very thing which boisterous agitation drove California to do. Perhaps it is well that so early, so great and conspicuous a State—a State which had part, my associate tells me, in ratifying the fourteenth amendment, and embedding it in the bulwarks of the Constitution—that such a State has, in a way so marked, illustrated the wisdom, the need, and the safety of a solemn act which embodied the judgment, the conscience, and the will, not only it seems of California, but of three quarters of all the States. It will do good, not harm, to California to purge her Constitution of blemishes which civilized jurisprudence has condemned for centuries—of dangerous forces, more at war with the interests of this than of any former age. From Runnymede to Appomattox, the jewel for which civilized man has fought has been the law of the land and equality before the law. To remove from the escutcheon of California such a bar-sinister as has been placed there, will not be an injury or a humiliation, as the learned counsel suggests, but rather a glory; the act will burnish, not tarnish.

I come now to say that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and its creditors and stockholders, are among the "persons" protected by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The effect of the amendment, in its requirements of "due process of law," was to subject the States to the restriction which the fifth amendment had, for then seventy-eight years, imposed on the General Government. I have cited, to remind your honors of them, two of the cases in which this tribunal has solemnly so said:

Davidson vs. New Orleans, 96 U. S., 97.

Kelly vs. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S., 78.

In view of this identity of adjudged and historic language, it would seem too late to question the scope of the word "persons," that word having been held, by long construction and consent, to include artificial persons—that word, as it stands in the fifth amendment, having been decided again and again, and never the contrary, to include corporations as well as natural persons. It would seem also beyond dispute, that no State, under the fourteenth amendment, can take or burden property by means which, were Congress to employ them in the District of Columbia, would violate the fifth amendment.

And here I pause a moment.

The fifth amendment speaking to Congress and operating without let or hindrance, at least in that District, once ten miles square, in which your honors sit, which is by the Constitution committed to the absolute government, within constitutional limits, of Congress—I mean absolute, as distinct from concurrent with any other sovereignty—within that District, whatever the fifth amendment would prohibit Congress from doing in dispensing with due process of law, assuredly the same words in the fourteenth amendment, speaking to the States, prohibit the States from doing, in dispensing with due process of law. But to make the fifth amendment complete in illustration of the case at bar, we have need to add to it the words, imported first into the Constitution in the fourteenth amendment, "nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Add these words to the fifth amendment. They do not make one hair white or black as to the persons on whom the amendment operates. They leave it exactly as it stands as to its scope and meaning, save only in addition to requiring "due process of law," they contain the prohibition, "nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws." Put these words in the fifth amendment, and consider the right of Congress to enact that, in the District of Columbia, on the same species and value of property, in the same locality, devoted to the same use, clothed with the same attributes, full of the same identity, one man or one corporation shall be assessed twice as much as another; that one man may go before a tribunal in which he, like the Athenian, may say, "Strike, but hear me," and another man shall be turned over to a tribunal which sits in his absence, a tribunal before which, in law and in fact, he has no opportunity, none whatever, to be heard, or even to know the judgment which awaits him, or ever to appeal from it or contest it. Could such an Act of Congress endure the gaze of this Court? Would such an Act seem less evil to the eye of the law, if it fastened its fangs upon persons, or upon certain persons, associated or incorporated under a general law.

The idea prevails—it is found in the opinion of the Court in the Slaughter-house Cases; it seems to have been in the mind of the Court in Insurance Co. vs. New Orleans (1 Woods, 85); it has found broad lodgment in the public understanding; that the fourteenth amendment—nay, I might say, all three of the latter amendments, the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth, were conceived in a single common purpose—that they came out of one and the same crucible, and were struck by the same die; that they gave expression to only one single inspiration. The impression seems to be that the fourteenth amendment especially, was brought forth in the form in which it was at last ratified by the States, as one entire whole, beginning and ending as to the first section at least, with protection to the freedmen of the South.

Mr. Justice Miller, in 16 Wallace, p. 67, speaks of “a unity of purpose” in all three amendments. Again, he speaks, p. 70, referring to the fourteenth amendment, of “the proposition” (in the singular) “submitted to amend the Constitution,” as by the fourteenth amendment. Again, he says, p. 72, it is impossible intelligently to construe “any section or phrase of these amendments” without recurring to the one original always continuing purpose “which we have said was the pervading spirit of them all, the evil which they were designed to remedy.”

It may shed some modifying light on this supposition, to trace from their beginnings the different elements, the different substantive proposals, strangers to each other, independent of each other, originating in different minds, and at different times, not in the order in which they now stand, which finally, by what might be called the attrition of parliamentary processes in the committee and in Congress, came to be collected in one formulated proposal of amendment—put together in sections for convenience and simplicity of submission to the States.

These originally separate, independent propositions, came from a joint committee of the two Houses, a committee most of whose members are dead. Of those who composed it on the part of the Senate, not one is living, save only Mr. Williams, of Oregon. Of those who composed it on the part of the House, I believe a majority are gone. The committee sat with closed doors, the injunction of secrecy being often removed as conclusions were reached. A journal of its proceedings was kept by an experienced recorder from day to day.

It seems odd that such a journal has never been printed by order of either House. It has never been printed, however, or publicly referred to before, I believe.

Having consulted some of those whose opinions it preserves, and having the record in my possession, subject to the inspection of our adversaries, I venture to produce some extracts from it, omitting names in connection with votes.

From these skeleton entries—a journal is only a skeleton—your honors will perceive that different parts of what now stands as a whole—even parts of the clauses supposed to relate exclusively or especially to freedmen and their rights—were separately and independently conceived, separately acted on, perfected, and reported, not in the order in which they are now collated, and not with a single inspiration or design. You will perceive also that before what now constitutes part of the first section was perfected, or even considered, the committee had reported, and lost all jurisdiction and power over, the portion of the amendment which did in truth chiefly relate to the freedmen of the South. The subject of suffrage, the ballot, and representation in Congress, was disposed of before the committee reached the language on which to-day’s argument proceeds.

I begin the argument with the entry of the ninth of January, 1866, the first meeting of the committee at which any proposed amendment of the Constitution was submitted:

“Mr. Stevens submitted a joint resolution, upon which he asked immediate action by the committee, proposing to submit for ratification to the several States the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

“Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to the number of their respective legal voters; and for this purpose none shall be considered as legal voters who are not either natural-born or naturalized citizens of the United States of the age of twenty-one years. Congress shall provide for ascertaining the number of said voters. A true census of the legal voters shall be taken at the same time with the regular census.”

On the same day the Chairman of the committee, that is to say, William Pitt Fessenden, of Maine, offered, apart from the resolution of Mr. Stevens, the following:

“Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee the insurgent States cannot with safety to the rights of the people of the United States be allowed to participate in the government, until the basis of representation shall have been modified, and the rights of all persons amply secured, either by new provisions or the necessary changes of existing provisions in the Constitution of the United States, or otherwise.”

I will not stop to ask your honors, most of whom knew Mr. Fessenden, why, if the end to which his mind was reaching out was simply to bespeak protection for the black man of the South, he should choose these general, sweeping, if not inapt words, when he could so easily, plainly, and briefly have expressed exactly the idea on which his thoughts were bent.

“FRIDAY, January 12, 1866.

“Mr. Stevens’ resolution being under consideration, Mr. Conkling gave notice of the following substitute:

“Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included in this Union, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of citizens of the United States; provided, that whenever in any State civil or political rights or privileges shall be denied or abridged on account of race or color, all persons of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation or taxation.

“Mr. Bingham submitted the following proposed amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and moved that the same be referred to the sub-committee just authorized.”

Not as an amendment to any other proposition, I beg to observe, but as a thing substantive, separate, independent, by itself constituting an amendment, a whole, separate amendment, to be proposed to the Constitution—

“The Congress shall have power to make all laws necessary and proper to secure to all persons in every State within this Union equal protection in their rights of life, liberty, and property.”

The motion was agreed to; that is, the motion to refer to the sub-committee.

“SATURDAY, January 20, 1866.

“The Chairman from the sub-committee on the basis of representation, reported that the sub-committee had directed him to report the following for the action of the joint committee; the first two as alternative propositions, one of which, with the third proposition, to be recommended to Congress for adoption:

“Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two thirds of both Houses concurring,

That the following articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which, when they, or either of them, shall be ratified by three fourths of the said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, viz.:

It may not be amiss to remind your honors that the alternative disconnecting words "when they, or either of them, shall be ratified," etc., were copied from the language in which our fathers submitted to the States the ten several, distinct amendments to the Constitution, in 1789.

"ARTICLE —. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States within this Union according to the respective numbers of citizens of the United States in each State; and all provisions in the Constitution or laws of any State, whereby any distinction is made in political or civil rights or privileges, on account of race, creed, or color, shall be inoperative and void."

Alternative article:

"ARTICLE —. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of citizens of the United States in each State; provided, that whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any State on account of race, creed, or color, all persons of such race, creed, or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation."

Now comes the independent article:

"ARTICLE —. Congress shall have power to make all laws necessary and proper to secure to all citizens of the United States, in every State, the same political rights and privileges; and to all citizens in every State"—

I beg your honors to remark that the term here employed was "all citizens in every State"— —"equal protection in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property."

"The joint committee proceeded to consider the report of the sub-committee.

"Mr. Stevens moved that the last article be separated from whichever of the other two should be adopted by the committee, and be considered by itself.

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the affirmative; yeas, 10; nays, 4; absent and not voting, 1.

"The second proposed alternative"—

That is, visiting the loss of representation on the States as a penalty of denying suffrage to the black man—

"was by vote of the committee considered first."

"Mr. Stevens moved to amend the proposed article by adding the following:

"And whenever the words 'citizens of the United States' are used in the Constitution of the United States, they shall be construed to mean all persons born in the United States or naturalized, except Indians.

"Pending the consideration of which, Mr. Conkling moved to amend the proposed article by striking out the words 'citizens of the United States in each State,' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.'

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas, 11; nays, 3; absent and not voting, 1.

"So the amendment was adopted."

Mr. Stevens withdrew his amendment.

"The question was upon agreeing to the proposed article as amended"—which I need not again read.

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas, 13; nays, 1; absent and not voting, 1.

"So the proposed article, as amended, was agreed to."

On motion of Mr. Bingham—

"Ordered, That the Chairman of the Senate portion of the joint committee (Mr. Fessenden) and the Chairman of the House portion of the joint committee (Mr. Stevens) be instructed to report as early as practicable to their respective houses the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States this day agreed upon by the joint committee, and recommend its adoption by the same."

I remind your honors that when this resolution had been adopted, the joint committee, it being a special committee, had not only acquitted itself of the whole matter of the proposed amendment, to wit, the right of suffrage of the freedmen of the South connected with representation, but quoad that subject the committee was functus officio. A special committee falls when it reports the subject committed to it, as an insect dies when it stings.

A special committee does not survive its report: it does not revive again unless "the House" recommits the report, or refers a new subject to the committee. Such is the parliamentary law.

After the report was made, the committee continued only in respect of other matters with which it was charged.

"WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1866.

"The committee proceeded to the consideration of the following amendment to the Constitution proposed by the sub-committee, on the basis of representation:

"Congress shall have power to make all laws necessary and proper to secure to all citizens of the United States in each State the same political rights and privileges, and to all persons in every State equal protection in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property." ◊

Motions to amend were made, which I pass over.

"Mr. Blow moved to refer the proposed amendment to a select committee of three, to be appointed by the Chairman, with instructions to carefully revise the same."

And it was so referred.

It is worth while to observe that the committee to which it was referred was not the sub-committee which had considered the other amendment to the Constitution, but a new and different sub-committee.

The CHIEF JUSTICE: It was a sub-committee of the joint committee?

Mr. CONKLING: Yes, sir; a sub-committee of the joint committee.

"On motion of Mr. Stevens:

"Ordered, That the injunction of secrecy be removed so far as to allow any member of the committee to announce, in his place in Congress, the substance and nature of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, under consideration by the committee this morning."

That is the amendment I have just read.

"SATURDAY, January 27, 1866.

"The committee met pursuant to the call of its Chairman.

"Mr. Bingham, from the sub-committee on the Powers of Congress, reported back the proposed amendment of the Constitution referred to them, in the following form:

"Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to all persons in every State full protection in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; and to all citizens of the United States in any State the same immunities and also equal political rights and privileges.

“The Chairman moved to strike out the word ‘also’ in the last clause.

“The motion was agreed to.

“Mr. Johnson moved to amend the last clause by striking out the word ‘any’ and inserting ‘every,’ before the word ‘State.’

“The motion was agreed to.

“Mr. Johnson moved to strike out the word ‘all,’ before the word ‘laws.’

“The motion was agreed to.

“Mr. Johnson moved to strike out the last clause of the proposed amendment.

“The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the negative—yeas, 4; nays, 6; absent and not voting, 5.

“So the amendment was not agreed to.

“Mr. Stevens moved that the Chairman be instructed to report the joint resolution, as amended, to the Senate, and recommend its adoption by Congress.

“The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the negative—yeas, 5; nays, 5; absent and not voting, 5.

“So the motion was not agreed to.”

As will be seen, the vote was a tie. The committee was composed of fifteen members. Five of the members voted for it, five members voted against it, and five members were absent—a fact of some significance, when we remember that the preceding amendment commanded a decided majority of the same committee.

“WEDNESDAY, January 31, 1866.

“The committee met pursuant to the call of its Chairman.”

The amendment proposed by Mr. Bingham was the unfinished business, but there came back on this morning from the House of Representatives the previous amendment which had been reported to that House and to the Senate, touching suffrage and the basis of representation, recommitted to the committee with all cognate proposals, with all the amendments that the wit of man had suggested in the House. This recommittal reinstated the joint committee in relation to that subject, “revived” it, in parliamentary language, and immediately the returned proposition, to the exclusion of the pending proposition, was taken up and proceeded with. Here is the record:

“Mr. Stevens laid before the committee the joint resolution heretofore reported by the committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the basis of representation, which, together with all propositions upon the same subject offered by members of the House, was, by order of the House, again referred to this committee without instructions.

“The committee proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

“After discussion—

“Mr. Stevens moved to amend the same by striking out the words ‘and direct taxes.’

“The motion was agreed to by yeas and nays, as follows: Yeas, 12; nays, 2; absent and not voting, 1.

“Mr. Johnson moved to amend the proviso so that it should read”—

Here is a curious bit of history—

“Provided, that whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any State on account of race or color in the election of members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, or in the election of the electors for President or Vice-President of the United States, or members of Congress, all persons therein of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation."

The purpose was that the freedmen might be excluded as voters in all county, municipal, and other local elections; but unless they were also excluded from elections for members of the State Legislature, elections of members of Congress, or Presidential electors, the State should for that reason lose no representation.

That motion was lost. Then Mr. Johnson moved the following:

"Resolved, That the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the bases of representation should be so modified as to include among the grounds of disqualification therein referred to in relation to the elective franchise one in regard to former conditions of slavery.

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the negative—yeas, 6; nays, 7; absent and not voting, 2. So the resolution was not agreed to. Mr. Stevens moved that the joint resolution as modified be reported back to the House of Representatives with a recommendation that the same do pass. The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas, 10; nays, 4; absent and not voting, 1."

So it went back just as it was reported at first, except that the committee had stricken out the words "and direct taxes." So, the States were to be partially denied representation as a penalty of abridging the suffrage, and the existing rule as to direct taxes was left untouched.

"SATURDAY, February 3, 1886.

"The committee met pursuant to call of its Chairman.

"The committee resumed the consideration of the proposed amendment of the Constitution of the United States, reported from the sub-committee on powers of Congress, the same having been amended when last under consideration by this committee (January 27, 1866,) to read as follows:

"Congress shall have power to make laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to all persons in every State full protection in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property, and to citizens of the United States in every State the same immunities and equal political rights and privileges.

"Mr. Bingham"—

I beg your honors to give attention to what now follows, because it seems to me quite significant—

"—moved the following as a substitute, by way of amendment:

"The Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to the citizens of each State all privileges and immunities of citizens in the States (Art. 4, Sec 2,) and to all persons in the several States, equal protection in the rights of life, liberty, and property. (Fifth amendment.)"

"After discussion:

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was determined in the affirmative—yeas, 7; nays, 6; absent and not voting, 2. So the amendment was agreed to. The question was upon agreeing to the proposed amendment of the Constitution as amended.

"The question was taken by yeas and nays, and it was determined in the affirmative—yeas, 9; nays, 4; absent and not voting, 2."

The next day, on the motion of Mr. Stevens, this proposition, as a separate and entire amendment of the Constitution—the other amendment having gone, not only from the committee, but beyond its recall, and being pending in the two Houses—this substantive and complete proposition was reported by the committee to the two Houses.

Now, may it please your honors, obviously the object of the draughtsman of this last referred to amendment in making reference on the face of his resolution to Article 4, Section 2, and to the fifth amendment of the Constitution, was to remind the committee of the established meaning, and universally accepted import and force, of the words which there stood. May I not affirm if this record shows that the committee understood what was meant, that long afterwards, and after the land had been filled with discussion—"the American people," in the language of Mr. Justice Bradley, "in giving their imprimatur understood what they were doing, and meant to decree what has, in fact, been decreed." (1 Abbott, 397.)

The committee took a week to consider this amendment, thus identified on its face with Article IV, Section 2, and with the fifth amendment, and on the tenth of February, by a vote of nine to five, ordered it reported to the two Houses.

At the time the fourteenth amendment was ratified, as the records of the two Houses will show, individuals and joint stock companies were appealing for congressional and administrative protection against invidious and discriminating State and local taxes. One instance was that of an express company, whose stock was owned largely by citizens of the State of New York, who came with petitions and bills seeking Acts of Congress to aid them in resisting what they deemed oppressive taxation in two States, and oppressive and ruinous rules of damages applied under State laws. That complaints of oppression in respect of property and other rights, made by citizens of northern States who took up residence in the South, were rife, in and out of Congress, none of us can forget; that complaints of oppression, in various forms, of white men in the South—of "Union men"—were heard on every side, I need not remind the Court.

The war and its results, the condition of the freedmen and the manifest duty owed to them, no doubt, brought on the occasion for constitutional amendment; but when the occasion came, and men set themselves to the task, the accumulated evils falling within the purview of the work were the surrounding circumstances, in the light of which they strove to increase and strengthen the safeguards of the Constitution and the laws.

The rights and wrongs of the freedmen were the chief spur and incentive of the occasion. It may be true, as Mr. Justice Miller has observed, that but for these considerations this amendment never would have been suggested. What then? A particular grievance, some startling illustration of a grievance, is commonly the spur of agitation and of popular or legislative action—sometimes of revolution. The slaying of his daughter by a Roman father marked an era in Rome's history, and was the spur to radical changes in Rome's jurisprudence. Swine breaking through a fence is said to have brought on a war. Laying a tax by way of a paltry stamp on paper sundered the relations of the Colonies and Great Britain. But what then? Did the logic of events, did the changes in jurisprudence, did the spirit of the age, did the principles established, did mutations wrought in relations, did the remedies, and redress, and general laws secured confine themselves to the little cause, the particular instance, incident, provocation, or failure of justice, from which the agitation, the movement, the amendment, or the reformation came? It would be hard indeed to explain the second civil rights bill which did pass, and the unnumbered bills of kindred character which were brought forward and did not pass, if the fourteenth amendment had for its alpha and omega the protection of the dark browed man of the South. I do not forget that the civil rights bill takes the white man and his privileges as the standard by which to measure the rights of all concerned, declaring that others should have the rights of the white man, such rights being deemed the acme of privilege, immunity, and protection. The men who wrought out the fourteenth amendment were only breaking the way, not for future ages, but for more intrepid legislators; for aftercomers who should march further and with more fearless stride, because supported by a more advanced sentiment gendered by more revealed necessity. The authors of the fourteenth amendment shrank from the idea of taking from the States the power of ascertaining, each State for itself, its own elective body; they paused and covered before the finality of taking from a State the power to say who should and who should not wield the elective franchise. I say they shrank from such radical amendment. They quailed before the credulity of unbelief—one of the most paralyzing and stupefying of the world's forces. Those who had never seen done what afterwards was done in the Southern States, because they had not seen it, did not believe, and would not believe it. They were credulous of their unbelief, and had the fourteenth amendment, or any amendment at that time undertaken, by direct Federal force, to define, determine, and fix in each State, for the State and despite the State, the right to vote, the concurrence of public judgment, that is to say, the approval of a majority, which, in a republic, is the force without which no party, or administration, or congressional policy, or organic amendment can succeed, would have been wanting, and failure would have frustrated the whole project.

The historic narrative in the famous Slaughter-house Cases, omits a great fact, and an ardent sentiment which helped to usher in the fourteenth amendment. As I have said, no doubt regard for the rights of the freedman was uppermost in public thought. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had long been wept over; four million fetters had fallen; and slaves had given a majestic exhibition of temperance and moderation by abstaining from violence and vengeance when the homes of their masters were left unguarded by owners who had gone to the camp and to the field. Black men, on unnumbered fields of battle, had proved that "before man made them citizens, great Nature made them men." All this is true. It is also true that the term "carpet-bagger" had been coined, and a thousand pens had already begun to write "The Fool's Errand." Men who went first to the South carrying knapsacks, when the struggle ended had gone again to engage in the rivalries of peace. From half of the hamlets in the North, the restless foot of adventure had gone out to the South, and everywhere had met with resentment and suspicion, often with overt hostility. Objections to the presence of new comers from the North had been formulated in the creed of a political party, and had received bloody baptism in leagues, and lodges, and klans. This was known not only to the kinsfolk and neighbors of the vicinage, but to the Representatives and Senators in Congress. In Lord George Gordon's Case the Court held the cry of the mob admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ; and the battle cry of a party against those denounced as "carpet-baggers" and intruders—a cry with which the land resounded—was, and is, part of the res gestæ of the fourteenth amendment. Hostility to the privileges and immunities of white men, and to their rights of person, property, and abode, was part of the "very age and body of time."

The elective franchise, citizenship, and the privileges and immunities of citizens, were all undoubtedly associated with the emancipated race, and the two former with that race exclusively. This cannot be said of any other subject-matter of the fourteenth amendment.

At page 72 of the 16 Wallace, Mr. Justice Miller says: "We do not say that none else but the negro can share in this protection. * * * And so, if other rights are assailed by the States which properly and necessarily fall within the protection of these articles, that protection will apply though the party interested may not be of African descent." To these words of grace, may be added the dissenting opinions in the same case, and much in like spirit may be found in Missouri vs. Lewis, 101 U. S., 22; and in U. S. vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542; and in the Sinking Fund Cases. These sayings encourage the hope that this great ordinance will never be dwarfed into a mere remedy for a single wrong, and that of a nature which, with or without constitutional cure, must have been ephemeral in a civilized land in the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

At this point it behooves me to maintain that the fourteenth amendment operates upon associations of individuals, that is to say upon corporations, as well as upon individuals singly.

The word used to denote those embraced in the amendment is "persons." This word, as found in the Constitution, and in other solemn instruments, has by long and constant acceptance, and by multiplied judicial construction, been held to embrace artificial persons, as well as natural persons. Law-givers and law writers of the highest authority have so fixed immemorially the scope of this term.

Corporations of the strictest sect, corporations specially created by royal grant, monopolizing the most exclusive and artificial attributes, have been, in instances without number—it may be said uniformly—held to be within the designation "persons." Coke, Blackstone, Kent, Marshall, Story, and all the galaxy from which in recent centuries has shone "the gladsome light of jurisprudence," again and again declared "persons" to be, and in law to mean, both natural and artificial beings.

The terms "persons," "occupiers," "inhabitants," even "individuals," have each been often held to include corporations, or artificial persons.

Some of these cases are referred to in the opinion in the Circuit Court of Mr. Justice Field; others are collected in a note in 13 Federal Reporter, p. 785; still others are given in the brief of my associate, Judge Sanderson, at pp. 31 to 48.

Among these authorities are instances in which, in favorem vitæ, the construction was with the strictness applicable to penal statutes; and still "person" was held to include a corporation.

It must be remembered, too, that corporations, as known in England, and also in America, so long as they were created by special grant and charter, were ethically and legally more distinct and independent entities, more substantial and vital "abstractions," than the voluntary associations which now, under general laws free to all, do business under a corporate or coöperate name; or, in the words of Mr. Justice Grier, "only a fictitious name." Yet it is to such specially created and highly endowed and favored corporations that most of the authorities referred to relate.

The defendant here, in respect of its property, is in law and in fact but the business style of individual owners, united and coöperating in a common undertaking, and who, as mere method and convenience, conduct business through corporate agency. Be it a church, a hospital, a library, a hotel, a mill, a factory, a mine, or a railroad, the property and assets of a corporation belong to no one save the creditors and the shareholders.

Suppose, in South Carolina, a society of colored men should incorporate themselves and acquire a hospital, a college, a lyceum, or a church; and this property should, by statute, be confiscated, either by discriminating taxation or otherwise, can it be supposed that the fact of their having formed a corporation, rather than a joint stock company or a partnership, would exclude them from the protection of the fourteenth amendment? Could such a cramped construction be given to the amendment, even if the rule of its construction restricted its operation to only the cases known or foreseen by those who chose the language?

The constituents of the corporation, the men and the women who composed it, would be the real parties in interest, and the Court would deal with them—not with names, but with things.

The doctrine here invoked is found in numerous decisions.

Suppose colored men in Louisiana should, as a copartnership or joint stock company, acquire a theater or baseball ground, and, upon confiscation of their property, should receive the protection of the National Courts acting under the fourteenth amendment, and afterward should incorporate themselves for the management of the same property for the same purpose—if a second and like confiscation should occur, can it be that the same Courts would say that the right of protection was lost by the act of incorporation, and might be revived again by resuming a copartnership name?

I have put the case of colored men. Let me transpose the illustration. In several States colored men outnumber white men. Suppose in one of these States, laws should be contrived by the colored majority, or a Constitution set up, under which the property of white men should be confiscated, surely the Court would not say the Constitution is dumb, but would speak, if only the parties to the record were reversed.

I have sought to convince your honors that the men who framed, the Congress which proposed, and the people who through their Legislatures ratified the fourteenth amendment, must have known the meaning and force of the term "persons."

Let me now turn your attention away from this surmise to the real question to be answered. Let me remind you that the scope and effect of a general provision is never to be ascertained by seeking for the particular cases which the author had in thought at the time the provision was drawn or adopted. The Court cannot acquit itself as interpreter and expounder by visiting, if the Court could visit, the minds and thoughts and hopes and fears and doubts and expectations and anticipations of those who took part in devising the Constitution. The true question, in exploring the meanings of the fourteenth amendment, is not, in a given case, whether the framers foresaw that particular case and acted in reference to it—the inquiry is, does the case fall within the expressed intention of the amendment? All cases compassed by the letter of the language must be included, unless obviously repugnant or foreign to spirit and purpose.

I ask the Court to listen to the rule of construction as laid down in the Dartmouth College case by a great and rugged magistrate. The words are the words of Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for the Court:

"It is more than possible that the preservation of rights of this description was not particularly in the view of the framers of the Constitution when the clause under consideration was introduced into that instrument. It is probable that interferences of more frequent recurrence, to which the temptation was stronger, and of which the mischief was more extensive, constituted the great motive for imposing this restriction on the State Legislatures.

"But although a particular and rare case may not in itself be of sufficient magnitude to induce a rule, yet it must be governed by the rule when established, unless some plain and strong reason for excluding it can be given. It is not enough to say that this particular case was not in the mind of the convention when the article was framed, nor of the American people when it was adopted. It is necessary to go farther, and to say that, had this particular case been suggested, the language would have been so varied as to exclude it, or it would have been made a special exception. The case being within the words of the rule must be within its operation likewise, unless there be something in the literal construction so obviously absurd or mischievous or repugnant to the general spirit of the instrument, as to justify those who expound the Constitution in making it an exception." (4 Wheaton, 644-5.)

Could words—even prophetic words—more closely fit the position I maintain?

Who would be so rude as to suggest that committee, Congress, or people, when engrafting the fourteenth amendment upon the Constitution, omitted, only because they forgot it, to say that citizens might be stripped of their possessions without due process of law; provided only the spoliation should be under pretense of taxation and the victims robbed in a corporate name?

If any man dare affirm such a belief, it must be one ignorant of the fact that Congress, when the amendment had been adopted, declared, in effect, that the shield of "equal protection of the laws" extended to taxes, licenses, and the like. This legislative construction was declared in the Civil Rights Act adopted as a substitute of an Act passed before the ratification of the fourteenth amendment. The first Act had not assumed to forbid unequal taxation; but, in the second Act, under the warrant of the new amendment, Congress added discriminating taxation, in or by a State, to the list of offenses against the laws of the United States.

Judge Story, who also sat in the Dartmouth College case, and delivered an opinion, reiterates all that I have read from Marshall, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, Section 1395.

Who has ever gainsaid the canon of construction and interpretation thus plainly spoken from this bench?

With such a key to the import of a provision, how minor and needless become conjectures about what the actors in a past scene knew or thought, or expected or believed, as to incidents or events in the future which might invoke the aid of a principle of law.

Man being human, and his vision finite, it is well that saving ordinances need not be shrunken in their uses or duration to the measure of what the framers foresaw.

Truths and principles do not die with occasions; nor do they apply only to events which have cast their shadows before.

The statesman has no horoscope which maps the measureless spaces of a nation's life, and lays down in advance all the bearings of its career.

"Futurities are naked before the all-seeing eye."

All that wisdom and science in legislation can do, is to establish just principles and laws; this done, every case which afterwards falls within them, is a case for which they were established.

A tree, a fountain, a lamp, set in the public way—a beacon on a cliff—a buoy on the sea, for whosever sake first thought of or provided, becomes the benefaction and common property of wayfarers, whoever they may be.

To the Mongolian and the Caucasian, as well as to the African, the Constitution says: "Humani nihil a me alienum puto."

"The hand that rounded Peter's dome,
And groined the aisles of Christian Rome,
Wrought in a sad sincerity,
He builded better than he knew!"

Those who devised the fourteenth amendment wrought in grave sincerity. They may have builded better than they knew.

They vitalized and energized a principle, as old and as everlasting as human rights. To some of them, the sunset of life may have given mystical lore.

They builded, not for a day, but for all time; not for a few, or for a race; but for man. They planted in the Constitution a monumental truth, to stand four-square whatever wind might blow. That truth is but the golden rule, so intrenched as to curb the many who would do to the few as they would not have the few to do to them.

If it be true that new needs have come, if it be true that wrongs have arisen or shall arise which the framers in their forebodings never saw—wrongs which shall be righted by the words they established; then all the more will those words be sanctified and consecrated to humanity and progress.

Before passing to another head of my argument, I beg to remind the learned Chief Justice and the Court, of the language of the Court speaking through him in the Sinking Fund Cases. Clearly the passage I shall read assumes that corporations are within the protection of the fourteenth amendment.

Here it is, 99 U. S., 718:

"The United States cannot, any more than a State, interfere with private rights except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but equally with the States they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law."

I come now to insist that the proceeding by which the defendant was assessed and taxed was not "due process of law." Judge Cooley defines "due process of law," thus: "Due process of law in each particular case means such an exertion of the powers of Government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

The proceeding need not be judicial; it may be administrative. But it must give opportunity to be heard, and heard in season, and upon the right or matter in question. This is as true in respect of property, as of liberty, or life—as true in respect of taxing property upon its value, as of taking property for public use.

To this proposition I cite Stuart vs. Palmer, 74 N. Y., 191, where many authorities will be found referred to. Nothing can be more instructive, however, than the opinions of Justices Field and Sawyer in the case at bar.

It is not enough, as my learned friend seemed to argue, that the party might, by favor or by chance, be accorded a hearing, or that the assessment may, in fact, be fair. The Constitution or statute authorizing the proceeding must positively provide for notice and hearing. Such is the doctrine of the authorities at large. The learned counsel said we might have applied to this State Board to make a rule—a rule under which we might have had a special dispensation. To state such a proposition is to dispose of it.

Our complaint here, I beg to say, is not, as the learned counsel seems to suppose, that two tribunals have been invested with power to assess; nor that railroads are assessed by a State Board; nor that their capital and franchise are assessable as entireties, and their road not by sections in tax districts. These are objections considered in the Illinois case; they are not the objections here.

The objections here may be quickly stated:

First—The general law requires property to be assessed at its full "cash value," that is, the value at which it would be taken in payment of a debt from a solvent debtor. The special provision as to the property of the defendant is that it shall be assessed at its "actual value," without defining "actual value" or laying down any rule by which it shall be determined.

Second—The Constitution of California ordains that no local or special law shall be made for the assessment or collection of taxes. But the property of the defendant is subjected to a special law, and an invidious rule.
